Mr. Maclennan: With the greatest respect to the hon. Gentleman, who has considerable experience, as I do, of this House, the debate is not entirely turning on his half-hour contribution at the beginning of it. A number of other interesting speeches have been made from the Conservative Benches, and it is to those in particular that I was addressing my remarks.

When the Conservative Government, under the inspiration of their then leader, Lady Thatcher, decided to wind up the government of London—a move that was a profound constitutional monstrosity—there was very little sign of independence among peers, and no more independence was manifested by hereditary peers than by appointed peers. Once a person becomes a Member of the upper House, regardless of whether that person has been appointed or is there by accident of inheritance, he or she is a free spirit, capable of exercising independence, and does not owe his or her position in that House to the continuing approval of the Whips or the Government. None the less, time and again, their lordships have demonstrated their willingness to step into line behind the lead of the Conservative party. That is a strong argument for rebutting and rejecting the amendments.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Is the right hon. Gentleman being fair to the upper House in saying that it fails to demonstrate independence? Accepting amendment No. 1 would mean that the so-called backwoodsmen could not be trotted out either to support or to defeat individual measures. Does he recollect that, had it not been for a considerable turnout of backwoodsmen—regardless of whether it is right or wrong, although he will certainly have thought it right—the upper House would have defeated proposals for the community charge?

Mr. Maclennan: The right hon. and learned Gentleman has a [illegible] point; I would not quarrel with that. However, I do not think that it invalidates my general case that, time after time, when one might have hoped that some independence would be exercised, it was not.

There is a certain seductiveness in the argument that there should be a check in another place on the possibility of, for example, the Government deciding to extend the life of a Parliament beyond the five allotted years. I am attracted to that view. There is a case for strengthening the power of the upper House over constitutional measures and, indeed, constitutional conventions, which I should like to have embodied in fundamental constitutional law. It would be very healthy if Governments were not able to overrule our international commitment to the European convention on human rights, and if the upper House were empowered to prevent them from doing so, but an appointed or hereditary upper House does not have the constitutional legitimacy to make that an acceptable route down which to march.

Although there is support on the Liberal Democrat Benches for seeking to protect fundamental constitutional provision, such as the determination that Parliament shall not extend its life beyond five years, I very much hope that the Government will look for other means of facilitating the further check on the Executive when they come to think about the reconstitution of the second Chamber beyond the period on which the Bill particularly focuses.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: I am grateful to be called to speak in these important proceedings. I am a Conservative, and I am proud to be a Conservative. One of the reasons why I am a Conservative is that I believe in conserving that which is good about our country, and I believe that we should change things only if they really need to be changed.

There have been differences of view on the Conservative Benches—only the hon. Members for Braintree (Mr. Hurst) and for Battersea (Mr. Linton) have spoken from the Labour Benches—on what might replace the other place. However, this side of the Committee has been absolutely clear on one thing: this, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) rightly said, is a dog's breakfast of a Bill. If we were in charge, this measure would not appear, because we do not believe in the Government's proposals.

The Bill should correctly be entitled, "The House of Lords (Destruction of a Thousand Years of British History) Bill". I make no pretence; I believe in the hereditary principle. When we debate the proposed composition of the second Chamber, it might be appropriate to raise the question and role of the monarchy.

As my hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) so eloquently suggested, their lordships have something to offer during the proposed interim. The reason why my right hon. and hon. Friends have expressed differing views on a new upper Chamber has been given before. Others have suggested that there should be a wholly elected upper Chamber. I do not believe that that would be right, because it would put that House into conflict with this one. It is precisely because there have been so many such differences that all previous attempts to change the arrangements have failed. That is why I believe that the Government's proposal is fundamentally flawed and why the measure betrays their arrogance. They have decided to bring the Bill before the Committee without suggesting anything in place of the House of Lords.

According to an opinion poll conducted by MORI last November, 68 per cent. of the people—pretty democratic, I would have thought—felt that the Government should not introduce the change without proposing an alternative. In that survey, 68 per cent. of respondents said:

> "Leave things as they are for the moment until all the details of the reform have been decided."

6.30 pm

Mr. Winnick: I wanted to congratulate the hon. Gentleman on his opening remarks. He came out with the blunt truth—that he believes the hereditary principle should be retained. Whereas those on the Opposition Front Bench and others of his colleagues are covering up their views in every conceivable way, the hon. Gentleman stated his point of view honestly and fairly. That is basically the point of view of the entire Conservative party, and it is unfortunate that those on the Front Bench did not have the honesty to say what they believe in, as the hon. Gentleman did.

Mr. Howarth: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for recognising that I am honest. I am not sure that, it is always advisable or profitable to be honest in politics, but I have the advantage of being on the Back Benches.

My right hon. and hon. Friends have pointed out that the Bill will unquestionably go through both Houses of Parliament. They must, therefore, deal with the position after the Bill becomes law. It is entirely fair for them to argue that we must live with the realpolitik and try to improve the Bill, in so far as it is capable of improvement. That is why I support the amendment.

The public made it clear through that opinion poll that they believe that the Government are misguided in their proposal not to suggest alternatives to the current arrangements before abolishing that which already exists.

It is important that we consider the merits of the amendment relating to the role that hereditary peers could play—a non-voting role, but a speaking role. The Committee must understand that the hereditaries play an extremely important part in the daily life of the upper House. Most of those who preside over the proceedings in the House of Lords when the Lord Chancellor is not there are hereditary peers. They do it on the relatively small amount of their daily allowance. They do not have the sort of salaries that even we in this place have.

We should not ignore the active part that hereditary peers play in the activities of the other place, compared with the less active part played by many of those who are appointees, whether appointed by the Conservative party or the Labour party. It is true that the other place has the advantage, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe said, of previous Members of this place—illustrious Members who have guided the destiny of the nation. It would be fair to say that, for some of them, life in the more relaxed atmosphere of the other place is less enchanting than the cut and thrust of formulating policy and driving it through in this place. Therefore, the part that they play in the other place is, so to speak, a retired part.

Other life peers are great captains of industry. I always marvel at the fact that, whenever hon. Members stand up in this place to speak on behalf of a commercial interest in which they have an interest, they are immediately dismissed.

[Mr. Howarth]

I well remember when Jim Prior, as he then was, spoke in a debate on extending further Government finance to GEC in order to enable the company to develop the winning formula that would ensure that the airborne early warning programme on the Nimrod went ahead. Everybody listened, until someone said, "Is he not chairman of GEC?", at which point everybody fell about laughing, saying, "Of course he would say that, wouldn't he?" If the noble Lord Prior stands up in the other place and speaks in his capacity as chairman of GEC, their lordships flock in to listen attentively because he has something to offer.

It is fair to say that those who are captains of industry do not attend as regularly in the other place as those who are hereditary peers. That is hardly surprising—they have businesses to run, so they tend to come only occasionally, when the debate affects the industry in which they work.

Angela Smith: The crux of the hon. Gentleman's argument seems to be that hereditary peers do a better, more effective job in the House of Lords. How does he square that with his earlier statement that he supports the amendment?

Mr. Howarth: I support the amendment because it will ensure that the hereditary peers will be there. I have tried to make my position clear. Lest the hon. Lady is in any doubt, let me repeat it: I oppose the measure, but I will support the amendment tabled by my hon. Friends because it at least ensures an element of continuity. It will also ensure that, in the other place, there will be those who have something to contribute, and who can spare the time that it is necessary to devote to the other place.

In his persuasive opening address to the Committee, my hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire offered some examples of the way in which hereditary peers make their contribution in the other place. He mentioned the work of its Select Committees, which are taken extremely seriously outside this place. Indeed, I venture to suggest that, in general, the other place is taken more seriously than this place. It is interesting that when one listens to "Today in Parliament" on what I used to call the Home Service—I am a Conservative—

Mr. Mackinlay: On a crystal set?

Hon. Members: On the wireless.

Mr. Howarth: Indeed, on the wireless. One listens to some of the most articulate speakers and wonders, "Who was that? Which Prime Minister appointed him or her?" Then one hears that that was not an appointee, but a young hereditary peer. That is the one thing that the hereditaries have, which the life peers do not: there are a number of young hereditary peers who, I suggest, make an important contribution.

My hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire mentioned Lord Freyberg. I have met him, and I believe that my hon. Friend is absolutely right—Lord Freyberg has made an important contribution, and war widows have him to thank for the interest that he took and the ability that he discharged to ensure that the relevant measure was brought to fruition by the previous Conservative Government.

Mr. Mackinlay rose—

The Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department (Mr. Geoffrey Hoon): Oh, Andrew!

Mr. Mackinlay: My right hon. and hon. Friends on the Front Bench might not like it, but I remind them that this is the Committee stage, and we Back Benchers will make our contributions, whether they like it or not.

The hon. Gentleman was referring to the benefits attached to the hereditary peerage, and folk coming in at 22 years of age and making a valuable contribution. During the Maastricht debate, the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) said, and I do not believe that he said it disrespectfully, that the problem was down there in the House of Lords—if the lights were switched off, half of them would die.

That is a difficult and unpalatable truth to accept, but the fact is that, under both hereditary and life peerages, peers go on and on and on. Some peers who were appointed or who received their peerage through the hereditary principle were capable and had all their faculties, but there is no end to their period of service. It is not fair to them, it is an abuse of Parliament, and it needs to be stated, painful though it is, that some of the peers should not now be in Parliament.

Under the democratic principle, of course, it is for the electorate to decide. There is no way of bringing an end to parliamentary service in the other place.

Mr. Swayne: Death.

Mr. Mackinlay: That is inappropriate and it is not fair to those Members—

The First Deputy Chairman of Ways and Means (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. It is not fair that the hon. Gentleman should go on for so long during an intervention.

Mr. Howarth: It is entirely fair that the hon. Gentleman should have his say and not be gagged by those on the Government Front Bench. It is significant that only two Labour Members have spoken on the Government's flagship measure and that only a few Labour Members have intervened. That says much about the Government's belief in democracy and the democratic process. I listened to the hon. Gentleman and I thought that he had an important point to make.

Some of the elderly Members in their lordships' House make some rather interesting contributions, even if they are ones with which I disagree. Lord Longford comes to mind. He is a great character and he should not be prevented from contributing to our national life, even though I do not agree with everything that he says.

Mr. Linton rose—

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. We are dealing with amendments that, by their very nature, are confined. We must confine ourselves to hereditary peers.

Mr. Howarth: As far as I am aware, Mr. Martin, Lord Longford is an hereditary peer.

The First Deputy Chairman: If the hon. Gentleman has not caught on to what I am saying, I am pointing out that other parts of his speech did not relate to the amendment.

Mr. Howarth: I give way to the hon. Member for Battersea.

Mr. Linton: I intervene in a genuine spirit of inquiry. We understand why the hon. Gentleman believes that life peers may have qualifications, whether we think that they are good ones or bad ones. However, does the hon. Gentleman believe that hereditary peers have a valuable role to play because any group of 759 people is bound to throw up a proportion with ability, or does he believe that there is something inherent in the hereditary peerage which entitles such people to sit in the other place? In one instance, there is the great-great-great-great grandson of an 18th century turkey merchant. Does that entitle such people to sit in our legislature or give them special abilities?

Mr. Howarth: The hon. Gentleman has had much fun during these proceedings making jokes about the origins of some of those who sit in the House of Lords. However, this is a serious matter. We should support the amendment because the hereditaries bring something special. I shall illustrate that with one example. The other day—perhaps I should not mention his name because I did not say that I would be referring to him—I was speaking to an hereditary peer. He told me that he had spent 40 years of his life earning a living and trying to keep his hereditary estate going. He had always said that on reaching the age of 60 or 65, he would devote his time to taking his constitutional place in the upper House.

The hon. Member for Battersea should not belittle the attitude of mind that is displayed by some of those who take extremely seriously their responsibilities as hereditary peers in the governance and affairs of our country. There is something to be gained in having people who, from the first days of their life, have been brought up with the concept that, at some time, they will have to make a contribution to public life. That is precisely what the sovereign does in bringing up his or her children and that is what hereditary peers do when they bring up their children.

I advance the case for the continuation of hereditary peers to sit and speak in the other place because I believe that they have something to offer. Labour Members have offered nothing to put in their place. They have not tabled any amendments to the Bill. They have suggested that, if the other place behaves well—

Mr. Mackinlay: The hon. Gentleman is wrong, is he not?

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. We need worry only about the amendment that is before us. The hon. Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth) is talking about the rights of hereditary peers, and about whether Opposition or Government Members have tabled other amendments. That topic is nothing to do with the amendment before us.

Mr. Howarth: I am trying to support the amendment, which is to the effect that the hereditaries should continue to sit and have the right to speak in the other place. I have been advancing that cause, and explaining why they bring something unique to the quality of our national life and to debates in the other House. I believe that the amendment is absolutely right and proper.

6.45 pm

Mr. Nick Hawkins (Surrey Heath): I have been listening carefully to my hon. Friend. Does he agree that it is absolutely clear that many hereditary peers have shown, by their many years of service in the other place, a belief in the tradition of public service, which used to be described as noblesse oblige? That is something that is valuable in our public life and many citizens have come to be grateful for it. Many causes dear to Labour Members have been taken up initially by Members of the other place.

Mr. Howarth: Indeed. I agree entirely with my hon. Friend. I was attempting to demonstrate that those in the other place approach the assumption of their titles in a way that is hard for us as ordinary citizens to understand.

Mr. Roger Gale (North Thanet): I ask my hon. Friend to place on record the appreciation that is felt by many Members of this place of Baroness Wharton. There are Labour Members who are staunch supporters of the all-party animal welfare group. They know that as deputy chairman of that group, Baroness Wharton—Ziki Wharton—has put in an enormous amount of work although she is a working lady who has to earn her own living. I ask my hon. Friend to ask Labour Members why they propose to bar somebody like that from taking a seat in the other place and making a contribution that in other walks of life they would support.

Mr. Howarth: My hon. Friend is absolutely right about Baroness Wharton. She has undertaken sterling work in the other place. One reason why she is able to do that is that she is not answerable to a constituency. She is a Cross Bencher and she is independent; she is also independent minded. Hereditary peers, in not having constituencies, do not feel constrained to pursue a line that might be in the interests of their constituency, but not necessarily in the interests of the country. Hereditary peers are able to take a broader view in the national interest.

Angela Smith: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Howarth: As soon as I have finished my point I shall, of course, give way to the hon. Lady. I am sorry, but she will have to listen to me for just a little longer.

Hereditary peers do not have constituency correspondence. That is a huge advantage. It means that they are not burdened with that aspect of parliamentary life. They are able to devote themselves to whatever cause, like the baroness to whom my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) referred. They can take up the issues that they feel are important.

[Mr. Howarth]

Angela Smith: Are we to take it that these interesting encomiums of individual Members of the House of Lords indicate that other Members of that place are not held in equally high regard by Conservative Members, or is the debate to be punctuated by our going through the entire 759 Members one by one and recording their individual worth?

Mr. Howarth: The debate could be punctuated by their contributions. That would make for an extremely interesting debate, but I know that you, Mr. Martin, would not particularly approve of that. You might find that that caused the debate to stray.

Mr. Swayne: The hon. Member for Basildon (Ms Smith) can table an amendment.

Mr. Howarth: As my hon. Friend says from a sedentary position, the hon. Lady is perfectly free to table an amendment to that effect. We look forward to seeing it on the amendment paper tomorrow.

The hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) or the hon. Member for Battersea asked what was the difference between hereditary peers and a lottery. If someone comes from the think tank Demos, the answer is not a lot. Demos has proposed that, instead of hereditary peers, we should have a lottery in which ordinary people are picked at random. The remarks of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe were not so wide of the truth. It appears that a lottery is proposed to choose who sits in the Lords.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps I can help the hon. Gentleman again. He is wide of the amendment.

Mr. Howarth: I was making the point that, to a certain extent, the hereditaries are something of a lottery and, therefore, we do not need an alternative proposal.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe said that, if the amendment were passed and hereditaries were able to sit and speak in the other place, there would be no threat to the House of Lords from that. I disagree with him. If the Government were to support the amendment, they would find that the hereditaries who participated, albeit not in a voting fashion, would have something to contribute and would expose the flawed nature of the Government's proposal. Therefore, it is unlikely that the Government will accept the amendment, but they are exposing the flaw in the Bill by opposing it. They are also exposing the spite and animosity that they feel towards people who have, as many of my hon. Friends have pointed out, made a constructive and public-spirited contribution to our national life. I shall support the amendment.

Mr. Benn: I had not intended to speak, but I want to put on record the fact that the debate, and the speeches made by Conservative Members, ought to be made compulsory reading for every schoolchild in this country.

Those arguments have appeared time and again. I read the debate on Second Reading of the Reform Bill; it was warned that parliamentary democracy would disappear if the franchise were extended. I point out to the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan), who is the leader or deputy leader or former leader—whatever he is—of the Liberal Democrats, that Mr. Asquith said that parliamentary democracy would be undermined if women got the vote. Today, we have had a complete rerun of the whole history of the argument for making this place democratic. Now, Conservative Members are trying to prevent that in the Lords.

The other aspect of the debate that has interested me very much is the total ignorance of Conservative Members of the real flexibility of the so-called hereditary system. As I said a couple of weeks ago, when the peers were first appointed, they were not hereditary at all. The Salisburys have had a wonderful way of using writs of acceleration: "Get there before you have inherited." I had a very amusing correspondence with Lord Salisbury—"Bobbity", as he was called—who wrote me an angry letter about what I was doing. I replied, "Dear Lord Salisbury, I only want a writ of deceleration." The Salisburys could do what they liked.

Someone talked about noblesse oblige; my problem was noblesse obligatoire, which was a slightly different complaint. I have no objection to hereditary peers at all; they are ordinary people, but they happen to be law makers, without any entitlement to be so. On the other question about a hereditary system, I wonder how many Conservative Members know that, in the old days, treason was hereditary for those convicted of it. The corruption of the blood went from generation to generation. I do not know whether Conservative Members are in favour of hereditary traitors, but they existed for a long time, until that was changed.

I share one view with Conservative Members. I am very disappointed that my colleagues have not come up with a simple alternative, which is to elect a second Chamber. Most civilised countries in the world do that. I do not know what would happen if new Labour got its hands on the Senate—heaven knows how the Senate would be appointed in the United States—so I agree with Conservative Members who complain about our opposition to that idea, but please do not try to persuade me that the Lords are the final safeguard against extending Parliament.

I remember when the Lords voted to extend the Parliament. There should have been an election in 1940, but a Tory House of Lords extended the Parliament to 1945. Why? Because everybody said, "We don't want an election in the middle of a war." If we really believe that the final safeguard of democracy in Britain is hereditary peers then, my God, democracy is not very safe. The hereditary peers are not based on democracy, they do not believe in democracy and they do not practise democracy, but we are told by the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell), a former Attorney-General, that they are our final safeguard against democracy disappearing.

The Committee would be well advised to settle this matter by a vote. We could then discuss the next group of amendments, which is much more interesting. We will be told to vote against Lord Weatherill's amendment, but, when it comes back from the Lords, we will be told to vote for it. We are going through the hoop in a way that no parliamentary party of which I have been a member has ever had to. Let us get on to that amendment, but, please, preserve the debate. It is a supreme example of the Conservative party at its best, and nobody has reflected that better than the hon. Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth).

Sir Nicholas Lyell: It is a real pleasure to speak after the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) who has been kind enough to mention me. I recall that, when the great Reform Bill went through in 1832, the Duke of Wellington held back his troops in the House of Lords and prevented them from voting against it. In consequence, it went through. There is another story—about one very fat peer being counted as 10, which also helped to carry the Bill through—but that would prove the right hon. Gentleman's version of democracy too well.

The point about the debate is that it does not concern the question whether the House of Lords should be reformed. Our great complaint, which I share with the right hon. Gentleman, and the country's great complaint against the Labour party, who have had 18 years to think about this, is that the Government have come forward with a proposition that will destroy what we have at present without telling us what they will put in its place. That will hang round the Government's neck at every stage of the consideration of the Bill, but that is not what we are debating.

We are debating what will be put in place at the interim stage. I share the reflective cynicism of some hon. Members. I hope that the interim stage will be extremely brief, that the Leader of the House will be as good as her word and that proposals will be introduced by 2000 so that we can get on with proper reform. However, I have no great confidence in that and we must consider carefully what we shall put in place in the interim.

I have said not that the House of Lords is in itself the foundation of democracy, but that it is our constitutional anchor. It gives the opportunity for the House of Commons to think again. It can hold up proceedings for long enough to force us to think once again about whether a proposal is what we want and what the country wants. That gives the country an opportunity to focus on what is the issue. The House of Lords can develop the argument, sort out the details and generally broaden the public debate. It is essential that that can continue during the interim period.

I support the amendment faute de mieux, although there is mieux available. The next group of amendments contains my own suggestions for what to do in the interim, but the amendment tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) is valuable in that it would enable the upper House to continue to contribute. Hereditary peers who contribute in practice would be able to continue to contribute their voices—and, thus, their wisdom—to debate and to influence the peers who will, after all, be almost entirely appointed and left as the substantial rump.

Once one gets into the question of legitimacy, the exact legitimacy of an appointed placeman, as opposed to that of the son of a hereditary placeman, is difficult to identify. I share the view of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) that at least a significant proportion of the upper House—I do not go so far as to say the whole of it—should be elected. I also share the view of the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), who provides an example of independence in a sea of conformity, that, in so far as it is elected, the upper House should be elected on a rolling basis. That would provide the constitutional anchor and the stability.

We are deciding whether Members of the House of Lords who, by definition, play an active part because they speak in debates, should be able to continue to speak. I have done a little research, with the assistance of the Library, to find out how often such people speak. We are considering all this in the context of the figure of 91 hereditary peers which has been suggested by the Government, although they will not allow us to push that figure upwards because they fear that they may be defeated in the upper House.

The Library has produced, from the parliamentary on-line information service, a record of how many peers have spoken more than 40 times since 1992–93—my amendment No. 18 suggests that we should go back through speaking records for 10 years—which shows that, in that time, about 90 peers spoke about 40 times. We lose out—this is one of my reasons for thinking that going for a figure of 91 is a bit too trite and much too limited—because some enormously significant contributions have been made by peers who have spoken a good deal less often.

7 pm

I know that it is invidious to mention names, but I have tried to select Cross-Bench peers who are known for particular interests. Lord Selborne, who chaired the royal commission on the environment, and who everybody agrees played an enormously constructive role in the upper House over those years, spoke 32 times. Lord Alexander of Weedon, who is a great banker and was a great lawyer, spoke 28 times. The Labour peer, Lord Wedderburn, a great trade union lawyer and a considerable constitutionalist, spoke 28 times. Lord Runciman, who chaired the royal commission on criminal justice, is an outstanding academic and has played an active role in the House, spoke 12 times. I could take the list on. Lord Gowrie, who used to play a great part in Government and is well recognised as a leader in the arts, spoke six times during that period. All those contributions were valuable.

We are discussing an interim, which the Government—I accept in good faith, although they may not achieve it—say will be relatively short. We need to keep the spirit of the House's diversity alive while we decide what to put in its place.

Mr. Hawkins: Does my right hon. and learned Friend support the concept that those hereditary peers who have played a part in the work of the other place over many years, whether they have spoken often or only on a few occasions, should be given a continuing role? That is what I suggested on Second Reading. My right hon. and learned Friend might be interested to know that I have discussed the matter with a number of newly elected Labour Members. Whatever they may say publicly in the Chamber, informally many of them agree that those who have done the work in the other place should be allowed a continuing role and that the number of those allowed to remain should not be restricted to 91.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Yes, I agree with my hon. Friend. At the risk of immodesty, my amendments Nos. 16, 17 and 18, which are in the next group, propose precisely that. It would be out of order to discuss them now.

As I said, faute de mieux and, because it has genuine merit, I support the amendment proposed by my hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire. It provides an opportunity for those who are active in the House of Lords to continue to play a real role in the interim without threatening the Government's proposals. The Government's argument that they might be voted down by the trooping out of backwoodsmen might have some force—they grossly overstate the case, as they grossly overstate much of their case—but they cannot oppose the amendment on that ground.

Mr. Benn: Has the right hon. and learned Gentleman given any consideration to bishops? When a bishop ceases to have a diocese, he is booted out of the House of Lords. He may be a very wise and experienced bishop. He is allowed to use the Dining Room, but he is not allowed to sit in the House. What makes hereditary peers better than retired bishops? The first Archbishop of Canterbury, Cosmo Gordon Lang, who did retire, was made a peer because the Government suddenly realised that, as a retired archbishop, he could do nothing, so they gave him a barony.

The right hon. and learned Gentleman must study what he is talking about. He is speaking as if hereditary peers were better than bishops, but there is no logic in that. I find it fascinating and I shall promote the Hansard of this debate even more actively among my constituents, but it would be helpful if he knew a bit more about the Chamber that he speaks about so fully.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: The right hon. Gentleman, whom I greatly respect and for whom the House has great affection, is obviously intoxicated by his own vision of logic. In commending the example of bishops, he commends corporatism: the bishops represent the Church and the Law Lords represent the law. There is a genuine argument, which the Government are rightly considering, for setting up a partly corporatist upper House. If one is partly corporatist and one is booted out after a time, one disappears. I thought that the right hon. Gentleman was opposed to that, but I now see that he has a sneaking affection for it. He has also noted that archbishops—of York as well as of Canterbury—have been appointed life peers at the end of their term.

Let me return to my theme. The merit of the amendment is that it allows us to continue to benefit from the wisdom of Members of the upper House without threatening the Government. The threat to the Government from the upper House has always been grossly overplayed. What we need from an upper House is people of calibre, diversity and independence. That, above all, is what we need for our constitutional anchor while we consider carefully what to put in the place of the existing House.

I do not support the House of Lords' continuance provided that we can put something better in its place. The artificial attempts of the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) and others to suggest that all Conservative Members are wedded to the principle of hereditary peerage is not just simplistic but self-deluding, because that is an easy windmill at which to tilt. That is what the Government, with all their spin doctors behind them, like to pretend is the view of Conservative Members.

I was proposing constructive reform of the upper House within a year of being elected to this House because I did not want the kind of reform, flooded with nominated peers, that was then being proposed by the right hon. Member for Chesterfield.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. The right hon. and learned Gentleman is going wide of the amendment.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Yes, Mr. Martin, I was going wide. I accept that.

None the less, we must look at the interim. We do not seek to uphold the hereditary peerage in the last ditch: we want a constitutional anchor in the interim, and the amendment provides one constructive way in which we might get it.

Mr. Swayne: It is a pity that the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) is no longer in his place, for he appeared to be taking up the role of inquisitor-general that was played by the hon. Member for Corby (Mr. Hope) on Second Reading in asking each Conservative Member if he or she were in favour of the hereditary principle and whether he or she maintained that support for it despite its abandonment by Conservative Front-Bench Members.

For the benefit of Labour Members, may I say that I share the affection of my hon. Friend the Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth) for the hereditary principle. However, it ignores one salient fact: that, on 1 May 1997, the Labour party, which had explicitly put in its manifesto a commitment to abolish the voting rights of hereditary peers, won that election. Those of us with an affection for the hereditary principle therefore moved on, having lost that battle.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: How many electors does my hon. Friend think voted Labour specifically because of that manifesto pledge?

Mr. Swayne: I have not the remotest idea. However, it does not strike me as a matter of significance because the Labour party has a majority: it has introduced a Bill and can pursue that Bill in accordance with its manifesto. An academic discussion about who voted for what would be profitless.

The amendment is entirely consistent with the principle of the Bill—to abolish the voting rights of hereditary peers—but deals with the consequent practical difficulties that arise from giving effect to that manifesto pledge. As my hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) said in moving the amendment, the main practical difficulty is that more than half the present occupants of the House of Lords will be dispensed with. That creates an enormous hole in terms of expertise on both procedure and particular issues.

My hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire mentioned to hereditary peers who have specialised in certain subjects and been of great public service in using their expertise to draw attention to those. Those peers would be unlikely to find themselves saved by amendments that may or may not be passed during the passage of this Bill. Amendment No. 1 is intended to deal with the loss of that expertise.

Having read the amendment, I still cannot muster any great enthusiasm for the proposed arrangement. My misgivings are not addressed by the fact that it is a transitory arrangement, which will fulfil a need during the hopefully short period that will be required before more fundamental reforms make the amendment—and, indeed, the entire settlement proposed in the Bill—unnecessary.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell) was perhaps more charitable than me in saying that, if it took rather longer for final reform to come about, that might not be because of the Government's intention. I regard the amendment as a powerful incentive to the effecting of speedy reform. It has become clear in the debate that Labour Members have a passionate desire for the hereditary principle, in every form, to be dispensed with; let us therefore pass an amendment such as this, which will give them every incentive to maintain pressure on the Executive, and on Ministers in particular, to dispense with it. Unlike my right hon. and learned Friend, I suspect that the Government have every intention of letting the Bill remain as it is for ever, if necessary. It is therefore entirely appropriate for us to insert arrangements to ensure that the transitional period remains a transitional period.

The Government say that the matter is urgent, but that is belied by the fact that they did not establish a royal commission 20 months ago so that we could examine its findings now. Let amendment No. 1 supply the urgency.

Mr. Wells: As you will expect, Mr. Martin, I am anxious to stay in order so that you will not have to make a ruling. I want to ensure that you agree that we are discussing an amendment that will permit hereditary peers to sit in the House of Lords until such time as the temporary Chamber is abolished and a new Chamber is introduced. I trust that discussion of the way in which the Chamber will work will be in order, as will discussion of why it is necessary for hereditary peers to remain there to participate in debates. Those are important issues.

I risk inclusion in the distribution of Hansard in the constituency of the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), and being caricatured in the way of which only the right hon. Gentleman is capable. That is indeed a serious disincentive. I shall, however, talk about the way in which the House of Lords operates at present. Hon. Members have made speeches illustrating the fact that hereditary peers bring much quality and experience to their task, not least because many come from old families with a long tradition of public service.

Mr. Hawkins: Noblesse oblige.

Mr. Wells: I must ask my hon. Friend about the difference between noblesse oblige and droit de seigneur: I understand that there is a difference. In any event, hereditary peers have given long service to the House of Lords, as have their parents before them, and that service is still important. I suggest that their background is irrelevant. It does not matter whether they are descended from the lady who serviced Charles II in St. James's park, or come from whatever other background the Labour party would like to sling at them; and it does not matter whether what the Labour party says is true. What is important is their contribution to the House of Lords today, and there is no doubt that the quality and credibility of the House of Lords depend largely on the hereditary element.

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe and Nantwich): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Wells: I should love to.

7.15 pm

Mrs. Dunwoody: I am listening carefully to the case that the hon. Gentleman is making. Is he aware that the bulk of the work in the other place is done almost exclusively by those who accept no party Whip, that most are created peers, and that the Cross-Bench group is represented in 90 per cent. of votes as being always present and always ready to discuss matters of state?

Mr. Wells: There is a great deal in what the hon. Lady says. I believe that the Cross Benchers form the largest single group in the House of Lords—they cannot be called a party—and add enormously to what goes on there. They include life peers, but also many hereditary peers—200, I believe—who participate in the elements of House of Lords activity that the hon. Lady admires. I want to talk about the life peers' contribution as well, but I know that you, will call me to order Mr. Martin, if I start talking about life peers. At present, I must concentrate on the 200 hereditary peers on the Cross Benches.

Together with their life peer friends, those hereditary peers make a major contribution—in Select Committees and on the Floor of the House—to the objectivity and, indeed, the quality of debates for which the House of Lords is much respected, as many of my hon. Friends have pointed out. I pay tribute to the selfless work of many peers.

The amendment seeks to preserve that in the interim House. We want to continue the traditions that have been established; we want the House of Lords to retain its credibility, and to continue its good work in checking what is done in the House of Commons and asking it to consider again when necessary. I especially appreciate the work of the House of Lords on European affairs.

Dr. Liam Fox (Woodspring): Does my hon. Friend agree that it is a matter not of academic purity—as Labour Members have suggested—but of pure common sense that, in an interim House, it would benefit the Government as a whole to retain the maximum experience?

Mr. Wells: Indeed. That is why I support the amendment. We are talking about quality, respect and credibility, and about the ability of the House of Lords to constitute a second Chamber of some merit. If the temporary Chamber is not of some merit, it will fall into disrepute, will soon be thought useless, and will therefore disappear. The last temporary arrangements for the House of Lords have lasted for 88 years: until today. There must be a danger that the temporary Chamber will become permanent, and that is one of many reasons for the amendment. The Government want a House of Lords that will be credible, will be able to handle the business and will be a check on the House of Commons, and that is why even they are beginning to support it.

[Mr. Wells]

The Government do not truly want a House of Lords that is elected and permanent, because of the timetable. Hon. Members know as well as I do that a royal commission that is given only nine months will do a very superficial job. If it has done a superficial job, how long will it take for a Joint Committee of both Houses to consider a badly drafted and ill-considered report—as this report is almost certain to be, after only nine months?

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. Gentleman is straying wide of the amendments. I know that he is always keen to keep within the scope of the amendments. I rise to try to assist him.

Mr. Wells: I was hoping that, during my remarks, you would not feel impelled, Mr. Martin, to rebuke me for not keeping the debate closely related to the amendment. If I may demonstrate, it is important to consider what the temporary Chamber with the hereditary peers in it is likely to be like and how long it is likely to last.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. Gentleman does not need to worry about the temporary Chamber. He needs to worry only about the amendment before us, which gives certain rights to hereditary peers. Other amendments may cover the points that he is trying to make. Obviously, when they come before us, he will be able to catch my eye.

Mr. Wells: If I am not mistaken, the amendment talks about including Members of the House of Lords without the capacity to vote, but with the capacity to speak in the Chamber that the Bill sets up. Therefore, we need to talk about the totality of its make-up and whether it will work as a temporary Chamber, for however long "temporary" may be. It has been undefined in the Bill. It remains undefined by the Government. Therefore, we have to consider seriously how long the temporary Chamber with the hereditary peers—which is what I support: the hereditary element in that temporary Chamber—will last and the quality of that Chamber as a result of the hereditary peers being able to speak.

I strongly support the amendment, as I strongly support the next amendment—I will make other points on that, which I hope you, will find to be in order Mr. Martin—because I believe strongly that we need hereditary peers in the Chamber for the time being. The reason for that is that those are the people who give credibility to the House of Lords and provide quality in its work. I have paid great tribute to many of those who work in that way. I want to see them in the interim Chamber.

If the amendment fails, and I assume that we will be in order if we consider what will happen if the amendment fails, we shall have a House without hereditary peers being able to sit and to speak in the House of Lords. Therefore, we will have a Chamber—as the Bill proposes, before it is amended—simply with life peers. Life peers are appointed by Crown privilege—by the prerogative of the Prime Minister. They often have party allegiances, although some have gone to the Cross Benches, as the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) has said. However, would they be bound by the Salisbury convention?

As I understand it, the convention says that, when legislation reaches the House of Lords from the House of Commons, it must be passed to let the Government have their way. We may have a House of Lords without the hereditary peers being there to speak. Hereditary peers would probably honour the Salisbury convention, but life peers will not do so.

The Government have said that they will appoint at least 55 additional life peers. That will give the Labour party a quality of representation: there will be a balance between Conservative life peers and life peers who have adherence to the Labour party.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps I can again assist the hon. Gentleman. He is talking about the structure of the other place. We are considering voting and speaking rights for hereditary peers, so he should stick to the narrow confines of the amendment that is before us.

Mr. Wells: I am sure that you would agree, Mr. Martin, that the Salisbury convention was so named because it was proposed and advocated by a hereditary peer.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps there is another occasion when the hon. Gentleman can talk about the Salisbury convention, but he should not do so in the debate on the amendments that are before us. They are too narrow for that.

Mr. Wells: Let me bring myself directly to order. We want hereditary Members of the House of Lords to remain to speak—not to vote, but to speak; that is what the amendment is about. It is that body of peers, the hereditary peers, that will respect the Salisbury convention. I will leave the matter by making the following point if you do not wish me to go on and develop that point still further, Mr. Martin; I understand your need to keep the debate under strict control and I respect that fully: it is the hereditary peers who will respect the Salisbury convention. That is why we need them. Life peers are not likely to do so. I will leave that point to other debates.

Mr. Tyrie: One aspect of the relationship between the clause and the Salisbury convention is that the convention is intended to apply mainly to non-obstruction of Government business that has been in a manifesto: legislation should not be voted down on Second Reading. However, another possibility is that the convention might need to apply to those people who might consider filibustering against Government business. If we passed the clause, might we not have to consider the possibility that peers who are brought in who have the right to speak, but not vote, may yet play a constitutional role by filibustering?

Mr. Wells: Filibustering is a time-honoured convention of this House. I know that those who fill the Chair do not agree with that time-honoured convention and seek to prevent any such thing from taking place, but it is a useful democratic tool in a debating Chamber such as this—an elected one—as it is in the House of Lords. Therefore, hereditary peers would assist the process of delay. As you will know, Mr. Martin, because of the number of years that you sat on the Back Benches, that is practically the only weapon that is available to the Opposition to bring the Government to their senses and to make them listen to some views that they would rather not hear. I know that you are very determined to make certain that all Back Benchers get that opportunity, which I use at the present time.

One of the serious issues is the way in which the Government will use the House of Lords without the hereditary peers in it. Clearly, it will be a major extension of Executive power if the Government totally control the way in which the House of Lords votes. That is what will happen in the House of Lords if it is totally appointed and does not have the element of hereditary peers, even if they do not have votes.

We will talk about hereditary peers with votes in the debate on the next amendment—which I have a lot to say about as well—but here we are looking at a House of Lords with 55 extra Labour Members, who will be able to pass anything that the Prime Minister wishes to have passed. There will be no delaying powers, however long the filibuster. That is why we need the hereditary peers in the interim Chamber. Otherwise, we put the House of Lords in limbo—a limbo position whereby it will be simply the poodle of the elected Government.

7.30 pm

Mrs. Dunwoody: The hon. Gentleman seems to be suggesting that the "limbo" position is horizontal.

Mr. Wells: I know that the hon. Lady has visited the Caribbean. She is of course right to say that, in the Caribbean, limbo dancing is done horizontally, under a flaming bar, to calypso music of the type that is performed so brilliantly in Trinidad and Tobago during carnival, which starts today and leads up to Lent. However, I believe that you would quickly pull me up to order if I followed that thought, Mr. Martin.

Limbo—lying down—is exactly what the elected Government want the other place to do. I believe that we need the hereditary peers to prevent such a Chamber being created.

We have also to question the Government about the peculiar position into which they have got themselves. Although they oppose amendment No. 1, they will support an amendment tabled subsequently in the other place proposing to retain hereditary peers with powers.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. Gentleman knows that he must not speak to subsequent amendments. We must dispose of this group of amendments before dealing with the next one. There is no point in mentioning subsequent amendments now. He will be able to speak to them when we reach them.

Mr. Wells: I should be very interested to know what your Clerk would advise you, Mr. Martin.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. No one advises the occupant of the Chair—who has made a decision and given a ruling.

Mr. Wells: I assure you, Mr. Martin, that I have no doubt that you will always make very positive and proper decisions in the interests of all hon. Members.

The Government are in a peculiar position. In a subsequent amendment, they will be supporting hereditary peers with voting rights, whereas, in amendment No. 1, they will not support peers without voting rights. That seems to be illogical.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. We are considering amendment No. 1 and the amendments grouped with it. We shall consider the next group of amendments when we reach it. Let us speak to this group of amendments before proceeding to the next one.

Mr. Wells: I believe that, if we pass amendment No. 1, we may not have to worry about the next group of amendments. If we pass the amendment, the Clerk may say to you, "The next amendment falls." We could therefore move on even more swiftly—which I know would very much please your heart, Mr. Martin, and the hearts of the Government Whips.

Sir Patrick Cormack: Perhaps I might help my hon. Friend by saying that, if the Government had the good sense to accept amendment No. 1, we might well decide not to move the next group of amendments.

Mr. Wells: That might be a very sensible course of action. If we passed the amendment, we would have a new House of Lords in which we retained all the peers and would not have to choose from among them. They would not have to elect from among themselves, and we would not have to have the peculiarly distorted electoral process described in the next group of amendments, which we shall debate at length.

If we passed amendment No. 1, we would create a House of Lords that is credible and contains all the talents. I should say that I wonder why the hereditary peers give so much time to the work of the House of Lords. They deserve our respect and great gratitude for doing the very hard that work they do.

If we passed amendment No. 1—even if the new second Chamber were temporary for much longer than any of us suspect that it will be—we would have a second Chamber of which the United Kingdom could be proud and that would fulfil a very useful function in our overall parliamentary process.

I therefore commend amendment No. 1 to the Committee.

I am grateful to you, Mr. Martin, for your forbearance in allowing me to try to apply some pertinent points in the argument that we should have hereditary peers—unable to vote, but sitting in the other place.

Mr. Tyrie: I shall be brief. [Hon. Members: "Shame."] I can only assume that that is a reference to one or two other occasions—which hon. Members liked—when I spoke in the House.

The amendment expresses not a new idea but an idea that has been around for a very long time. It was first expressed as a serious proposal, in draft legislative form, by a Labour Government, in 1968. Richard Crossman proposed it. Labour quite happily signed up to the idea then—and it did so after a process of all-party consultation. If there is one salient and appalling aspect of the way in which the current Government have gone about their business in introducing the Bill, it is that there has been no all-party consultation.

[Mr. Tyrie]

On all previous occasions when fundamental reform of the House of Lords has been proposed by a Government—in 1910, 1948 and 1968—there has been prior all-party consultation. There has not been such consultation this time—not a scrap of it; nothing at all. The Government have simply introduced the Bill and told us to vote for it. Today, we have the opportunity at least for a little debate and to point out that Labour itself once supported—even introduced—the proposals made in the group of amendments before us.

After all-party consultation, the proposals were agreed by Conservative Members. Lord Carrington agreed to them. Consequently, they might easily have found their way on to the statute book. Having said all that, however, I cannot say that I am terribly attracted to the idea.

Mr. Wells: I wonder whether my hon. Friend will reflect on the reasons why that Bill was not passed? It was, after all, Mr. Foot and Enoch Powell who opposed it.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. Gentleman should know better. We are going far too wide of the matters dealt with in amendment No. 1.

Mr. Tyrie: One of the reasons why it was not passed—

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. I have made the point. The hon. Gentleman should speak to the amendment. The history of previous Bills is nothing to do with what we are considering now.

Mr. Tyrie: If you will be forbearing for just a moment, Mr. Martin, I promise you that—probably even by the end of the sentence that I was beginning—I shall be able to show that I am speaking exclusively to the amendment.

One of the main reasons why the earlier Bill was not passed is that the proposals in it were very complicated and would have been difficult to administer. A crucial and difficult aspect of the administration of that Bill was the decision to have people sitting alongside one another some of whom would have been able to vote and some of whom would not.

Sir Patrick Cormack: Does my hon. Friend accept that there is a significant difference between this Bill and the earlier Bill—which was to be a once-and-for-all reform? The situation created by the earlier Bill would have persisted for many years, whereas our proposals deal only with an interim stage.

Mr. Tyrie: My hon. Friend anticipates remarks that I shall make in a few moments. Be not afeard! Tonight, I shall not be a rebel: I shall be back on-side by the time the Division bell goes.

In 1956, a study of the idea was made by an official working party, including Clerks of the House, which has become available under the 30-year rule. On the proposal that is dealt with in amendment No. 1, which was supported by the Labour party in 1968, the report concluded:

> "A second Chamber which contained a large number of peers who were impotent but not speechless would be regarded by many as ludicrous and unrealistic."

The working party also said that such an arrangement would be wholly impractical, making the composition and voting structure of the Committee structure of the House of Lords very complicated and almost impossible to run.

In normal circumstances, such a report would have caused me to want to oppose amendment No. 1. We must look at the amendment in the context of the Bill, and I have never seen a more foolish and stupid Bill. It is not even halfway sensible.

Mr. Greg Pope (Hyndburn): The poll tax?

Mr. Tyrie: The hon. Gentleman mentions the poll tax—

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. Gentleman mentioned the poll tax, and I have told him to be quiet.

Mr. Tyrie: I am doing my best. You will recall, Mr. Martin, that the last time I was called to order, I completed my sentence to arrive absolutely within order in seconds.

Mr. Forth: My hon. Friend has pointed out that the report referred to the impracticality of the proposal in the amendment. Does he agree that there is a certain attractiveness in that? If stage 1 were demonstrated to be impractical, would that not hasten the need to move to stage 2?

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Tyrie: I am reluctant to give way any more because everyone seems to want to make the few points that I have left for me, which is very distressing. I will do my best to make the points in my own way, and then I will sit down quickly.

We are faced with a Bill that will leave the House of Lords not even halfway workable. It will be a joke of a House of Lords—nothing more than a farce. It will be something for which the public will show no respect and which will command no general consent. That is why anyone with any sense should support the amendment, which would at least provide an element of continuity between where we are now and stage 1. It would enable a few people who know what they are doing to carry on articulating their views and demonstrating the independence that is an essential part of a second Chamber.

It is possible that the amendment would have no effect, and that the House of Lords would look just as bad with or without hereditary peers having speaking rights—I do not know—but I am sure that it would not make it look worse. I am therefore moved to support the amendment. I am particularly aware of the points made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth), because the retention of those peers with speaking, if not voting, rights will increase the pressure on the Government to introduce stage 2 reform. I have always wanted stage 2 reform and believed that we should go straight to it. I have never wanted stage 1. It is essential that we have a second Chamber that works effectively.

It is possible that the proposal will flag up even more saliently the absurdity of the interim House. We have heard tonight that the interim House will be a dog's breakfast or a pig's ear. No language is too strong to describe the disgraceful constitutional gerrymandering that the Government are embarked on. At best, the amendment assuages a tiny bit the damaging impact of that; at worst, it can do no damage. I therefore commend it to the Committee.

Mr. Grieve: One of the features to emerge from the debate—it came as a surprise to me—was the way in which a number of the Government's supporters suggested that the main thrust of the amendments was in some way to prolong into a future Parliament the role of the hereditary peerage. My support for the amendment comes precisely from the desire to see stage 2 implemented—exactly like my hon. Friend the Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie).

I said on Second Reading—I stand by it—that I was unwilling to embark on stage 1 without stage 2. Since the Government have freed the logjam and made that decision for me, I want to move rapidly to a stage 2 that will lead to a radical transformation of the relationship between the two Houses and, above all, of the way in which the upper House operates and is selected. I am increasingly coming to the view that the only way in which that can be done—and the only way in which we can be sure that Governments are brought to account and that there is proper public scrutiny of business—is with an elected second Chamber.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell) said that he accepted the Government's assurance that they would try to move to the next stage by 2001. In fact, if one looks at the Government's comments on Second Reading as concerning the length of the interim—

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. Gentleman must concentrate on the amendments, and not on Second Reading or on stage 2. He cannot speak at length on those matters.

7.45 pm

Mr. Grieve: I will do my very best, but I hope that some forbearance will be exercised towards the development of arguments on what I think are relevant points—points centring on the amendments—from Members who may come late to the debate but who have sat through everything, as opposed to the latitude that seemed to be allowed to those who participated earlier.

If we allow hereditary peers to remain as participating, but not voting, Members of the interim Chamber, it will provide a powerful mechanism to ensure that the quality that they have contributed in the past—which Labour Members have acknowledged—is maintained. However, they will not be interfering with the basic premise repeated so often on Second Reading—that the fact that they are there by right of heredity is wrong; that the Government have a mandate to bring about change; and that the Government wish to see an upper House that is more balanced in terms of the proportions of the parties.

None of those matters is interfered with in any way by amendment No. 1, which is targeted at continuing participation by hereditary peers in debate, but not in votes. On 1 February, the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth) said:

> "The White Paper made it clear that if we can get a consensus and if the commission meets the timetable, we shall make every effort to ensure that the second stage of reform is approved by Parliament by the next general election."—[Official Report, 1 February 1999; Vol. 324, c. 696.]

That is hardly in accordance with the Government saying the year 2001—and, indeed, as a nebulous promise it takes some beating. At the end of that debate, the Minister said that only by consensus could the Government move forward.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. Once again the hon. Gentleman is going wide of the amendments. I am bound by the rules of the House, and I cannot allow him to do that. It is not good if the Chair keeps intervening, but I must do so if the hon. Gentleman goes wide of the amendments. We cannot have a rerun of the Second Reading debate.

Mr. Grieve: I apologise, but I am referring to the significance of the amendment in terms of the problem pointed to by the Minister of State. There is no consensus. There is no consensus of any kind among Labour Members. What powerful mechanism can therefore be introduced by the amendment to ensure that the Government are shamed into hastening stage 2? I believe that the hereditary peers' continued participation in the upper House will be that powerful mechanism. They will not have a vested interest in voting, but they are the one group with a permanent and vested interest in seeing that the Government honour their commitments on both stage 1 and stage 2 of reform.

I have no faith in the Government's promise; not because I think that the Minister of State tried to deceive the House on Second Reading—or, for that matter, that the Leader of the House has tried to do so—but because of the difficulty of achieving consensus, and therefore of not moving to the second stage.

Amendment No. 23 deals with the question of leaving to the hereditary peers a residual voting right over the extension of the life of the Parliament. The issue goes to the heart of a major flaw in the Bill, to which we shall return on the next group of amendments. No adequate answer was provided by Ministers on Second Reading. I hope that the matter will be fully discussed in Committee. My understanding of a Parliament is that it subsists for a set period. It is started by the issue of a writ of election, followed by the writ of summons to individual peers to attend. We are one body in terms of the constitution and make-up of this House and of the other House. I am the first to accept that we have the power to change that make-up for the future, but I should be interested to know the constitutional basis on which the House can lop off a limb—a part of itself—during the currency of the Parliament.

We shall come back to that on the next group of amendments, because it is critical. I should also like to talk about a European human rights dimension. If we accept the basic premise on amendment No. 23, it becomes even more extraordinary that the hereditary peers should be deprived of their right to vote during the currency of a Parliament to which they have been summoned, and of the chance to debate that Parliament being perpetuated ad infinitum. There is a possibility—albeit a technical one—that that could happen.

[Mr. Grieve]

I share the view of my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge–Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) that it is unlikely that the power would be abused by the life peers or that they would not be capable of opposing a wrongful decision of this House to try to extend its life. However, that does not alter the fact that the hereditary peers were summoned to this Parliament for its life. Technically, this Parliament could continue ad infinitum without a fresh Parliament being summoned. That is a major flaw in the legislation, which could be cured by allowing the hereditary peers the right under the constitution to ensure that this Parliament does not have an infinite existence.

Mr. Michael Fallon (Sevenoaks): Does not that also strengthen the case for excluding the composition of the future House from the remit of the Parliament Acts? It was not excluded from the Parliament Act 1911 because the Act was supposed to be temporary.

Mr. Grieve: My hon. Friend makes a good point. There might well be compelling arguments for so doing, although I accept that this Parliament has the right to settle and regulate how a future Parliament might be constructed. My objection, which I shall return to in the debate on the next set of amendments, centres on our right to do that during the course of this Parliament, rather than leaving it to a future Parliament after the next election. That is why I suggested on Second Reading that we should have been wise to legislate and then defer the changes until after the next election.

I hope that the Minister will consider my point. I shall raise several times in Committee the constitutional propriety of the way in which we are going about our business. I was promised last time that the Government would give some indication of how they view the matter, but they have not yet done so. On that basis, I am happy to bring to a close my contributions on the amendments.

Mr. Hoon: May I belatedly welcome you to the Chair, Mr. Martin? You have not had the excruciating, or exquisite, pleasure of sitting here throughout this fascinating and ingenious debate. I say "ingenious" because of Conservative Members' efforts to get across their arguments and—dare I say—their previously prepared speeches while staying within narrowly drawn amendments. As ever more Conservative Members turned up to make their contributions, I wondered whether the real ingenuity was taking place somewhere else in the building, with Conservative Whips encouraging their Members to contribute, but perhaps not always telling them the precise nature of the amendments on which they were expected to speak.

I congratulate the hon. Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) on setting the style of the debate with the ingenuity of his speech. He used all his considerable eloquence to circle round the central question of why, although he accepts that hereditary peers should not vote on legislation—as I understand that he now does—he believes that they should have the right to attend, sit and speak in the legislature simply as a result of the accident of their birth. The same argument that applies to their right to vote must apply to their right to sit.

I know that the hon. Gentleman is a great student of history and literature. While listening to his speech, when he demonstrated his considerable enthusiasm for the hereditary peers, I was put in mind of the words of Walter Bagehot, with which I am sure the hon. Gentleman is familiar. He wrote that the cure for admiring the House of Lords was to go and look at it. Bagehot was writing in very different times, of course, making observations that are no longer strictly relevant. He was writing in the 19th century, calling for a fundamental reform of the second Chamber.

Mr. Crispin Blunt (Reigate): There is a distinction between the right to vote and the right to speak. I was not able to take part in the earlier exchanges because I was detained on matters concerning defence and foreign affairs, which are my areas of interest and knowledge. If the amendment is not accepted, we shall throw away all the knowledge and expertise that is sitting in another place before we come forward with plans for stage 2 that tell us what the final nature of the Chamber will be.

Mr. Hoon: We have heard some descriptions of the 1968 proposals. The Government have been taken to task because the Labour party then supported the idea of having two sorts of Member. Unfortunately, the hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie), who is no longer present, did not follow that point through. The 1968 proposals failed because the Conservatives withdrew their support on the grounds that they were too complex and would have produced two sorts of peer. That completely answers the hon. Gentleman's point.

The Government will resist the amendments because we stated categorically in the manifesto on which we were elected that the rights of hereditary peers to sit and vote in the House of Lords would be ended by statute—not just the right to vote, but the rights to sit and vote. We made it abundantly clear in the manifesto, the White Paper and recent debates that hereditary peers should not be allowed to sit or vote in our Parliament solely on the basis of their birth and without any consideration of their personal qualities and achievements.

Mr. Forth: In that case, how can it be that the Government may be conceding the principle of keeping a certain number of hereditary peers in the interim stage? We do not know whether they will, because the issue has not shuttled back and forward yet, but perhaps—

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. That is a matter for the next debate.

Mr. Forth: On the other hand, the Minister is saying that the Government have a manifesto commitment that there can be no hereditaries in the upper House.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps it is time to let the Committee know that interventions should be brief. There should not be any lead-ups to a case. Hon. Members should just put their case.

Mr. Hoon: The Bill is designed to ensure that the House of Lords is a modern, capable and effective second Chamber, fit for a Parliament of the next century. There is no place for hereditary pe[illegible]n such a Chamber. There is no case for them to be allowed to vote, to speak, to sit or to participate.

Mr. Oliver Letwin (West Dorset): If the Bill is meant to do all those wonderful things, why have a White Paper and a stage 2?

8 pm

Mr. Hoon: Because, as Conservative Members have said, we have failed in the past to deliver any reform of the House of Lords. As several Government Members said on Second Reading, successful reform can be achieved by a series of stages. We have set out the stages and a timetable, and we intend to deliver on our manifesto commitment.

Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley): This has been a good debate. Including myself, 20 right hon. and hon. Members have spoken. The Minister quoted Bagehot saying that those who admired the House of Lords need only come to look at it; Conservative Members feel that those who admire parliamentary democracy need only come here to see how badly reforms are needed, not only for the upper Chamber but for the whole Parliament. We need the checks and balances that a properly constituted second Chamber will provide. That is the purpose of the amendments.

We have been told time and again that we are promoting the hereditary principle for the long term or that we want to delay reform and pack the second Chamber with hereditaries. That is not the case. We have already conceded the fact that the second stage House of Lords will have no place for the hereditary principle, but, as yet, we do not know what the second stage will be and we are concentrating on stage 1.

Page 4 of the White Paper breaks with the manifesto commitment to abolish all the hereditary peers. It says that the Government will be minded to accept the Weatherill amendment in another place, so the Government have already conceded that the hereditary principle should be part of the first stage reform. The amendment expands that one step further, suggesting that hereditary peers should have a role in stage 1.

The President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mrs. Margaret Beckett): That is not the point at all.

Mr. Evans: The right hon. Lady may disagree, but page 4 of the White Paper says:

> "Legislation being introduced in this Parliamentary session will create a transitional House of Lords. If, as has been proposed, an amendment to the legislation is supported to allow a small number of hereditary peers to sit temporarily in the transitional House, the Government is minded to accept this proposal at an appropriate stage."

The Government have conceded the principle and we have expanded it in the amendment to take heed of the fact that there are so many hereditary peers who could make a contribution—by voice, not vote—in the transitional upper Chamber.

Mr. Hoon: The Government are committed to abolishing the remaining hereditary peers and moving quickly to stage 2. Conservative Members have consistently said that they are suspicious about our determination to get on to stage 2. Surely the fact that there will be a residual number of hereditary peers demonstrates how determined we are to get to stage 2 quickly.

Mr. Evans: Some people, more cynical than myself about accepting what the Minister says, might argue that the Government are holding a pistol to the head of the hereditaries in the upper House to ensure that the legislation passes more smoothly there. The 1911 amendment was a temporary measure, and here we are, 88 years on, considering the same matter.

Mr. Shepherd: I hope that my hon. Friend will be very cautious about the argument that has just been advanced. A White Paper on freedom of information was published well over a year ago, with many promises of a draft Bill, and we are still waiting.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. We cannot go into freedom of information on these amendments.

Mr. Evans: We all accept that 59 per cent. of the House of Lords is hereditary. The Government's rate of peerage creation has been higher than any since 1958, but I fully accept that they are trying to increase the number of peers representing the governing party in the upper Chamber. They have created 105, including the four Law Lords, since the Prime Minister took office.

Of the peers under 39, only two are there by appointment, so 36 are there by succession. We have always argued that it is good to get youth in Parliament and give young people the opportunity to have their say. That is one argument in favour of succession. [Laughter.] Hon. Members mock, but hereditary peerages are one way in which young people can get a say about the governance of this country. [Laughter.] It is amazing that Labour Members can dispute the fact that 36 of the 38 peers under 39 are there by succession.

Mr. Garnier: Would it not be easier to accept the mockery of Government Back Benchers if they had taken the time and trouble to contribute to the debate? I think I am right in saying that only two Labour Back Benchers have spoken this evening, but they now come in giggling and smirking, as though their giggles and smirks were of some intellectual value.

Mr. Evans: My hon. and learned Friend is absolutely right. We know that the Government are not prepared to accept facts.

The amendment would allow the Government to have the benefit of the current wealth of experience—I hope that Labour Members do not dispute the fact that such experience exists in the upper Chamber—without having to whinge constantly about being voted down. The amendment is designed to retain the voice, not the vote. We seek the quality of peers' minds, not the quantity of their votes.

What are the Government worried about? Successive Prime Ministers have used patronage to put people of experience from the House of Commons into the House of Lords to carry on with their role of scrutinising legislation. David Steel, Margaret Thatcher and other politicians have made that transition and, as other hon. Members have said, not only politicians go to the other place.

We are in favour of a transitional House, but we do not know to this date how long the transitional House will last. The Parliamentary Secretary, Privy Council Office wrote to me on 9 February:

> "you asked what would happen if the report of the Royal Commission is not to the Government's liking. As you well know, no Government is bound by the conclusions of a Royal Commission.

> Our aim in setting up a Royal Commission to consider long-term reform of the House of Lords is to enable the widest possible consultation and debate on such a fundamental issue, with the aim of reaching a consensus with all the interested parties, not just the politicians."

There are no guarantees. We do not know what the royal commission will propose.

Mr. Tipping: If the hon. Gentleman is so keen to find consensus and a solution, when will we see the former Lord Chancellor's proposals? If we want to make haste, we must see the Conservative proposals.

Mr. Evans: The answer, as the hon. Gentleman knows, is soon. If he and his party had been so serious about second-stage reform, they would have set up the royal commission in May 1997, instead of waiting until a couple of weeks ago to announce it. There is more sincerity on this side of the Committee than has been displayed to date by Labour Members.

I shall pick out some of the points that have been made. My hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) said that 40 per cent. of regular attenders were hereditary peers. That wealth of experience will be denied to the upper Chamber during what we hope will be a relatively short transition period. The hereditary peers' wealth of experience, in their voices but not their votes, would assist with the 2,000 amendments that the House of Lords passes every year. My hon. Friend mentioned the Countess of Mar and the third Baron Freyburg—the former a senior peer and the latter a new peer—as two examples of a number of peers who have been able to make considerable contributions in the upper Chamber.

The hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), in a short speech, said that he was disappointed by the staging process, but was prepared to accept the fact that there would be two stages. One of the bones of the contention is that he is prepared not to allow hereditary peers to make a contribution to that process.

The hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Linton), in his speech and in an intervention, said that a House of 750 hereditary peers would throw up people of ability. Of course that is the case, and those people of ability should be given the opportunity, at least during the transition period, to contribute to debates. The retention of the voice, but not the vote, of hereditary peers would concentrate the Government's mind in considering the royal commission's proposals and encourage them to make stage 2 proposals to the House as soon as possible.

My hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) talked about the need for checks and balances. They will be needed more than ever because of the ever-growing power of the Executive in Downing street.

The hon. Member for Braintree (Mr. Hurst) mocked the experience and talent that are available in the upper Chamber, which was rather a shame, given the commitment and dedication shown by peers over many years.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) was critical of the amendment, but, as I have tried to point out, there is nothing sinister about wanting to retain the hereditary principle during the transition period. Those peers would be there only to give guidance, advice and expertise during the transition. We do not know what the next stage will be—it could be a wholly elected Chamber, as we have heard many hon. Members suggest this evening, or partially elected and partially nominated. Some peers leaving the upper Chamber may want to stand for election. We shall find out when we reach stage 2.

My hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) said that the amendment was a practical mechanism to allow the peers' expertise to be retained in the upper Chamber. That is absolutely right. We must remember that the powers of the upper Chamber are totally different from those of a second Chamber. Nobody is saying that we want the upper House to compete with the lower House, but we want to ensure that there are proper checks and balances.

I could carry on for some considerable time; I am delighted that, as I speak, hon. Members are flooding into the Committee in the anticipation and hope that I will do so, but I must bitterly disappoint them. I shall not have the opportunity to consider many of the points made about the amendments. Needless to say, I hope that those hon. Members who have come in late and were unable to listen to the debate, which has been good and wide ranging, will at least consider that we have the opportunity to support the hereditary peers who have served the House of Lords and parliamentary democracy well for many years.

We can give those peers their voice, but not the vote that the Government have said, time and time again, caused them to introduce the Bill. The Government said that there was a need for legislation because they were continually outvoted in the House of Lords and democracy was eaten away by the fact that the Conservatives had a permanent majority there. The amendment would remove that majority, but it would not remove the commonsense voice of those hereditary peers who have served Parliament well for many years.

Question put, That the amendment be made:—

The Committee divided: Ayes 131, Noes 332.

Division No. 67] [8.15 pm

AYES

Ainsworth, Peter (E Surrey)
Amess, David
Ancram, Rt Hon Michael
Arbuthnot, Rt Hon James
Atkinson, David (Bour'mth E)
Atkinson, Peter (Hexham)
Baldry, Tony
Bercow, John
Beresford, Sir Paul
Blunt, Crispin
Boswell, Tim
Bottomley, Peter (Worthing W)
Brady, Graham
Brazier, Julian
Browning, Mrs Angela
Bruce, Ian (S Dorset)
Burns, Simon
Butterfill, John
Chapman, Sir Sydney
    (Chipping Barnet)
Chope, Christopher
Clappison, James
Clarke, Rt Hon Kenneth
    (Rushcliffe)
Clifton-Brown, Geoffrey
Colvin, Michael
Cormack, Sir Patrick
Cran, James
Curry, Rt Hon David
Davis, Rt Hon David (Haltemprice)
Day, Stephen
Duncan, Alan
Evans, Nigel
Faber, David
Fabricant, Michael
Fallon, Michael
Forth, Rt Hon Eric
Fowler, Rt Hon Sir Norman
Fox, Dr Liam
Fraser, Christopher
Gale, Roger
Garnier, Edward
Gibb, Nick
Gill, Christopher
Gillan, Mrs Cheryl
Goodlad, Rt Hon Sir Alastair
Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Gray, James
Green, Damian
Greenway, John
Grieve, Dominic
Gummer, Rt Hon John
Hammond, Philip
Hawkins, Nick

Hayes, John
Heald, Oliver
Heathcoat-Amory, Rt Hon David
Hogg, Rt Hon Douglas
Horam, John
Howard, Rt Hon Michael
Howarth, Gerald (Aldershot)
Hunter, Andrew
Jack, Rt Hon Michael
Jenkin, Bernard
Johnson Smith,
  Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey
Key, Robert
King, Rt Hon Tom (Bridgwater)
Kirkbride, Miss Julie
Laing, Mrs Eleanor
Lait, Mrs Jacqui
Lansley, Andrew
Letwin, Oliver
Lewis, Dr Julian (New Forest E)
Lidington, David
Lilley, Rt Hon Peter
Lloyd, Rt Hon Sir Peter (Fareham)
Loughton, Tim
Luff, Peter
Lyell, Rt Hon Sir Nicholas
MacGregor, Rt Hon John
McIntosh, Miss Anne
MacKay, Rt Hon Andrew
Maclean, Rt Hon David
McLoughlin, Patrick
Madel, Sir David
Malins, Humfrey
Maples, John
Mates, Michael
Maude, Rt Hon Francis
Mawhinney, Rt Hon Sir Brian
May, Mrs Theresa
Moss, Malcolm
Nicholls, Patrick
Ottaway, Richard
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Paterson, Owen
Prior, David
Randall, John
Redwood, Rt Hon John
Robertson, Laurence (Tewk'b'ry)
Rowe, Andrew (Faversham)
Ruffley, David
St Aubyn, Nick
Sayeed, Jonathan
Shephard, Rt Hon Mrs Gillian
Simpson, Keith (Mid-Norfolk)
Spicer, Sir Michael
Spring, Richard
Stanley, Rt Hon Sir John
Steen, Anthony
Streeter, Gary
Swayne, Desmond
Syms, Robert
Taylor, Ian (Esher & Walton)
Taylor, Sir Teddy
Townend, John
Trend, Michael
Tyrie, Andrew
Walter, Robert
Wardle, Charles
Waterson, Nigel
Wells, Bowen
Whitney, Sir Raymond
Whittingdale, John
Widdecombe, Rt Hon Miss Ann
Wilkinson, John
Willetts, David
Wilshire, David
Winterton, Mrs Ann (Congleton)
Woodward, Shaun
Yeo, Tim
Young, Rt Hon Sir George

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. John M. Taylor and
Mr. Tim Collins.

NOES

Abbott, Ms Diane
Ainger, Nick
Ainsworth, Robert (Cov'try NE)
Alexander, Douglas
Allan, Richard
Allen, Graham
Anderson, Donald (Swansea E)
Ashdown, Rt Hon Paddy
Ashton, Joe
Austin, John
Baker, Norman
Ballard, Jackie
Banks, Tony
Barnes, Harry
Barron, Kevin
Bayley, Hugh
Beard, Nigel
Beckett, Rt Hon Mrs Margaret
Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Bennett, Andrew F
Benton, Joe
Bermingham, Gerald
Berry, Roger
Betts, Clive
Blears, Ms Hazel
Blizzard, Bob
Boateng, Paul
Borrow, David
Bradley, Keith (Withington)
Bradley, Peter (The Wrekin)
Breed, Colin
Brinton, Mrs Helen
Brown, Rt Hon Nick (Newcastle E)
Bruce, Malcolm (Gordon)
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Burnett, John
Burstow, Paul
Butler, Mrs Christine
Campbell, Mrs Anne (C'bridge)
Campbell, Menzies (NE Fife)
Campbell-Savours, Dale
Cann, Jamie
Caplin, Ivor
Casale, Roger
Caton, Martin
Cawsey, Ian
Chapman, Ben (Wirral S)
Chaytor, David
Chidgey, David
Chisholm, Malcolm
Clapham, Michael
Clark, Rt Hon Dr David (S Shields)
Clark, Paul (Gillingham)
Clarke, Rt Hon Tom (Coatbridge)
Clarke, Tony (Northampton S)
Clwyd, Ann
Coaker, Vernon
Coffey, Ms Ann
Coleman, Iain
Colman, Tony
Connarty, Michael
Cook, Frank (Stockton N)
Cooper, Yvette
Corbett, Robin
Cotter, Brian
Cousins, Jim
Cranston, Ross
Crausby, David
Cryer, John (Hornchurch)
Cummings, John
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Cunningham, Jim (Cov'try S)
Dalyell, Tam
Darling, Rt Hon Alistair
Darvill, Keith
Davey, Edward (Kingston)
Davey, Valerie (Bristol W)
Davidson, Ian
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (Llanelli)
Davies, Geraint (Croydon C)
Davies, Rt Hon Ron (Caerphilly)
Davis, Terry (B'ham Hodge H)
Dawson, Hilton
Dean, Mrs Janet
Denham, John
Dismore, Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Donohoe, Brian H
Doran, Frank
Drew, David
Drown, Ms Julia
Dunwoody, Mrs Gwyneth
Eagle, Angela (Wallasey)
Edwards, Huw
Efford, Clive
Ellman, Mrs Louise
Ennis, Jeff
Etherington, Bill
Ewing, Mrs Margaret
Fatchett, Rt Hon Derek
Field, Rt Hon Frank
Fisher, Mark
Fitzpatrick, Jim
Fitzsimons, Lorna
Flynn, Paul
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Don (Bath)
Foster, Michael Jabez (Hastings)
Foulkes, George
Fyfe, Maria
Gapes, Mike
George, Andrew (St Ives)
George, Bruce (Walsall S)
Gerrard, Neil
Gibson, Dr Ian
Gilroy, Mrs Linda
Godman, Dr Norman A
Godsiff, Roger
Golding, Mrs Llin
Gordon, Mrs Eileen
Gorrie, Donald
Griffiths, Jane (Reading E)
Griffiths, Nigel (Edinburgh S)
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Grocott, Bruce
Grogan, John
Gunnell, John
Hall, Mike (Weaver Vale)
Hall, Patrick (Bedford)
Hamilton, Fabian (Leeds NE)
Hancock, Mike
Hanson, David
Heal, Mrs Sylvia
Heath, David (Somerton & Frome)
Henderson, Doug (Newcastle N)
Hepburn, Stephen
Heppell, John
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, Ms Patricia
Hill, Keith
Hoey, Kate
Home Robertson, John
Hood, Jimmy
Hoon, Geoffrey
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Howells, Dr Kim
Hughes, Ms Beverley (Stretford)
Hughes, Kevin (Doncaster N)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark N)
Humble, Mrs Joan
Hurst, Alan
Hutton, John
Iddon, Dr Brian
Illsley, Eric
Jackson, Ms Glenda (Hampstead)
Jackson, Helen (Hillsborough)
Jenkins, Brian
Johnson, Alan (Hull W & Hessle)
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Jones, Helen (Warrington N)
Jones, Ms Jenny
  (Wolverh'ton SW)
Jones, Dr Lynne (Selly Oak)
Jones, Martyn (Clwyd S)
Jowell, Rt Hon Ms Tessa
Kaufman, Rt Hon Gerald
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keen, Alan (Feltham & Heston)
Keen, Ann (Brentford & Isleworth)
Kennedy, Jane (Wavertree)
Kidney, David
Kilfoyle, Peter
King, Andy (Rugby & Kenilworth)
King, Ms Oona (Bethnal Green)
Kingham, Ms Tess
Kirkwood, Archy
Kumar, Dr Ashok
Ladyman, Dr Stephen
Lawrence, Ms Jackie
Laxton, Bob
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Ivan (Bury S)
Lewis, Terry (Worsley)
Linton, Martin
Lloyd, Tony (Manchester C)
Llwyd, Elfyn
Lock, David
Love, Andrew
McAllion, John
McAvoy, Thomas
McCafferty, Ms Chris
McCartney, Ian (Makerfield)
McDonagh, Siobhain
McDonnell, John
McGuire, Mrs Anne
McIsaac, Shona
Mackinlay, Andrew
Maclennan, Rt Hon Robert
Mactaggart, Fiona
McWalter, Tony
Mahon, Mrs Alice
Mallaber, Judy
Mandelson, Rt Hon Peter
Marsden, Gordon (Blackpool S)
Marsden, Paul (Shrewsbury)
Marshall, Jim (Leicester S)
Marshall-Andrews, Robert
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Meacher, Rt Hon Michael
Meale, Alan
Merron, Gillian
Michie, Bill (Shef'ld Heeley)
Miller, Andrew

Mitchell, Austin
Moffatt, Laura
Moonie, Dr Lewis
Morgan, Ms Julie (Cardiff N)
Morley, Elliot
Mudie, George
Mullin, Chris
Murphy, Denis (Wansbeck)
Naysmith, Dr Doug
O'Brien, Bill (Normanton)
O'Brien, Mike (N Warks)
O'Hara, Eddie
Olner, Bill
O'Neill, Martin
Palmer, Dr Nick
Pearson, Ian
Pendry, Tom
Perham, Ms Linda
Pickthall, Colin
Pike, Peter L
Plaskitt, James
Pollard, Kerry
Pond, Chris
Pope, Greg
Powell, Sir Raymond
Prentice, Ms Bridget (Lewisham E)
Prentice, Gordon (Pendle)
Prescott, Rt Hon John
Prosser, Gwyn
Purchase, Ken
Quinn, Lawrie
Radice, Giles
Rammell, Bill
Rapson, Syd
Raynsford, Nick
Reed, Andrew (Loughborough)
Reid, Rt Hon Dr John (Hamilton N)
Rendel, David
Robertson, Rt Hon George
 (Hamilton S)
Roche, Mrs Barbara
Rooker, Jeff
Rooney, Terry
Ross, Ernie (Dundee W)
Rowlands, Ted
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Bob (Colchester)
Russell, Ms Christine (Chester)
Salter, Martin
Sanders, Adrian
Savidge, Malcolm
Sawford, Phil
Sedgemore, Brian
Shaw, Jonathan
Sheerman, Barry
Sheldon, Rt Hon Robert
Shipley, Ms Debra
Short, Rt Hon Clare
Simpson, Alan (Nottingham S)
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Rt Hon Andrew (Oxford E)
Smith, Angela (Basildon)
Smith, Miss Geraldine
 (Morecambe & Lunesdale)
Smith, Jacqui (Redditch)
Smith, John (Glamorgan)
Smith, Llew (Blaenau Gwent)
Smith, Sir Robert (W Ab'd'ns)
Soley, Clive
Southworth, Ms Helen
Squire, Ms Rachel
Starkey, Dr Phyllis
Steinberg, Gerry
Stevenson, George
Stewart, Ian (Eccles)
Stinchcombe, Paul
Stott, Roger
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Stunell, Andrew
Taylor, Rt Hon Mrs Ann
 (Dewsbury)
Taylor, Ms Dari (Stockton S)
Taylor, David (NW Leics)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Temple-Morris, Peter
Thomas, Gareth (Clwyd W)
Thomas, Gareth R (Harrow W)
Timms, Stephen
Tipping, Paddy
Touhig, Don
Trickett, Jon
Truswell, Paul
Turner, Dennis (Wolverh'ton SE)
Turner, Dr Desmond (Kemptown)
Twigg, Stephen (Enfield)
Tyler, Paul
Vaz, Keith
Vis, Dr Rudi
Walley, Ms Joan
Wareing, Robert N
Watts, David
Webb, Steve
White, Brian
Whitehead, Dr Alan
Wicks, Malcolm
Williams, Alan W (E Carmarthen)
Willis, Phil
Wills, Michael
Winnick, David
Winterton, Ms Rosie (Doncaster C)
Wise, Audrey
Wood, Mike
Woolas, Phil
Worthington, Tony
Wray, James
Wright, Anthony D (Gt Yarmouth)
Wright, Dr Tony (Cannock)
Wyatt, Derek

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. David Jamieson and
Mr. Jim Dowd.

Question accordingly negatived.

Mrs. Eleanor Laing (Epping Forest): I beg to move amendment No. 2, in page 1, line 6, at end add

'except that—

(a) 75 hereditary peers shall be elected as members of the House of Lords in accordance with subsection (2).

(b) 14 hereditary peers shall be elected as members of the House of Lords in accordance with subsection (3).

(c) the Lord Great Chamberlain and the Earl Marshal shall be members of the House of Lords.

(2) The electors for the purposes of subsection (1)(a) shall be the holders of a hereditary peerage.

(3) The electors for the purposes of subsection (1)(b) shall be the members of the House of Lords.

(4) The Secretary of State may by order make such provision about the conduct of the elections under this section as he considers appropriate.

(5) No order under this section shall be made unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing it has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, each House of Parliament.'.

The First Deputy Chairman: With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following: amendment No. 3, in page 1, line 6, at end add amendment No. 25, in page 1, line 6, at end insert

', unless he or she is the first holder of a hereditary peerage.'.

'and any transitional arrangement enabling certain hereditary peers to continue their membership of that House shall cease to have effect on the expiry of the period of twelve months from the date of publication of the final report of the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament announced in Command Paper No. 4183'.

Amendment No. 16, in clause 4, page 1, line 14, leave out from 'force' to end of line and insert

'on a date not less than six months after the passing of this Act nominated by the Secretary of State'.

Amendment No. 17, in page 1, line 16, leave out 'Session' and insert 'date'.

Amendment No. 18, in page 1, line 16, at end insert—

'(2A) Prior to nominating a date for the coming into force of this Act the Secretary of State shall make inquiry and lay a report before both Houses of Parliament, setting out the names of all current hereditary peers who have played a significant role in the workings of the House of Lords during the ten years preceding the passing of this Act; and such hereditary peers shall be entitled to remain members of the House of Lords, pending the enactment of proposals for the wider reform of the House of Lords following the report of the Royal Commission and public consultation concerning its proposals.'.

New clause 12—Peerage of Scotland—

'( ) Nothing in this Act shall be taken to prevent sixteen peers from the peerage of Scotland from voting in the House of Lords.'.

Amendment No. 10, in title, line 1, leave out 'End' and insert 'Restrict'.

Mrs. Laing: The amendment would allow 91 hereditary peers to remain as Members of the House of Lords during the so-called interim stage. As hon. Members will be well aware, a compromise to that effect was drawn up by Lord Weatherill, his intention being to secure the continued presence of an independent element in the interim House of Lords.

I do not support the hereditary principle. It is time that Labour Members acknowledged that Conservative Members do not seek to amend the Bill to uphold the hereditary rights of peers. We do not: we seek to amend the Bill to uphold democracy itself. For democracy to work, it is essential that Parliament is strong. It is the role of both Houses of Parliament to hold the Government to account. This Government are not concerned about upholding democracy; they are interested only in their own party political advantage and in increasing the power of the Executive by decreasing the power of Parliament.

While appearing to argue that they are acting in the name of democracy, the Government are in fact doing the opposite. Their argument is nothing less than a disgraceful sham. They want to appear to strengthen the democratic process, but the real effect of their proposals to reform the House of Lords will be considerably to weaken our democracy. Removing all independence from the second Chamber will undermine its validity, which will, in turn, weaken its ability to challenge the Government.

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): If there is an upper House composed partly of Labour appointees, partly of Conservative appointees and partly of an independent chunk appointed by either party or by other parties, how will the retention of 91 hereditary peers—who will doubtless be mainly Conservative—weaken the democracy of the place? I should have thought that it would enhance it.

8.30 pm

Mrs. Laing: I am talking not about the democracy of the House of Lords, but about the democratic process as a whole. Parliament defends democracy, and it is supposed to hold the Government to account. To do so, both Houses of Parliament must be able to play their own roles in holding the Executive to account. That is why it is important to consider reform of the House of Lords in the context of constitutional reform in general and how Parliament works.

It is all too often forgotten—the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) seems to have forgotten it—that Parliament acts as one entity. I do not suggest that having a seat by appointment or because of who one's father was is democratic in any way. If the second Chamber—whatever form it takes—is strong, the democratic process itself will work better. If it is weak, the democratic process is weakened with it. That idea lies at the heart of what we are discussing.

The Leader of the House would like to appear as the champion of the old socialist ideal, as a revolutionary attacking wealth and privilege. I should be happy to give way to her if she wishes to tell me that I am wrong. The glee with which she announced the clause abolishing the rights of hereditary peers was almost vindictive.

Mr. Letwin: Does my hon. Friend agree that one of the most remarkable things said by any Leader of the House at any time was the present Leader's remark that nothing could be worse than the existing Chamber?

Mrs. Laing: I agree, of course, with my hon. Friend. The Leader of the House also remarked that the Bill was simple, and that remark, too, was totally wrong. The Bill is simple only in the sense that it addresses only part of the issue. It is up to the Opposition to address the whole issue.

The Leader of the House approached the Bill with a certain vindictive pleasure. None the less, I do not challenge the Government's right to take away the voting rights of hereditary peers. Nor do I challenge the principle of doing so; in fact, I agree with it. However, I must challenge the Government's lack of honesty about what they are doing. The Government's plan, as stated in the Bill, is to have, for an indefinite period which could be years, decades or even longer, a second Chamber composed entirely of people who have been appointed and who, therefore, will owe allegiance to those who appointed them.

Amendment No. 2 would include in the interim second Chamber a number of hereditary peers elected by the Members of the House of Lords. Such a system would strengthen the interim House because it would keep within it the element of independence while adding to the legitimacy of the hereditary peers who would remain because their tenure would depend on a double condition: first, their birth and, secondly, their election by the Members of their own House. I am not claiming that that would create a perfect situation, but it is a much better solution than that proposed in the Bill.

There are as many differing points of view about the eventual composition of the second Chamber as there are people expressing them; but almost no one is arguing in the long term for a second Chamber that is entirely appointed, so why on earth should we settle for an entirely appointed interim Chamber? The Government could do—indeed, are likely to do and, I would argue, certainly will do—an awful lot of harm to our country while only the interim second Chamber, which we are now discussing, is in place to hold them to account.

Mr. Phil Willis (Harrogate and Knaresborough): Does the hon. Lady accept that it was Lord Cranborne who suggested the idea? Is she distancing herself and the rest of the Tory party from Lord Cranborne's idea?

Mrs. Laing: No, far from it. I believe that my colleagues whose names are attached to the amendment and I have the support of the vast majority of the Tory party in this House, in another place and across the country. However, it remains to be seen what will happen if there is a vote.

My point it that there is no reason why we should settle for an interim Chamber that is entirely appointed, when no one wants a long-term Chamber that is entirely appointed. We may have that interim Chamber for a very long time, during which the new Labour Government could do an awful lot of harm, given that only the interim Chamber, as the other half of this Parliament, would be holding the Government to account. It is our duty to make sure that the composition of the interim House makes that House as strong and effective as possible. That is why I am asking hon. Members to support the amendment.

Of course, if the Government had had their way, we would not even be able to discuss the substance of the amendment.

Mr. Swayne: Shame, shame.

Mrs. Laing: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. If the Government were honest in their approach to the Bill, and if they were dealing with the Committee straightforwardly, the substance of amendment No. 2 would appear in the Bill, as it should. I appreciate that not every hon. Member will agree with my arguments in favour of the amendment, and that is fair enough. Of course, Labour Members will have a different point of view, but surely there can be no hon. Member who does not believe that we, as the elected representatives of the people, should be discussing this matter. It is not only the right but the duty of the House of Commons to scrutinise the proposal. Had my hon. Friends and I not tabled the amendment, the matter that we are about to discuss would not have come before a Committee of the whole House. We are not alone in that opinion.

[Mrs. Laing]

Charter 88, which campaigns for democracy, said in its recent brief:

> "The House of Commons is being asked to scrutinise a Bill which every MP knows will come back from the Lords with a substantial amendment. The Commons will only have limited opportunity to debate the Bill in its final form."

That is right, except that the tabling of amendment No. 2 has given us the opportunity to scrutinise this part of the Bill this evening.

It would be preposterous if such an important part of the Bill were never scrutinised in Committee by this elected House of Commons. Every week provides more evidence of the Government's attempt to take power away from the House of Commons, and so from the people who elected us, and to give more power to the Executive. That is the Bill's underlying intention and it explains why the Government do not want to allow us to discuss the matter.

Dr. Fox: Does my hon. Friend agree that it is not preposterous, but perverse, for the Government to ask Labour Members to reject the amendment in the Chamber that they claim has democratic legitimacy and to tell their supporters to accept it in another place, which they claim has no democratic legitimacy?

Mrs. Laing: It is preposterous, perverse and a string of other things that you would stop me saying if I tried, Mr. Lord. As my hon. Friend said, it is anti-democratic. I have never seen a more blatant disregard for the House of Commons than that which the Government have shown in relation to this amendment.

Paragraph 11 of chapter 5 of the White Paper "Modernising Parliament—Reforming the House of Lords" states:

> "the Government will act immediately to end the hereditary right to be a member of Parliament . . . But if the cross-bench peers promote an amendment for the interim retention of 1 in 10 of the hereditary peers, 75 out of the existing 750, plus some hereditary office holders, until the second stage of House of Lords reform has taken place, the Government is minded to accept that amendment".

Likewise, introducing the White Paper, the Leader of the House said that if there were such an amendment when the Bill was considered in the House of Lords

> "the Government are minded to support such an amendment".—[Official Report, 20 January 1999; Vol. 323, c. 909.]

The effect of this amendment is precisely the same, so can I look forward to the Leader of the House signalling the Government's intention of accepting it now?

Mr. Peter Bottomley (Worthing, West): She will not look at you.

Mrs. Laing: As my hon. Friend says, the right hon. Lady will not look at me; she merely listens. She has every opportunity to signal her Government's intention of accepting the amendment now; she said only two weeks ago in this House that they had every intention of doing so. Will she answer my point? No, she will not.

Mrs. Beckett: I do not know why the hon. Lady is wasting the Committee's time with this nonsense. She knows perfectly well what the Government's position is, because I set it out on Second Reading and I shall set it out again when I reply to this amendment.

Mrs. Laing: How dare the right hon. Lady say that I am wasting my time or anyone else's in discussing this vital amendment? I am not wasting the Committee's time. She is wasting it and treating the House of Commons and Parliament with contempt with that answer. I do not know the Government's position, because she has never made it clear.

Dr. Starkey: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Mrs. Laing: I shall give way to the hon. Lady later.

It is no surprise that the Leader of the House refuses to take my point. Having said what she said on 20 January, on 1 February in the debate on Second Reading, in reply to questions on this subject from the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) and my hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack), she said:

> "If an amendment is moved in this place, I shall advise my right hon. and hon. Friends to vote against it".—[Official Report, 1 February 1999; Vol. 324, c. 610.]

The right hon. Lady said a moment ago that I know the Government's position. How can I possibly know the Government's position? How can anyone in this House, or anywhere else, know the Government's position, given that, on 20 January, she said clearly, and on the record, that the Government have every intention of accepting the amendment, but, on 1 February, she said that she would advise her right hon. and hon. Friends to vote against any such amendment? How can she possibly expect anyone to know the Government's position?

8.45 pm

This is a vital constitutional Bill; it is not some little measure which does not matter very much. The Leader of the House still sits, reading her notes, not paying the least attention, after saying, with utter smugness, that we know the Government's position. We do not. Her position, and the way in which she explains what the Government intend to do, may be clever, but it is not consistent and, frankly, it is not honest. But, then, the Government's whole approach to the Bill has been all about expediency, and nothing whatever to do with principle.

During previous speeches on the matter, the Leader of the House explained the relevance of this apparent duplicity to the working of the Parliament Acts, but the purpose of the Parliament Acts has never been to stop this House debating a fundamental change to our constitution; nor has it been to stop Members of Parliament scrutinising a vital part of a Bill. We have the opportunity to do so now only because my hon. Friends and I brought the matter before the Committee. The Government do not want it to be discussed.

It should not be up to me and my hon. Friends to table an amendment of such fundamental effect to a Bill as important as this. We are but humble Opposition Back Benchers, but we know that we were sent here by the people who elected us to represent their interests and to stand up for the democratic process. This Bill is the most significant piece of constitutional reform for well over a century.

Unusually, I find myself in agreement with the right hon. Member for Chesterfield—not once, but twice, this sitting. First, he pointed out that, during an earlier debate on constitutional reform, Mr. Asquith said that, if women got the vote, it would undermine parliamentary democracy. The right hon. Gentleman said that Mr. Asquith was wrong, and I am very happy to agree with him. Secondly, he said—I think that I noted his words correctly—that Opposition Members should not try to persuade the Committee that hereditary peers are the final safeguard of democracy. In speaking to this amendment, I certainly do not try to persuade hon. Members of any such thing. It is we, the elected Members of the House of Commons, who have a duty to safeguard democracy.

The Government have acted with almost unbelievable arrogance in trying to prevent us from debating this vital amendment to this extremely important constitutional Bill. I hope that all hon. Members with a conscience, who believe in democracy, will stand up against the Government's arrogance and attempt to pervert the democratic process itself by joining my hon. Friends and me in supporting the amendment.

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): I shall vote against the amendment tonight and I shall vote against it when it comes back from the House of Lords. I hope that my hon. Friends have the guts to stick by the Whips' first instructions and not reverse their vote on the second instructions.

As we are discussing an hereditary issue, I want to consider the parentage of the amendment moved by the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing), who spoke with great passion. When I heard her speak, I knew even more that Asquith was wrong. An Opposition Back-Bench Member has made a Government statement. The parentage of the Bill is a strange one: Baroness Jay and Lord Cranborne. They are not even married, but they have produced a proposal—with the support of Jack Weatherill, the former Speaker—and we are told to oppose it now and come back to it later. That is not acceptable. The Leader of the House will discover from these debates that the House of Commons is waking up to its responsibilities and is not prepared just to be told to go through the hoops.

I am absolutely opposed to the hon. Lady's amendment. I shall tell the House what will happen if it goes through. The Government are very clever; they have all sorts of people advising them. The amendment will be defeated tonight. It will go to the Lords, and they will have to make up their mind whether to lose everything under the Parliament Act or to go along with the Cranborne compromise. They will probably go along with it. Then, the Government will be faced with a situation absolutely contrary to our manifesto, whereby 91 hereditary peers will turn up—not with constituencies like Epping Forest, but with a couple of dukes, two marquesses and the odd viscount who wanted them to stay. How will those 91 peers be allowed to stay? They will be allowed to stay by the Prime Minister making those unelected, unaccountable hereditary peers into life peers. He is going to bless them retrospectively.

Not only that, the Government have the problem of five hereditary peers of the first generation. There is poor old Willie Whitelaw. I had a letter from the Leader of the House—it cannot be a secret that he will be offered a life peerage. Then there is David Eccles—I do not know whether anyone remembers him, but I sat in the House with him. He is to be made a life peer.

The position is astonishing. If the amendment goes through—I hope that it will not—the first example of modernisation for the millennium will be the Prime Minister making 91 hereditary peers into life peers and then, because they will mainly be Tory, he will make 91 more Labour life peers. In the book of Genesis, the Almighty just made Adam and Eve. This is creation on a scale for which there is no parallel in religious or constitutional history. I urge my hon. Friends to obey the Whip tonight. The Whip is absolutely right. However, when they are told to turn tail later, they must not endorse the scheme that will run counter to the manifesto on which we were elected.

We are not discussing alternatives, but I have a very simple idea. It is old fashioned—old Labour. If someone is in Parliament, he or she should be elected. I do not want to say anything controversial, as I might get into trouble, but I was brought up to believe that democracy meant that we elected people and could get rid of them. I am not going along with the Weatherill amendment, and I am not going along with the amendment tonight, but that is for another debate. Tonight we certainly ought not to accept what the hon. Lady put forward with such passion, even though her arguments had a certain charm and compulsion about them, which I shall long remember.

Mr. John MacGregor (South Norfolk): I warmly congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) on the way in which she moved the amendment. Her arguments were splendid, and the spirit and passion with which she advanced them were entirely commendable.

I shall make two points in support of what my hon. Friend said, but first I shall make my position clear. I do not defend the hereditary principle either, and never have done. The real problem, as we are discovering and as has been discovered in the past, is what to put in its place.

My first point concerns the attitude of the Government and the Leader of the House. I find her position astonishing, hypocritical and intolerable. I should think that many Labour Back Benchers feel the same. The White Paper is full of phrases about the primacy and supremacy of this Chamber, yet what are the Government proposing to do? They will leave it to the other Chamber to carry through something which, in the same White Paper, they say they would be minded to accept. Frankly, that is treating this House with contempt.

If it were not for my hon. Friends who tabled the amendment, we would not even have debated such a vital issue in the Chamber before the Bill went to the House of Lords. No doubt, when it came back with an amendment that the Government were prepared to accept, we would have had a very limited debate. It is much, much better that it is debated here in the Chamber, where it should be debated.

I shall be interested to hear what the Labour Back Benchers who are present will say in defence of the principle. The right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) is entirely consistent in his arguments. He will vote against any such amendment both times. However, the Government have indicated that they are in favour of the amendment, but will accept it only if it is first put into the Bill in another place. We all know why that is so. It is because the Leader of the House is trying bully-girl tactics, if I may say so, to get the Bill through the other place by allowing the amendment as a concession. That is an astonishing way to treat Labour Back Benchers. They are forced through the Lobby tonight to vote against the amendment but, in the other place, which is regarded as secondary from their point of view in terms of Parliament, the Government will turn round and accept the amendment when it is proposed.

[Mr. John MacGregor]

I do not understand why the Leader of the House cannot say from the Dispatch Box, "We shall accept the amendment." The Government may have the odd technical objection to it, but that is not the point. The point is that the spirit and principle of the amendment should be accepted tonight. I cannot understand any reason for not accepting the amendment other than that the right hon. Lady wants to apply a certain amount of pressure on the other place to take the Bill through quickly. That is simply intolerable.

Mr. Winnick: Is it not interesting that the amendment comes from the Opposition Back Benches and not from the Opposition Front Bench? We know about the row that resulted in Lord Cranborne being sacked. I am entirely opposed to a totally elected second Chamber—we shall come to that argument in due course—but in this instance we are dealing with an Opposition Back-Bench amendment.

Mr. MacGregor: I am sure that my colleagues on the Opposition Front Bench will make the Opposition's position on the amendment perfectly clear. However, I am delighted that the amendment was proposed by my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest, because it could not have been better put. I think that all her arguments were superbly well advanced.

I seriously think that the Leader of the House is in an astonishing position and one that she will come to regret. The right hon. Lady has treated the Chamber with contempt.

My other point was simply—

Mrs. Beckett: I am grateful to the right hon. Gentleman for giving way. I know that he is making a series of party points, and that is perfectly legitimate. We do that in the House. However, he has thrown about, with great casualness, accusations of my despising the House and things of that sort. He is surely aware that the proposal put forward by the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) is one that she is advancing and one which the House can debate. It is a proposal that may be put in another place by Cross-Bench peers. It is not the Government's proposal, so why should the Government put it forward?

Mr. MacGregor: I am not making party points. I am making a point about the House of Commons, and I shall explain why. The right hon. Lady has made it clear in the White Paper that if such an amendment comes forward in another place the Government will be disposed to accept it. The amendment is before us this evening, so why is she not disposed to accept it—yet if Cross-Bench peers in another place put it forward, she will? It is not that the proposal has changed in any way. It has not. It is a proposal that is identical to the one that we shall expect to come from the other place. The right hon. Lady knows that. She knows also that she will not accept the amendment when it is proposed in the House of Commons, but will accept it when it comes from another place—which is apparently, in the Government's view, secondary in importance to the House of Commons.

Mr. Malcolm Savidge (Aberdeen, North): The right hon. Gentleman has told us that it is intolerable, astonishing and hypocritical to reject the Weatherill proposal in the House of Commons but to accept it in the House of Lords. I take it that he is describing his right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition on the day when he sacked Lord Cranborne.

Mr. MacGregor: I am describing precisely the Government's position on this issue. I would expect all of my right hon. and hon. Friends to support the amendment this evening. I am describing the Government's position, and that is why I find the right hon. Lady's position astonishing. It is astonishing for her to ask Labour Back-Bench Members to vote against the proposal when it is put forward in the House of Commons, but to accept it if it comes from another place.

It is not only that—and this is the answer to the right hon. Lady. She has signalled in advance what she would do in the other place. There is no question of the arguments being different or of her changing her mind. The arguments will be acceptable only if they come from the other place and not from the House of Commons.

Mr. Dalyell: The right hon. Gentleman will forgive me if I say that, from our point of view, when we were on the Opposition Benches he was one of the most satisfactory and kind Leaders of the House with whom we ever had to deal. I ask him, therefore, what would he do if he were Leader of the House at this point. I am just curious to know.

Mr. MacGregor: I think that it must be fairly obvious what I would do. I would certainly not produce a White Paper in which I had more or less made it clear that I was minded to accept an amendment, but only if it came from the other place, and then stand at the Dispatch Box refusing to accept such an amendment because it had been tabled in this House. I simply cannot imagine myself ever being in that position, which is why I feel so strongly that the Leader of the House is in a very odd position indeed.

Mr. Letwinr: Does my right hon. Friend agree that an even more extraordinary fact is that the Government appear to think that the proposal would be good for the constitution if their lordships had behaved themselves, but is bad for the constitution if their lordships are not behaving themselves?

Mr. MacGregor: That is why I said that the position of the Leader of the House is hypocritical. It has nothing to do with the merits of the argument, but is purely to do with what I described as bully-girl tactics applied to the other place. That is the reason for her holding such a position tonight: it has nothing to do with the merits or the principle, or the acceptance or otherwise, of the amendment, but is simply to do with tactics. That is clearly bare faced.

Mr. Savidge: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. MacGregor: In a moment. I should have thanked the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) very much for his kind remarks about my tenure in the post that we are discussing.

Mr. Savidge: Might the right hon. Gentleman accept the possibility that, rather than there being bully-boy tactics from this House, we are resisting the possibility of bully-boy tactics in the other House?

Mr. MacGregor: The Government must be in a weak position if they think that they would not be able to get the Bill through the other House unless they applied pure bully-boy tactics.

My second point relates to the substance of the proposal. I entirely agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest, who made it clear that many different views and solutions had been suggested during consideration of the alternatives for reform of the House of Lords. That was also made clear in the debate on Second Reading, which I was able to attend only spasmodically.

My hon. Friend was also right to say that the one solution that no one seemed to favour was an entirely appointed second Chamber, which is what we would have if the amendment were not passed. Having been in the same position as the Leader of the House, and having had to get legislation through the House, my fear is similar to many others that have been expressed: this solution will not be short-term and interim, but it will last for some considerable time.

I disagree with the right hon. Member for Chesterfield on that point. If the situation is not purely interim but longer term—I will come on to that point in a moment—it will not be satisfactory to have a solution in which patronage is concentrated so heavily in the hands of the Prime Minister, or even with the appointments commissioner. We would have no further independent element, so the proposal makes some sense if we are to have an interim House of Lords for some considerable time.

I use the words "some considerable time" because there have been considerable delays with a number of the Government's proposals or in areas on which they want to move. I will not stray out of order, Mr. Lord, because I am giving an example of why the amendment is necessary. The Neill committee, of which I am a member, has introduced proposals on party political funding which have widespread support in the House and which it ought to be possible to take through fairly quickly. We will produce a draft Bill and proposals may be introduced next year.

One could give many other examples of delays, but the reasons for delays with the second Bill, which will deal with full reform of the House of Lords, are likely to be much more formidable. There must be some doubt whether the royal commission can meet the deadline of the end of this year, because many different proposals will have to be argued through.

The Joint Committee of both Houses could take up a considerable amount of time. If the general election is to be brought forward to a year before the end of the full five-year term, as is hinted in some of the newspapers, it is unlikely that we will be able to deal with the second, highly controversial Bill—about which there will be much more argument in this Chamber and in the other Chamber—because there will be many different views about parts of it. It seems very likely that we shall not have the second stage by the end of this Parliament. There is a good reason of substance for supporting the amendment because it would mean that, in the interim—which could be some years—we would have a much more satisfactory second Chamber than we would under the Government's proposals.

I should have thought that the Leader of the House would accept those arguments. For those two reasons, I strongly support the amendment.

Dr. Tony Wright (Cannock Chase): It is difficult to take entirely seriously some of the voices coming from the Opposition Benches, which accuse the Government of contempt and arrogance. It is difficult to understand how the Government could have proceeded in a more conciliatory and bipartisan way. They have relinquished patronage powers to the Appointments Commission; they have said that they will entertain a Cross-Bench proposal to retain a large number of hereditary peers chosen for the transitional duration; and they have established a royal commission chaired by a peer belonging to the Opposition. For a Government who have done all that to be accused of arrogance and contempt is extraordinary.

Mr. Tyrie: Does the hon. Gentleman think that it was ever part of the Labour Government's original plan to have a royal commission? Is there anything conciliatory about deciding to go ahead with such a fundamental reform with no prior all-party consultation, as has always taken place in the past when fundamental reform of the Lords has been considered?

Dr. Wright: The hon. Gentleman gets into territory that he would be well advised not to get into. When the facts of the case are eventually written, he will see that, had the Government been able to secure agreement from the Opposition, they were minded to proceed on a consensual basis. As is well known, there were conversations afoot in the other place designed to bring that about. Unfortunately—I am afraid that the problem lay more in the Commons than with the Opposition in the end—it proved impossible to do that. We could have been considering a joint proposal on an agreed basis, but the Opposition decided to proceed differently, and that is a source of great regret.

If anything is true of this measure, after all this time and all its history, it is that we should have been able to bring about reform of the second Chamber on a reasonably agreed basis. We can argue about all sorts of things, and many complex details can be considered but, in view of everything that we know about the failure of past reforms, to be unable to proceed in a sensible, bipartisan way in the last year of this century is a most extraordinary position to be in. It is a source of great regret that those discussions did not bear fruit.

Had the Government taken what someone earlier called the "big bang approach" and said, "This is what we have decided to do: sweep away the hereditaries and install a new second Chamber," the charges of contempt and arrogance would have had some substance. However, given that they are proceeding in an immensely bipartisan way—to many of my colleagues it is over-generous—it is extraordinary to be confronted with those charges.

[Dr. Wright]

Mr. Gale: If the hon. Gentleman consults the Official Report—he is not using notes—he will discover that a few moments ago he said that the Government had generously agreed to accept a Cross-Bench amendment. That amendment is precisely what we are discussing now. Will the hon. Gentleman vote for it tonight or will he do as his Whips want and vote against it? If so, he will be as two-faced as the rest of his colleagues. Labour Members will then wait for the amendment to come back to this House and vote for it. This is the amendment which he says the Government have graciously accepted.

Dr. Wright: Having paid close attention to the conversations that have taken place over the past few months, I concluded that the Conservative Opposition in the House of Commons had disqualified themselves from making any constructive contribution to the debate, and that, if we were to secure a constructive contribution—albeit at a late stage—from Cross-Bench peers, we ought to consider that very carefully. That is what the Government have said they will do.

Mr. Tyrie: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Wright: I should like to make some progress, but I will give way once more.

Mr. Tyrie: Does the hon. Gentleman not realise that all-party consultation should not involve deals made below stairs or in smoke-filled rooms? At the beginning of a Parliament, the Government should announce that they want to act on the basis of all-party consultation. They should announce a public debate, a public inquiry and a royal commission—if they want one—that will also be public. That is what has always happened in the past. It happened in 1918, in 1948 and in 1968. Why did the Government not do the same on this occasion?

Dr. Wright: The hon. Gentleman is most ill-advised to keep reminding us of the history. Less than two years ago, his party fought a general election defending the rights of hereditary peers and opposing reform of the second Chamber. The right hon. Member for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor), alluding quite properly to the issue of party funding, failed to mention that, when in government, his party refused to refer the whole issue of party funding to the Committee on Standards in Public Life. There is a history to all this, and I am afraid that, when it comes to be written, the Conservative party in the House of Commons will not come out of it very well.

We know that there is to be a transitional period. Whichever way we play it, the transitional House of Lords is a complex beast. I once spent a long time talking to Marxists, who used to talk constantly about the "problems of the transition"; but the "problems of the transition" are nothing in comparison with the problems of moving from the existing House of Lords to a future House. It is likely to be a protracted and messy business. Even when we have removed the hereditary peers, we shall have about 500 life peers.

Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown (Cotswold): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Wright: I must get on.

We are now talking about adding nearly 100 more hereditary peers, to be elected by their own peers. We are talking about a Chamber consisting of 600 Members in the transitional period. Anyone looking at a mature, fully formed new House of Lords will know that it will contain only about 300 Members. We shall therefore experience considerable problems in moving from an interim reformed House to a fully fledged new House.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Wright: I will give way once more.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: Does the hon. Gentleman—who is a constitutional expert—agree with a Weatherill-type amendment to allow a certain number of hereditary peers to continue to serve in the transitional Parliament? Yes or no?

Dr. Wright: I shall be minded to support such an amendment when it comes here from the other place.

Sir Patrick Cormack: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Wright: There is no need to become too agitated. I shall make a few more points, and then sit down.

The Government have said that they are minded to accept such an amendment if it comes from the other place. They do not have to do that, and many of my hon. Friends would prefer that they did not. They would like a clean sweep: they would like the job to be done in one go. I think that this is an act of extraordinary generosity—

Sir Patrick Cormack: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Wright: Of course.

Sir Patrick Cormack: I am extremely grateful.

Is this a good idea, or is it not? If it is a good idea, why does the hon. Gentleman not support it now? If it is a bad idea, why does he not remain resolutely opposed to it, whatever its source? Can he not give a coherent answer to a simple question?

Dr. Wright: I have already explained—I am sorry if I must embarrass the hon. Gentleman by explaining again—why I think that the Conservative Opposition have disqualified themselves from making a constructive contribution to the argument. History will testify to that.

I did not start out by believing that I wanted a transitional stage involving the retention of a certain number of hereditary peers; but, if the real problems of the transition would be eased by our allowing a certain number of hereditary peers to continue for a period, and if that will allow this measure to proceed in a constructive and bipartisan way, I would support it. Moreover, I would urge the hon. Gentleman to follow the same course.

9.15 pm

Mr. Tony McWalter (Hemel Hempstead): Will my hon. Friend confirm that one of the Government's clear strategies is to ensure that we prevent 668 people, nearly all of whom never attend the House of Lords, from being able to legislate for the rest of the country? If, as a result of the Government's moves, we achieve that in quick time—within a year—that is an important part of the process that we are undergoing.

Dr. Wright: I agree. As the Opposition provoke me a little, I say that we have to remind ourselves that we are still dealing with an outrage. We are dealing not with an anachronism, or a bit of tidying up in which we have to engage, but a constitutional and democratic outrage.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Wright: I will not give way again.

I do not want to detain the Committee with things that I did not want to explore, but the fact is that we are dealing with hereditary peers who, as we heard—

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Wright: I just said that I was not going to give way.

Never did we have a better exposition of what has sometimes been called the good chaps theory of government than in the speech of the hon. Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack). Those people are good chaps and chapesses, but the point is that they are contaminated by their ancestry and will never escape from that contamination, good chaps though they might be. I call in aid only the first study on the purchase of peerages. It turned on correspondence between the Conservative leader of the time, Lord Salisbury, and the then Conservative Chief Whip, Akers-Douglas. A footnote in that little study says simply:

> "At the request of the Marquess of Salisbury I have suppressed the details of a number of transactions in which political services were bartered for honours, lest their revelation should prove offensive to the surviving children of those concerned."

When we have such discussions, we think that we are engaged in just a little tidying up, but we are not. What is extraordinary is that we are having this discussion not in the first year of the century, but in the last, and that we still hear that type of arguments expressed by Conservative Members about why we should not do what any democratic society knows has to be done and should have been done. The question is only whether we can do it in a reasonably civilised, consensual and bipartisan way. That is the Government's approach.

Without digressing, let me say that there are legitimate arguments about the shape of a reformed Chamber. I say to those who simply advance their nostrums as we go through the debate: reflect on the fact that we now have a royal commission and a chance to test some of those arguments.

Some people say, "The second Chamber has to be elected." We have to avoid two evils. One is to create a rival for the House of Commons, but the other to is create a clone of the House of Commons. If, through election and a whipped, rigid party-list system, we created a second Chamber on good democratic principles that was simply a clone of the House of Commons, it would be proper to ask whether we had strengthened the checks and balances in our political system or weakened them.

We are at a moment when we are required to have some serious constitutional imagination. Let us put our nostrums to one side. Let us have a year or more of serious investigation, debate and argument, but, meanwhile, ensure that we establish a transitional House that can function and have a certain amount of legitimacy and confidence. The only proviso that I add—it is the point of the amendment that stands in my name—is that we must not have a transitional House that becomes permanent. We must not invent a system in which a certain number of hereditary peers not only stay for a time—which is necessary to ease the transition—but subsequently become permanent. We have to build the Bill around that constraining framework.

It is quite right—although it is a rather unusual procedure—for the Government to ask us to approve a Bill to which an amendment will be tabled in the other place that the Government will be minded to support. We know that that will happen.

Mr. Grieve: Will the hon. Gentleman give way on that very point?

Dr. Wright: No; I am almost finished.

It is quite proper that the House, when it sends the Bill to another place, should want to say: "We want to build a framework around the Bill, to ensure that the generous transitional provisions that we are making will not become permanent ones." That would be the honest thing to do. It is what the House should do. I hope that it is what we do.

Mr. Maclennan: The hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing), in moving amendment No. 2, was in a sense usurping the position of official Opposition Front Benchers. I make no complaint about that, for she moved her amendment with some passion which commended itself to the Committee. However, it might be thought that an amendment of such importance—if it is to be treated with great seriousness, as it should be—should have been moved by an official Opposition Front Bencher. After the pleas that we have heard today from Conservative Back Benchers for consensus in reform and for cross-party agreement, it would have been appropriate to have had in the Chamber for this debate the Leader of the Opposition.

Let us be quite clear about it: the obstacle to arriving at consensual reform of the upper House has been the Leader of the Opposition and his predecessors as leader of the Conservative party. The right hon. Member for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor) knows perfectly well that he served in a Government who set their face rigorously against any reform of the upper House. He knows perfectly well also that the right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) had no intention at any time in his premiership of even entering into serious discussions on the matter.

I regard it as the utmost hypocrisy for Conservative Members to suggest that, either before or since the general election, there was ever the remotest chance of getting any agreement from the Conservative party on reform of the upper House. Indeed, on the very day that it became public knowledge that Lord Cranborne had entered into some consultation with the Prime Minister and his colleagues, it was clear that the Leader of the Opposition was completely at odds with his party in the upper House and was seeking to stir up those in another place into outright opposition to the Government's proclaimed intentions for reform of the second Chamber.

[Mr. Maclennan]

Sir Patrick Cormack: That is a travesty of what happened. The Leader of the Opposition said only that he would not be party to a deal that would in any way inhibit proper examination and scrutiny of the Bill. We have always made it quite plain that amendment No. 2 would make a very bad Bill marginally better. For that reason, we shall be happy to support it in the Lobby. However, it was not part of a behind-the-stairs deal. The Leader of the Opposition made that plain, and I am happy to make it plain again now.

Mr. Maclennan: I am absolutely clear about what happened on that occasion. It was quite clear that the Leader of the Opposition was making a very unsuccessful attempt to stir up his colleagues in another place, to treat this measure as a battering ram against the Government's overall programme of constitutional reform and to tie up the upper House in dealing not only with this Bill, but with the rest of its business, thereby stopping proper government and legislation.

Mrs. Dunwoody: The right hon. Gentleman seems to be enunciating an interesting theory. Is he saying that Members of the House of Commons should not, in common with their colleagues in another place—and irrespective of party—have the right to delay the passage of legislation?

Mr. Maclennan: No. The power of delay is a well-understood tool of opposition. However, one cannot pretend to be engaged in the proper scrutiny of legislation while making it plain to colleagues in another place that one is intent on destroying the business of the Government. In particular, one cannot pretend to be embarked on an engagement of consensual politics to reform the constitution. No consent was sought, and none would have been given.

Mr. Tyrie: It would be interesting if the Liberal Democrats, for once, could behave according to their principles. They have a bevy of policy documents that show that they have been in favour of an elected second Chamber for decades. However, they are now acting as if they are part of the Government Front Bench and attacking the Conservative Opposition, who are trying to have a serious discussion of stage 2.

Mr. Maclennan: Unlike the Conservative party in opposition, we engaged in dialogue with the Labour party about the reform of the constitution because we took the view that there should be cross-party agreement. Any suggestion that we made on that subject to members of the Conservative party was treated with total contempt. They were not interested in doing business, and they wanted to continue their partisan view that everything in the constitutional garden was as it should be and should be left alone.

The Liberal Democrats want to get rid of the hereditary peers as part of a move towards a proper, legitimate and democratic second House which exercises real powers over the Executive. The Bill is an important step in that direction. The amendment seeks to pick up on a deal that may be struck in another place, and seeks to embarrass members of the Government by putting them through the hoop of voting against it tonight and perhaps voting for it later. It is a perfectly transparent exercise in party politics and has nothing to do with high-minded principles about consent. It is a squalid little partisan deal.

Mr. Letwin: The right hon. Gentleman is known to take the constitution seriously and has thought about it a lot. Is he genuinely advancing to the Committee the proposition that it is appropriate for the Government to make a major change to the constitution, in terms of the interim House, depending on their lordships' compliance with the Government's programme?

Mr. Maclennan: It is entirely open to this Chamber to participate in the debate on the amendment at a later stage if, in the upper House, it becomes apparent that it is an acceptable proposition that will be agreed consensually as a step on the way to full reform of the upper House. That remains to be seen. Nothing has come from the other place yet—nor could it have done, as the matter has not been debated—that gives us any certainty that the so-called deal will stick. It apparently enjoyed the support of Lord Cranborne and a number of his friends. Evidently, it did not enjoy the support of the Leader of the Opposition, who promptly sacked Lord Cranborne for having agreed to the deal.

It must be said that, whether Lord Cranborne's view of these matters or the view of the Leader of the Opposition, as it may now be, prevails in the upper House is something about which we can only speculate. We have no idea of the Leader of the Opposition's view of the merits of the deal, and that is why I say that the amendment should have been moved from the Opposition Front Bench. We would then have known where he stood. He has been running around like a frightened rabbit throughout the debate. Far from giving the country a lead, he has disappeared to the United States to do business with American Republicans.

9.30 pm

Mrs. Laing: I thank the right hon. Gentleman for giving way and for his kind remarks earlier. Is it not for the Prime Minister to give a lead to the country? If the amendment is going to be accepted and become Government policy, should not the amendment have been tabled by the Government and not by me, as an Opposition Back Bencher?

Mr. Maclennan: It could not have been made clearer that this is not the Government's policy. The matter has been set out in transparent language in the White Paper and the Leader of the House has spelt the position out. The proposal cannot become law without being debated on the Floor of the House. If an amendment is carried in another place, it will come back here for our consideration. Any talk of this Chamber being bypassed is wide of the mark.

As for prejudging what may be decided in another place, I do not know what the attitude will be. It is clear from the White Paper that the Government do not regard the amendment as the best policy. It is an incremental change that would remove approximately nine tenths of the hereditaries. The Government regard it as a step towards the fulfilment of their manifesto commitment to remove all the hereditary peers. It is not a satisfactory step and I should not dream of defending it as such. It is a most unfortunate step back from the manifesto commitment and I hope that it may not commend itself in another place as the way ahead, because it will create many anomalies. Perhaps the best advantage of the amendment for those of us who want a truly legitimate upper House is that the situation will be so patently anomalous that the process of bringing forward stage 2 will be accelerated.

Stage 2 is in the Government's mind. That is not hidden from the public; it is set out in the White Paper. They have made it plain that that is why they have asked the royal commission to report early—by the end of this year. They want to bring the measures for the reform of the upper House before the country before the next election.

Mr. Grieve: I am sure that the right hon. Gentleman is familiar with the Minister's comments on Second Reading that the Government only hoped that proposals might be before this Chamber by the next general election.

Mr. Maclennan: It is not possible at this stage to do more than offer a hope. The Government have generously put the possible shape of the second phase of the reformed House into the hands of a Conservative former Minister, as chairman of the royal commission. I have the greatest respect for him and I am sure that he will do his best, but we cannot do more than hope that his best will be good enough, that the rest of the commission will accept it or that it will produce a consensus around which this Chamber will be prepared to unite.

Those are matters for the future. The amendment has been tabled not to bridge a gulf or to open new lines of communication between the two sides, but to dig deeper trenches. That is an inappropriate way to approach the reform of the upper House. We need to look for common ground and build on it. The Government have signalled that by their willingness to listen to Lord Cranborne's proposal. There is nothing cynical about that approach. It is straightforward and open. For that reason, it should be welcomed.

Dr. Starkey: As I have listened to this debate, I have come to the view that Conservative Members are increasingly losing their grip on reality. We reached the positive nadir—it might be the acme—when the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) declared with passion that it was absolutely vital for our constitution that as the amendment says. If that is not losing grip on the reality outside Parliament, I do not know what is.

"the Lord Great Chamberlain and the Earl Marshal shall be members of the House of Lords",

Mrs. Laing: Let me correct the impression that the hon. Lady has just given. Of course I did not say that that was vital. I said that it was vital that we should have a chance to discuss the amendment. I know what is in the amendment, and it does not help the argument if she and the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) try to spin it differently from what it actually says.

Dr. Starkey: I have quoted from the amendment, and it is for others to take a view. I want to take the charitable view—that the amendment has some logic behind it and was not tabled simply to play party games. I want to try to dissect that logic.

Through days of listening to Conservative Members on Second Reading and now in Committee, I understand that their argument is that the value of the House of Lords as a revising Chamber resides in its independence and in its representativeness. The latter concept is difficult to sustain, but I will take it as read. The next step of logic is that the hereditary peers are the key contributors to that independence and that representativeness, so the proposed transitional Chamber would be worse than the current Chamber.

Conservative Members argue either that we should stick with the House of Lords as it is or, as in the amendment, that we should have a halfway House between the present arrangements and the transitional Chamber that retains a considerable number, but not all, of those independent and representative hereditary peers. That, as I have divined it, is the logic behind the amendment.

Mr. Swayne: As the hon. Lady describes the amendment, it is clearly remiss in a number of respects and is not very persuasive. Can she tell me, then, whether she will vote for it tonight and whether she will vote for it when it comes back from the Lords?

Dr. Starkey: Let me put the hon. Gentleman out of his misery. I will not vote for it tonight, because I want the House of Lords to be replaced in the first instance by a transitional Chamber, and I hope that, if the Members of the House of Lords are as independent as we have repeatedly been assured by Conservative Members, they will also see the value of the Government's arguments and back us up by going for a transitional Chamber.

If, however, the peers insist on protecting their interests and table another amendment, I and other hon. Members will have to take a pragmatic decision. Frankly, although I would like to go the whole hog, I would prefer, if the choice is between going part way or not at all, to move towards the reform of the House of Lords and go part way. I am astonished that Conservative Members find that such a difficult line to follow, especially when most people outside the Committee would regard it as an intensely sensible and pragmatic way forward.

As I have been so kind as to set out the logic behind the amendment, I will now try to demolish it. The independence argument is clearly ridiculous. The hon. Member for Epping Forest tried on Second Reading to extend the notion even further by saying that peers were made all the more independent by the fact that they were free to change their party allegiance. I have news for the hon. Lady—all Members of this Chamber have the freedom to change their party allegiance. Of course, at the next general election, they would not be selected by the party that originally selected them, but as the hon. Lady knows, at least one Member of this place was elected as a member of one party and is now, very sensibly, sitting as a member of another party. Is he independent or is he now a member of the parliamentary Labour party?

[Dr. Starkey]

Mrs. Laing: Does the hon. Lady not appreciate the big difference between Members of the House of Lords, who have never given a promise to people who elected them about which party they represent, and Members of the Commons, who go before the electorate as representatives and upholders of the principles of one party or another, and then cross the Floor? There is a difference in duty and in honesty.

Dr. Starkey: Precisely—there is a difference in duty. The hon. Lady has just made my point for me.

The other point about hereditary peers that is always rehearsed is that huge numbers of them are independent, and Conservative peers are somehow included among them. However, most people outside Parliament would understand only Cross-Bench peers to be independent. I concede that there are a considerable number of Cross-Bench peers in the present House of Lords, but the hon. Member for Epping Forest knows perfectly well that at least 23 per cent. of Members of the transitional House will be Cross Benchers. If additional appointments are made, that percentage will be a minimum, not a maximum. Those Cross Benchers will be in the hands of the Appointments Commission, rather than remaining in the hands of the Prime Minister. The hon. Lady's argument that the transitional House will be less independent than the current House is, therefore, entirely fallacious.

The Conservatives appear to be rather recent converts to the notion of preserving the independence of the House of Lords because, even though the previous two Conservative Governments had a considerable majority in the Lords, they obviously did not feel that it was big enough, so they created more Conservative peers than they created Liberal or Labour peers. I shall take no lessons from the hon. Member for Epping Forest and her colleagues about their commitment to independence.

The second part of the Conservatives' logical argument is that the hereditary peers are more representative than other Members of the House of Lords and that removing them would reduce the representative nature of that House. Those arguments have been rehearsed endlessly in the debate, and I shall not repeat the figures, but simply point out that hereditary peers are extraordinarily unrepresentative. They are the most unrepresentative part of the House of Lords. Removing the huge superfluity of people representing the Tory party and land management and farming interests, ipso facto, makes the transitional House more representative. That is not to mention, of course, the hereditary peers' rather large gender imbalance.

I do not want to prolong the debate because it is getting late. I simply reiterate that moving from the House of Lords to a transitional Chamber is an absolutely crucial first step in reforming the Lords and setting up a more democratic structure. It is particularly important that hereditary peers have no part in shaping the final House of Lords, which is why they need to be removed from the transitional Chamber.

Mr. Gale: Earlier, the hon. Member for Hemel Hempstead (Mr. McWalter) said—I paraphrase only slightly—that the debate was about getting rid of 600 deadbeats from the other House. The implication was clearly that the deadbeats are the hereditary peers. A significant number of Members of the other House are relatively inactive for many reasons: some do not live in this country and some are suffering from extreme old age. Some of the elderly Members of the other House are very active, but some are not and most of those are not hereditary peers but life peers. A significant number of hereditary peers play an extremely active role in the life and work of the House of the Lords.

When those men and women are removed from their tasks—and it will be a matter of when, as this measure will be steamrollered through—there will not be enough peers left to do the job and scrutinise the legislation.

Mr. Gordon Prentice (Pendle): Tell them to turn up then.

Mr. Gale: The hon. Gentleman makes a comment from a sedentary position, but his party has complained bitterly that the Government have been defeated on a number of occasions by the upper House. If he looks at the voting record in the upper House, he will find that it is the Labour life peers who have not turned up to vote and who have let his party down. I do not think that he is on very strong ground.

9.45 pm

Mr. Prentice: The Sunday newspapers tell us that the hon. Gentleman's former colleague John Moore, who at one time was a Conservative Secretary of State for Transport, was ennobled in 1992 and has yet to make his maiden speech. How does the hon. Gentleman justify that?

Mr. Gale: The point that the hon. Gentleman has missed is that it is Labour Back Benchers in the other place who have failed to turn up. That is why the Government have been defeated so often in the House of Lords.

Mrs. Beckett: I think that the hon. Gentleman must know—or should know—that he is being extremely unfair, and I shall tell him why. First, even if 100 per cent. of our Members in the House of Lords arrive, the Conservative party need only get out a much smaller percentage of its Members there to defeat us.

Secondly, and most significantly, it is a sad fact that quite a high percentage of our life peers in the House of Lords are in the later stages of their lives, and many are quite frail. We continue to have to try to bring them in, although they are not able to attend as often as they would wish. The reason for that situation is that a succession of Conservative Prime Ministers—especially Lady Thatcher and the right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major)—absolutely refused to allow the creation of younger Labour life peers to replace those who died. So the hon. Gentleman is making a very unfair point at the expense of people who show great devotion to the House of Lords.

Mr. Gale: The right hon. Lady knows perfectly well that, according to the simple mathematics of the House of Lords, there are enough able Labour life peers to have carried the Government's business on every occasion. However, she has helped me to make my point, which is that it is not the hereditary peers who do not attend the upper House, but the elderly life peers.

I yield to no one in my respect for some of those elderly people. I worked long and hard over a number of years with one gentleman, the late Lord Houghton of Sowerby, a member of the right hon. Lady's party. He made a major contribution to the upper House until late into his 90s, when he was still introducing legislation, so I will take no lessons from the right hon. Lady on that matter. However, the sums make it clear that, had Labour life peers turned up to vote, they could have carried the Government's business—yet they failed to do so.

Once the hereditary peers are abolished, the work of the upper House during the interim period—that is, for the five, 10, 15, 20 or 50 years that it is in place—will have to be done by people appointed. They will either be Tony's cronies, or they will be created along the lines suggested by Lord Weatherill and set out in the amendment.

What we are discussing tonight is how we are to get from where we are now—which works—to an interim arrangement, which must also work. We are also discussing who will do the job in the interim period. When the time comes to vote on the amendment—later tonight, or tomorrow—I shall support it, not because it is particularly good, but because, in the words that my hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) used earlier, it makes a bad Bill just a little less bad. On Third Reading, I shall oppose the whole sorry charade.

I asked the hon. Member for Cannock Chase (Dr. Wright) how he was going to vote. Like every other honourable Labour Member, he equivocated, because he knows that the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) is right. The Bill is a charade and a farce, but the Government Whips will cow their sheep into the No Lobby to vote against this amendment. The Bill will then go to, and be passed by, the other place; when it comes back here, Labour Members will bleat their way through the Aye Lobby. That is what will happen. It is two-faced, and it is dishonourable. The tactic is fundamentally dishonest.

On amendment No. 18, I want to know who will be put in to fill the gaps that we all agree will have to be filled in the interim upper House. Who will be allowed to speak? Labour Members have voted that working hereditary peers may not even speak, never mind vote.

I intervened earlier on an excellent speech by my hon. Friend the Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth), and I referred to Baroness Wharton, the deputy chairman of the all-party animal welfare group and an extremely hard-working Cross-Bench peer. Some Labour Members are members of that all-party group, and they know as well as I do of the work that Baroness Wharton has done in recent years. She worked throughout the summer recess, when others were away, to design a puppy farming Bill that many Labour Members would wish to see pass through the House and through the other place. She worked long and hard, too, to take Lord Houghton's Dangerous Dogs (Amendment) Act 1997 through the House of Lords before it came to the House of Commons.

Baroness Wharton has to earn a living, yet she finds the time to work on legislation in Parliament as a Cross-Bench peer. She will no longer be allowed to speak because Labour Members voted, about two hours ago, to say that she cannot.

Angela Smith: The hon. Gentleman challenged me on this point earlier, and it is a shame that he was not here for the beginning of the debate when he would have heard points made by some of my hon. Friends. He has spoken of the work that Baroness Wharton has done, and my hon. Friends and I—I am vice-chair of the animal welfare group—have made it clear that the Bill to remove the voting rights of hereditary peers is no slur on the character of any work undertaken by hereditary peers. Rather, it is about the legitimacy of those peers to undertake work at all.

Mr. Gale: It is true that I was not here for the early part of the debate because I was engaged in other parliamentary business. However, one of the advantages of televising the Chamber is that we are able to hear speeches in our rooms. I therefore heard much of what was said earlier, and I waited to see how the hon. Member for Basildon (Angela Smith) would vote. Would she allow Baroness Wharton to carry on speaking? She voted no. [Interruption.]

I know that it is uncomfortable to hear about real people and the real work that they do in the real House of Lords. However, let me name a couple more real people. The third Viscount Chelmsford, for example, is a hereditary peer, and the director of the European Informatics Market. He plays an important role in the upper House in pressing the cause for the development of information technology, both in and out of Parliament.

The second Baron Renwick is a member of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology. He is also secretary of the Parliamentary Information Technology committee, and he speaks for the British Dyslexia Association. He, too, is a hereditary peer.

I am glad to see that the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department—the Lord Chancellor's spokesman on earth—has come to the Committee. I wanted to say something to him earlier, and now I have the chance. The Minister knows those two hereditary peers very well. In a former incarnation, he took a particular interest in information technology, and he knows—if no one else on the Labour Benches does—just how great was the role played by those two working hereditary peers in the parliamentary development of information technology. Yet the Minister has voted, and has recommended to his hon. Friends to vote, to ensure that those peers should not be allowed to speak in the other place. If those people, who work for little or no money, other than an attendance allowance, are not going to be allowed to speak, who is?

Is the Labour party going to do the job properly? Is it going to have the guts to do what the right hon. Member for Chesterfield, with whom I agree, would have it do? Is it going to persuade its turkeys in another place to vote for Christmas, to abolish the House of Lords and vote for a wholly elected upper Chamber, or is it going to continue with this charade, which is nothing short of vandalism of our constitution?

Dr. Stephen Ladyman (South Thanet): The hon. Member for North Thanet (Mr. Gale) speaks with great passion. He talks about the mathematical possibility of the Labour party occasionally being able to carry the day if it bussed in all its hereditary peers. He completely overlooks the fact that the 3:1 Conservative majority in the other place would mean that the Conservatives could simply bus in more than we could. He forgets that 300 hereditary Conservative peers were bussed in to carry the Maastricht treaty, which he now says is wrong. He forgets that we could not pass legislation against fox hunting in this Parliament because of the hereditary peers, and that is a campaign for which he has fought all his political life.

[Dr. Stephen Ladyman]

In the few moments that remain before 10 pm, I want to refer briefly to the comments made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn). I have been a member of the Labour party for a very long time. In 1987, I attempted to stand for Parliament. I can remember members of the Labour party, who were then very much its leaders and spokespeople, telling us about the policies that Labour was espousing. They included the notion of getting rid of hereditary peerages. I remember being told that the only way we would get that legislation through the House of Lords was by creating 3,000 new Labour peers, that the Conservatives would put every obstacle in our way, and that the House of Lords would not allow itself to be abolished. Now, my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield tells me that the Prime Minister is going to be profligate in creating just 91 in order to succeed in doing what he—for it was he—said could be done only with 3,000.

Mr. Benn: It was not 3,000, but 1,000. The difference is that the 1,000 would have abolished the House of Lords; the Prime Minister's appointments will be for a "transitional" stage, which I believe will last for a generation or more.

Dr. Ladyman: My right hon. Friend and I must agree to differ. Time will tell which of us is right. I believe that the Prime Minister is contemplating the creation of just 91 peers in order to accomplish the abolition of hereditary peerages. I predict that it will be done before this Parliament is out. I am committed to that, as are my right hon. and hon. Friends and our Front-Bench colleagues. It is small compromise that will succeed in getting through legislation that this party never believed it could get through. We have succeeded where others have failed.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I want to make one point in the minute that remains—[Interruption.] In the minute that remains tonight. The big question that I pose to the Leader of the House is whether the Committee is to be allowed the opportunity seriously to consider what form the interim Chamber should take, pending the findings of the royal commission and the subsequent debate; or whether we are to be landed with the 91-peer amendment, which we are not permitted to debate in this place and which the upper Chamber will be permitted to debate only in the event of good behaviour. There is much talk of democracy on the Labour Benches, but we are not being allowed a full-scale democratic debate on this vital issue.

Amendment No.—

It being Ten o'clock, THE CHAIRMAN left the Chair to report progress and ask leave to sit again.

To report progress and ask leave to sit again.—[Mr. Kevin Hughes.]

Committee report progress; to sit again tomorrow.

ACCOMMODATION AND WORKS COMMITTEE

Ordered,

That Mr. Andrew Dismore be discharged from the Accommodation and Works Committee and Mr. Colin Burgon be added to the Committee.—[Mr. Keith Bradley, on behalf of the Committee of Selection.]

Multiple Sclerosis

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Kevin Hughes.]

10 pm

Mr. Paul Burstow (Sutton and Cheam): I am pleased to initiate this debate on the treatment of multiple sclerosis sufferers. I sought it because I believe that the way in which the national health service cares for MS sufferers is a crucial test of some of the Government's NHS reforms. As things stand, MS sufferers get a poor deal from the NHS and, for want of joined-up policy making, taxpayers' money is being spent on sustaining dependency rather than on promoting independence.

I have not sought this debate simply to raise concerns about the postcode rationing of beta-interferon, although I have some questions on that. I hope that the Minister will give the House, and many thousands of people outside, a sense of the Government's approach and attitude to the treatment of MS. In that context, beta-interferon is only part of the picture. There is also a need to address diagnostic services, rehabilitation and nursing services.

MS is a disease of the central nervous system and the most common disabling disease among young adults. This week alone, 50 people will be diagnosed with it. The symptoms often result in problems with mobility, vision, speech and fatigue, and can cause severe pain. One thing is certain about MS: the unpredictability of how it affects people's quality of life.

Because MS is both degenerative and multi-symptomatic, it requires a co-ordinated, multi-agency approach. The sad fact is that services for MS and MS sufferers are subject to wide geographical variation. The variation in availability of service between one postcode and another was confirmed last year in research by the Association of Quality in Healthcare. It found that few health authorities know how much beta-interferon they are funding or how many patients are eligible for treatment in their areas, and showed that most under-prescribe. Even more disturbingly, it revealed that few health authorities work through specific contracts or have detailed service specifications in respect of MS.

All those findings confirm the anecdotal evidence that many hon. Members will have encountered in their casework and surgeries that services are poorly organised and planned. An open letter from a group of 16 distinguished neurologists published in November stated:

> "We believe that the National Health service has failed to respond adequately to the needs of people with MS and that services to them, with some shining exceptions, are seriously deficient in most parts of the country."

In this short debate I want to cover three issues: prescribing, other services for MS sufferers, and cost-effectiveness, which seems to inform much of the Government's thinking on the issue. Guidance on prescribing beta-interferon was issued by the previous Government to health authorities in 1995. It suggested that it should be prescribed only by neurologists; and that patients should be over 18, have the relapsing-remitting form of the disease, and have had two attacks in the past two years. Finally, patients should be able to walk.

While it is difficult to obtain hard numbers, it is estimated that some 800 people receive beta-interferon. That is about 1.5 per cent. to 2 per cent. of MS sufferers.

As I understand, as many as 10 per cent. of MS sufferers qualify and would benefit from such therapy. Indeed, evidence from trials suggests that treatment with beta-interferon can reduce the number of attacks by up to one third, increase the length of remission and reduce the progression of disability. Beta-interferon is not a cure for MS; nor is it a wonder drug. I acknowledge that it does not necessarily apply to every MS sufferer. However, far too many people who would benefit from it still do not have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Andrew Lansley (South Cambridgeshire): Is the hon. Gentleman aware that a distinguished clinical neurologist thought it appropriate that my constituent, Mrs. Jacky Boswell, should receive beta-interferon, but Cambridge and Huntingdon health authority denied that treatment purely on the grounds that it is not resourced sufficiently to do so?

Mr. Burstow: The hon. Gentleman has drawn attention to a problem that a number of hon. Members encounter. Constituency casework tells us that there are people for whom neurologists have recommended the prescription of the drug for whom—through no fault of their own or of their neurologist, and purely by dint of the fact that the local health service does not have sufficient resources—treatment cannot be provided. As a consequence, as I shall describe later, other parts of the welfare state wind up picking up the cost, and informal carers share the burden.

Prescribing patterns suggest that financial, not clinical, considerations are denying neurologists the freedom to prescribe, as the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) rightly suggested. With the recent European licensing of beta-interferon to treat the more severe secondary progressive form of the disease, the need for clarity and direction from the Government is more urgent than ever. As Stephen Thornton, the chief executive of the NHS Confederation, said,

> "To avoid the charge of postcode prescribing, we need urgent Government clarification."

We need Government clarification not just of current prescribing for relapsing-remitting MS, but of future prescribing policy.

A series of statements and so on by Ministers has begun to call into question the efficacy of beta-interferon. Indeed, in November, the then Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn), said that the Department would be > "commissioning new research into the appropriate usage of beta-interferon, and we will be issuing new guidelines before too long to ensure greater national consistency in the uptake of the drug."—[Official Report, 10 November 1998; Vol. 319, c. 132.]

I am sure that hon. Members on both sides of the House would welcome that, and hope that that guidance is on its way. In a subsequent written answer in response to a question that I tabled, however, the Minister said that there are still many unanswered questions about the drug's appropriate use.

In a letter to the hon. Member for North-East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes) in January, which I am grateful to have had the opportunity to see, the present Minister of State said:

[Mr. Burstow]

> "There are still continuing doubts over the clinical and cost-effectiveness of the drug arising from soundly based clinical trials. Proposals for a national clinical trial into Beta-interferon are at an advanced stage, and a final decision will shortly be taken".

Those statements raise some questions. I hope that the Minister can give some answers.

When will the new guidelines be issued, especially for the secondary progressive condition? Will beta-interferon continue to be available, albeit under the unsatisfactory regime, outside the rules of the proposed national trial? How long will the national trial last before new guidelines are published, in order that there may be greater consistency, which the Minister promised at the Dispatch Box only in November?

Secondly, as well as mapping the patchwork nature of prescribing, the Association of Quality in Healthcare study found inadequate planning, lack of consultation and poor management information—indeed, 46 per cent. of health authorities do not appear to contract for MS diagnostic, treatment or rehabilitation services. It is little more than a lottery whether a patient sees a neurologist who has specialist knowledge to deal with MS. That lack of planning cries out for a national service framework. Will the new National Institute for Clinical Excellence be given an early task: to consider MS services in the round—not just prescription—so that MS sufferers can be certain that they will receive a good standard of service no matter where they live?

The third issue is cost-effectiveness, which Ministers have often raised in their answers. Most assessments of the cost-effectiveness of beta-interferon examine only the health-related costs, but such a narrow approach overlooks the social care, social security and other costs that arise. Indeed, a study published in the pharmacoeconomics journal found that the bulk of the costs of managing MS in this country were borne by social services and general practitioners, not the health service. That pattern was also found in work done by the South and West Devon health authority. A study there compared the use of health and social care resources for two groups of MS patients.

Mr. John Burnett (Torridge and West Devon): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Burstow: I had better not. I have already given way once.

The study compared a group of MS patients who were being treated with beta-interferon with a group to whom the drug had been refused. In just one of a number of case studies dealt with in that detailed research, it was found that the lost tax revenues and the increased benefit payments accounted for about £10,000. A further £2,500 was being allocated to cover social care costs during relapses.

The conclusion of the study was clear. The researchers stated:

> "The study has been concerned to show that although the cash purchase price"— of beta-interferon—

> "has proved an initial barrier to some potential NHS purchasers, when other factors are considered, the true 'cost' of the drug can be viewed in a more advantageous light. These include the quality of life of the patient during treatment, the impact on the use of resources in hospital and in the community, the effect of the disease on the families and friends of MS patients and the economic cost to the community as a whole."

I hope that in future, when work on the subject is done by the Department, these other issues will be taken into the equation. I hope that the National Institute for Clinical Excellence, which I understand will consider cost-effectiveness as part of its work, will take that wider view, rather than just a narrow health-related cost view. On the basis of the evidence that I have seen, and according to those who are far better informed than I am, it is clear that the drug can make a difference.

I sought the debate tonight because of a number of cases that came to my attention in my constituency. I expect that other hon. Members are present to listen to the debate because of cases that have been brought to their attention. In preparation for the debate, I spoke on Friday last week to the chair of our local MS society to discuss some of the issues of concern to its members.

The local group has 140 members, including 90 sufferers of MS, none of whom are prescribed beta-interferon. Indeed, I was told that at least two had been told that they are eligible under the existing guidance, but that no money is available to pay for the therapy. They went on to say that the problem was not just the drug, but the lack of planning by the health authority and the lack of awareness of the everyday experiences of MS sufferers.

Because there is inadequate provision in the health service to fund the treatment, the cost ends up being borne in other parts of the welfare state. In effect, we are funding dependency, rather than shifting the resources to fund greater independence.

MS wrecks lives. It robs people of their independence. The NHS response is unplanned, unco-ordinated and underfunded. MS sufferers want to know whether the 1995 guidelines will be properly funded and properly enforced around the country, so that we do not have the rationing of drugs by postcode. MS patients want decent diagnostic and rehabilitation services. The number of people who are told that they suffer from MS and who are left to try to lead their lives without any support is a scandal. We must ensure that there is decent support for people's rights of employment and so on. Above all, people want some certainty in their lives. I hope that, tonight, the Minister can begin to give MS sufferers greater certainty that the Government are committed to their care, treatment and rehabilitation.

10.15 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. John Hutton): I congratulate the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) on his good fortune in securing a debate on this timely and important subject. I express my gratitude to him for his thoughtful and clearly well-researched comments. I am sure that he will not object if I begin by putting some of his comments about resources in the right perspective. The hon. Gentleman will be aware that, over the next three years, an additional £21 billion will be spent on the national health service. That is a 4.7 per cent. real-terms increase in NHS spending. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will be aware also that the health authority in his constituency will be receiving an additional £25 million in funding next year. That is an increase of more than 6 per cent.

I say to the hon. Gentleman and to other hon. Members who are present—I am pleased to see so many right hon. and hon. Members taking an interest in the debate—that, within those overall budget figures, we expect expenditure on new drug treatments to increase significantly. We fully expect that a greater share of NHS resources will be spent on good-value new drug treatments over the next three years. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will not mind if I decline to accept his criticism of the Government record on investing in the NHS. I think that we can safely withstand any attack from the Liberal Democrats.

As the hon. Gentleman said, multiple sclerosis is a chronic, disabling disease which affects the central nervous system, causing damage to the nerves in the brain and spinal cord. It often strikes people when they are young. It is understood to arise from scarring and inflammation of the myelin sheath. This acts as insulation to the nerve fibres and helps conduct impulses through the central nervous system. When that happens, disabilities can vary from impairment of speech, vision and movement to continence problems or even complete paralysis. Because of its prolonged course, and the disability that can result from it, it is extremely distressing for those who suffer from the disease, and their families. It often has a profound effect on the lives of others in the family as well. We estimate that multiple sclerosis affects, as the hon. Gentleman rightly said, 80,000 to 90,000 people in the United Kingdom.

The disease course in MS is unpredictable. People most often present with relapsing-remitting MS, in which relapses or acute attacks of neurological disability are followed by periods of remission. Later, as chronic problems accumulate, the disease may become more progressive, with more acute relapses. Some people have the progressive form of the illness right from the start. Management of MS therefore involves a number of things, including treatment of relapses caused by increased disease activity, a proper care programme to minimise and control specific problems such as spasticity, bowel and bladder problems and fatigue, and specific treatment aimed at influencing the disease's progression.

People with MS have a wide range of health and other needs. These needs, particularly for health care, will nearly always change over time. Patients with long-term conditions such as MS require different levels of support and health care. An annual approach to their health care is not always appropriate. Our White Paper "The new NHS" presents us with good opportunities to develop innovative care approaches for people with long-term care needs, including those with multiple sclerosis. In the White Paper, we made clear our ambitions for a modern, dependable service that will provide first-class treatment and care for all those who need it. I want to make it clear at the outset that that applies just as much to those suffering from MS as to anyone else with long-term health care needs.

The recent consultation exercise on arrangements for long-term service agreements which we proposed in guidance on "Commissioning in the New NHS" will ensure that commissioning arrangements cover longer time scales of between three to five years instead of at present only one. In this guidance, our proposals for pathways of care will, where appropriate, link primary care, secondary care and social care, to which the hon. Gentleman referred. I believe that this is a better approach for people with long-term conditions such as MS. Discussions about these care pathways will involve users and carers as well as health professionals. However, we need to be realistic about making changes and we do not expect these new arrangements to happen overnight for all services, but to be developed on a rolling programme that replaces annual contracts.

Mr. Burstow: Listening to the Minister's speech, it is quite difficult to find the appropriate point at which to intervene. That being so, it may well be that he will be taking up the point that I am about to make. However, I seek clarification.

I referred to the fact that 46 per cent. of health authorities have no contracts and no clarity in their planning of delivery of services for MS sufferers. Is the Minister able to say specifically whether the National Institute for Clinical Excellence will be asked to undertake work in this area and provide a service framework to guide the pathways that he was talking about?

Mr. Hutton: I have some sympathy with the hon. Gentleman in respect of knowing what is the right place to intervene during an Adjournment debate, because it usually takes a bit of time to reach the specific points that have been raised. I can assure him that I will come on to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence, and—if he is okay with this—I shall refer to those issues when I reach that point in my remarks. The specific figure that he raised—that of 46 per cent. of health authorities not having any strategic approach to managing multiple sclerosis patients—is not one that I am familiar with. If he would like to make further representations to me, I should be happy to look into that.

We emphasised in the guidance that care pathways would be developed to cover a range of preventive, diagnostic, palliative, rehabilitative and supporting care components of an integrated programme of care. That applies in particular to long-term medical conditions where, following accurate and timely diagnosis, patient care will be managed outside an acute setting. That is likely to be the case for many neurological conditions and, given their complex nature, we plan to develop, with the help of the neurological voluntary organisations, a compendium of good practice on the commissioning of neurological services.

On services for people with MS, the hon. Gentleman will be aware that, last year, the Multiple Sclerosis Society published a survey of multiple sclerosis provision in England and a symptom management survey. The first survey was designed to establish how commissioners approach provision of MS services and to build a picture of service provision in England. The second looked at the experiences of a group of MS patients.

Under the present system, the organisation of health services, including services for people suffering from MS, and the manner in which they are delivered, are, quite rightly, matters for local health authorities. The move to new commissioning arrangements will achieve improvements in services for people with conditions such as MS. Longer-term agreements, reflecting dialogue between clinicians and focusing on health improvement and quality objectives, will increase the emphasis on programmes of care that cross the traditional boundaries to meet patients's needs best.

[Mr. Hutton]

The White Paper "The New NHS" also underlines our commitment to working in partnership, which fully includes the voluntary sector. We are pleased to be supporting the MS Society in particular, under the section 64 scheme of grants, in respect of its emergent therapies project. The MS Society, together with the National Hospital for Neurology and Neurosurgery, have developed comprehensive guidance on standards for the provision of health care for people with MS. The society is offering formal recognition, as a benchmark of good practice, to centres and services that meet these standards. We very much welcome that helpful initiative.

Multiple sclerosis can have a profound effect on family life and, in particular, on the lives of people caring for family members or friends with MS. The Government recognise the vital role that carers play, which is why we announced a substantial new policy package for carers last week. That package will mean better information, better support and better care for carers. Families with a member suffering from MS should be able to cope more easily as a result of the additional help and support that they will now receive.

The NICE agitated the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam quite extensively. Sometimes—MS is an example—there are few specific treatments available to treat a disease or condition. That means that health professionals need to arrange care packages that support, rather than cure or ameliorate, a condition. In such situations, there is naturally a great deal of interest in emerging therapies, but it can be difficult for individual clinicians and commissioners to make decisions about new therapies as they become available and to make themselves aware of all the pertinent evidence.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke (Rushcliffe): I am grateful to the Minister for his courtesy in giving way. He is giving some helpful general information, but he has touched on the immediate point that is affecting a lot of people across the country. When an experienced consultant wants to prescribe specific treatment for a patient, and he thinks that that patient will benefit, is it justifiable for the health authority to refuse to finance all patients for whom he has prescribed? Is it right to restrict on financial grounds treatments recommended by experienced consultants?

Mr. Hutton: The right hon. and learned Gentleman will not be surprised to hear that I will come on to that part of my speech in a few minutes and I will deal specifically with the important point that he has made.

That is why we are setting up—

Mr. Burnett: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Hutton: No, I will not. I have only six minutes left in which to respond to a number of points.

That is why we are setting up the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. The proposals for a new national institute mean that, for the first time, patients and NHS staff will be able to turn to a single authoritative source of clinical and cost-effectiveness advice.

Internal markets and the postcode lottery that they inevitably created were never an acceptable way to run a health service. NICE guidance will provide a common effectiveness foundation for the NHS to inform and assist decision making about care at all levels—national, local and individual. By identifying which new developments will most improve patient care, it will help spread good value new treatments across the NHS. That, in turn, will promote and encourage successful innovation and, by sorting out the wheat from the chaff, it will be able to target treatments on patients who will benefit most, as well as protect patients from outdated and ineffective treatment.

Guidance from the NICE does not remove the need to take account of genuine, good clinical reasons for tailoring the care provided to individual patients. That will always be an issue to discuss with the individual patient in the consulting room. Better-informed patients and professional staff can only help lead to better-quality care for everyone, wherever they live.

The hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam expressed concern over the availability of beta-interferon, both for patients with the relapsing-remitting form of the disease and for patients with the secondary progressive form. We need to be clear that complex issues are involved. There is certainly evidence that beta-interferon can benefit some patients, but it appears that only a small proportion of those receiving treatment benefit from beta-interferon and it is impossible to predict which patients are likely to benefit. That is why many professionals involved in providing or commissioning health care are genuinely uncertain whether beta-interferon treatment represents a responsible use of NHS resources.

Those are precisely the sort of issues that we have set up the new National Institute of Clinical Excellence to advise on. I am happy to confirm that, subject to the outcome of consultation on the discussion document that we issued last week, we are minded to refer beta-interferon treatment to the NICE as one of its priority tasks. I hope, therefore, that by later this year we shall have clear, authoritative advice on the role of beta-interferon in the treatment of patients with this most distressing condition—[Interruption.] I thought that the right hon. and learned Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) was seeking to intervene again.

Mr. Clarke: I simply wanted to say that I am glad that the Minister got around to dealing with that point. I thought that he would not, but I am grateful for what he said.

Mr. Hutton: I do not want to turn this into a love-in, but I am grateful to the right hon. and learned Gentleman as well.

Many people are aware, too, of the use of a rather older drug by patients with MS—cannabis. The Government receive a lot of correspondence from people with MS about their problems with pain and how cannabis seems to help alleviate the symptoms. The hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam did not refer to the use of cannabis, but I thought that the House might welcome one or two comments about how we view the use of cannabis in these circumstances.

We are not unsympathetic to the plight of those who cannot be helped by existing medication and I can appreciate the desire of people with severe pain to explore every avenue to seek relief. However, it would clearly not be of benefit to those people for us to come to a hasty decision on such an important issue. At this stage, there is insufficient evidence to demonstrate the effectiveness of cannabis as a therapeutic agent.

I am sure that the hon. Gentleman appreciates that the Government cannot condone the use of an illicit drug with unproven therapeutic benefit. Under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, possession of cannabis is, and will remain, a criminal offence. However, the report published in 1997 by the British Medical Association, "The Therapeutic Use of Cannabis", surveys the scientific evidence to support the use of cannabis as a medicine. The report shows that there is no reliable, well-conducted research evidence to support the therapeutic use of cannabis.

The hon. Gentleman is probably aware that the Royal Pharmaceutical Society has been working to improve the quality of research methodology for cannabinoids—the unique constituents of cannabis. Any therapeutic effects that cannabis may have are thought to rest in cannabinoids. The society is undertaking work to see whether it can establish that cannabinoids have therapeutic benefits in controlling pain and in improving the functioning of people with MS. Successful completion of that work will lead to the publication of guidelines to help researchers produce methodologically sound results.

I should have liked to say much more, but unfortunately I shall soon run out of time.

We are providing significant funding in a number of different centres to support research on the treatment of MS in a number of ways. I assure the hon. Gentleman that that support and funding will continue. The fundamental point that he raised, however, concerned NHS resources and their use to support effective programmes for MS. As he would be the first to acknowledge, NHS resources are not limitless. Priorities still have to be set, but we are taking the necessary action to raise the quality of treatment and care to ensure a fair distribution of resources across the NHS and to end the postcode lottery, which became all too common under the previous Administration.

Those actions and many others will help improve the national health service and ensure that it responds more effectively to the needs of patients, including those who suffer from multiple sclerosis.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at half-past Ten o'clock.

House of Commons

Tuesday 16 February 1999

The House met at half-past Two o'clock

PRAYERS

[MADAM SPEAKER in the Chair]

PRIVATE BUSINESS

CITY OF LONDON (WARD ELECTIONS) BILL (By Order)

Order for Second Reading read.

To be read a Second time on Wednesday 24 February at Seven o'clock.

Oral Answers to Questions

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

The Secretary of State was asked—

Chemical and Biological Weapons

1. Laura Moffatt (Crawley): If he will make a statement about progress towards achieving the elimination of chemical and biological weapons. [69420]

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Tony Lloyd): Chemical and biological weapons are banned under their respective conventions. We continue to work for universal accession to both conventions and are playing a leading role in negotiations on a protocol to strengthen the biological weapons convention. We are working hard to ensure effective global implementation of the chemical weapons convention. It is our ambition to prevent proliferation and help rid the world of those weapons of mass destruction.

Laura Moffatt: I thank my hon. Friend for that answer, and congratulate the Government on their stand, particularly on the convention on chemical weapons. Does he agree with me and with the Defence Select Committee that it is crucial that, under the chemical weapons convention, we continue to encourage countries to lay open their pharmaceutical industry for inspection, to ensure that all countries—including, of course, Iraq—are aware of exactly what is being produced?

Mr. Lloyd: Unfortunately, Iraq is not a state party to the chemical weapons convention—which gives us a problem, and is why more direct action to degrade Iraq's chemical and biological weapons capability was necessary in recent weeks. Nevertheless, my hon. Friend is right to say that, if we are to rid the world of those weapons, we need not only processes to prevent the export of relevant technologies, but systems of verification and of challenge inspections, to ensure that those who want to flout the convention are brought to book.

Mr. John Randall (Uxbridge): Does the Minister think that it would be appropriate to send international inspectors to Sudan to check whether the factory that was bombed by the United States was making weapons of mass destruction, or aspirins?

Mr. Lloyd: Obviously that is a question for the Government of Sudan. Undoubtedly, it would help enormously if Sudan were to join as party to the chemical weapons convention and—were it so to do—specifically to accept the regime of challenge inspections and verification. That would put the matter beyond all doubt.

Mr. George Galloway (Glasgow, Kelvin): Why is it a matter for the Government of Sudan? The United States Government launched a devastating blitzkrieg of cruise missiles on a pharmaceuticals factory on the basis of evidence that Kroll Associates—the respected New York investigators—in a report this week, said was "totally wrong". Will the Minister now say publicly, in the interests of proving that we have an independent foreign policy, what I know to be the Foreign Office's private view—that the attack on Sudan was a terrible, ghastly mistake?

Mr. Lloyd: The United States Government's public position, which my hon. Friend knows very well, is to hold to the view that the factory was being used for the production of chemical weapons. I simply repeat what I said to the House: the way for Sudan to move forward in the matter is to adhere to the chemical weapons convention, and to accept the verification procedures and challenge inspections.

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): The Minister and I can agree that a fundamental objective of foreign policy must be the elimination of chemical and biological weapons. However, we must not forget the accompanying technology and delivery systems. Will the Minister confirm the alarming reports that Russia is not only supplying technology illegally to Iraq, but has plans to provide Syria with a ballistic missile capability, and has thousands of Russians working on the development of Iran's nuclear, chemical and biological programmes? Does he agree that the Russians' actions dramatically escalate security risks in the region? Will he tell the House what he is doing, either directly with Russia or at the United Nations, to discourage Russia from rearming Iraq and increasing tensions in the middle east?

Mr. Lloyd: Russian Foreign Minister Ivanov has categorically denied those stories, which is important. We always treat with concern any stories—from whatever source—about the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. Within those terms, the matter has been raised with the Russians. I can repeat what I said: we have no evidence to suggest that there is any truth in the stories. I should tell the House—although I am sorry to have to raise a political note—that the previous Conservative Government were prepared to arm the Iraqi Government and Saddam Hussein. In so doing, they were prepared to breach any concept of international law, and they dictated who built weapons of mass destruction.

Agenda 2000

2. Mr. David Watts (St. Helens, North): What representations he has received about Agenda 2000 in respect of enlargement of the Union; and if he will make a statement. [69421]

9. Mr. Lawrie Quinn (Scarborough and Whitby): What representations he has received about Agenda 2000 in relation to European institutions; and if he will make a statement. [69428]

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Robin Cook): We are in regular contact on Agenda 2000 with consumer groups, regional organisations and the business and farming communities. In the negotiations, we support the Commission's proposals on reform of the common agricultural policy, particularly the cut in intervention prices, which will bring annual savings of £80 a year for the typical British family.

We support streamlining the structural funds, and will work to preserve the current proposals, which will make the United Kingdom one of only two member states to receive an increase in the number of areas covered by objective 1. We shall press vigorously for stabilisation of Europe's budget at broadly the level of the current year, and have made it plain that the case for the British rebate is as compelling as ever.

Enlargement of the European Union is an historic opportunity to unite east and west. In order to afford enlargement, the European Union must get spending under control. We are determined that it should do so.

Mr. Watts: I thank my right hon. Friend for that response. Does he agree that it is a sad indictment of the policies of the previous Government that Britain has some of the poorest regions and some of the richest? Will he do all that he can to ensure that structural funds continue to go to the areas that need them to try to bridge that gap?

Mr. Cook: As I have told the House, we shall have an increased number of areas covered by objective 1 structural funds. That should not give hon. Members any comfort, because it reflects the extent to which those regions have suffered over the past two decades, since they were last looked at. We are determined to ensure that they have every opportunity to recover from their current position. We shall ensure that they are supported by appropriate Government measures.

Mr. Quinn: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the reform of the common agricultural policy is inextricably linked to European Union enlargement? Would he like to contrast the Government's attitude with the little England mentality of the Conservative party—

Madam Speaker: Order. That is not the Foreign Secretary's responsibility. Will the hon. Gentleman finish his question?

Mr. Quinn: I apologise, Madam Speaker.

Will my right hon. Friend do his utmost to ensure that the Labour party's policies are seen to flourish at the forthcoming negotiations on reform of the common agricultural policy and European Union enlargement?

Mr. Cook: My hon. Friend's question speaks for itself. [Laughter.] I do not know what the Conservatives find funny about the fact that they were unable to make progress on the beef ban for two years. We have made progress through constructive engagement. Through our approach to Agenda 2000, we are likely to achieve prices in cereals and beef that will be broadly comparable to world prices. That was never secured by the previous Administration over 18 years. The rest of the nation may laugh at the Conservatives' record, but Conservative Members have nothing to laugh about.

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): Will the Foreign Secretary confirm that he accepts the recommendation of the International Development Select Committee on Agenda 2000—that all development should be undertaken by one commissioner, so that the whole development budget can be combined in a managerially and administratively sensible way?

Mr. Cook: The hon. Gentleman will be aware that we have considerable concerns about the European Union's development budget. It does not follow the policy, which we have adopted strongly, of targeting help on the poorest people in the poorest countries. As Britain is increasing its development budget thanks to the Government's policies, we can speak with authority on the issue and will continue to do so.

Mr. Michael Trend (Windsor): Will the Foreign Secretary give the House an absolute assurance that the British rebate is non-negotiable?

Mr. Cook: Yes.

Mr. Jim Marshall (Leicester, South): Madam Speaker, I apologise for having called you Madam Deputy Speaker last week.

Madam Speaker: I said that the hon. Member would never be called again. It shows what a softy I am.

Mr. Marshall: It shows that we can both make mistakes.

My right hon. Friend referred to the need to reform the structural funds. Britain is also keen on reform of the cohesion fund, but Spain—a main beneficiary of the fund—is violently opposed to the proposals. Is there any evidence that Spain might be adopting positions on other issues affecting UK-Spanish relations to change our stance on the cohesion fund?

Mr. Cook: Spain's position on Gibraltar existed long before the cohesion fund was invented. It is our view that as the cohesion fund was invented to prepare countries for membership of the single currency, it is illogical to continue with that fund once they are actually in the single currency. In those circumstances, we remain to be convinced of the case for the cohesion fund.

Dependent Territories

3. Mr. Michael Colvin (Romsey): When he expects to make an announcement on the outcome of his review of Britain's dependent territories. [69422]

4. Mr. Bob Russell (Colchester): What plans he has to visit the island of St. Helena to discuss his White Paper on British dependent territories. [69423]

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Robin Cook): I intend to publish the White Paper on overseas territories during the week commencing 15 March. The White Paper will provide a comprehensive review of Britain's relations with its overseas territories, including their relationship with the Foreign Office, their financial regulation and protection of their rich environmental heritage.

In preparing the White Paper, we have consulted closely with the Government of St. Helena and the other overseas territories. We believe that they will broadly welcome our proposals.

Mr. Colvin: Will the right hon. Gentleman acknowledge that no overseas territory is causing more concern to Parliament at present than Gibraltar? What will his review say about the future sovereignty of Gibraltar? Will he take the opportunity of the publication of the review to say what he will do about the Spanish proposals for joint sovereignty which, at the moment, are sitting in his pending tray? If those proposals are clearly rejected—as they should be, if he is to follow the wishes of the people of Gibraltar and, I believe, of this House—what alternative proposals will he put on the table?

Mr. Cook: The Spanish Foreign Minister's proposal was tabled at a meeting of the Brussels process. The Brussels process was, of course, agreed to by the previous Conservative Government, and committed Britain to discuss once a year with Spain the issue of the sovereignty of Gibraltar. When the Spanish Foreign Minister tabled proposals on the transfer of sovereignty in 1985, the Conservative Government left them lying on the table not for 15 months, but for eight years. At that meeting of the Brussels process, I undertook to give a reply at the next meeting. However, I said at the time that there would be no compromise on sovereignty against the wishes of the people of Gibraltar. That was our position at the last meeting—it will be our position at the next meeting as well.

Mr. Russell: I welcome the Foreign Secretary's statement this afternoon that the White Paper will be published next month, but does he agree that we now need speed in bringing St. Helena back into the British family, from which it was ejected in 1981—against its wishes—by the previous Government? Can we have an assurance that, before the millennium, St. Helena will be back in the British family?

Mr. Cook: I can give the hon. Gentleman an assurance that we will publish the White Paper in the week commencing 15 March. He will understand that I cannot anticipate what may be in the contents of that White Paper. I look forward to answering a question on the same subject come that day.

Mr. Phil Sawford (Kettering): I congratulate my right hon. Friend on the progress that the Government are making on the White Paper. Those of us who have constituents from St. Helena are well aware of the complexity of the issue, and of the problems of the island—high unemployment, a lack of opportunity and a heavy reliance on budgetary aid. Will he assure us that he will give sympathetic consideration in the review to the wish of the people of St. Helena for full British citizenship?

Mr. Cook: I can assure my hon. Friend that the issue has been pressed upon us by the Government of St. Helena—and by the Governments of some other overseas territories—and that we are well aware of the real concern. I entirely share my hon. Friend's other point of concern about the economy of St. Helena, which is one of the two overseas territories in receipt of overseas aid from Britain. It requires such assistance, and we are continuing to commit ourselves to make sure that we achieve economic reconstruction within St. Helena.

Mr. Andrew Mackinlay (Thurrock): Will the overseas territories review address the democratic deficit in the overseas territories, whose Parliament is this place and whose Foreign Secretary is my right hon. Friend, but for whom there is no access to Westminster? Should not the Government follow the Parliaments of France, the Netherlands and Spain—as well as the US Congress—which give representation in the main legislature to overseas territories? Is it not time that a Labour Government addressed themselves to enfranchising these people?

Mr. Cook: There is not universal demand from the overseas territories for such representation, primarily because we have much stronger decentralisation [illegible] their government than is practised in France, which retains some central control; but I assure my hon. Friend that the people continue to have direct access to myself and my Ministers, and one of the proposals in the White Paper is to provide a better structure for more regular dialogue.

Mr. Michael Howard (Folkestone and Hythe): When, in January 1997, the Spanish Foreign Minister proposed joint sovereignty for Gibraltar, within days, Sir Malcolm Rifkind, the then Foreign Secretary, said:

> "The idea is a non-starter. The simple point is that Gibraltar people want to remain British citizens. And that is the end of the matter."

Will the Foreign Secretary repeat his predecessor's words?

Mr. Cook: The fact is that no proposals were tabled in January 1997. There was an oral discussion between the two Foreign Ministers, as there has been between me and Mr. Matutes on six occasions in the past year. The right hon. and learned Gentleman is imagining any U-turn, weakening or retreat in the British position. As I have said to the Spanish Foreign Minister and to the House, the Government's position is that there can be no compromise on sovereignty against the wishes of the Gibraltar people. Their views on the matter are sovereign. We stand firmly by the commitment given by a previous Labour Government in 1969—that the people of Gibraltar will freely and democratically decide whether there should be any transfer of sovereignty.

The only people to whom the right hon. and learned Gentleman is giving comfort by imagining that there is a U-turn are the Government of Spain. If he really wants to convince them that Britain is firm, it is about time that he said that there is no sign of weakening by the Government, who are backed by a united, not a divided Parliament.

United Nations

5. Ms Julia Drown (South Swindon): If he will make a statement about arrangements for financing the United Nations. [69424]

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Tony Lloyd): We continue to promote the European Union's proposals for reform of the arrangements for financing the United Nations, which are designed to reflect more closely countries' capacity to pay. We believe that the proposals represent the best way of resolving the current crisis in funding. At the end of 1998, the United Nations was owed over $2 billion by member states. We urge all United Nations member states to pay their dues promptly, in full and without conditions, as the United Kingdom does.

Ms Drown: I thank my hon. Friend for that reply, although I am concerned at its content. Over the past decade, 2 million children have been killed in war, and many more have been left disabled and homeless. The world looks to the United Nations to help to solve the conflicts that result in those deaths. How can the United Nations function without the funds that it requires to do its work? Will my hon. Friend make urgent representations to the right-wing Republicans on Capitol hill, and make it clear that they are acting irresponsibly and that children's lives depend on their agreeing to pay their dues without further delay?

Mr. Lloyd: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. The simple reality is that a United Nations that is owed $2 billion is not in a proper position to do all the work that we ask of it. We want a more efficient United Nations, but we do not necessarily want a cheapskate United Nations that cannot do the job that the world wants it to do. That is why we as a Government are the biggest single funder of, for example, the UN Commission on Human Rights. Now that President Clinton is firmly back in the saddle, it is incumbent on the United States Congress to accept that it must pay the United Nations what it owes.

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Mid-Sussex): In view of the American Government's lamentable record on the funding of the United Nations and their persistent default in stumping up what they owe, would the Minister support a proposition that the UN headquarters should move to London, at the very centre of the European Union, removing it from the ambit of the rather more absurd American views on it?

Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lloyd: The hon. Gentleman certainly seems to have created a popular movement among Government Back Benchers; but there is no proper proposal to remove the United Nations from New York. The reality is that both New York as a city and the United States as a country do very well out of the presence of the UN on their territory. That is why we expect Congress to come up with the money that it owes.

Kosovo

6. Mr. David Lock (Wyre Forest): If he will make a statement on progress on peace in Kosovo. [69425]

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Robin Cook): Along with my colleague the French Foreign Minister, I have been acting as co-chairman of the peace talks at Rambouillet. We have tabled a framework agreement and other texts that provide for a democratic, self-governing Kosovo.

Both delegations have got down to serious work on the texts, and have prepared detailed comments and amendments. It has not yet been possible to bring both sides together to negotiate on their amendments, mainly because of the insistence by the Serbs that both sides should first sign the statement of principles.

I return to Rambouillet tomorrow with the French Foreign Minister, when we will strongly remind both sides that the Contact Group requires them to conclude negotiations by Saturday. In my statement to the House two weeks ago, I warned that I could not guarantee that the talks would necessarily end in agreement. I regret to say that that remains the case today.

Mr. Lock: I thank my right hon. Friend for that answer, and congratulate him on the steps that have been taken so far to bring the sides together. Conservative Members have been liberal with their criticisms of my right hon. Friend, but I assure him that there is an appreciation, on these Benches and throughout Europe, that without his personal contribution, the talks might never have got going. Will he confirm that, if the talks are successful and there is a settlement, British ground troops under British control will be committed to Kosovo to ensure that the humanitarian atrocities that have afflicted the region in recent months will not be repeated?

Mr. Cook: It is indeed the case that Britain as a whole can take some pride in the work that is being done by its officials to secure those talks. It was, after all, Britain that drafted the key texts at New York and at the Contact Group meeting in London, and which played an important part in getting agreement in the North Atlantic Council. I am glad that our efforts have managed to bring together both sides for these talks.

However, the talks will be a success only if we get agreement by the end of them. I confirm to my hon. Friend that we are willing to commit British troops as part of an international force to provide stability in Kosovo so that a political settlement can take root, but they will go there only if there is a clear commitment to a political settlement. I hope that that will increase the pressure at Rambouillet to reach agreement.

Mr. Crispin Blunt (Reigate): Does the Foreign Secretary accept that, if troops are deployed in Kosovo, they will have to go for more than six months? With one division deployed indefinitely in Bosnia, the possible deployment of a corps headquarters and a brigade to Kosovo would drive a coach and horses through the central assumption of the strategic defence review about the full defence structure required by the United Kingdom. Will the Foreign Secretary recommend to the Prime Minister that there should be a review of the full structure, and of the Army in particular, so that he can continue to pursue the foreign policy that he is pursuing at present?

Mr. Cook: We have only just completed a defence review that has been widely praised around Europe and which is currently being copied by a number of allies. The outcome of that review was in stark contrast to the repeated cuts, which amounted to a third of British forces' capacity, made under the Government whom the hon. Gentleman supported—and during his time as an adviser at the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Donald Anderson (Swansea, East): Any fair person must congratulate my right hon. Friend on the way that he and his French counterpart have acted, and would hope and pray that there will be a successful conclusion. The success, or otherwise, of the negotiations will determine the success of the Washington NATO summit in April. Does my right hon. Friend agree that this is not a laboratory experiment, but a practical experience of Europe working with the United States for proper ends?

Mr. Cook: My hon. Friend is right, in that the drafting of the strategic concept for discussion at the forthcoming NATO summit envisages that organisation playing an important part in crisis management and crisis intervention. However, if such an international force is to be provided for Kosovo, we would want it to go beyond NATO, and would hope that some of NATO's other partners for peace would also play a part and help to provide a truly multinational force.

Mr. Menzies Campbell (North-East Fife): The Foreign Secretary is right to be cautious about the prospects of a successful agreement. May I press him, however? If there is no successful agreement, there will, of course, be no NATO ground forces in Kosovo, but the threat of air strikes will remain. What would be the strategic and military purpose of air strikes if no agreement can be reached? Would the purpose be, as has been reported recently, to break Belgrade's hold on Kosovo by degrading its military infrastructure?

Mr. Cook: I can assure the right hon. and learned Gentleman and the House that there is no question of NATO ground troops being provided if there is no settlement. We shall not fight our way in. The right hon. and learned Gentleman is quite right to say that a NATO decision already provides Javier Solana with the power to activate military action against Belgrade in the event of Belgrade not complying with the Contact Group's demands. The objective of such action, and of the threat of such action, is to try to secure the compliance of Belgrade. At present, we are still working to achieve a successful outcome, and that must be our priority for the next four days.

Mr. Mike Gapes (Ilford, South): If there is an agreement and troops go to Kosovo, can my right hon. Friend assure us that they will be sufficiently well equipped either to extricate themselves or to defend themselves adequately if there is any danger of the ceasefire breaking down? The experience of Bosnia has been one of mission creep, and many of us are concerned that we cannot be sure at the start of a process just where it will lead in some months' time.

Mr. Cook: The lesson of Bosnia is, indeed, that one should not commit forces unless they have the capacity both to defend themselves and to enforce their mandate. That is why the proposed force for Kosovo is significantly greater than the one deployed in Bosnia in the early years. As my hon. Friend may know, we are already embarking heavy equipment as a contingency plan, in case we need to commit British troops, as we want that equipment to be available in advance.

Mr. Michael Howard (Folkestone and Hythe): We wish the Foreign Secretary well in his attempts to broker an agreement on Kosovo. We support his efforts and we hope that they will succeed.

But will the Foreign Secretary now answer the question put by my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Mr. Blunt)? The right hon. Gentleman will be aware that the Minister for Defence Procurement told the other place last week that deployment of British troops in Kosovo would add greatly to overstretch in the Army. We were constantly told that the strategic defence review was driven by the Foreign Office, so do the Government intend to revise the SDR or to adjust their foreign policy?

Mr. Cook: There is no point in the right hon. and learned Gentleman rising at the Dispatch Box to wish us well in the talks, but then trying to knock away one of the main incentives for reaching agreement. We are clear on two points. First, the Chief of the Defence Staff has been fully involved in our decisions, and I am sure that he would have made no irresponsible decision. [Interruption.] I do not see why any hon. Member should find that amusing.

Secondly, we are conscious of our own role in the alliance. It is broadly agreed that the core of provision for Kosovo should be the ARRC—Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps—headquarters. Britain has for decades been the lead nation there, and it would gravely undermine our standing in NATO if we were to walk away from that responsibility. We intend to fulfil our responsibility, and we are conscious of having a much better prepared military posture than we inherited from the previous Government after 10 years of cuts.

Mr. Howard: No one is suggesting that the Government should walk away from that responsibility. As I have repeatedly said, we support the Government's efforts. But the Minister of Defence Procurement, at least, was aware of the questions posed for overstretch within the British Army. The question is: will the Government look again at the strategic defence review, or will they look again at their foreign policy in view of the great overstretch conceded by that Minister?

Mr. Cook: I must tell the right hon. and learned Gentleman that we have no intention of looking again, as he puts it, at the foreign policy that is committed to trying to achieve peace in the Balkans. I wish that, just once, the right hon. and learned Gentleman could rise to express his support without immediately following it by a "but".

Cyprus

7. Mr. Andrew Dismore (Hendon): If he will make a statement on the contribution of Her Majesty's Government to efforts to achieve a solution to the Cyprus problem. [R] [69426]

12. Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): When he next plans to visit Cyprus to discuss with the parties the end of the division of that island. [69431]

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Ms Joyce Quin): We remain committed to resolving the tragedy of Cyprus's division. We continue to believe that the best means of achieving a solution is on the basis laid down in UN Security Council resolutions for a bi-zonal, bi-communal federation. Therefore, we welcome UN Security Council resolution 1218, adopted on 22 December 1998, which sets out clear and far-reaching objectives for reducing tension and for progress towards a just, comprehensive and lasting settlement in Cyprus.

Mr. Dismore: Is my right hon. Friend aware that there was some concern on the island at the recent comments of Sir David Hannay? Therefore, I welcome the Government's reaffirmation of the policy of looking to a settlement based on a bi-zonal, bi-communal federation and on a single sovereignty. Does my right hon. Friend welcome, as I do, the decision of the Cyprus Government not to take S300 missiles on to the island? Also, does she agree that one of the best ways forward is to work towards a more general demilitarisation of Cyprus as a step towards a settlement of the tragedy that has been taking place there for 25 years?

Ms Quin: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his comments. He is right to welcome the decision of President Clerides not to deploy those missiles, which will both reduce tension and help Cyprus to accede to the European Union. Having seen the transcript of what Sir David Hannay said, I am satisfied that his remarks were misrepresented. Indeed, in various meetings, including one with the high commissioner for Cyprus here in London, he and I have reaffirmed that there is no change in our policy on Cyprus.

Mr. Waterson: Does the Minister agree that, given the unilateral decision of the Cypriot Government not to deploy missiles to reduce tension, as she put it, and the complete lack of any countervailing contribution from the regime in the north of Cyprus to reduce any part of the military presence there, the only answer is to press forward as fast as possible towards accession to the European Union at least for the south of the island—hopefully, to be followed one day by the north?

Ms Quin: The accession process is on track in terms of the examination by the European Commission of the various dossiers. As the hon. Gentleman knows, we have always hoped that the accession process could provide a catalyst towards the settlement of the Cyprus problem, and we still want to concentrate minds on that possibility.

Mr. Eddie O'Hara (Knowsley, South): Does my right hon. Friend agree that one of the most useful ways in which we could ease the situation in Cyprus is through increasing the number of intercommunal exchanges? Therefore, will she join me in commending the recent successful visit of 1,280 Turkish Cypriot Muslims to the Hala Sultan Tekke shrine in Larnaca and in hoping that there will be similar exchanges for Greek Cypriot pilgrims, for example, to visit the Apostolos Andreas monastery in the far north of the Karpasia peninsula, and even the church of Ayios Mamas in Morphou?

Ms Quin: I agree that initiatives to try to increase contacts between the communities are worth while. Those initiatives, along with others with which the friends of Cyprus, including Members of Parliament, have been involved are welcome and we wish to encourage them.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): In seeking to follow up the constructive question of the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara), does the Minister accept that, if we are to achieve lasting peace and unity in Cyprus, we must carry with us in achieving that objective not only Turkey but the Turkish Cypriots? Cyprus has had a sad history in the past 30 years. What action are the British Government taking to work more closely with Turkey, which is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and has given that body great support, and with those responsible Turkish Cypriots who want a united Ireland—[Interruption.] That was merely a Freudian slip, Madam Speaker. I should have said a united island—hon. Members misunderstood my Cheshire accent. What action are the Government taking to work more closely with Turkey and with the Turkish Cypriot Administration to get greater co-operation on the ultimate unity of Cyprus?

Ms Quin: I was wondering whether the hon. Gentleman's comments signalled a dramatic shift in his party's policy on a variety of issues. He and I can at least join in saying that we are interested in promoting peace processes; and we are certainly interested in doing that in Cyprus. We engage in dialogue with Turkey and try to promote measures to build confidence between Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots. We support the work of Sir David Hannay and of Dame Anne Hercus, who is doing a good job on the island of Cyprus trying to bring communities together and to find ways of solving the long-term problem.

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): The whole House will welcome my right hon. Friend's comments. She will be aware that there have been many disappointments in attempts to achieve a settlement in Cyprus, none more acute than on the return of Famagusta, which would benefit both Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots. Will she give an assurance to the House and to the people of Cyprus that the return of Famagusta is a Government priority?

Ms Quin: We have raised the issue of Famagusta and Varosha on many occasions, but my hon. Friend will accept that the best way to make progress is to continue to press the various initiatives taking place within both the United Nations and the European Union towards a comprehensive settlement.

Pakistan

8. Mr. Julian Brazier (Canterbury): What steps he is taking to monitor human rights abuses in Pakistan. [69427]

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Derek Fatchett): During my visit to Pakistan last week, I raised with the Minister for Justice a number of concerns about human rights.

Mr. Brazier: Is the Minister concerned about the arrest earlier this month of four leading members of Pakistan's third-largest party, the Mohajir Qaumi Movement; and about the considerable evidence of religious persecution side by side with political persecution, including the fact that five Christians currently await trial under Islamic blasphemy laws? Is the Minister willing to use this country's considerable leverage—Pakistan is a recipient of aid from us and is a full member of the Commonwealth once more—to make those points strongly to the Pakistani Government? Is he willing to receive written representations from the MQM on the political matters and from Christian rights organisations?

Mr. Fatchett: Last week, I took the opportunity to stress our concerns about the need to maintain religious freedom, which is part of Pakistan's written constitution. The Minister for Justice reassured me that the Government were committed to that constitution and would try to implement it. What is important is that practice coincides with the written letter of the law, and we shall certainly take every action possible to ensure that that step is taken and that there is religious freedom in Pakistan.

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): Has my right hon. Friend had time to read last week's debate on human rights for women, which was initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mrs. Cryer)? May I draw the House's attention to the fact that, under the Zina laws and Huddood ordinances, women in Pakistan are quite often denied basic human rights? Dreadful practices often take place. Will my right hon. Friend the Minister take up directly with the Government of Pakistan the need to get rid of those unjust laws?

Mr. Fatchett: I assure my hon. Friend that I took up those points last week: I expressed our concern that there should be equality before the law and that women in Pakistan should enjoy the same rights as men. I also stressed to the Ministers I met that the increasing influence of the Taliban on Pakistan is a detrimental and negative influence, on which the Government in Pakistan should keep a close watch.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley (South-West Surrey): The Ahmadiyya community have their European conference centre in my constituency, and they report a series of deplorable human rights abuses, including lack of freedom of religion, speech or assembly. They know that the Government have said that human rights are at the heart of their policy, but what substance is behind the rhetoric? Is there any hope for practical improvement for them and their families in Pakistan?

Mr. Fatchett: I can only repeat to the right hon. Lady the point that I have just made to the hon. Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) and my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), which is that we are concerned about religious freedom in Pakistan. Pakistan's written constitution states that individuals should have a right to practise their faith, but clearly that right is not always honoured in practice. I assure the right hon. Lady that we shall continue to make the strongest possible representations to the Government of Pakistan that people should enjoy their rights under their country's constitution.

Palestinian Authority

10. Dr. Nick Palmer (Broxtowe): What steps he is taking to support the Palestinian Authority in developing a sound economy. [69429]

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Derek Fatchett): We actively support the Palestinian economy through an extensive programme of bilateral aid and our contribution to EC aid programmes. We announced last November that we shall provide over £50 million in bilateral aid during the next three years. That aid will not only help to develop health and infrastructure facilities and support refugees, but provide technical support for training economic experts for the technical assistance unit of the Palestinian Authority. That brings our total bilateral aid since the signature of the Oslo accords to £122 million.

Dr. Palmer: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the success of the Palestinian Authority in providing what is perceived to be clean and successful government is very much in the interests of all the countries in the area? Will he urge all those concerned, including the United States, to facilitate the access of Palestinian goods to world markets as a contribution to that success?

Mr. Fatchett: My hon. Friend raises two points. First, it is important, as he rightly says, that the Palestinian Authority is transparent and accountable, and it is important for donor countries that there is clear accountability in the use of aid. Secondly, the best way forward for the Palestinian economy is to be able to trade with the rest of the world, and we should like such opportunities to open up for the Palestinians.

Mr. Michael Fabricant (Lichfield): I welcome that answer, but is the Minister aware that, since the authority's formation, Palestinians' annual income per capita has fallen from $1,700 a few years ago to $1,400? Is he aware that that is partly due to the corruption in the Palestinian Authority? Is he aware that, among all the squalor in the area, some 100 families are building large villas, almost palaces? What can the Government do to ensure that corruption is stamped out and that aid from the United Kingdom and the European Union gets to the people that we are trying to help?

Mr. Fatchett: It is crucial that there is transparency in the use of UK and European Commission aid, and we shall continue to argue for that. Since the Oslo accords, the living standards of the average Palestinian have declined. We need to address the crucial questions in the middle east relating to the peace process and we have to give Palestinians the belief that peace will bring prosperity. I hope that the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority recognise the commitments that they have made under the Wye River accords and that they honour them and implement them in full.

Dr. Phyllis Starkey (Milton Keynes, South-West): May I take up my right hon. Friend's previous answer and ask him what pressure the Government are putting on the Israeli Government to implement the Wye River accords and not to put them on hold until after the general election? Those accords were made with the state, not with whichever party happens to be in government.

Mr. Fatchett: My hon. Friend is absolutely correct—the agreement was made on behalf of the state of Israel. There is no opt-out clause stating that the agreement should be put on hold while a general election takes place. It is our strong belief that the commitments made by both parties under the Wye River accords should be implemented in full and we call on the Palestinians and the Israelis to do just that.

EU (Veto)

11. Mr. Howard Flight (Arundel and South Downs): What recent discussions he has held with his European counterparts on the continuation of the national veto. [69430]

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Ms Joyce Quin): The veto has not figured in recent discussions held by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary or by me. A decision will be taken at the European Council in Cologne in June on when and how to discuss institutional reform in preparation for enlargement. No proposals are on the table.

Mr. Flight: Is it the Government's policy to resist absolutely to give an inch—or perhaps I should say a centimetre—in terms of our veto power? Can the Minister confirm that the Government are opposed to any attempts under the Amsterdam treaty to use the power of the courts, especially in the area of tax harmonisation and the common European withholding tax, to get around the powers of our veto to block such measures?

Ms Quin: Taxation is one of the matters on which, as the hon. Gentleman knows, we believe that unanimity should remain. There are other matters too, which we have listed, such as treaty changes, defence and immigration. However, the hon. Gentleman's concern about the matter sits ill with the Conservative Government's record on both the Maastricht treaty and the Single European Act, whereby, as he knows, majority voting was extended dramatically.

Mr. Bill Rammell (Harlow): Does my right hon. Friend agree that, although the veto is the ultimate preserver of the national interest, threatening to use it at the start of any discussions with our European partners in intergovernmental negotiations actually serves to undermine the British national interest? If any demonstration of that were wanted, we need only look back to the beef crisis, when the Conservative party in government threatened our European partners with everything bar nuking them and got absolutely nowhere—but, within 18 months, the Labour Government got the ban lifted.

Ms Quin: My hon. Friend makes a good point. Certainly, on issues such as tax harmonisation, on which we obviously have several allies, it is absurd to start from the presumption that we are in an isolated position.

Mr. John Wilkinson (Ruislip-Northwood): In an earlier answer, the Foreign Secretary was very dismissive of the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) for implying that we might be less than firm in defence of the British rebate. Can the right hon. Lady reiterate, without any equivocation whatever, that, if the British rebate were to be reduced, Her Majesty's Government would forthwith issue a veto on that proposal?

Ms Quin: I am always delighted to repeat guarantees given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary.

Brazil

13. Mr. Bob Blizzard (Waveney): If he will make a statement on his policy relating to Brazil following the recent economic turbulence there. [69434]

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Tony Lloyd): Brazil remains by far our largest market in Latin America and we are committed to strengthening our trade and investment links with that country.

The Government support the Brazilian programme of fiscal adjustment agreed with the International Monetary Fund and welcome the Brazilian Government's commitment to continue with the reform process.

Mr. Blizzard: I thank my hon. Friend. Will he press the Brazilian Government to ensure that, in their stabilisation process, poorer and more vulnerable people are given as much protection as possible? More generally, does not the economic crisis in Brazil underline the importance of the work of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in creating new international arrangements to assist world financial stability—in contrast to the previous Government, who saw no further than boom and bust?

Mr. Lloyd: On the second point, of course my hon. Friend is right; he has a particular interest in Brazil. The record of the previous Government was poor in terms of not only Brazil but the whole international financial system. Not only have the present Government given considerable support—some $2.25 billion—to the Brazilian economy directly, but the Government, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer in particular, have been concerned to ensure, through the G7 and elsewhere, that the global financial system works to move to greater stability, greater transparency, the introduction of codes of conduct, and practical co-operation between regulators: practical efforts to ensure that this financial crisis can be brought to a speedy end.

On the issue of protecting the poorest people in Brazil, we shall argue, both in our direct relations with Brazil and in our consultations with the IMF, that the most vulnerable must be protected.

EU (Political Integration)

14. Mr. Tim Loughton (East Worthing and Shoreham): What discussions he has had with his German counterpart about the prospects for political integration within the EU. [69435]

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Robin Cook): I maintain close contact with Joschka Fischer. Last month in Brussels, I expressed our support for the priorities that he has set for the German presidency: employment, Agenda 2000 and enlargement. The German presidency has not made any proposals for integration part of its agenda, and nor have we.

Mr. Loughton: What did the German Foreign Minister mean when he told the European Parliament last month that political union must be our lodestar from now on? More important, what did he tell the Foreign Secretary he meant by that statement?

Mr. Cook: The German Foreign Minister set out for the European Parliament a broad visionary statement which was a characteristic expression of the German vision of Europe. It happens not to be one that we share; nor have we shared that vision over many years. Our position is closer to that expressed by President Chirac last week, when he called not for a united states of Europe but for a united Europe of states. That statement shows clearly that we have many friends in trying to fashion a Europe in which we work together when we have common interests, but preserve our national identities and ensure that there is decentralisation wherever possible.

Mr. Peter L. Pike (Burnley): As my right hon. Friend said, is it not a fact that the German Government have exactly the same priorities as the British Government within the European Union: jobs, securing European enlargement and making Europe work positively? That is better than an obsession with the silly things, which the Conservative party continues to pursue.

Mr. Cook: My hon. Friend is absolutely right: we share fully the priorities of the German presidency. We think that Germany is absolutely right in putting jobs at the top of the agenda. We intend to work with Germany in making practical progress on the things that really matter to our people. That is—to coin a phrase—the British way.

Dr. Julian Lewis (New Forest, East): Surely the Foreign Secretary cannot pick and mix the bits that he likes and the bits that he does not like from the German Foreign Minister's comments. Is it not a fact that the German Foreign Minister—a man elected to that position on less than 7 per cent. of the popular vote achieved by his party under proportional representation—has said time and again that he envisages the European Union serving the purpose of political union? Why does the Foreign Secretary not disown that statement if he does not believe it?

Mr. Cook: Whenever the German Foreign Minister makes a specific proposal with which we disagree or which we believe will not be in the British interest, we will oppose it. However, I rather doubt whether it would assist my relations with Germany if I were to suggest to the German Foreign Minister that he lacks a popular mandate.

Latvia

15. Mr. Paul Flynn (Newport, West): What plans he has to improve relations with Latvia. [69436]

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Ms Joyce Quin): The United Kingdom enjoys excellent relations with Latvia. We plan to enhance our bilateral co-operation programmes, which are designed to help Latvia's preparations for membership of the European Union and to improve Latvia's defence capabilities.

Trade with Latvia is growing at a healthy rate. Latvia, together with Estonia and Lithuania, is included in the new trade and investment initiative "Opportunities in Central Europe", run by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Foreign Office, which was launched by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on 9 February.

Mr. Flynn: Is it not a matter of congratulations and satisfaction for all those concerned that the rebirth of democracy in the three Baltic states has gone ahead so peacefully, despite the great potential for divisions between ethnic minorities both within those countries and outside their borders? When members of our sister Parliament, the Saeima, visit us next month, will it be possible to give the Latvians, and pass on to the Lithuanians, an assurance that the breach that has occurred in progress towards European unity—involving Estonia and Europe, the other Baltic states and the unfortunate difference in pace—may be put right by ensuring that the Baltic states proceed towards joining the European family of nations together? Estonia does not need to take the lead.

Ms Quin: I pay tribute to my hon. Friend's work in seeking to build good relations between this Parliament and the Parliaments of the Baltic states.

With regard to European Union accession, we believe strongly that membership should be dealt with on its merits. Therefore, we support the approach that the Commission has taken. However, we are very pleased at the way in which the prospect of European Union membership has encouraged changes in Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia. That was witnessed in the favourable result achieved in the Latvian referendum on nationality issues, which we believe was a step forward in the treatment of minorities in that country.

Mr. John Bercow (Buckingham): Given the recent spate of bombings in Latvia, what advice is the Foreign Office giving to visitors to that country?

Ms Quin: I am not aware that we have changed travel advice recently with regard to Latvia, but, if what I say is not correct, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Genetically Modified Food

3.30 pm

Mr. Tim Yeo (South Suffolk) (by private notice): To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the safety of genetically modified food.

The Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. Jeff Rooker): The Government are fully committed to ensuring the safety of food. All genetically modified foods and food ingredients go through a process of very thorough scrutiny by a committee of experts, known as the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes. The committee advises the Government and has a remit to examine all novel foods—genetically modified and otherwise. Such foods are also scrutinised by equivalent bodies in all other member states, to ensure that no food comes on to the market unless it is safe.

The committee, which was established in 1988, has members from universities and research institutes who are experts in their fields and are fully up to date with the latest scientific thinking. There are two lay members whose respective roles are to advise on ethical issues and the consumer aspect, and to see that the scientific experts pay attention to the concerns of the wider public. Since May 1997 the committee has been taking steps to become increasingly open, and now publishes all its agendas, minutes and a note of the outcome of each meeting.

The products that have been authorised—which was some time ago—have all been through that rigorous process.

We are also committed to the principle of consumer choice. The Government are determined that all foods containing GM material should be clearly labelled. We are now leading the way in Europe in this regard by also requiring the provision of information in catering establishments. We are taking steps to ensure that local authorities have all the necessary powers to enforce those requirements. In addition, we are pressing the European Commission to introduce proposals for the labelling of animal feeds as quickly as possible.

Choice also means having access to alternatives. That is why the Government have published a list of 59 companies from which food manufacturers can obtain non-GM soya. That list was published almost 12 months ago.

We believe that all that adds up to a system in which consumers can have confidence.

Much of the recent debate inside and outside the House has unhelpfully confused the two issues of food safety and protection of the environment. There have been many attempts to generalise from findings in laboratories at the experimental stages.

Genetic modification is a development that has huge potential to benefit society in various ways—not least the possibility that it might eventually prevent us from having to pour thousands of tonnes of chemicals on to our foods as we grow them. However, it is important that the end products be put on the market only after the most careful scrutiny of their effects on human health.

We believe that we have a robust and open system for ensuring that the consumer is fully protected, but that those who so wish can choose whether to purchase those products. Above all, it is the Government's first priority to ensure that the safety of consumers is fully protected, and that will remain the case.

Mr. Yeo: I am grateful to the Minister for his answer, and only sorry that he is not supported in the Chamber by the Minister of Agriculture or by a single member of the Cabinet.

Does the Minister understand that public confidence in the safety of food that contains genetically modified ingredients is being damaged every day by the Government's mishandling of the issue? Is he aware that there are real anxieties about the environmental impact of commercial planting of genetically modified crops in a small country such as Britain, whose topography is so different from that of the United States?

Why will not the Government take the advice of English Nature—that the current research into the environmental effects of GM crops should be completed before approval is given for their commercial release? Does he accept that that will take at least three or four years?

Will the Minister explain why the Minister for the Environment, who is not present, told the Sunday Herald last weekend that no commercial planting would take place until next year, although the Minister told the House only two weeks ago that planting might start this year? Will the Minister announce today that there will be a three-year delay before herbicide-tolerant and insect-resistant crops can be commercially planted?

Will the Minister explain what the Government are doing in response to health fears about the use of antibiotic-resistant marker genes? Does he understand that a Government who get their friends to suppress the publication of inconvenient research findings, who accept sponsorship from companies involved in promoting the commercial growth of genetically modified crops, and who refuse to publish the advice that they receive on this sensitive issue do not deserve the public's trust?

Why ~~will not~~ the Prime Minister tell us whether he is under pressure from President Clinton, who is known to be close to Monsanto on this subject? Do the Government realise that, although better labelling is an urgent and top priority—I welcome the Minister's reference to it—its value is inevitably limited because of the failure to segregate genetically modified from conventional crops?

Does the Minister understand that the Conservative party fully supports the current research programme into genetically modified crops, including the field-scale trials? We want that research programme to be completed. Does he share our view that the only way to restore public confidence in foods which may be safe and technology which may be beneficial is to recognise the environmental and the health worries, and ensure that future policy decisions are taken in a more open way by Ministers whose independence and integrity can be relied on?

Mr. Rooker: I shall do my best to answer the hon. Gentleman's points. He started by saying that there is a lack of public confidence in genetically modified food and then touched on environmental issues. I want to explain: the only foods on sale that are genetically modified are a tomato paste, which was approved in September 1994; soya beans, which were approved in February 1995; and maize, which was first approved in 1996—plus four further varieties, which were approved in January and February 1997.

All that information is not secret; it was known. I remind the House that every hon. Member recently received from me a brochure on the work of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes, setting out the dates. Those foods went through that regulatory process. In my initial answer, I explained what we have done to toughen that process up: publishing the minutes and the agendas of that committee will let everyone know that it has decided not to approve a food. Decisions are no longer taken behind closed doors.

I also said that there had been a change of policy regarding labelling. The policy that we inherited was to oppose the labelling of these three foods. We were on our own in Brussels—the only country out of 15 members that was trying to negotiate not to label those foods. The policy was changed, then announced on 7 June 1997.

I agree that it took a while to reach agreement in Europe, but since September last year, it has been a legal requirement to have those foods labelled. I accept that we cannot enforce penalties because, at the moment, we do not have the appropriate British legislation, but we have spent three months consulting on that and an extra month consulting on the catering industry's involvement. That is not a European Union requirement, but we think that catering should be included.

With all that said, and given the fact that sources of non-GM foods are also available, I genuinely believe that the public should have confidence in the foods that are on sale—and that were allowed to be placed on sale by Ministers in the previous Government.

The hon. Gentleman asked about matters that are outside the remit of the food regulatory system. However, I am happy to answer his questions. The regulatory system is split, and rightly so. It would be wrong if one Ministry were making all the decisions. Environmental research and field-scale trials must continue. At the moment, the trials are small, but larger trials will begin this year.

There is a self-imposed three-year moratorium on pesticide-resistant crops. I accept that the industry cannot get the products ready for two years anyway, but the moratorium is nevertheless in place. No commercially grown GM-crops will be planted this year. Planting was always intended to take place at the turn of the year or early next year because of the seasons. There are no approvals for those crops to be grown commercially, and we shall assess the position after we have the latest information on the current trials and on those that are to take place.

There is a moratorium on a free-for-all. There will be no free-for-all in the commercial planting of these crops. Farmers will not be allowed to have access to the seeds and to plant them field after field in farm after farm. They will suffer penalties if they break the rules. They will lose access to the technology, and there will be an independent audit of the crops and seeds when and if they come on the market.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the repression of research. I honestly do not know to which research he is referring. We have not repressed any research. No research findings have been repressed, and I challenge anyone to say what research has been repressed and how we have repressed it. Umpteen research experiments—probably dozens—are being carried out up and down the country in public and private sector institutions, some of which are sponsored by the Government and others by industry. The Government have not repressed any research results, and I challenge anyone to show otherwise.

Mr. Yeo: What about Professor James?

Mr. Rooker: The advice on eating raw potatoes is exactly the same as it is on eating raw chicken—do not do it; cook it first. That is the official scientific advice that was given to the House of Lords Select Committee, which spent six months investigating the issue. It does not matter whether the potatoes are genetically modified or not, that advice remains the same. For the avoidance of doubt, no GM potatoes are being trialed or marketed in this country.

We publish the advice we receive, and we are opening up food policy in a way that was unheard of three or four years ago. I hope that I have satisfied hon. Members on labelling. We shall publish the statutory instrument by the end of the consultation period next week. I am not a business manager, but we have no problem about debating that legislation on the Floor of the House to show what we have achieved on labelling since we came to power.

The hon. Gentleman's last point was about the failure to segregate. I accept that that is a difficulty; it causes a problem. When we came to office, companies complained to me about the failure to obtain segregated soya produce from America because it had been mixed up. We considered the legal position, which is that we cannot, either as a country or as a member of the European Union, force segregation under the rules of the World Trade Organisation, because we do not have a medical reason for it.

However, we did not rely on that, because we wanted a consumer-choice reason for segregation. We called in all the leading players in the industry—large and small manufacturers—to ask what the Government could do to assist in getting non-GM supplies. The result of our inquiries was a list of 59 non-GM suppliers. We were told by those companies that we had missed the boat on segregation by about 18 months. They told me that in January 1998, and I plead guilty to missing the boat 18 months before that date.

I do not know—because I have no access to the papers—whether the last Government tried to press or negotiate for the segregation of such crops at the same time as they approved their sale in this country.

Dr. Ian Gibson (Norwich, North): Does my hon. Friend agree that Opposition Members are suffering from late-night reading of John Grisham novels? Is he prepared to convince the House that scientists in Norwich who are working in the John Innes Centre, the Institute of Food Research and the Sainsbury laboratory will be able to conduct their researches into viral resistance using such crops and nutritious foods, which is their aim?

Those scientists have always collaborated with the agencies mentioned by my hon. Friend, and they should be encouraged to do so. Good science will produce the answers to some of the questions—as will the honesty and openness shown by this Government, which contrasts with the Conservative Government's attitude to the problems of BSE. People died because of their incompetence; no one has yet died because of genetically modified food.

[Dr. Ian Gibson]

Mr. Rooker: We are attempting to operate on the basis of the best science, but we go beyond that. Our doors are still open to receive the views of scientists who might be described as being outside the loop.

Mr. Paul Tyler (North Cornwall): Surely the core issue is not whether there is a conflict of interests in the case of one Minister, but whether there has been a complete lack of interest on the part of a succession of Ministers over the past decade or so.

The Minister asked what happened under the Conservative regime when the issue of segregation arose. I think that I can tell him, because I asked his Conservative predecessor, the then food Minister, what the Government were doing about the segregation of genetically modified organisms in soya and other crops. The answer was that the Government had washed their hands of it: they felt that it was not worth bothering about. I put it to the Minister's predecessor that the horse had bolted, and that it would now be incredibly difficult to ensure that there was accurate labelling so that our constituents, the consumers, could make an informed choice, because the Tory Government—whom these folks on the neighbouring Benches still apparently represent—had failed in their public duties to those consumers.

On 3 February 1997, the then Minister told me specifically:

> "The UK Government believe that genetic technology has the potential for widespread benefit".—[Official Report, 3 February 1997; Vol. 289, c. 515.]

I ask the present Minister to ignore the humbug of Conservative Members—but two wrongs do not make a right. I am sure the Minister will agree that there is widespread concern about the issue; does he also agree that the science of surveillance is not keeping up with the science of development? Does he agree that, in particular, the issue of labelling is becoming incredibly difficult to manage? When I met representatives of the Food Safety Agency in Brussels yesterday, it was clear that they too were dissatisfied with the progress being made. Does the Minister agree that, in view of the widespread concern, it is time for a new statement of Government policy to reassure the public?

Mr. Rooker: I hope that I have been able to go some way down that road this afternoon. With regard to Brussels, it is true that there are gaps in the labelling proposals, but we expect a European Union proposal shortly to deal with additives and flavourings that are not covered by the current regulations, and we expect a de minimis level to be negotiable from March this year. We need to close the gap. I hope that, by the time we have introduced the statutory instrument to cover labelling—which will include the catering industry, in relation to which we are going beyond the EU directive—we shall be able to show that we are taking the matter seriously.

As for segregation, as I said the other day, proper, effective labelling with a claim that can be tested in laboratories, and the availability of alternatives, will enable consumers to vote with their feet. Ultimately, market forces will prevail.

Mr. Alan W. Williams (East Carmarthen and Dinefwr): Many people will be very concerned about what happened to Dr. Pusztai at the Rowett research institute in Aberdeen. Within days of giving a television interview about his work he was forced to retire, with a gagging clause. Given that it is a Government-funded research institute, will the Minister use our influence to remove that gagging clause, so that Dr. Pusztai can explain exactly what his work proved, or demonstrated in his mind, and his own anxieties? In that way, rather than being perhaps shifted to one side, his work can be thoroughly researched, with 10 times the resources being devoted to finding out if there are any problems with GM foods.

Mr. Rooker: I remember that example being raised last August. The fact is that we cannot check on the result of the research because it has not been published. There has been no peer-group review of the research. I understand that, as I stand here, the audit of Dr. Pusztai's work and the comments on that audit are being made available by the Rowett research institute, which has asked the Royal Society in London and Edinburgh to conduct a review; but no one can do a review until the scientists publish their research, so that other scientists can try to repeat the experiments.

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher and Walton): Does the Minister accept that the only danger from genetically modified foods that are on the market at the moment is that they seem to turn some politicians, scientists and journalists into headless chickens? Can he try to continue what he has done from the Dispatch Box: to get some common sense into the issue?

Of course some genetically modified foods were approved under the last Conservative Government. As the former Minister for Science and Technology, I am proud that they were. Of course, we had talks with companies such as Monsanto and Zeneca. It was of interest to the then Government to know what those companies were doing. Of course we encouraged them to talk to the research institutes. We have spent years trying to get industry to open its research to research institutes. It is foolish now to start pointing them out as case studies of the opposite direction.

Will the Minister please make it clear to the public that there is no such thing as safe food, or completely clear scientific evidence? There is always an element of risk. If more politicians, journalists and scientists put what their findings are at any given moment on some sliding scale of risk, so that the public could understand, we would not have ludicrous scare stories such as have appeared in the past few days.

Mr. Rooker: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman, who as the former Minister for Science and Technology speaks with some experience. He is right. Some of the stories have been pure scaremongering. A headline yesterday said:

> "Safety fears at 70 sites testing GM crops."

The reality is that 70 sites were being used to test GM crops, four were found to be a problem, and, with two, there is a prosecution tomorrow. There were thus no safety fears at 70 sites testing GM crops; so information is always useful to put across the case.

We will do our best to harness the best of science. We are leaders in Europe in this sector, but we will not take risks with public safety. The foods that are on sale are as safe as the non-GM equivalents. Everyone who has examined them is satisfied that those foods already on the market are as safe as equivalent foods. There is no equivocation about that, notwithstanding the degrees of risk that the hon. Gentleman mentioned. Nothing is safe: even crossing the road is not safe. [Interruption.]

Mr. Alan Simpson (Nottingham, South): Before any more Opposition Front Benchers slip away in embarrassment, may I urge the Minister not to take any moral lectures from an Opposition party that, when in government, placed the dogma of deregulation before the duty to public health? I thank him for publishing the list of non-GM crops, which he and I have been talking about since he came to office, but will he address some of the concerns that scientists have recently been trying to flag up?

The first concern is that current benchmarks for the conduct of good scientific research are simply inadequate to deal with the wider issues, which are beginning to be raised by hon. Members on both sides the House. Will my hon. Friend consider strengthening the scientific criteria against which laboratory-based research is conducted, and examine the relevant new issues about when wider releases become an unacceptable risk? However, before doing that, will he ensure that the public are able to exercise more widely their right to decide when it is safe to consume products? Currently, with the best will in the world, we do not have adequate answers to those questions on safety.

Mr. Rooker: I thank my hon. Friend for his question. First, however, as I should have said when initially answering the private notice question, I apologise for the absence today of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture—who is in Brussels for important bilateral meetings with representatives of other member states, in preparation for probably the most important Agriculture Council in recent years, to be held next week, on reform of the common agricultural policy.

Scientists will always have queries on benchmarks, as science is always moving and will never stay still. GM products are assessed using the method of substantial equivalence. We adhere to that method, which has not only been approved by the World Health Organisation but is used across the European Union.

The Government are served by more than one advisory committee—one of which is the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment. However, to ensure that we have the right regulatory process, at the very first meeting of the new Cabinet Committee on Biotechnology in December, we agreed to a Whitehall review of the strengths and weaknesses of the current regulatory process, to determine whether any of the relevant committees should be merged or abolished, or whether a new regulatory system should be imposed. On 17 December 1998, we published the press release announcing the review.

The Government are therefore not simply accepting received policy but are moving on a number of fronts to strengthen policy, in the interests of consumers and of Britain's science base.

Mr. William Cash (Stone): Does the Minister accept that it does not really matter whether those decisions were taken in the 1980s or 1990s, and that the point—whether we are dealing with BSE, human genetic engineering or GM foods—is that consumers will best be served only if we do not leave such matters exclusively, as has increasingly happened, to scientists rather than to politicians and others who have a right, on behalf of their electorate, to participate in the exercise?

Does the Minister not think, therefore, that the suggestion that I made before the previous general election—that there should be an ad hoc Select Committee to examine these issues—remains valid; that it was disgraceful that the Select Committee on Science and Technology sat on that occasion for only one day; that there should now be encouragement for the Select Committee to draw together the various issues—over which there is much confusion, both political and scientific—so that we can get to the bottom of the matter; and that the House, on behalf of consumers and the electorate, should play its part and not simply pass the buck to the scientists?

Mr. Rooker: I can honestly say that I agree with every word that the hon. Gentleman has just uttered. I do not think that these matters should be left exclusively to scientists—which is why, since 1997, lay people have been appointed to sit on every single scientific committee, of which there are about seven or eight, dealing with foods.

Furthermore, lay people are not on the committees to serve as tokens. We encourage them—and the ethicists on committees—to network with each other. The other day, we counted up the numbers, and there were no fewer than 12 ethics specialists serving on the biotechnology committees serving the Government. A non-scientist lay person has been appointed to the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee and is not there as a token, either. I entirely agree with the hon. Gentleman, and realise that the Select Committee on Science and Technology will conduct an inquiry—of which I wholly approve, and in which the Government will fully co-operate.

Audrey Wise (Preston): It was good to hear my hon. Friend expose the hypocrisy of Opposition Members. However, will he also accept that there are genuine fears about this type of technology? May I remind him that all the changes in agriculture over the past 20, 30 or more years have been made in the name of progress—all to feed the hungry; all for progress—but have left behind deserts and polluted land and water?

I thank my hon. Friend for his commitment to openness. I urge him to preserve a healthy scepticism. In some cases, by the time that we discover that something is harmful it is too late and we cannot undo the damage.

Mr. Rooker: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that question. She has identified one reason why there will be no free-for-all on commercial growing. We have to get the agreement of the industry. We do not yet have final approval. The industry's guidelines will stand much better if they have the Government's support. We shall not give our support until we are satisfied. My noble Friend Lord Donoughue and I have sent the guidelines back to the industry four times in the past 12 months because we want them toughened. We are not yet satisfied. We understand that the final version will meet our demands.

[Mr. Rooker]

My hon. Friend talks about changing agricultural practices. We shall do everything that we can to preserve diversity in agricultural practices. In the next financial year, we shall double the aid available for farmers to convert to organic production. We desperately need more home-produced organic food.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): The press has told us this week that there is a possibility of an outbreak of lung cancer as a result of medication delivered before 1961. Is it not important to be careful about going ahead with certain things without verification? Will the gagging order that we understand has been placed on a certain scientist be lifted so that others can weigh up the issues? We must learn from our mistakes and remember that if a Minister giving his children a hamburger failed to assuage the public's fears in the past, the Prime Minister advocating genetically modified food now will not necessarily assuage current fears.

Mr. Rooker: I have heard about the gagging order only in the press. It is not a gagging order from the Government—indeed, I do not know whether it is a gagging order at all. As I have already said, as I rose to speak today the Rowett research institute was publishing an audit of the work together with comments on the audit, and asking the Royal Society in London and Edinburgh to conduct a review and inquiry.

The research in question has not been published. The Government are not stopping publication. We want the research to be published because we can be confident about the results only if the experiments are repeated by other scientists, as is the norm. No one will be more pleased than me when that happens.

Mrs. Anne Campbell (Cambridge): I assure my hon. Friend that I shall happily eat any genetically modified food that gets through the tough UK regulatory system. Does he agree that it is important to increase public confidence, in view of the hysteria in the press over the past few weeks? Is not the best way to do that to insist on rigorous labelling of foods? Does he find it extraordinary, as I do, that the Conservatives opposed the labelling of food when they were in government, yet they are now responsible for whipping up hysteria?

Mr. Rooker: I have spoken about the history of the issue. When we came to office, this country was following the American policy on GM crops, products and foods. We changed that.

Mr. Alan Clark (Kensington and Chelsea): The Minister generously said that he had no problem with the issue being debated on the Floor of the House. He may remember that the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) initiated a debate on it on Wednesday of the week before last. Presumably she has been sent out of the Chamber for being off-message. When he was answering that debate only two weeks ago, why did he not make the forthright statement that he made this afternoon, particularly the assurances about labelling? Is it not because my right hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) focused attention on the issue when he questioned the Prime Minister, who clearly knew nothing about it?

Has the Minister seen the Minister for the Cabinet Office giving assurances on television that no member of the Government has any financial interest in this process whatever? Would he think it prudent to advise him not to give such assurances on the Floor of the Chamber, in view of the various family trusts and blind trusts from which Lord Sainsbury benefits and which are closely connected to the supply of genetic food to supermarkets?

Mr. Rooker: The debate to which the right. hon. Gentleman refers took place on 3 February. I invite any hon. Member or observer of these proceedings to read columns 862-64 of Hansard—my ten-minute winding-up speech in that debate—and point to any issue that I have not mentioned today. In fact, I was tempted to repeat that speech word for word in answer to the PNQ today, but I thought that would take too long.

I respect profoundly the stand that the right hon. Gentleman has taken on many issues, but what he has said today is totally and utterly wrong. I have said nothing different today from what I said in answer to that debate. I have also had the opportunity to answer some parliamentary questions. I do not accept his attack on Lord Sainsbury; the facts do not bear it out.

Points of Order

4.6 pm

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. Through no fault of yours, we did not get to any question that related to the on-going bombing and humanitarian crisis in Iraq. It was no fault of yours that we did not reach Question 19. However, in view of this country possibly being, in effect, at war, should not there have been a statement as to exactly what the position is? Sooner or later, there will be a crisis of one form or another; possibly, heaven help us, a Tornado either malfunctioning or being shot down over Iraq, with consequences that are too awful to contemplate. Should not there be an opportunity for a report on the situation?

Madam Speaker: I regret very much that we were not able to reach Question 19 today; I had hoped that we could do so. As the hon. Gentleman says, that was the first question relating to Iraq, in which I know that he has an interest. I have not been informed that the Government are seeking to make any statement on the issue. No doubt those on the Government Front Bench will have heard the hon. Gentleman's point of order; he raised a similar one only yesterday. Perhaps they will make note of it, and report it to the appropriate Department.

Mr. Norman Baker (Lewes): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. The Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is still in the Chamber. Could he confirm that Dr. Pusztai sent copies of his documentation—

Madam Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order. I think that the hon. Gentleman is attempting to extend the PNQ. I know that he was trying to catch my eye; hard luck—try again some time.

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Mid-Sussex): Further to the point of order from the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), Madam Speaker. May I associate myself with his remarks? As it appears that RAF aircraft have been in action regularly recently, would it not be sensible for the Secretary of State for Defence to do what he did earlier and write to all hon. Members, given there is no time for a statement ahead of the recess to tell them exactly where we stand?

Madam Speaker: That is not a point of order, but a suggestion for the Secretary of State. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman might like to telephone the Secretary of State's office and put that point to him.

Age Limits on Health Care

4.8 pm

Dr. Vincent Cable (Twickenham): I beg to move,

That leave be given to bring in a Bill to amend the National Health Service (Primary Care) Act 1997 to prohibit the refusal or delay of treatment on the basis of age; and to establish an inquiry into the prevalence of age discrimination in the National Health Service.

I recognise that the Bill deals with a sensitive issue, and I propose it because I have been persuaded by organisations directly concerned with the aged—notably Age Concern, which has given me a great deal of help with the Bill—that there is a serious problem. That concern has been echoed by the Royal College of Nursing and the Chartered Institute of Physiotherapists, which also support the Bill.

The problem originates in the fact that we have an aging population, with a growing number of people over 65 using the NHS; they now account for 40 per cent.—and rising—of its budget. The NHS is, and always has been, constrained in its resources. There is growing fear, and evidence, that resources are being withdrawn from patients on the basis of age alone.

I stress that I present the Bill in a positive spirit. I am not here to point fingers or suggest that clinicians are behaving improperly, and I make no implied criticism of the Government or the previous Government. Indeed, the problem arises for positive reasons: because the NHS has been so successful in extending life, a growing number of people encounter the diseases of old age.

There has also been much advance over recent years in the treatment of the elderly in the NHS. I vividly recall one of my first jobs in the mid-1960s, working in the geriatric ward of a mental hospital. It was an horrific experience to see a large circle of old people, mainly ladies, sitting and looking at each other, inert, immobile and effectively waiting to die.

That contrasts with what happens today in the geriatric mental ward in St. John's in Twickenham and, I am sure, in many other places, where there are much better staff ratios and a much more professional and positive approach; it is a different universe. None the less, there is a serious problem, because there is a large gulf between the official policy on age in the NHS and what happens in practice.

The official position, as declared in the ethical statement of the General Medical Council, is that there should be no discrimination on age or any other grounds. That has been repeatedly echoed in the House. The former Prime Minister, the right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major), when asked about the problem in 1994, said that it was undoubtedly the policy that the NHS should in no way discriminate on grounds of age. I am sure that the present Prime Minister would say the same.

Unfortunately, there is evidence that a great deal of such discrimination occurs in practice. NHS trusts run cardiac rehabilitation programmes, helping people who have had heart attacks—the same applies to strokes—to become mobile and independent again. I use this example because there is not much research on age discrimination in the NHS, but three recent studies on those programmes have shown clearly that, in 40 per cent. of them, an age bar is explicitly applied. People over 65 or 70—in some cases, 60—are specifically precluded from benefiting because they are too old, and for no other reason.

[Dr. Vincent Cable]

That is not only discriminatory, it is perverse in medical terms. If those people are helped to become more mobile and independent, they are less of a burden on social services when they leave hospital and costs are reduced. We are not talking about high-tech medicine: the programmes are relatively cheap.

Another example of discrimination is more emotive: screening for breast cancer. A great deal of attention has been given to the matter in an attempt to make the screening more comprehensive, but it is still the case that women over 65 are not invited to be screened, despite the evidence that two thirds of the women who die from breast cancer are over 65, and all the medical evidence shows that they benefit just as much as younger women from early detection and treatment. The implicit assumption is that their lives are less worth while.

Another example is more widely recognised. For many years, it was extremely difficult for elderly people to get access to kidney dialysis treatment, although again the medical evidence is that they can benefit from it as much as younger people. The problem has become a little easier, but the most recent evidence that I have seen suggests that only about one in eight of the people recommended for kidney dialysis is able to get access to the treatment.

Alzheimer's disease is a growing problem. At present, about 700,000 people have it, and the total will be well over 1 million in a decade. A chilling statistic is that one in five of people who live through their 70s will contract Alzheimer's disease. The death last week of Iris Murdoch will have reminded people of what the disease does to even the finest brain: sufferers lose their faculties, memory and dignity.

Yet Alzheimer's disease can be stopped. Drugs have been developed that can cure at least half of all cases, but they are being made available in only a relatively limited number of NHS trusts. The reason is primarily one of cost, although that again is a false economy: the £1,000 that a course of the relevant drugs costs is small compared with what people who are allowed to degenerate because of the disease cost their carers in the community.

To round off this list of anecdotes—to which I am sure that all hon. Members could add from their own experience—I shall offer an example that may be more trivial but that illustrates the mentality underlying the problem. Not long after taking office, the Government introduced a consultation paper called "Our Healthier Nation". It was quite enlightened, and was concerned with promoting fitness as a way to prevent ill health. However, it contained no reference to fitness targets for people over 65, and I asked a series of questions to find out why. The answers from Ministers revealed a complete lack of comprehension about why people over 65 might want to keep fit. It was assumed that such people were sedentary and that fitness was of no interest to them.

There are two elements to the underlying problem. The first has to do with economics—and rather bad economics at that. Health service trusts and clinicians, being strapped for cash, assume that one way to save cash is to withdraw treatment—especially expensive treatment—from elderly patients. In many cases, that is a false economy, as the costs then fall on carers and local social services departments.

However, the second element of the problem goes beyond economics and might be called a question of ideology, although it does not involve the ideology of left and right. It is the belief that most people share—I do not think that we are especially enlightened in this respect—that we are all entitled to a lifespan of three score years and ten. The belief probably derives from religion.

When my father died, 10 years ago, he had been prematurely evicted from hospital, and I am sure that that is why he died. It caused him to lose several years of doing what he loved most, which happened to be helping the Conservative party. I was angry about my father's premature death, but he was philosophical, saying that he had lived for 70 years and saw no reason to create a fuss. However, I think that he was wrong. Nothing binds us to Old Testament arithmetic: people now can—and should—live much longer. The question is whether they should live longer as fit and well people.

I have introduced the Bill to preclude discrimination in the NHS on grounds of age, to stimulate debate and to promote research on the subject.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill ordered to be brought in by Dr. Vincent Cable, Mr. David Atkinson, Mr. Paul Burstow, Dr. Peter Brand, Dr. Evan Harris, Mr. Simon Hughes, Mr. Tim Loughton, Mr. Edward O'Hara, Ms Linda Perham, Mr. Andrew Rowe, Mr. David Winnick and Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones.

AGE LIMITS ON HEALTH CARE

Dr. Vincent Cable accordingly presented a Bill to amend the National Health Service (Primary Care) Act 1997 to prohibit the refusal or delay of treatment on the basis of age; and to establish an inquiry into the prevalence of age discrimination in the National Health Service: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time on Friday 28 March, and to be printed [Bill 48].

Orders of the Day

House of Lords Bill

Considered in Committee [Progress, 15 February].

[MR. MICHAEL LORD in the Chair]

Clause 1

EXCLUSION OF HEREDITARY PEERS

Amendment proposed [15 February]: No. 2, in page 1, line 6, at the end to add the words

'except that—

(a) 75 hereditary peers shall be elected as members of the House of Lords in accordance with subsection (2)

(b) 14 hereditary peers shall be elected as members of the House of Lords in accordance with subsection (3)

(c) the Lord Great Chamberlain and the Earl Marshal shall be members of the House of Lords.

(2) The electors for the purposes of subsection (1)(a) shall be the holders of a hereditary peerage.

(3) The electors for the purposes of subsection (1)(b) shall be the members of the House of Lords.

(4) The Secretary of State may by order make such provision about the conduct of the elections under this section as he considers appropriate.

(5) No order under this section shall be made unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing it has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, each House of Parliament.'—[Mrs. Laing.]

4.21 pm

Question again proposed, That the amendment be made.

The Second Deputy Chairman of Ways and Means (Mr. Michael Lord): I remind the Committee that, with this, we are discussing the following amendments: No. 3, in page 1, line 6, at end add

', unless he or she is the first holder of a hereditary peerage.'

No. 25, in page 1, line 6, at end insert

'and any transitional arrangement enabling certain hereditary peers to continue their membership of that House shall cease to have effect on the expiry of the period of twelve months from the date of publication of the final report of the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament announced in Command Paper No. 4183'.

No. 16, in clause 4, page 1, line 14, leave out from 'force' to end of line and insert

'on a date not less than six months after the passing of this Act nominated by the Secretary of State'.

No. 17, in page 1, line 16, leave out 'Session' and insert 'date'.

No. 18, in page 1, line 16, at end insert—

'(2A) Prior to nominating a date for the coming into force of this Act the Secretary of State shall make inquiry and lay a report before both Houses of Parliament, setting out the names of all current hereditary peers who have played a significant role in the workings of the House of Lords during the ten years preceding the passing of this Act; and such hereditary peers shall be entitled to remain members of the House of Lords, pending the enactment of proposals for the wider reform of the House of Lords following the report of the Royal Commission and public consultation concerning its proposals.'.

New clause 12—PEERAGE OF SCOTLAND—

'(1) Nothing in this Act shall be taken to prevent sixteen peers from the peerage of Scotland from voting in the House of Lords.'.

No. 19, in title, line 1, leave out 'End' and insert 'Restrict'.

Mr. Desmond Swayne (New Forest, West): It would be folly to repeat the arguments made so eloquently, forcefully and passionately yesterday by my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing), but I wish to reflect on some of the points that arose from her speech. She claimed no originality for amendment No. 2. Indeed, Labour Members suggested that it was in fact the Weatherill amendment.

Whatever its genesis may have been, the amendment has become the Alastair Campbell amendment, for it is quite clearly the amendment that the Government suggest, in chapter 5 of the White Paper, that they would be minded to accept. It is extraordinary that an amendment should be owned, in a sense, by a member of the Executive who has no place in either part of the legislature, but that is a measure of the pass to which we have come, and for which the Bill should be something of a remedy.

There appears to be a contradiction in the motives behind the amendment, for which, incidentally, I have no great enthusiasm. I accept my hon. Friend's point that the amendment will make a bad Bill marginally better. However, I believe that the Government intend the Bill to last for a long time, and I am keen to see the amendment carried only so that the settlement that arises from the Bill may be marginally better than it would otherwise be.

Last night, the Committee heard several Labour Members complaining that the opposite was the case, and that the arrangements that we are debating are for a transitional period. To me, the important transitional arrangement will be that made between this afternoon, when Labour Members vote against the amendment, and the day on which the same Members will vote for it when returns as a Lords amendment. They may comfort themselves with the thought that these are just transitional arrangements.

Mr. Nick Hawkins (Surrey Heath): I share my hon. Friend's concern about that transition, but he could go further. Given that the amendment is in fact the Alastair Campbell amendment, is it not interesting that the Government Whips will force Labour Members—most of them, at any rate—to vote against the amendment today but for it when it returns? That shows both the extent to which Parliament is being bypassed and to which Labour Members are simply Lobby fodder.

Mr. Swayne: That is true. Labour Members, who hope merely for a transitional stage, are trusting a great deal to the Executive. In effect, they are writing a blank cheque. I have no doubt that the arrangements that are being put in place are made to last rather than to be transitory.

The Government have said that there is urgency about proceedings on the Bill. Surely, if there were any urgency, the royal commission would have been set up 20 months ago and we would now be discussing its findings and putting in place the stage 2 reforms. The very fact that that is not the case leads me to suspect that the arrangements are built to last. Curiously, I support the amendment for that reason—so that the arrangements that are put in place, which I fear will last, are better than they would otherwise have been had the Bill been unamended.

[Mr. Swayne]

Labour Members will finally vote for the amendment, when it comes back from the other place, for precisely the opposite motive. They will be voting for it in the hope that the arrangements will be transitory. It is curious that both sides of the House will at some stage end up voting for the provisions of the amendment for different motives.

I hope that Labour Members will be proved correct and that the arrangements will be transitory. In many ways, I have little enthusiasm for the amendment, although it bears my name among others. It would improve the situation, but the state of affairs is far from satisfactory. What is least satisfactory about it is that Back-Bench Conservative Members have tabled the amendment; it should have been the Government. In a sense, we have provided a service to the House by allowing it the benefit of line-by-line scrutiny of the amendment in Committee. Otherwise, the Bill would have ended up in much the same state as it is in now. I regard that as regrettable indeed.

Mr. Peter Mandelson (Hartlepool): As debate on the amendment has continued, it has become increasingly clear that the Opposition are trying to flog a very dead horse and are doing so at inordinate length. That serves as a good example and a good taste of what the Government would have faced in the House of Lords had they not done precisely what they are doing, which is to create an arrangement whereby they can fulfil two objectives.

Those objectives are simple and straightforward: the first is to secure the passage of the Bill as expeditiously as we can; the second is to do so in such a way as to protect the rest of the Government's programme. The Government and, in particular, my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, carry that dual responsibility. In the debate yesterday, the attacks of the right hon. Member for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor) on my right hon. Friend, tearing into her and accusing her of astonishing and intolerable hypocrisy, smacked of enormous humbug. She is doing precisely what he would have done had he been in her position, given that he would bear exactly the same responsibility, which is to ensure the passage of this Bill as well as to protect the rest of the Government's programme. The facts of political life are that, if we are not careful, we may achieve only objective 1 at the expense of objective 2, unless we can obtain the good will of the other place.

4.30 pm

The reason why we have to go to some length to secure the good will of the other place in the passage of the legislation goes to the heart of one of the reasons why the Bill has been introduced in the first place, which is that, as we all know, the Conservative party has an in-built 3:1 majority against us in the other place. No matter what we do, no matter what we introduce and no matter how valid and well-drafted the legislation, if the Conservative party wants to, it can wheel out its battalions and stop the Labour Government carrying out their will, fulfilling their mandate and implementing their manifesto. It is to meet that potential obstruction that we have to take the measures that we are taking.

Dr. Liam Fox (Woodspring): Will the right hon. Gentleman tell us what proportion of peers in the other place take the Conservative Whip? How many, as a proportion of the other House as a whole, do so?

Mr. Mandelson: We hear constant rehearsal of that facetious and ridiculous point. If the Conservative Front Benchers are the only people in this country who do not understand and recognise that, one after another and time after time, so-called independent peers hear the arguments independently, weigh up those arguments independently, arrive at their views and their judgments independently and then vote Conservative independently, they must be the only people who are in such a state of self-delusion.

Dr. Fox: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Mandelson: No—the hon. Gentleman made his point, but failed to do so satisfactorily.

It is precisely for that reason that Lord Cranborne and Lord Strathclyde decided that to give hereditary peers and their allies such an opportunity to frustrate the democratic will and the Government's mandate and manifesto would be an unacceptable use of unaccountable power by those Members of the other place. They recognised that the Government had a mandate and so, in a spirit of compromise on their part, they secured a small, temporary return as the price for our and their good will. That is a perfectly straightforward matter.

That is why I have no compunction and no hesitation about saying that I, along with the bulk of my right hon. and hon. Friends, will both vote against the amendment as it is proposed today and vote in favour of it on a future occasion, if it is offered to us to do so. That amendment in the other place will have been agreed as the price of the good will and the spirit of compromise that joins both Labour Members and those Conservatives who are democrats, who want it to be clearly demonstrated to the public that, when the Government have a mandate to implement a commitment in the manifesto on which they have been elected, they will be given the means and the power to do so.

Sir Patrick Cormack (South Staffordshire): I have not heard such unadulterated humbug for a long time. Why cannot the right hon. Gentleman secure that good will by voting for the amendment tonight? Surely those in the other place who want the amendment to be made will be happy if we do it for them.

Mr. Mandelson: Let me put it bluntly: the price of accepting the amendment will be the peers' good will and their commitment to ensuring the passage of the Bill through the other place without it being strung out, impeded, frustrated and filibustered in the way that some Conservative Members, as their behaviour demonstrates, appear determined to do in this place. We are simply not going to give them the opportunity to do that, and we deny them that opportunity in agreement with, and with the good will and commitment of, many members of the other place who take the Conservative Whip and who do not want to be seen to behave in as undemocratic a manner as some Conservative Members of this place appear determined to behave.

Sir Patrick Cormack: Will the right hon. Gentleman define, for the benefit of the Committee, consistency and blackmail?

Mr. Mandelson: If I thought it remotely relevant to my argument, I would do so. I recall the right hon. Member for South Norfolk yesterday accusing my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House of bully-girl tactics. Save for the change of gender, the hon. Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) would have to take exactly the same precaution as that taken by my right hon. Friend if he were faced, in the other place, with that built-in 3:1 majority against his party and its manifesto, which some Opposition Members would clearly like the Lords to deploy if they have the opportunity.

Mr. James Clappison (Hertsmere): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Mandelson: No, I see no point in stringing out this argument any longer.

Of course we want to secure the Bill's passage and protect the rest of our legislation, which contains important measures concerning the fight against crime, the improvement of the health service, raising educational standards and industrial policies. Those myriad measures are absolutely essential for improving and transforming our society and economy. It is the duty of Labour Members to ensure that all those measures pass through both Houses of Parliament. It is precisely in order to do so that we are prepared to take the amendment at face value if it is moved and made in the other place and to agree to it in this House as the temporary and small price of securing good will for the passage of the rest of our legislation.

Mr. Tony McWalter (Hemel Hempstead): Will my right hon. Friend confirm that, if we were to make the amendment today, their lordships might find other ways of trying to rescue another 91 of their Members, as well as employing all the procedural devices that he has outlined?

Mr. Mandelson: My hon. Friend touches on an important point, which makes it all the more important for us, in rejecting the amendment today, to give those in the other place, if they wish to make the amendment, the added incentive to allow us to protect the rest of our programme. I am sure that, as democrats, they will be happy to do so.

Mrs. Eleanor Laing (Epping Forest): Will the right hon. Gentleman confirm that he and his colleagues are creating a significant precedent in sacrificing the democratic rights of this House to discuss a measure that is an important part of a Bill in order effectively to blackmail the other House?

Mr. Mandelson: I do not know how we are jeopardising anyone's democratic rights, given that the amendment has been moved and we have been discussing it at inordinate and ridiculous length. We shall then exercise our democratic right—at least on this side of the Committee—to vote against it. We shall then give Members of the other place the chance to exercise their democratic right to consider the amendment if they wish to table it and vote for or against it. If they vote for it, we shall then be able to exercise our further democratic right to vote for or against it when it returns to this place. That is called democracy: exercising one's right to vote. We are doing that in a way that will ensure the Bill's safe passage as well as the protection of our programme, which consists of important measures that, at the last general election, we were elected to implement.

Mr. Clappison: I welcome the opportunity to make a brief contribution to the debate, which was opened by my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) with an excellent, powerful, well argued speech.

I listened with interest to the arguments made by the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson); I appreciate the fact that he wanted to express to the Committee his views on this matter. I am slightly disappointed, however, that he did not say anything newer and more interesting than the authorised version that he presented to us. With his knowledge of such matters, it would have been interesting—I would have said this in an intervention if the right hon. Gentleman had been prepared to give way—to hear how long he considers that the transitional phase will last, and what he would like to happen at the end of it.

It was interesting to compare the speech by the right hon. Member for Hartlepool with the almost identical speech by the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan). I must say to both right hon. Gentlemen—especially the former—that I disagree with their view of the role of the Committee of this House in all these matters. Why on earth cannot we debate this amendment now? [HON. MEMBERS: "We are."] That is only because the amendment was moved by my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest. If the Government had had their way, we would have had no opportunity to debate the matter.

Mr. Mandelson: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Clappison: I give way to the right hon. Gentleman, although he did not do me the courtesy of giving way.

Mr. Mandelson: What does the hon. Gentleman think we are doing if we are not debating this now? Moreover, if this debate is so fundamental to the passage of the legislation, will he please explain why it has not been initiated by Conservative Front-Bench spokesmen?

Mr. Clappison: In her opening speech, my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest clarified the position on that. She moved the amendment, and both the right hon. Member for Hartlepool and the Liberal Democrats have tried, in effect, to bypass the Committee and say that it was very wrong of us to debate the matter now.

The President of the Council has been very coy, talking about

"a proposal that may be put in another place".—[Official Report, 15 February 1999; Vol. 325, c. 685.]

[Mr. Clappison]

It is hardly a state secret that something like that will happen. It is hardly hanging in the balance, with everything to play for. The Government's White Paper states that such an amendment may well be tabled in the other place. There has been speculation on the subject in all the newspapers and throughout the media. That being the case, why cannot we have a debate now, in the Committee of this House, before the matter is debated in another place? The right hon. Member for Hartlepool accuses us of filibustering when hardly a word has been said.

The Government have adopted a curious position on this subject. In yesterday's debate, we were repeatedly met by what I regard as counsels of perfection from Labour Members, with continual attacks on the hereditary principle, the number of Conservative peers and of Conservative hereditary peers. We have covered the background to this issue; we have discussed custard pie manufacturers, turkey breeders and people who did favours for Charles II.

I understand the arguments that Labour Members are making, but I believe that the problem in the amendment—for them and for the Government—lies in the way in which the Government are approaching the matter. On Second Reading, the President of the Council launched an all-out assault on the hereditary principle. She did so with some relish—I understand that she may have personal views on the matter—but it must be strange for members of the Government to understand that, after all that, we have reached a position where the Government may be minded to accept an amendment in future that will allow for a significant number of hereditary peers in the House of Lords: up to 91 of them.

On Second Reading, the President of the Council appeared to set things out as a matter of principle, when she said:

> "if one went to the airport and was told that the pilot did not himself have a pilot's licence, but that there was no need to worry because his grandfather had a licence, one simply would not get on the plane." —[Official Report, 1 February 1999; Vol. 324, c. 611.]

What the right hon. Lady and the Government are now saying is that if one goes to the airport, one will meet someone who will say, "I cannot fly the plane, but the grandfather of that chap over there is a pilot, so he can come in and fly the plane." That is the point. Let us face it, every single one of those 91 peers is—

Mr. Andrew Stunell (Hazel Grove): Does the hon. Gentleman not understand that, in politics, one puts forward one's preferred option but may give notice that, in future, one might accept a second-best option? Is that not what Conservative Members are doing by moving this amendment, which they themselves say that they think is second best to maintaining the status quo? Is not that exactly what the Government and the Liberal Democrats are doing by signalling that this might be an acceptable amendment in future?

Mr. Clappison: The problem that Liberal Democrats and Ministers must face is that, in all this, the Government have argued, "This is the first-best solution." The hon. Gentleman will have to answer the question, for how long will the proposed arrangement continue?

My hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest did the House a service by bringing before the House the subject of the election in the House of Lords. How strange that election—an election of hereditary peers—will be!

4.45 pm

It is the only election that will occur because the other peers will be appointed. At the end of the day, we face the prospect that a substantial number of hereditary peers will remain in the House of Lords. Labour Members must face that fact. It may be, as the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) said, that those peers will receive the Prime Minister's blessing. However, they will not be genetically modified: they will remain hereditary peers.

In her speech on Second Reading, the President of the Council referred to the Earl of Dunmore, who travelled from Australia to take his seat in the House of Lords. The Government are saying to the Earl of Dunmore and to all other foreign residents of his ilk, "Sorry, chaps, you cannot come and sit and vote in the House of Lords any longer. But we will let you come along and choose other hereditary peers who can sit and vote in the House of Lords". I am looking forward to seeing how the procedure will work—particularly how the 62 hereditary peers resident overseas will choose other hereditary peers to sit in the House of Lords. That will be very interesting.

Perhaps there will be some sort of "Blind Date in Ermine". There might be a "Lonely Peers" column in the House of Lords, which could read, "Foreign peer with villa in Tuscany seeks British peer with shooting in Scotland". That is what we could be reduced to. That is the sort of selection process that we face, and my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest has done the Committee a service by highlighting it. Who is to say how long this state of affairs will continue? It may be that the earls, viscounts, marquesses and dukes will sit in the House of Lords for a considerable time.

I read with interest the Government's account of the history of this matter this century. There have been three attempts to solve the problem of the House of Lords. In 1917—the first of three occasions when reform was debated—the Bryce committee produced far more detailed proposals that went much further than the present proposal. The Government say bluntly in their White Paper that, after the proposals were formulated:

> "No time was found during the 1920s to put them before Parliament."

Hon. Members must ask how long this proposed arrangement will last. As long as it does, I venture to suggest that we will have a tame and unsatisfactory second Chamber—it will certainly not be capable of robust scrutiny of the Government. The second Chamber will comprise a substantial number of additional Government appointees, hereditary peers and what are described as "independent" peers. We know that they will be independent because they will be appointed by the Appointments Commission—a Government body—which will tell us that they are independent peers.

We will have a tame second Chamber when we need a robust one, but I am sure that that is an entirely unintended consequence of reform. We know how much this Government—more than any other—welcome robust scrutiny of their activities. This Government look forward to challenging and vigorous debate and scrutiny.

so a tame second Chamber is an entirely unforeseen consequence. I suppose that it is also wholly unintended that the Government's proposals include a formula that will provide for a vast increase in Prime Ministerial patronage. The Prime Minister has already created 105 life peers and he will also appoint the Appointments Commission. Under the reform, the formula for appointing peers will allow the Prime Minister to create enough peers to achieve parity with Conservative party peers. That means creating enough additional peers not only to overcome the small deficiency—

The Second Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) is straying into the next group of amendments. I would be grateful if he would return to the amendments currently before the Committee.

Mr. Clappison: I shall certainly follow your strictures, Mr. Lord. The Government must face the fact that they will exercise patronage by creating Labour peers to compensate for the 91 hereditary peers who will also be appointed to the second Chamber.

In conclusion, I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest has done the Committee a great service: this reform is not rooted in principle, it is not built to last, and it does not do what it purports to do. It may therefore meet every requirement of a new Labour reform, but it is not good for our constitution as it would produce a thoroughly unsatisfactory second Chamber. My hon. Friend makes a powerful case in her amendment.

Dr. George Turner (North-West Norfolk): A fellow Norfolk Member, the right hon. Member for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor), seemed puzzled that Labour Back Benchers might be happy to vote against the amendment today, but might be willing further to consider the position later.

In the many years before I came to the House, I learned not to trust the Conservative party. My goodness, I and other Back Benchers have found good reason not to trust the Conservative supporters in the House of Lords since we have been here. I shall be happy if the Bill comes back from the Lords essentially in its present form, and we bring about the abolition of the hereditary principle in the second Chamber. I am sure many other Back Benchers share that view.

If there is still mischief in the Lords, it is important that, through the Parliament Act, we can ensure that the Bill is enforced and we achieve our objective. That is why I shall be happy to vote against the amendments, and why I would be happiest if the Bill remained in its present form. For decades the hereditary principle in the House of Lords has been recognised as unsupportable, so we need waste little time discussing its abolition.

I listened with care to the speeches of right hon. and hon. Members who have been here much longer than I, especially the remarks of my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), who pointed out the future dangers if we vote against the amendment now, but are in principle willing to accept it.

The Committee deserves to know why we would be willing to support a Government compromise. The answer is, bluntly, not for the sake of compromise, or because that is what we want, but because we ask ourselves what the alternative is. Most of us came here to deliver the manifesto on which we were elected. Having seen the extent to which, in the first 18 months, the other place succeeded in thwarting the Government's intent and in delaying Government Bills, I wonder what would have happened in the Government's last 18 months if we had gone on in the same way. Undoubtedly, the closer to the election of 1997, the greater the Government's mandate and the stronger the authority for this place to impose its will on the other place.

I am confident that if we had not addressed the issue now and with firmness, the Conservative party, through its unelected, unrepresentative majority in the House of Lords, would have thwarted the Government's intent to deliver on their manifesto. If we had not taken a firm stance in this Session, there would have been further shenanigans, delays and filibustering in the other place.

I say to my right hon. and hon. Friends on the Front Bench that if they have to compromise in another place, we shall support them from the Back Benches because we want the Government to make progress on the more important matters—education, health, the reform of local government and so on. Those are the matters that affect my constituents and on which progress will be thwarted if we do not act firmly on an issue that figures little in my constituency mailbag, because my constituents do not have to deal with the problems that we encounter day in, day out in the House.

On behalf of my constituents, therefore, I shall vote against the amendment. I hope that the Bill will return without a similar amendment, but if that will allow us to get on with the more important business, I shall understand if my colleagues on the Front Bench are willing to compromise. Let us make sure that we get a good deal, and that those in the other place display an attitude of collaboration and co-operation in the best interests of the British people, not in the best interests of the British Conservative party.

Mr. Mike Hancock (Portsmouth, South): I should like to offer Conservative Front Benchers an opportunity to clear up one or two things. In common with the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), I thought that the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) spoke with a lot of passion, but I cannot share his assumption that her speech had a certain charm and that the merits of her arguments had a certain compulsion. Those qualities certainly were not present, and sadly lacking was an explanation of why the amendment had been tabled by Conservative Back Benchers, not Front Benchers.

I should willingly give way to a Conservative Front Bencher who would explain to me, to the Committee and to the country whether those on that Front Bench will support the amendment. If they are to support it, why was Cranborne sacked? Surely this is all about trying to put together a political arrangement, using tactics, to make a measure work.

Dr. Fox: I will happily put the Committee out of its misery, faced with this particularly puerile line of questioning. Conservative Front Benchers will support the amendment, and Lord Cranborne was not sacked because of anything to do with the substance of the agreement, but for trying to negotiate away the Opposition's ability to oppose the Government in the other place.

Mr. Hancock: That is an interesting spin to put on it; as a turn of phrase on a set of circumstances, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) would have been hard pressed to better that one. How right the right hon. Gentleman was to spell out the issues, and I share entirely many of his sentiments about the way in which this matter has been handled. Conservative Members seem to have a fixation that we have not had a chance to debate it, but that is absolute nonsense. About a dozen hon. Members have already participated in the debate on the amendment.

[Mr. Hancock]

Conservative Members have talked about the lack of democracy and the lack of consultation, and what they would have done. The right hon. Member for Hartlepool was right to draw the comparison between what is being done now and what would have happened in the past, but he missed the subtle difference. I remember what happened in the past, when another major constitutional change—the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan counties—was made. That change was not only put through the House in similar fashion to this measure, but there was a guillotine—not only in the Chamber, but in Committee, night after night. The results of consultation were not listened to.

Yesterday I heard gasps of, "Humbug, humbug, humbug", about what was going on, but Conservative Members have short memories about what they were up to in their previous existence in government. They certainly never listened too hard to the various consultation exercises that took place about the three reorganisations of local government that I have experienced in a 30-year career in local government. They never listened once to the people of Hampshire, or to the people of London, when they campaigned on the reorganisation of local government. Why on earth should they be listened to now?

It is heartening for hon. Members such as myself, who won Conservative seats, to see how many Conservative Members are going to the wire to defend the hereditary system in the House of Lords.

Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley): Does the hon. Gentleman not think that it is sad, particularly for his constituents, that he has given up his role in opposition and become part of the Government coalition? Is it not about time that he started opposing the Government, not backing them at every turn?

Mr. Hancock: The hon. Gentleman makes a good point, and I am grateful for the lead, because I am with the right hon. Member for Chesterfield. I hope that we reject the amendment—not only tonight, but when it comes back to the House, because I am in favour of the big bang philosophy. I want the serious constitutional imagination suggested by the hon. Member for Cannock Chase (Dr. Wright) to be adopted, and, as a starting point, I want that to start and finish with a democratically elected second Chamber. I do not want compromise, I do not want fudge; I want the system to be changed, which is why I will vote against the amendment.

Mr. Dominic Grieve (Beaconsfield): Does the hon. Gentleman not agree that the only reason that we are even discussing phase 2 of the reform is that the Government have been put under pressure not to introduce a simple Bill to remove the hereditary peers and nothing else to reform the upper House?

Mr. Hancock: No, not at all; that is not the reason. The hon. Gentleman has missed the point of what has been going on for the past 18 months. We are using a political tactic to get a Bill through the House without sacrificing a whole raft of legislation, and much needed changes to legislation, which the nation needs.

Conservative Member after Conservative Member said yesterday that the measure is not a high priority for the people of this country. How right they are. However, it is a high priority of the House to establish a democratically elected second Chamber.

5 pm

The Government have had to balance the necessity to get much needed legislation through Parliament to achieve improvements in education, health, social services and in many other areas with the need to avoid it being wrecked by an unelected, undemocratic other Chamber. The Conservative Opposition could not have failed to grasp that point. To do that, the Government have had to come up with a political compromise. I do not like it, and I am sure that few people in the Committee do.

It is interesting that a succession of Conservative Members have tried to support the hereditary system. The gay cavalier from Aldershot acknowledged the fact that he was right behind them; I can imagine him leading the charge to bring back hereditary peers. Sadly, the hon. Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth) is not present to continue his campaign.

Some Conservative Members, however, said that they did not like the current system, but that they wanted to get a few more hereditary peers kept on the books. I was somewhat confused about the spin they put on it. They wanted us to remember those people who do good work, all of whom we have met at some time or another. We meet them in parliamentary Committees and at outside organisations, and we know of the work they do. No one is under-selling the case that much good work is done by many good people who will no longer be Members of Parliament. The same could apply to this place. Yesterday, we argued against the idea of people being allowed to speak but not to vote. Hon. Members immediately reacted against the suggestion that that should apply in this place. It was nonsense, and it exposed the nonsense of trying to do the same in the other place.

The price of change is that some people will lose out. Any democratic process will encounter that problem, and people will be disappointed by the results at the ballot box. We have waited for the Government of this country to be decided universally by the ballot box for both Chambers.

I assume that if the people whom I represent were asked, they would not place this measure high on their list of priorities, but most of them would place it on a list of things that need to be done. The Conservative Opposition are fixated on the length of time that this process of reform will last. It was suggested that it could take several Parliaments or even decades. My hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis) asked what was meant by "decades"? If taken to its ultimate conclusion, it could mean another millennium.

I do not know what evidence there is for hon. Members to hold that view. It is a terror tactic. That has been a familiar trait of the Conservative party in local government, and Lady Thatcher exposed the nation to such tactics when she gave the worst case scenario. She could then, with a defter and softer touch, say, "What a good job we've done. We told you that it could be that bad, but we have delivered this." It is a simple tactic used by the Conservatives to stir up the fear that the proposed reformed second Chamber will remain for generations to come. I do not believe that to be case. It is not in the Government's interest to allow us to wallow in that pitiful situation.

I want us to make progress and to reject this amendment and the others. What we really want is imaginative constitutional reform delivered to the people of this country with a deftness of touch, in the shortest possible time. If we do that, we will all be thanked by not only the present generation, but future generations.

Mr. Martin Linton (Battersea): I object to the survival of any hereditary peers, even in this transitional second Chamber. It is not personal: I am not against any of the present incumbents. It is a pure point of principle. Many Conservative Members seem to have trouble coming to terms with that. I have counted the number of hon. Members who say that they are in favour of the hereditary principle and those who say they are against it. The hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) said that she was against it, but it is clear that the amendment hides a deep division among Opposition Members.

I would accept the amendment only in exchange for a clear and tangible benefit. The hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) did not seem to understand why the White Paper had said that the Government might accept it in the House of Lords, but not in the House of Commons. The White Paper spells that out very clearly: moving the amendment in the House of Lords would enable the first stage of the legislation to be agreed "without any threat of deliberate frustration of the programme of a government".

It is not that any Labour Member wants hereditary peerages as such to continue, but the Opposition are in no position to negotiate. They have no power or strength with which to negotiate. They have nothing to offer: they are not in the poker game. They therefore look rather wistfully to their party colleagues in the other place, who are in a stronger position. The Government have a majority in the House of Commons, but no majority in the House of Lords. Between them, the Conservative peers and the Cross Benchers have 80 per cent. of the votes, while the Labour party has 3 per cent. That is a fairly crushing majority. In the circumstances, it is understandable that the Government in the House of Lords will pay a good deal of attention to what Cross Benchers propose, and to the conditions on which they make their offer.

I shall not detain the Committee for long, but I want to make a point that I have made before. I cannot question the credentials of the 75 Members of the House of Lords who may be elected by the hereditary peers, because we do not yet know who they are, and the same applies to the other 14. The only two who are mentioned specifically in the amendment are the Lord Great Chamberlain—I must confess that I do not know who he is; I should be glad to be informed, but I think that it is a post rather an hereditary title—and the Earl Marshal. His, I know, is an hereditary post. If the amendment were passed, it would be the only hereditary post left in Parliament: the other postholders would be elected by hereditary peers, or by the entire House of Lords. The Earl Marshal's post belongs, by heredity, to the family of the Dukes of Norfolk.

Mr. Andrew Mackinlay (Thurrock): How does my hon. Friend know that they are legitimate, anyway?

Mr. Linton: I shall come to that.

There are many things for which people have been rewarded with a seat in the House of Lords. I have mentioned one or two of them before. There have been the founders of political parties, the custard powder manufacturers, the family who paid off George IV's gambling debts, the family who married William IV's illegitimate daughters, the Bovril tycoon whose great-grandson still sits in the House of Lords, and—as my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) mentioned—the four descendants of the love children of Charles II.

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe and Nantwich): I hope that my hon. Friend will not continue with his list for much longer. He is making the House of Lords sound much more interesting than the House of Commons.

Mr. Linton: Indeed, it covers a multitude of sins, but I have no intention of going through the entire list of peers, lest—as my hon. Friend suggests—I make the House of Lords sound like something worth retaining.

Mr. Stunell: I wonder whether the hon. Gentleman could tell the Committee exactly how many of those hereditary peers are women?

Mr. Linton: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his intervention. I think that the figure is 18. Those 18 have been able to take their seats in the House of Lords only since the Life Peerages Act 1958, or perhaps it was the Peerage Act 1963. Only a few years ago, there was a move to allow the eldest daughter of peers to succeed to titles, which would have transformed the position and brought much greater female representation into the Lords, but it was defeated by their lordships.

Mr. Peter Bradley (The Wrekin): Just for the record, I should like to say that my hon. Friend has vastly inflated the number of women hereditary peers. The number is not 18; it is 16.

Mr. Linton: I beg their lordships' pardon. I underestimated just how out of date and out of this century they are. However, I want to discuss the credentials of the one hereditary peer who, under the amendment, would remain in the House of Lords, as of right, by heredity: the Duke of Norfolk. As all those other people were rewarded for giving money to political parties or to kings, or for marrying their love children, it seems particularly inappropriate that one should pick out of the entire peerage the Duke of Norfolk as his ancestors were rewarded and put in the House of Lords for regicide.

[Mr Linton]

That is to say, the original John Howard was the constable of the tower of London in 1483 when two of his most eminent prisoners.

Mr. Grieve: The hon. Gentleman should not try to give the Committee a totally bogus history lesson. The Dukes of Norfolk were around as peers of the realm a long time before 1483. Indeed, the probable reason why they hold hereditary office is that they have been around almost as long the current monarchy itself. The hon. Gentleman should not make bogus points.

Mr. Linton: Far from it.

The First Deputy Chairman of Ways and Means (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. I find the history lesson very interesting, but the hon. Gentleman must keep to the amendments that are before us.

Mr. Linton: Thank you, Mr. Martin. I refer to the Duke of Norfolk only because he is specifically mentioned in the amendment as someone who should be picked for an hereditary post. The hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Grieve) is wrong, because not only was that person Richard III's right-hand man in the literal sense—he sat at his right hand at his coronation—but, three days later, he was made the Duke of Norfolk and the Earl Marshal.

A few years ago, I happened to read a small article in a local newspaper in Horsham; the single-paragraph story caught my eye. The Duke of Norfolk, or rather the heir to the Duke of Norfolk, had met a group of sixth formers to discuss the House of Lords. The paper reported that he had told them that his family ascribed their membership of the House of Lords to the fact that their ancestor had killed the princes in the Bloody tower. It may be that the Horsham weekly paper misreported him, or that he was not aware of the fact that there was a reporter in the audience, but many historians will confirm that version of events. In most historians' view, it is more than likely that that is the origin of the Norfolk title.

No Labour Member wishes the hereditary principle to survive in that form for its own sake. We will support it only if the great majority that the Conservatives and Cross Benchers have in the House of Lords forces us into a position whereby the arrangement is the only way in which to ensure the smooth passage of the legislation.

Dr. Fox: I realise that many hon. Members are waiting to speak, so I will be as brief as possible.

I welcome the chance to discuss the amendment, and congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) on introducing it in such a remarkably spirited fashion. We are being treated to the most perverse part of the entire debate. The Government claim democratic legitimacy for introducing the Bill because the measure was in their manifesto; I do not think that any democratically elected Member would dispute any Government's right to introduce a measure that was in their manifesto. But, at the same time, they say that they will accept in another place something that is the opposite of the policy in their manifesto—they will keep a number of hereditary peers in the House of Lords. Only a Government with the moral double-speak of the current one could possibly contemplate maintaining such a position without blushing, yet the Leader of the House is quite cavalier about doing so.

5.15 pm

Another nonsense is that, had my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest not tabled and moved amendment No. 2, the Government intended that the issue should be debated only in the other place. As I told the Leader of the House yesterday, the Government planned that there should be no debate on the issue in the Chamber that the Government claim has democratic legitimacy, but it would be debated and decided in the Chamber that they claim has no democratic legitimacy.

Although the Government's position is deeply perverse, a much worse fact is that the House is being treated with contempt. Today Labour Members will be asked to vote against amendment No. 2. However, when the Bill returns to the House from the other place, Labour Members will be asked to vote for the same provision. If Members in another place are good boys and girls, they will be blessed by his holiness the Prime Minister and their wishes will be granted, at least in the short term. For the Prime Minister, there seems to be only a fine line between divine and divine right.

We have had long Parliaments and short ones, but now we have a eunuch Parliament, in which votes mean nothing in themselves. There will no intrinsic merit in the votes cast by Labour Back Benchers—who are here only for the convenience of the Executive, casting their votes as the Executive wants. If Labour Members have to do intellectual and moral somersaults to reconcile conflicts, they will be expected to do so.

Mr. Mackinlay: Not so.

Dr. Fox: It is up to all Labour Members to make up their own minds.

More than anything, the Bill's passage shows that the Government have very little understanding of the importance of Members of Parliament and of our role—on both sides of the House—of scrutinising the Executive. It is deeply dispiriting to see hon. Members allowing themselves to be patsies of the Executive.

In the debate on amendment No. 2, the facts have been further twisted. The right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson)—the twister par excellence—managed to say that the Conservative party has a 3:1 majority in the upper House. Yet the Government's own White Paper states that 476 peers have taken the Conservative Whip out of a total of 1,165 peers. Goodness only knows how 41 per cent. of peers could constitute a 3:1 majority. Ability and attention to detail have never been the strong points of the right hon. Gentleman, or of the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Linton)—who just said that Labour has 3 per cent. of votes in the House of Lords, whereas the White Paper states that there are 175 Labour peers, out of a total of 1,165.

Mr. Linton: I said that the Conservatives and Cross Benchers have 80 per cent. of the votes of hereditary peers—of whose votes the Labour party has 3 per cent., and the Liberal Democrats have 4 per cent. The figures are from the White Paper; the hon. Gentleman can check them. While he is on his feet, will he explain something that has been troubling me since he spoke in the previous debate? Does he, or does he not, support the hereditary principle?

Dr. Fox: That is a very good red herring, with which I shall deal later in my speech. The hon. Gentleman cannot be so selective in his figures. In a Chamber comprising 1,165 peers, there are 175 Labour peers. I should be the first to acknowledge that that is well below the number that would accord with Labour's voting strength in any recent general election. However, the hon. Gentleman should try not to twist the figures that he gives to the Committee—as the right hon. Member for Hartlepool did.

The hon. Member for Battersea asked me about the hereditary principle, and I should like to deal with that point—although you, Mr. Martin, may rule me out of order if I do so. I have not heard any Labour Member say that he or she is against the hereditary principle itself. Labour Members do not seem to be against handing property over to their children, or against the monarchy's line of succession. They should therefore not confuse the hereditary principle with an hereditary ability to vote in the House of Lords. However, I know that I am straying far from the territory covered by the amendment. I can tell by the benign look that comes over your face before you stand up, Mr. Martin, that I had better move on and deal with another point.

The Parliamentary Secretary, Privy Council Office (Mr. Paddy Tipping): Simply for the sake of certainty and of clarity, may we return briefly to the figures, and to whether the Conservatives have a 3:1 majority in the other place? The hon. Gentleman has already quoted from the White Paper, which says that the Conservative party has 476 peers and that Labour has 175 peers. The Conservative party therefore has, roughly, a 3:1 majority over Labour.

Mr. Evans: What about the Liberal Democrats?

Mr. Tipping: The Liberal Democrats have 69 peers.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. We are going back to the Second Reading debate, rather than keeping to the amendment.

Dr. Fox: The right hon. Member for Hartlepool said earlier that the Conservatives had a 3:1 majority over all others. That is where the numbers were twisted.

This is an exercise in the cynicism that we expect from a Government who treat Parliament, particularly their Back Benchers, with contempt. Perhaps, one day, Labour Back Benchers will develop a little self-respect and sense of history and realise that they are here for a purpose other than serving the Labour party—they are here to serve their constituents. The amendment would make a bad Bill marginally better and we shall support it.

In a supine effort even by the doorstep standards of the Liberal Democrats, the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) raised one important point about Lord Cranborne. We have never argued with the substance of the amendment. It was agreed with Lord Weatherill. Lord Cranborne was sacked for defying the authority of the shadow Cabinet and for trying to trade away something that is not tradeable: the Opposition's duty—it is not just a right or an ability—to oppose the Government in both Houses. It is the duty of the Opposition to scrutinise the Government and to bring the Government to account. That cannot be traded away. There can be no deal because we are not willing to trade away our ability to oppose.

Mr. Robert Maclennan (Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross): Was not Lord Cranborne negotiating with the Government to make the Bill closer to what he and his colleagues would like? The Leader of the Opposition had proved himself not only unable but unwilling to do that, saying that the Conservatives would oppose the Bill and defy the Government's mandate without giving an inch.

Dr. Fox: That was the Mensa version of doormat. That does not invalidate what I have said. A position cannot be negotiated on behalf of a party without the party's authority. That authority has to come from the leader of the party. All the Liberal Democrat Members want to be the leader at the moment, so I understand why they make little bids now and again.

In trying to secure support for the amendment in the other place, we shall not trade away our ability to oppose the Government.

The President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mrs. Margaret Beckett): I shall not take more than a second of the Committee's time. The hon. Gentleman's repeated assertion that an attempt was made to persuade his party to give up its proper duty to oppose cannot be allowed to pass without challenge. No such attempt was made. We are talking not about proper opposition or proper scrutiny of Government legislation or other proposals, but about the possibility of organised disruption and hooliganism and a straightforward abuse of the power that the Conservatives have always enjoyed in the House of Lords. We certainly want that to be traded away.

Dr. Fox: Last night, the Leader of the House told my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest that she had no right to move the amendment—an amendment that the Government will support in another place—and that she was wasting the time of the Committee. The Government seem to regard any reasonable scrutiny of their policies as time wasting. They regard the unwillingness of both Houses to roll over and die when faced with their power as filibustering.

Mrs. Beckett: The hon. Gentleman is wrong. Perhaps he was not in the Chamber at the time. I do not criticise him for that. I accused the hon. Member for Epping Forest of wasting the time of the Committee because she repeatedly demanded that I come to the Dispatch Box to say what I had already said and what was clearly on record as the Government's attitude. I thought that that was somewhat time-wasting.

Dr. Fox: It was entirely appropriate for my hon. Friend to say that the Government's position was not clear. The Government have said that they are going to force their Back Benchers to vote one way tonight and the opposite way the next time. There cannot be a more perverse way of carrying forward business in the House. If the Government have such moral double-speak, how can they be surprised that the rest of the Committee is confused?

[Dr. Fox]

Mr. Mackinlay: I understand the duty of the Conservative party to oppose and frustrate. Can the hon. Gentleman envisage any circumstances in which his party would accept Government proposals seeking an agreed way forward? Outside this place, many people consider that we are playing games. It should be within the capacity of men and women here to reach an agreed settlement on one reform fairly immediately. Are there circumstances in which the hon. Gentleman would be prepared to do that?

Dr. Fox: There are, and if we had had the royal commission some time ago, we could now be considering the results and moving on to subsequent reform. It would be far better to move to a single-stage reform by consensus than to have the current piecemeal approach. The last time such reform was proposed, it was frustrated not in the other place, but by Back Benchers on both sides of this House who did not want a challenge to the power of the House of Commons by the other place.

New clause 12, on which we may seek to divide later, relates to the Scottish peers and the Act of Union. Article 22 of the 1707 Act of Union provides for the number of Scottish representatives in the Parliament of Great Britain. Article 23 provides for the peers of Scotland to have

> "all Privileges of Parliament which the Peers of England now have and which they or any Peers of Great Britain shall have after the Union".

By the Act of Union, the Scottish peers—who had previously sat in the Scottish Parliament—were not granted seats in the united Parliament, but were granted the right to elect 16 of their number as a quid pro quo for the loss of their seats in the Scottish House of Lords.

The system was abolished by the Peerage Act 1963, which granted all peers of Scotland a seat in the House of Lords. Peerages created subsequent to the Act of Union were made as peerages of Great Britain, and there were no further creations of peers of England or Scotland. The schedule to the Bill repeals section 4 of the Peerage Act 1963, which repeals the section of the Act of Union that deals with the election of Scottish peers but deems that all Scottish peers have the right to sit and vote in the House of Lords.

I would like to know from the Leader of the House what advice the Government have had on whether the proposal contravenes the Act of Union. The Leader of the House may say that the 1963 Act has already altered the Act of Union. Although the 1963 Act did, in practice, amend the provision of the Act of Union for 16 Scottish peers to sit in the House of Lords, it did not run contrary to it. It did not prevent 16 peers from sitting; it merely said that all Scottish peers could sit in the House of Lords.

The House of Lords Bill repeals the 1963 Act, and prevents 16 Scottish peers from sitting. The Leader of the House may claim that the number of life peers who are Scottish is far in excess of 16, and that therefore the spirit of the Act is not broken. However, all life peers are peers of Great Britain, not Scotland—and, therefore, the letter of the Act of Union is most certainly broken. In the absence of any stage 2 proposals, there is no guaranteed Scottish representation in the House of Lords.

All this becomes much more important when we look at the piecemeal and incoherent proposals from the Government on devolution. This is a serious issue on which I would like the Leader of the House to reply. No doubt there was considerable legal discussion about this matter in Government circles before they published the Bill. For a Bill to break the Act of Union would be a serious matter—although, given the contempt with which the Government treat Parliament, it would not be at all surprising. It would be nice to have some answers, just for once. Perhaps we could have the same answer here that will be given in the other Chamber.

Mr. John McAllion (Dundee, East): I wish to intervene briefly in the debate—not least because of the closing remarks of the hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) about the Act of Union and the need for Scottish representation in the form of unelected peers sitting in an unelected second House of Parliament. May I remind the hon. Gentleman that the Act of Union represented the status quo in Scotland before the 1997 general election? The only defender of that status quo in Scotland was the Scottish Conservative and Unionist party, which was truly routed in the 1997 general election.

The will of the Scottish people was that the terms of the Act of Union be renegotiated and changed through the constitutional changes introduced by the Government in this Parliament, including the reform of the House of Lords—which the people of Scotland are completely behind. There is very little sentiment in Scotland for unelected peers to represent our country in a second Chamber of this Parliament. The hon. Member for Woodspring—who has been away from Scotland for some considerable time—shows how out of touch he is with genuine opinion in Scotland by tabling an amendment that would have no support, I suspect, even among the Scottish Conservative party.

I am delighted to be able to follow my Whips' instructions tonight and vote against amendment No. 2. I have no desire whatever to save the political skins of the Lord Great Chamberlain or the Earl Marshal, or any of the other 89 hereditary peers referred to in the amendment.

If the hon. Member for Woodspring is concerned about Labour Members being only half-opposed to the hereditary principle, I can assure him that I am opposed to it wherever it rears its head. There is no place in democratic politics for people to inherit positions of power and influence rather than being elected by their peers—by which I mean their ordinary fellow citizens.

5.30 pm

Sir Patrick Cormack: Does that apply to the monarchy, in the hon. Gentleman's view?

Mr. McAllion: Absolutely. I have long been a republican and have made no secret of that fact, along with several of my hon. Friends. We would argue in any referendum or debate for the establishment of a republic, as exists in most democratic countries.

Mrs. Laing: I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on his honesty and consistency. His position is perfectly reasonable. He disagrees with me, but he has every right to do so. Will he vote against the amendment and any similar amendment, whenever there is an opportunity to do so?

Mr. McAllion: Yes. I was coming to that. I am happy to follow the Whips' advice tonight, but I am less happy with the clear implication, and the view of many of my hon. Friends, that, although we are voting against the amendment tonight, we will be asked to vote for a similar or identical amendment from the other place, not because we agree with it or think it right but because it is a price that we have to pay: a Danegeld that the House of Commons has to pay to the unelected House because of the threat of what it may do if we do not.

The House of Lords threatens not only to block the Bill and frustrate the will of the elected House of Commons but to wreck the elected Government's entire programme. For that deeply undemocratic behaviour, we are expected to reward 91 hereditary peers with a job for life. Their power to frustrate the elected House will continue unchecked under the new arrangements.

It is deeply dangerous for the House of Commons to give in to that blackmail and to write into our constitutional arrangements a deeply undemocratic strain that allows the other House continually to check our will and to threaten disruption if we are not prepared to give in to their demands.

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): I am following the hon. Gentleman's argument closely. How many Government Bills has the House of Lords wrecked, and on what subjects?

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. There has been some leeway on these amendments, but I cannot allow the hon. Gentleman to go as wide as that.

Mr. McAllion: Let us be honest about it: the amendment was not generated here; an agreement was arrived at in the other House before it was handed over to the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing). The question before us is whether we—the elected representatives of the people—give in to the House of Lords and accede to its demands by voting for the amendment. Should we give in to the demands of people who are not elected by anyone, be they hereditary peers or those who sit in the other House by virtue of the Prime Minister's patronage?

It would be deeply wrong of us to give up our democratic credentials to a House that is not elected and should not in any sense be able to tell us what we can or cannot do. That is why I will vote against the amendment and against any similar Lords amendment.

We are told that there is nothing that we can do and that, because the Government do not have a majority in the other place, they must always bow the knee to it because of the threat of disruption, but that is not an insurmountable barrier. If the elected House and the elected Government were determined to do something about the unelected House of Lords, they could do it. My right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) has told us time and again how the problems could be overcome by the creation of sufficient peers to ensure that we could abolish the unelected nature of the House of Lords at a stroke. The problem is that the House of Commons has not yet made up its mind what to do about the House of Lords. That is the real problem, and it is why we are confronted with this difficulty tonight.

Many hon. Members, including Labour Members, fear an elected second Chamber on the ground that it could mean some diminution of the power of this House. That is why a compromise involving some form of unelected second House has been developed. However, such a compromise takes us away from the point of principle and leaves us at the mercy of the hereditary peers, who say that what is suggested as a replacement for them is no better than the hereditary principle.

I beg the Government to have the confidence of their democratic principles and credentials. As a Scottish Member, I am acutely conscious of the constitutional theory that underpins the United Kingdom—the Act of Union, to which the hon. Member for Woodspring referred. Under our constitutional arrangements, sovereignty does not rest with the people. In every other democracy in the modern world—in America, France and Germany, for example—sovereignty rests with the people, but, under our arrangements, it rests with the Queen and Parliament. That means that it rests with an unelected monarch, an unelected House of Lords, and an elected House of Commons.

That traps us in the past. It prevents us from being the proper, modern and democratic country that most others are, and all our fiddling about with what should happen with a second Chamber will make us a laughing stock unless we come to terms with that reality. It is time that this House grew up and realised that it should move into the 21st century with the rest of the world.

Sir Nicholas Lyell (North-East Bedfordshire): I begin by apologising, Mr. Martin, for my absence at the beginning of today's debate, when I was due to continue the speech that I began last night. I received an injection at lunch time and its effects meant that I could not be here earlier, but I am here now.

This debate is not about the eventual abolition of the rights of hereditary peers, which no doubt will come about sooner or later. It is really about the crucial matter of the composition of the interim Chamber between the time when this Bill is passed and the second stage of the process, which is the genuine creation of a modern, reformed House of Lords.

As I was saying in the last 60 seconds of last night's debate, the big question is whether the Government and the Leader of the House—whom I am very glad to see in her place—will let us have a proper debate, in this elected House of Commons, on that supremely important issue. I welcome the fact that the right hon. Lady is answering the debate, and I hope that we shall get a constructive response.

The Government have moved a bit and are entitled to some credit for doing so. Their outward stance for the first 18 months of this Parliament matched their manifesto proposals. The Government proposed the simple, naked abolition of the rights of hereditary peers and the consequent mutilation of the existing House of Lords which, whatever its origins, in many ways works quite well. They had no constructive proposals for what would replace it. As I and others have said, that can rightly be described as an act of constitutional vandalism. Watching the Prime Minister at Question Time some months ago not merely defending but luxuriating in what he seemed to regard as an almost ritual act of destruction—with some Labour Members behind him baying in support—was pretty bewitching, but it was no credit to parliamentary democracy on the eve of the 21st century.

[Sir Nicholas Lyell]

Behind the scenes, however—and fostered by a mixture of common sense and a recognition of the need for parliamentary tactics—more sensible discussions were going on. Yesterday, the Government seemed to describe those discussions as some sort of open consultation. That was pretty good nonsense, but Lord Cranborne and Lord Richard—the then Leader of the House of Lords—were thinking about and tussling through to something approaching a sensible compromise for the interim. The result was the Weatherill amendment, as it is now called, which the Government have openly acknowledged and in effect recommended in the White Paper.

We are not allowed to vote on that amendment because the Government are determined to keep the whip hand in the Lords. They threaten not to permit any sensible interim Chamber to be created unless they get their way and unless they get their business through in what they regard as a reasonable time scale.

I have never been a Whip, but the Government are, within reason, entitled to pass their business. However, they are not entitled to stifle debate. I am asking for a more open mind from the Prime Minister and from the Leader of the House, because I suspect that although the Weatherill amendment is significantly better than nothing at all, it is by no means the best option for an interim Chamber.

The substance of amendments Nos. 16, 17 and 18 is simple. They offer an alternative way forward for the interim Chamber. They would mean that the Bill should not come into force for six months after Royal Assent. During that time—although there is no reason why the thinking process should not begin immediately—the Government should, in the words of amendment No. 18,

> "make inquiry and lay a report before both Houses of Parliament, setting out the names of all current hereditary peers who have played a significant role in the workings of the House of Lords during the ten years preceding the passing of this Act; and such hereditary peers shall be entitled to remain members of the House of Lords, pending the enactment of proposals for the wider reform of the House of Lords following the report of the Royal Commission and public consultation concerning its proposals."

Mr. Allan Rogers (Rhondda): I do not necessarily disagree with the right hon. and learned Gentleman's argument, but its underlying ethic is a little hypocritical. The right hon. and learned Gentleman was part of a Government who rammed business through Parliament, used more guillotines than any other and completely ignored the concept of parliamentary debate in many areas. He was the Solicitor-General in a Government who abused democracy and parliamentary debate. I am a great admirer of the right hon. and learned Gentleman, but I find it a little sickening to hear him use such abuse as an underlying argument.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: A soft answer turneth away wrath. I can only say that I heard the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) debate matters extremely effectively during the time when my Government were supposed to be abusing and stifling debate. He slightly overstates his case.

Amendment No. 18 explains in a nutshell my suggestion of the right way to proceed. The amendment can perhaps be improved on, but its substance has real merit. Labour Members should recognise that the amendment would allow the Government to achieve their key objective—the ending of the hereditary principle in the medium term. Although the number of hereditary peers involved would be rather more than the 91 proposed by the Weatherill amendment, my amendment would, like Weatherill, give the Government no grounds to fear any future defeat by what they like to describe as an influx of backwoodsmen.

I believe that my amendments improve on the proposal for 91. One great strength of the House of Lords is the sheer diversity of talent on which it is able to draw. Those talents come in significant measure from the life peers who resulted from the great Conservative constitutional reform of 1963, on which the Prime Minister has built by creating 105 new life peers.

Significant diversity also comes, however, from the ranks of the hereditary peers, and not only from among those likely to make up the 91. Many others have made, or could in future make, a real contribution to the upper House. They have helped to give it breadth and wisdom, but they have spoken comparatively infrequently, or their main work has been less public as members of House of Lords Select Committees.

It is invidious to give names, and I shall do so only to illustrate my point, as I did yesterday when we discussed the possibility of a right to speak but not vote. The group to which I refer includes peers who have played a huge role in matters to do with the environment, legal issues, trade unions and criminal justice. However, the number of their speeches during the past six years has been comparatively small.

To recap the statistics, roughly 90 peers have spoken more than 40 times in that six-year period. I take my figures from the parliamentary on-line information service—POLIS—computer in the Library of the House, to which I am indebted. About 250 hereditary peers have spoken between five and 40 times and have lent the upper House great weight in doing so. Another example that I did not give yesterday was that of Lord Ridley, who is recognised nationwide by those who understand the subject for his profound insight into local government. [Interruption.] No, Lord Ridley has a remarkable insight and if the hon. Member for Hemel Hempstead (Mr. McWalter) knew him, he would recognise that fact. Frequently, he was a constructive critic of the Conservative Government when we were in power—[Interruption.]

5.45 pm

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough): We just heard some guffawing from Labour Members. It may have resulted from confusion over the identity of the Lord Ridley whom my right hon. and learned Friend had in mind. I think that he is referring to the noble Viscount.

whereas the guffaws might have been directed at the former Secretary of State for the Environment, Mr. Nicholas Ridley.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Yes, and I see that the hon. Member for Hemel Hempstead accepts my hon. and learned Friend's tuition.

Another example is Lord Gowrie on the arts. Since he ceased to be a Minister, he has spoken in the Chamber six times, but to great effect. I mentioned Lord Runciman, who chaired the royal commission on criminal justice and who has spoken 12 times.

One can take a spread of distinguished peers, some hereditary and some created. It is interesting to note from the figures that some life peers who play an important role in the House of Lords, and who will be able to continue to do so, do not speak often, but when they do so it is to great effect. That is part of the richness of the wider aspect of the United Kingdom Parliament. I mentioned Lord Selborne yesterday, a hereditary peer who is widely respected as almost pre-eminent on the environment, as is Lord Alexander of Weedon—a life peer—on the City. Our old colleagues from this House, such as Lord Merlyn-Rees, Lord Whitelaw and the late Lord Tonypandy played a big part after going to the House of Lords, but only spoke about 25 times in six years. The Countess of Mar is another example, as is Lord Wedderburn, the distinguished Labour life peer.

Mr. Mandelson: I am sorry to interrupt the right hon. and learned Gentleman. I do not know whether he was present throughout our proceedings yesterday, but virtually everything that he has said in the past few minutes was said by his colleagues then.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I said it myself.

Mr. Mandelson: Others did as well. Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman assure the Committee that he is not simply reading from some prepared sheet that is being circulated among Conservative Members?

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I can assure the House that I am reading from no prepared sheet, if the right hon. Gentleman will listen, and I wrote it myself. I am also quoting figures that I gave the Committee myself. The right hon. Gentleman is enjoying himself, waving his arm round and round—spinning, I suppose—but he was not in the Committee yesterday, or not for long anyway.

Mr. Mandelson rose—

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. If we concern ourselves with who was in the Committee yesterday, we are straying from the amendment.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: You are right, Mr. Martin. Occasionally, I have wondered whether I might come across an old lady with a spinning wheel in some high room in this House, and now I have come across her.

We must also consider the work of the Select Committees of the House of Lords. I met Lord Merlyn-Rees this morning—he is a neighbour—and he told me that he regarded the work of those Committees as some of the most valuable work done by the upper House. Ten of the 20 members of the European Communities Committee, which is one of the largest and most influential Select Committees in the House, are hereditary peers. That Committee has six sub-Committees and the Chairmen of four of them are also hereditary peers. The Delegated Powers and Deregulation Committee is unusual in having only one hereditary peer, Lord Ampthill; but hereditary peers play a significant role in the Committees on science and the arts and the in domestic Committees, which are in effect the usual channels in the other place.

The bottom line of my argument is that there are about 150—and perhaps as many as 200—hereditary peers who play a significant role in the work of the upper House and without whom it would be a poorer place. That number of hereditary peers is no threat to the Government, but their combined voices should cause the Government to check when they are wrong and would give no doubt welcome support when the Government are right. I am referring to hereditary peers of all parties and of none.

We look for constructive action from the Government. The Government have a duty to govern, which means that they have a duty to propose ideas themselves. Sitting haughtily in a corner and saying that there is a huge Conservative majority in the Lords that they are going to destroy, but that they are going to put nothing in its place to renew the upper House, is simply not good enough. The amendment offers a genuinely constructive way forward and I ask the Government to accept it.

If the Government are afraid to do that, for fear—as the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) explained—of losing the whip hand given to them by the threat of using the Parliament Acts, I ask the Government at least to recognise the strength of the argument, to discuss it with Lord Weatherill and others and to use it to build on the Weatherill proposals. In that way, they can ensure that, however short or long the interim period is, the interim Chamber retains as much as possible of that which is good in the current Chamber.

There is simply no need to destroy. Proper reform, in this area of the constitution above all, should be incremental and evolutionary and should proceed step by step. Removing the rights of hereditary peers is one step, but alone it is just not good enough. True reform must be constructive and build on the best of what exists. Amendments Nos. 16 to 18 offer a way ahead and I commend them to the Committee.

Mr. Mackinlay: I shall speak only briefly on this group of amendments. I reiterate my disappointment that the former Leader of the House of Lords, Lord Richard, was dispatched in July and that Viscount Cranborne, former Leader of the Opposition in the other place, was later dispatched by the Leader of the Opposition in this place. I believe that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition should have allowed them to explore exhaustively the possibility of agreement on an interim House, or of concluding the reforms in one Act, by consensus. I cannot help but feel that the opportunity to reform and democratise our Parliament is being jeopardised by the tactical considerations of both the Government and the Opposition.

It is not unreasonable to point out to my right hon. Friends on the Treasury Bench and to Opposition Front Benchers that there is still scope for them to come to some sort of agreement—one that would not jeopardise the Opposition's duty to oppose, but which, if enacted fairly swiftly, would give them opportunities to increase the parliamentary checks, balances and scrutiny that we all want. The amendment moved by the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) does not achieve that.

[Mr. Mackinlay]

In some weeks' time, there is to be a charade played out, in which I and my colleagues are to be persuaded to vote for the amendment. I am not happy about that. I shall remain deeply concerned that an unsatisfactory "interim" House will endure and the hereditaries stay. I implore my parliamentary colleagues to pause and consider whether there can be some sort of agreement that would be mutually beneficial, enhance the Opposition's opportunity to oppose and enable scrutiny to be provided.

In any event, the concept of the hereditary peers enduring in Parliament is unacceptable. At the general election, an overwhelming mandate was given for their being expunged from Parliament. The whole hereditary principle is alien to those of us who are socialists and to many other people who would not use that term but who, would call themselves democrats.

Yesterday, in what might have appeared a somewhat flippant intervention, I referred to the need for DNA testing—after all, who are the hereditaries? There is no prospect of DNA testing being introduced, but let us pause to think: there are people who sit as Members of Parliament by hereditary right, but is there no possibility of infidelity having occurred in their families over the past few hundred years? I do not believe that those people are all legitimate—hands up anyone who is certain that his or her lineage has not strayed outside of wedlock. Even if one accepts the hereditary principle, the position of the hereditary peers is absurd. It is legitimate for us to raise such matters.

I shall come in a moment to the point raised by the hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) about the Act of Union, but first let me tell the Committee about the time I spent in another place listening to the tortuous case about who exactly was the legitimate Lord Moynihan; a case in which the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell), who was then the Attorney-General, made representations. The legitimate Lord Moynihan had to fight his case over many weeks and witnesses had to be brought from the far east. Presumably, similar cases might occur in future if the amendment were accepted: perhaps, at the critical moment, the election of the representative hereditary peers could be held up by such disputes. The rules are unbelievably arcane and I invite those who are interested in such matters to look at the Moynihan case so that they can see for themselves how absurd the whole process is.

If that case does not persuade the Committee, let us recall the time of the Maastricht debates during a previous Parliament. A good peer upped and died and a Member of this place, Lord Douglas James Hamilton, thought that he might have inherited the title, but there was a vote in the Commons that evening, so Lord Douglas James Hamilton—[HON. MEMBERS: "Lord James Douglas-Hamilton"] Yes, that one. He went down to the Victoria Tower and repudiated or renounced, whatever the term is, a peerage that he might have inherited. I use the word "might" deliberately, because the inheritance became the subject of a trial in which Lord James Douglas-Hamilton was challenged by his cousin.

I trotted down to the Victoria Tower after him and made a thorough nuisance of myself by asking to see the documents and the books. After insisting on seeing the register and the instrument by which the peerage was renunciated, I put all the questions I could to a bewildered man from the Lord Chancellor's Department. Finally, when I became exhausted, I asked him, "Are you telling me that someone can come down here and renounce a peerage that they might have inherited?" The man looked me straight in the eye and said, "Yes." I then asked, "Does that mean I could come down here tonight and renounce the peerage of Glenfiddich?" He looked at me and answered, "Yes." That is the sort of absurdity that surrounds the vital question of whether or not someone can sit as a Member of Parliament. This is all factual stuff.

Mr. Wells: The hon. Gentleman is absolutely right—it is all factual stuff. However, he might like to recall the occasion on which that renunciation took place and the reason why it was so important: it was that Lord James Douglas-Hamilton represented the Government's majority in the House of Commons at the time.

6 pm

Mr. Mackinlay: That is an historical fact, but my argument is that we should tolerate no longer than is absolutely necessary even one hereditary peer in Parliament, because the whole thing is absurd. The pantomime that I described underlines that point.

The hon. Member for Woodspring, who is not present, raised, in a rather spurious point, the Act of Union. I refer to that because Conservative peers created a precedent on this issue—I went to the Lords to watch the case—when they sat in judgment on a peer of Ireland who wanted them to restore his right to sit in the Lords.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Mackinlay: You allowed the hon. Member for Woodspring to raise this issue, Mr. Martin. He was referring to what would happen to Scottish peerages if the amendment in the name of the hon. Member for Epping Forest were accepted. I simply want to draw attention to the fact that under the Government of Ireland Act 1920, the Irish peers withered on the vine and the last one to hold his seat was the grandfather of Richard Needham, who died in the 1950s. That Act accepted the fact that Parliament could abrogate the right of the peers of Ireland to sit here. After all, rightly or wrongly, a quarter of Ireland is still part of the United Kingdom.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: That is relevant to our discussion because peers of Ireland who were sitting in the House in 1921, when the Irish free state was set up and Ireland became an independent country, were allowed to continue to sit here for the rest of their lives. Does not the hon. Gentleman agree that that is a good example of the way that reform can be carried out in a transitional way that enables the country to continue to benefit from the wisdom of peers while changing its system? That demonstrates the evolutionary nature of reform, which is preferable to a destructive approach.

Mr. Mackinlay: I do not think that anybody should sit in Parliament by reason of birth, because that is an absolute absurdity. I understand the right hon. and learned Gentleman's point, but I reject it. I was drawing attention to the narrow point that there is no impediment to our doing away with the hereditary peerages. That would not in any way jeopardise the Act of Union with Scotland. Just as, in 1920, with the Government of Ireland Act, this place can decide to abrogate the right of Scottish peers to sit in the British Parliament. The end of the Irish peerage did not take immediate effect because those peers withered on the vine. During the previous Parliament, a case was retried by the House of Lords, which had a Conservative majority, who said that Irish peers had no right to sit in Parliament. That is the only point that I want to make.

Sir Michael Spicer (West Worcestershire): I support the amendments in the name of my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing). They are not the best solution, which would be to keep what we have at the moment. The next best solution would be to abolish the House of Lords altogether.

I say that because we have in our country a system of government called the integration of powers. That means that the Executive are selected from the legislature. The chain of accountability goes from the Executive, through the House of Commons, to the people. The people are sovereign because the House of Commons is sovereign, and that sovereignty is maintained by the existing system. With, or perhaps because of, all the system's impurities in the House of Lords, to which the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) referred in a colourful way when he mentioned Lord Moynihan, who is present in the Gallery—

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. Gentleman should know better than to make such a reference to anyone outside the Committee.

Sir Michael Spicer: I apologise, Mr. Martin.

The essence of the present situation is that there is no real rivalry between the two Houses. That position would be maintained by the amendments or by the abolition of the House of Lords. In the past, the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) has persuasively argued exactly that by saying that to maintain the sovereignty of the Commons, we should not change the Lords except to abolish it.

If we decide to change the present system, almost any alternative that is likely to be proposed will create a new rivalry between the Commons and the Lords. That will certainly occur under an appointments system, to which we shall refer in later amendments, whether or not people are directly appointed by the Government. The Executive would clearly be in charge of the House of Lords even if Members of that House were directly elected, because the Executive would have the capacity to divide and rule the two Houses of Parliament.

That possibility was recognised in New Zealand, which is a good example because it had a constitution identical to ours. New Zealanders recognised that if they set up a system of rival Houses from which the Executive would be chosen and to which they would report, that would give the Executive enormous new powers to divide and rule.

If keeping the present system, in which there is no question about the sovereignty of the House of Commons, is not on the menu, we should change to a system that is similar to it. Of course the proposals are a dog's breakfast, a mess of pottage and all the other descriptions that they were given in yesterday's debates, but that is exactly my point. The sovereignty of the Commons and, through that, its ability to hold the Executive to account, will be maintained, and that is why I support the amendments.

Mr. Richard Shepherd (Aldridge-Brownhills): As Churchill said, the people are sovereign, and many of us take the view that the House of Commons is not in itself sovereign but is the ultimate expression of the sovereignty that lies with the people.

Sir Michael Spicer: I could not agree more with my hon. Friend, and that is exactly my view of the House of Commons. That is why I believe that no House of Commons can bind a future House. The single currency perverts that principle because its effect is permanent and binds every future House of Commons. The sovereignty of the House is what matters.

Mr. McAllion: The hon. Gentleman has referred several times to the sovereignty of the House of Commons. If the Commons is genuinely sovereign, why do we have to accept the compromise being forced on us by the House of Lords?

Sir Michael Spicer: That is for the hon. Gentleman to discuss with his Front-Bench colleagues. The House of Commons can do what it likes, as he well knows, especially in this particular House of Commons. I do not believe that the House has too much power, however. As my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) said, the House is the representation of the people's sovereignty and that must be maintained.

Mr. Garnier: The complaint of the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) relates not to the power of the House of Lords, but to the power of the Executive over this House.

Sir Michael Spicer: But my point is that, at the end of the day, the House of Commons is elected by the people and from it the Executive are chosen. I conclude by saying that I support the amendments for the reasons that I have given.

Mr. Grieve: I shall try to be brief. The debate has certainly been interesting, but I found the comments of the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) a little rich. It is only because we have been badgering the Government consistently for a long time that we have a feasible opportunity to discuss these issues, instead of the Government having an easy path to getting rid of hereditary peers and doing nothing else. I welcome this debate because at least we are beginning to have constructive discussion about options for the future of a truly representative and democratic upper House. In that regard, Conservative Members are probably far more radical than the majority of Labour Members.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell), in speaking to amendments Nos. 16 to 18, made a compelling case, and I do not want go back over that ground. I was happy to put my name to several amendments because a mechanism by which the talent that exists among hereditary peers can be maintained in the interim Chamber is worth while.

[Mr. Grieve]

My chief concern has always been, in relation to amendment No. 2, the possibility of representative peers, elected by their number, joining the interim Chamber. I am afraid that I take a slightly legalistic view on the issue. There are compelling grounds for believing that the amendment, if passed, will also help the upper House in its deliberations; but, quite apart from that, I am at a loss to understand the process by which we are embarking on reform.

If it were to be suggested that this House might wish to dispense with 300 parliamentary seats, it would be within our power to do so, and I would expect us to vote on it, and I would expect that, at the subsequent general election, there would be 300 seats fewer and that, thereafter, those seats would be redistributed. However, I would not expect us to expel 300 Members from the Chamber halfway through the currency of a Parliament. Yet what we are proposing to do in relation to the upper House, in relation to the hereditary peers, who do have rights—even if sometimes, listening to Labour Members, one wonders whether they have cottoned on to that—is to get rid of their right to represent themselves halfway through the currency of a Parliament—[Interruption.] Yes, without any right of representation thereafter.

Mr. McAllion: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Grieve: Not at the moment.

One thing that has especially puzzled me about the Government's ready acceptance of the Weatherill amendment is the fact that it occurred to me that they were aware of that issue, and realised that it would be a neat way of solving the problem. Before Labour Members say that it is a non-issue, I must tell them that I differ.

We spent a considerable part of last year discussing the incorporation of the European convention on human rights into our law, a move that I supported. I remember the Home Secretary saying that the European convention was not going to be the be-all and end-all—it was simply the foundation on which subsequent, better rights were to be based. How on earth do we square the principle whereby we have consistently denied peers the right to vote in elections and—rightly—will continue to deny life peers that right because they will still be able to represent themselves, with a system whereby, arbitrarily, halfway through a Parliament, we say to a whole group of people, who have also been deprived of the right to vote, "Out you go on your ear; you will have no representation for the rest of this Parliament"?

The beauty of the Weatherill amendment, and the reason why the Government should have tabled it instead of waiting for it to be brought from the upper House, is that it solves that problem in a way that I consider to be acceptable. However, I should be interested to hear from the Leader of the House the Government's view on that point.

Interestingly, my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) said that one of the problems with the present Government was that we could never understand what they were trying to do—they would not tell us. However, I must tell her that one of the problems is that the Government have reached such a pinnacle of arrogance that they seem to imagine, in their inclusiveness, that they know what each one of us thinks.

On Second Reading, I wished to ask the Leader of the House about that very point when she developed her arguments. I asked:

> "Will the right hon. Lady give way?"

She replied:

> "No, I am awfully sorry. I must get on. I feel confident that I could answer the hon. Gentleman's point."

I said:

> "The right hon. Lady does not know what it is yet."

The Leader of the House replied:

> "I do."—[Official Report, 1 February 1999; Vol. 324, c. 615.]

The Leader of the House has many attributes, but that of being a clairvoyant and a witch was not one that I had thought that she would claim as part of her own. [HON. MEMBERS: "Shame."] If that is the quality of the way in which debate is going to be addressed in the Committee, I hope very much that I have now enlightened her so that her clairvoyance may have proved to have been justified, and I hope at long last to have a reply to my question.

6.15 pm

Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown (Cotswold): We are discussing a transitional Parliament. There are 200 to 300 active hereditary peers, and we are considering their right to sit, speak and vote in another place. Amendment No. 2 proposes that some 91 of their number should be retained. My preference under a stage 2 replaced House of Lords would be for an elected House of Lords. Under that system, some—at least 91, probably 100 to 150—of those 200 to 300 would be elected in any case. We are therefore talking about a transition.

The Government have made it quite clear that they will accept an amendment in another place but not an amendment in this Committee. Indeed, the House of Lords—I am sorry, the Leader of the House; I elevate her already, but I am sure that she would like to be elevated—made it quite clear that > "if such a proposal is made in the Lords and the Government's legislative programme is not being frustrated, we are minded to accept it."—[Official Report, 1 February 1999; Vol. 324, c. 609.]

There we have it. The pressure—I was going to say, "the blackmail", but that would have been unparliamentary—to be brought on the other place is that, if its Members behave, they will be allowed to move that amendment. There we have it—the power of the Executive. That is what this is all about—patronage.

Patronage is being exerted in another way—a second, and even more insidious way—because, as I understand it, if this amendment is accepted in another place, it is also accepted that the Government will create sufficient life peers of their own political colour to make up the political balance.

I cannot understand what the fuss is all about. If amendment No. 2 were passed tonight, we would allow 91 of the most active, most eminent, most knowledgeable hereditary peers to remain and take part in the great democracy of this country—and yet the Government will not accept that. I cannot understand the gerrymandering that is taking place, purely so that they can use the Parliament Acts if their Lordships in another place do not behave. It is lack of principle; it is gerrymandering of our democracy. Future generations will judge it as such.

Mrs. Beckett: I congratulate the hon. Member for Cotswold (Mr. Clifton-Brown) on winding up the debate in the spirit in which much of it has been conducted.

There is a group of amendments before us. What all but amendment No. 25, tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock Chase (Dr. Wright), have in common is the desire to "save" some group of hereditary peers in the transitional House and to write that into the basic Bill as it leaves the Committee of this House. All but amendment No. 25, and new clause 12, which raises a different point, in one way or another seek to water down the Bill—as amendment No. 10 says, to restrict rather than to end the rights of hereditary peers.

The principle of the Bill, as it is put before the Committee by the Government, is that hereditary peers should cease to sit and vote by right of inheritance. The Government are not prepared to risk the existence and passage of that basic Bill. We made that point plain—I believe perfectly courteously and quite straightforwardly—on Second Reading. Yesterday, the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mrs. Laing) moved amendment No. 2 in order to air issues that we all know may well be raised in the House of Lords, although it is not clear how the Conservative party will then vote, or whether such an amendment will be carried. Nevertheless, we have had a debate on the possibility that such an amendment will be tabled, and may be carried and return to the House.

I am sorry to say that we have had a rather strange debate in some ways—one in which, from the outset, some rather intemperate, not to say extravagant, arguments and language have been used. The Government have been accused of stopping debate on this issue. In fact, we were accused of preventing debate today, even after some hours of debate had occurred. We have done nothing to stop or to impede the debate. What we refused to do, and what we continue to refuse to do, is, as a Government, to put forward a proposal along the lines of that in amendment No. 2, because it is not our proposal.

It is a little unusual, as you will remember, Mr. Martin, and as several hon. Members observed yesterday and today, for a Government to be attacked for arrogance, obstruction of debate and undermining democracy for daring to signal that they might be prepared to compromise. Yesterday, Opposition Members repeatedly asserted that debate on this proposal would in some way be restricted by taking place—as it may well—if the Bill returns so amended from the House of Lords. That is nonsense, as they well know. There is nothing in the Bill, or in any intention stated or signalled by the Government, to curtail debate on this matter. The Government have no quarrel with the Opposition raising the issue—it is perfectly reasonable that they should.

It is perfectly reasonable that Conservative Members should have a bit of a knockabout at the Government's expense at the possibility that we may vote against the amendment tonight but, in a few weeks or months, we may accept a similar amendment. We have no quarrel with their right to do so. However, I suggest, in all sincerity, that wilder assertions about honour, integrity and blatant abuse of power are a very strong currency that we should be wary of devaluing by using to bolster an otherwise rather weak argument.

Laying side the tenor of the arguments deployed in this debate, the proposal to modify the Government's Bill will come—if it comes at all—from Cross-Bench peers. It is not a party proposal: it is not a Labour proposal and, presumably, it does not come from the Conservative Front Bench—if it did, a Conservative Front Bencher would have moved it. The Government are prepared to look favourably upon such an amendment if it seems likely to smooth the passage to stage 1 of reform, and hence allow us to move more quickly to stage 2.

Mr. Oliver Letwin (West Dorset): I am terribly grateful to the right hon. Lady for giving way. Will she answer the question that we have asked repeatedly: is it not odd for the Government to take the view that something is beneficial for the constitution if their lordships cause no trouble but, if their lordships cause trouble, that very same thing is not beneficial for the constitution?

Mrs. Beckett: The hon. Gentleman knows perfectly well that that is not the point. The Government would prefer the Bill that is before the Committee to pass on to the statute book. However, if it will assist the passage of this and other beneficial legislation regarding issues that, as the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) pointed out, are of much greater interest to the people of this country to accept something in the nature of a compromise, the Government are by no means unwilling to do that—despite all that has been said about our arrogance and insensitivity. I do not know why the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) finds that so difficult to grasp.

I understand and sympathise with the concern expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock Chase. He is anxious that the fact that there is no time limit on the transitional House could allow 90 or so hereditary peers—if such an amendment is accepted—to remain indefinitely. I understand his concern, but I ask him not to press amendment No. 25. It is not needed because, despite what has been said in the debate, the Government have no intention of stopping indefinitely at the transitional House.

Mr. Andrew Tyrie (Chichester): What is the right hon. Lady's reaction to the comments by Lord Weatherill, which were reported in The House Magazine? He said:

> "It's within the bounds of possibility that the Royal Commission may say this"— the Weatherill amendment—

> "has been working well—let's leave well alone.
>
> That would preserve continuity . . . Surely a consummation devoutly to be wished."

Would the right hon. Lady be content to see stage 1 continue indefinitely? What assurances can she give the Committee that it will definitely end?

Mrs. Beckett: I am not sure that the hon. Gentleman is not asking two entirely contradictory questions. I shall deal with the first issue that he raised. He asked about an article—which I do not believe that I have seen—that appeared in Lord Weatherill's name. Lord Weatherill, like everyone else, will put his views to the royal commission, and the royal commission will make its deliberations and give its advice. We are some sufficient distance from that outcome not to need to reach a conclusion at this point as to what a response to such advice might be.

Mr. Clappison: I am grateful to the right hon. Lady for giving way, but she has rather glided away from my hon. Friend's question. What is her opinion?

Mrs. Beckett: We have made it quite plain that the Government wish to see the Bill that is now before the Committee on the statute book. In order to smooth the transition and to move more speedily to stage 2, we are prepared to consider favourably something such as the Weatherill proposal. However, it remains the Government's view that there should be no continuation of the right to sit and vote in another place on the grounds of heredity.

That brings me to amendment No. 3, which would allow a small number of existing hereditary peers to remain as Members of the upper House. If the wish is to preserve those peers of first creation who are there on the grounds of their own achievements rather than those of their forebears, the Government have some sympathy with it—after all, that is why the life peers will remain. However, that is unnecessary because the Government have made it plain that we have already made such an offer to those hereditary peers. However, if the amendment is designed to preserve them as Members of the upper House by hereditary right, it is not acceptable to the Government. The whole point of the Bill is that it severs once and for all the link between hereditary peers and membership of the House of Lords.

Several hon. Members—particularly the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell)—addressed their remarks to amendment No. 18. We do not dispute that some individuals who sit as hereditary peers have made valuable contributions to the work of the House of Lords. However, I reject—as I suspect many of them would—the apparent assertion last night by the hon. Member for North Thanet (Mr. Gale) that their contributions are innately more valuable than those of life peers. I think that most hereditary peers would agree with me that the majority of the work of the House of Lords is carried out by the life peers—and that is not a criticism of hereditary peers.

Mr. Roger Gale (North Thanet): The right hon. Lady is perfectly aware that that is not what I said. I said last night, and I reiterate now, that the contribution of hereditary peers is at least as valuable as that of life peers and I objected to the manner in which the Government were seeking to gag them.

Mrs. Beckett: If the hon. Gentleman did not intend to so impugn life peers, I am glad to have given him the opportunity to set the record straight. They will welcome that news.

However valuable the contributions of individual hereditary peers may be, the fact is that that is not why they are Members of the upper House. The right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire sought to introduce various mechanisms and—perhaps incidentally—further delay in order to preserve a larger number of hereditary peers on the grounds of individual achievement. His amendment refers to those who have played a "significant role" but does not propose who should be the judge of that significance.

The right hon. and learned Gentleman overlooks the fact that there is nothing to prevent any political party or the appointments commission from nominating as a life peer any hereditary peer who is thought to have made such a contribution. However, we do not believe that that is for Ministers to regulate; neither is it a matter for this Bill. I repeat that the removal of the hereditary right to sit and vote should come into effect at the end of this Session. We believe that that is sensible and that is why we ask the Committee to reject amendments Nos. 16 and 17, which seek delay either for an arbitrary period or in order to introduce a specific date. That risks a disruptive rather than a straightforward transfer to the transitional House.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Will the right hon. Lady give way?

Mrs. Beckett: Very briefly.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: The key point that the right hon. Lady is almost addressing—I would be grateful if she would do so now—is that the Government are obviously thinking constructively about the 91 hereditary peers, provided that the amendment comes from the House of Lords and provided that the Government are not prevented from using the Parliament Acts. Will the Government think constructively about having a rather larger number than 91 on the same terms because there is a strong case for that?

Mrs. Beckett: I am sorry, but I doubt very much whether the Government will be prepared either to accept a further and arbitrary delay—as some of the amendments grouped with the right hon. and learned Gentleman's amendment suggest—or to exempt a list of named peers from the abolition of hereditary rights.

Mr. Gale: On a point of order, Mr. Martin. Before the right hon. Lady gave way to my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell), she said that she had very little time. Mr. Martin, will you confirm that this is the Committee stage of the Bill, that it is not time limited and that the right hon. Lady has all the time in the world to answer all the points that were made during the debate?

The First Deputy Chairman: The hon. Gentleman is correct: it is the Committee stage.

Mrs. Beckett: For the record, Mr. Martin, being mindful of the fact that the Committee had spent many hours considering this group of amendments, I thought that hon. Members might wish to move on to the other very interesting amendments tabled by Conservative Members.

Before I leave my last point, I reiterate that, regardless of whether some extra peers are added later by way of an amendment in the House of Lords, it should be absolutely clear that they will sit as life peers. They will sit as individuals on the basis of a contribution that they are judged by their peers to have made. Their heirs will not inherit their seats, and the link between the right to sit in the House of Lords and the hereditary peerage will be broken.

The hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox)—who, I am glad to see, has been able to return to us from what I know is genuinely pressing business—asked me about new clause 12. He is entirely correct: we have had a good deal of legal advice about the matter. That advice is that the steps do not in any way contravene the Act of Union. The spirit of the Act was that there should be equal treatment between peers of Scotland and others, and that is the effect of the Bill.

I know that some have claimed that the provisions in the Act cannot be amended, but the Act has already been amended because, as the hon. Gentleman rightly pointed out, it provided only for 16 of the peers of Scotland to sit, and in 1963 that was amended to allow them all to sit. That is the measure that is being repealed. The provision of the Act of Union that allows for equal treatment is being observed.

6.30 pm

The hon. Member for Epping Forest made a number of accusations, among which was the accusation that, in not bringing what is not our proposal—or, indeed, that of the Conservative party—before this Committee for debate at this point, the Government were in some way acting to party advantage. I say—I hope she will think not unkindly—to the hon. Lady that that was a Freudian slip. If there is party advantage in the matters that we are debating today, it rests, and it has always rested, overwhelmingly with the Conservative party. It is hard to avoid the conclusion, listening to the debate as I have over recent hours, that Conservatives are seeking by hook or by crook to defend that advantage.

The Bill may yet, particularly in the light of that attitude and that fight, need to be subject to the Parliament Acts. If it be so, and the Government hope that it will not be so, the Bill as presented should be the Bill that leaves this House.

Mr. Evans: Is that a threat?

Mrs. Beckett: That intervention trivialises this place. It was not a threat. The hon. Gentleman and some of his hon. Friends have, rather foolishly in my view, accused the Government of blackmail in what we are doing. We are putting before the Committee the proposals that we want to see pass into law. That is not blackmail. That is carrying out the principle, the purpose and the proposals in our manifesto.

If Opposition Members want to speak of blackmail, what would they call suggestions and indeed threats to use the powers of the House of Lords—what were the words?—and hooligan behaviour to disrupt utterly the Government's programme, opposing everything that the Government seek to do on health, education and crime at every step of the way? [Interruption.] I am sorry. The hon. Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) and hon. Members on his Front Bench did not say that, but it was said in the House of Lords by Members of the House of Lords who, as he well knows, have the power to make good that threat.

The Government are not blackmailing anyone. We are making sure that we have the opportunity to put into effect in our legislation the proposals in our manifesto. It is simple and straightforward.

Mr. Hawkins rose—

Mrs. Beckett: I am sorry. We have had many hours on the matter and all the points have been aired.

Question put, That the amendment be made:—

The Committee divided: Ayes 125, Noes 326.

Division No. 68] [6.33 pm

AYES

Ancram, Rt Hon Michael
Arbuthnot, Rt Hon James
Atkinson, David (Bour'mth E)
Atkinson, Peter (Hexham)
Beresford, Sir Paul
Blunt, Crispin
Boswell, Tim
Bottomley, Peter (Worthing W)
Bottomley, Rt Hon Mrs Virginia
Brady, Graham
Brazier, Julian
Brooke, Rt Hon Peter
Bruce, Ian (S Dorset)
Burns, Simon
Butterfill, John
Cash, William
Chapman, Sir Sydney
(Chipping Barnet)
Chope, Christopher
Clappison, James
Clark, Rt Hon Alan (Kensington)
Clifton-Brown, Geoffrey
Collins, Tim
Colvin, Michael
Cormack, Sir Patrick
Cran, James
Curry, Rt Hon David
Davies, Quentin (Grantham)
Day, Stephen
Dorrell, Rt Hon Stephen
Duncan, Alan
Duncan Smith, Iain
Emery, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Evans, Nigel
Faber, David
Fabricant, Michael
Fallon, Michael
Flight, Howard
Forth, Rt Hon Eric
Fowler, Rt Hon Sir Norman
Fox, Dr Liam
Fraser, Christopher
Gale, Roger
Garnier, Edward
Gibb, Nick
Gill, Christopher
Gillan, Mrs Cheryl
Goodlad, Rt Hon Sir Alastair
Gorman, Mrs Teresa
Gray, James
Green, Damian
Greenway, John
Grieve, Dominic
Gummer, Rt Hon John
Hague, Rt Hon William
Hamilton, Rt Hon Sir Archie
Hammond, Philip
Hawkins, Nick
Hayes, John
Heald, Oliver
Heathcoat-Amory, Rt Hon David
Horam, John
Howard, Rt Hon Michael
Howarth, Gerald (Aldershot)
Hunter, Andrew
Jack, Rt Hon Michael
Jackson, Robert (Wantage)
Jenkin, Bernard
Johnson Smith,
Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey
Key, Robert
King, Rt Hon Tom (Bridgwater)
Lait, Mrs Jacqui
Lansley, Andrew
Letwin, Oliver
Lewis, Dr Julian (New Forest E)
Lidington, David
Lloyd, Rt Hon Sir Peter (Fareham)
Loughton, Tim
Luff, Peter
Lyell, Rt Hon Sir Nicholas
MacGregor, Rt Hon John
McLoughlin, Patrick
Madel, Sir David
Malins, Humfrey
Maples, John
Mawhinney, Rt Hon Sir Brian
May, Mrs Theresa
Moss, Malcolm
Nicholls, Patrick
Norman, Archie
Ottaway, Richard
Page, Richard
Paice, James
Paterson, Owen
Pickles, Eric
Prior, David
Randall, John
Robathan, Andrew
Robertson, Laurence (Tewk'b'ry)
Rowe, Andrew (Faversham)
Sayeed, Jonathan
Shephard, Rt Hon Mrs Gillian
Simpson, Keith (Mid-Norfolk)
Soames, Nicholas
Spelman, Mrs Caroline
Spicer, Sir Michael
Spring, Richard
Streeter, Gary
Syms, Robert
Taylor, Ian (Esher & Walton)
Taylor, John M (Solihull)
Taylor, Sir Teddy
Townend, John
Trend, Michael
Tyrie, Andrew
Walter, Robert
Wardle, Charles
Waterson, Nigel
Whitney, Sir Raymond
Whittingdale, John
Wilkinson, John
Willetts, David
Wilshire, David
Winterton, Mrs Ann (Congleton)
Woodward, Shaun
Young, Rt Hon Sir George

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mrs. Eleanor Laing and
Mr. Desmond Swayne.

NOES

Adams, Mrs Irene (Paisley N)
Ainger, Nick
Allan, Richard
Allen, Graham
Anderson, Donald (Swansea E)
Armstrong, Ms Hilary
Ashton, Joe
Austin, John
Baker, Norman
Ballard, Jackie
Barnes, Harry
Barron, Kevin
Bayley, Hugh
Beard, Nigel
Beckett, Rt Hon Mrs Margaret
Begg, Miss Anne
Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Bennett, Andrew F
Benton, Joe
Berry, Roger
Best, Harold
Blears, Ms Hazel
Blizzard, Bob
Borrow, David
Bradley, Keith (Withington)
Bradley, Peter (The Wrekin)
Bradshaw, Ben
Brake, Tom
Breed, Colin
Brinton, Mrs Helen
Buck, Ms Karen
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Burnett, John
Burstow, Paul
Butler, Mrs Christine
Byers, Rt Hon Stephen
Campbell, Menzies (NE Fife)
Campbell-Savours, Dale
Cann, Jamie
Caplin, Ivor
Casale, Roger
Caton, Martin
Chapman, Ben (Wirral S)
Chaytor, David
Chisholm, Malcolm
Clapham, Michael
Clark, Rt Hon Dr David (S Shields)
Clark, Paul (Gillingham)
Clarke, Eric (Midlothian)
Clarke, Rt Hon Tom (Coatbridge)
Clarke, Tony (Northampton S)
Clwyd, Ann
Coaker, Vernon
Coleman, Iain
Connarty, Michael
Cook, Frank (Stockton N)
Cook, Rt Hon Robin (Livingston)
Cooper, Yvette
Corbett, Robin
Cotter, Brian
Cousins, Jim
Cox, Tom
Cranston, Ross
Crausby, David
Cryer, Mrs Ann (Keighley)
Cryer, John (Hornchurch)
Cummings, John
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Cunningham, Rt Hon Dr Jack
(Copeland)
Cunningham, Jim (Cov'try S)
Dalyell, Tam
Darvill, Keith
Davey, Edward (Kingston)
Davey, Valerie (Bristol W)
Davidson, Ian
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (Llanelli)
Davies, Geraint (Croydon C)
Davies, Rt Hon Ron (Caerphilly)
Davis, Terry (B'ham Hodge H)
Dawson, Hilton
Dean, Mrs Janet
Dismore, Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Dobson, Rt Hon Frank
Donohoe, Brian H
Doran, Frank
Dowd, Jim
Drew, David
Drown, Ms Julia
Dunwoody, Mrs Gwyneth
Eagle, Angela (Wallasey)
Eagle, Maria (L'pool Garston)
Edwards, Huw
Efford, Clive
Ellman, Mrs Louise
Ennis, Jeff
Etherington, Bill
Ewing, Mrs Margaret
Fatchett, Rt Hon Derek
Fisher, Mark
Fitzsimons, Lorna
Flynn, Paul
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Don (Bath)
Foster, Michael Jabez (Hastings)
Fyfe, Maria
Gapes, Mike
George, Bruce (Walsall S)
Gerrard, Neil
Gibson, Dr Ian
Gilroy, Mrs Linda
Godman, Dr Norman A
Godsiff, Roger
Gordon, Mrs Eileen
Gorrie, Donald
Griffiths, Jane (Reading E)
Griffiths, Nigel (Edinburgh S)
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Grocott, Bruce
Grogan, John
Gunnell, John
Hall, Mike (Weaver Vale)
Hall, Patrick (Bedford)
Hamilton, Fabian (Leeds NE)
Hancock, Mike
Hanson, David
Harvey, Nick
Heal, Mrs Sylvia
Heath, David (Somerton & Frome)
Hepburn, Stephen
Heppell, John
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, Ms Patricia
Hill, Keith
Hodge, Ms Margaret
Hoey, Kate
Home Robertson, John
Hood, Jimmy
Hoon, Geoffrey
Hope, Phil
Hopkins, Kelvin
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Hughes, Ms Beverley (Stretford)
Hughes, Kevin (Doncaster N)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark N)
Humble, Mrs Joan
Hurst, Alan
Hutton, John
Iddon, Dr Brian
Illsley, Eric
Jackson, Ms Glenda (Hampstead)
Jackson, Helen (Hillsborough)
Jamieson, David
Jenkins, Brian
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Jones, Helen (Warrington N)
Jones, Ms Jenny
(Wolverh'ton SW)
Jones, Jon Owen (Cardiff C)
Jones, Dr Lynne (Selly Oak)
Jones, Martyn (Clwyd S)
Jowell, Rt Hon Ms Tessa
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keen, Alan (Feltham & Heston)
Keen, Ann (Brentford & Isleworth)
Keetch, Paul
Kelly, Ms Ruth
Kidney, David
Kilfoyle, Peter
King, Andy (Rugby & Kenilworth)
Kumar, Dr Ashok
Ladyman, Dr Stephen
Lawrence, Ms Jackie
Laxton, Bob
Leslie, Christopher
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Ivan (Bury S)
Lewis, Terry (Worsley)
Linton, Martin
Livingstone, Ken
Lloyd, Tony (Manchester C)
Llwyd, Elfyn
Lock, David
Love, Andrew
McAllion, John
McAvoy, Thomas
McCafferty, Ms Chris
Macdonald, Calum
McDonnell, John
McGuire, Mrs Anne
McIsaac, Shona
McKenna, Mrs Rosemary
Mackinlay, Andrew
McLeish, Henry
Maclennan, Rt Hon Robert
McNulty, Tony
Mactaggart, Fiona
McWalter, Tony
Mahon, Mrs Alice
Mallaber, Judy
Mandelson, Rt Hon Peter
Marsden, Gordon (Blackpool S)
Marshall, David (Shettleston)
Marshall, Jim (Leicester S)
Marshall-Andrews, Robert
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Meale, Alan
Michie, Bill (Shef'ld Heeley)
Miller, Andrew
Mitchell, Austin
Moffatt, Laura
Moonie, Dr Lewis
Moore, Michael
Morgan, Alasdair (Galloway)
Morgan, Ms Julie (Cardiff N)
Morley, Elliot
Mudie, George
Mullin, Chris
Murphy, Denis (Wansbeck)
Naysmith, Dr Doug
O'Brien, Bill (Normanton)
O'Brien, Mike (N Warks)
O'Hara, Eddie
Olner, Bill
Öpik, Lembit
Osborne, Ms Sandra
Palmer, Dr Nick
Pearson, Ian
Pendry, Tom
Pickthall, Colin
Pike, Peter L
Plaskitt, James
Pollard, Kerry
Pope, Greg
Powell, Sir Raymond
Prentice, Ms Bridget (Lewisham E)
Prentice, Gordon (Pendle)
Prescott, Rt Hon John
Prosser, Gwyn
Purchase, Ken
Quin, Rt Hon Ms Joyce
Quinn, Lawrie
Radice, Giles
Rapson, Syd
Raynsford, Nick
Reed, Andrew (Loughborough)
Reid, Rt Hon Dr John (Hamilton N)
Rendel, David
Roche, Mrs Barbara
Rogers, Allan
Rooker, Jeff
Rooney, Terry
Ross, Ernie (Dundee W)
Rowlands, Ted
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Bob (Colchester)
Russell, Ms Christine (Chester)
Ryan, Ms Joan
Salter, Martin
Sanders, Adrian
Savidge, Malcolm
Sawford, Phil
Sedgemore, Brian
Shaw, Jonathan
Sheerman, Barry
Sheldon, Rt Hon Robert
Shipley, Ms Debra
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Rt Hon Andrew (Oxford E)
Smith, Angela (Basildon)
Smith, Miss Geraldine
(Morecambe & Lunesdale)
Smith, Jacqui (Redditch)
Smith, John (Glamorgan)
Smith, Llew (Blaenau Gwent)
Smith, Sir Robert (W Ab'd'ns)
Snape, Peter
Soley, Clive
Southworth, Ms Helen
Squire, Ms Rachel
Starkey, Dr Phyllis
Steinberg, Gerry
Stevenson, George
Stewart, Ian (Eccles)
Stinchcombe, Paul
Stott, Roger
Strang, Rt Hon Dr Gavin
Straw, Rt Hon Jack
Stringer, Graham
Stunell, Andrew
Swinney, John
Taylor, Rt Hon Mrs Ann
(Dewsbury)
Taylor, Ms Dari (Stockton S)
Taylor, David (NW Leics)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Temple-Morris, Peter
Thomas, Gareth (Clwyd W)

Thomas, Gareth R (Harrow W)
Timms, Stephen
Tipping, Paddy
Tonge, Dr Jenny
Touhig, Don
Trickett, Jon
Truswell, Paul
Turner, Dennis (Wolverh'ton SE)
Turner, Dr Desmond (Kemptown)
Turner, Dr George (NW Norfolk)
Twigg, Stephen (Enfield)
Tyler, Paul
Vaz, Keith
Vis, Dr Rudi
Wallace, James
Wareing, Robert N
Watts, David
White, Brian
Whitehead, Dr Alan
Willis, Phil
Wills, Michael
Winnick, David
Wise, Audrey
Wood, Mike
Worthington, Tony
Wright, Anthony D (Gt Yarmouth)
Wright, Dr Tony (Cannock)
Wyatt, Derek

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Robert Ainsworth and
Mr. Clive Betts.

Question accordingly negatived.

Mr. Robert Marshall-Andrews (Medway): I beg to move amendment No. 13, in page 1, line 6, at end add

'or shall in future be appointed a member of the House of Lords by the exercise of patronage'.

The Chairman of Ways and Means (Sir Alan Haselhurst): With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: No. 15, in page 1, line 6, at end add

'or shall in future be appointed a member of the House of Lords by the exercise of patronage, by virtue of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876, by virtue of the Life Peerages Act 1958 or by virtue of being a bishop or archbishop of the Church of England'.

No. 14, in page 1, line 6, at end add—

'(2) In this Act "the exercise of patronage" means on the recommendation of a Minister of the Crown.'.

New clause 3—Appointments Commission (No. 1)—

'(1) There shall be an Appointments Commission.

(2) The Appointments Commission may nominate members to serve as members of the House of Lords, provided that no such person represents a registered political party.

(3) A registered political party shall be entitled to nominate one member of the Appointments Commission.

(4) The Speaker of the House of Commons shall nominate members of the Appointments Commission who represent no registered political party.

(5) There shall be more members of the Appointments Commission nominated under subsection (4) than nominated under subsection (3).

(6) For the purposes of this section, a registered political party is one registered under the provisions of the Registration of Political Parties Act 1998.'.

New clause 4—Appointments Commission (No. 2)—

'(1) There shall be an Appointments Commission.

(2) The Appointments Commission may nominate members to serve as members of the House of Lords, provided that no such person represents a registered political party.

(3) The Speaker of the House of Commons shall nominate members of the Appointments Commission.

(4) No member of the Appointments Commission shall represent a registered political party.

(5) For the purposes of this section, a registered political party is one registered under the provisions of the Registration of Political Parties Act 1998.'.

New clause 5—Appointments Commission (No. 3)—

'(1) There shall be an Appointments Commission to advise on the proportion of Members of the House of Lords who represent each registered political party and to nominate persons to serve as members of the House of Lords who represent no registered political party.

(2) When advising on the proportion of members of the House of Lords who represent each registered political party, the Appointments Commission shall adopt the following procedure:

(a) For each registered political party, the number of votes received by that party at the last general election shall be divided by the number of members of the House of Lords who represent that party.

(b) The number of electors who cast no vote at the last general election shall be divided by the number of members of the House of Lords who represent no registered political party.

(3) If the figure calculated under subsection (2)(b) is less than all of the figures calculated under subsection (2)(a), the Appointments Commission shall recommend that the party (or one of the parties) with the highest figure calculated under subsection (2)(a) may nominate a person to serve as a member of the House of Lords.

(4) If the figure calculated under subsection (2)(b) is equal to or greater than all of the figures calculated under subsection (2)(a), the Appointments Commission shall recommend the nomination of a person who represents no registered political party.

(5) Each registered political party shall be entitled to nominate one member of the Appointments Commission.

(6) The Speaker of the House of Commons shall nominate members of the Appointments Commission who represent no registered political party.

(7) There shall be more members of the Appointments Commission nominated under subsection (6) than nominated under subsection (5).

(8) For the purposes of this section, a registered political party is one registered under the provisions of the Registration of Political Parties Act 1998.'.

New clause 17—Establishment and function of Appointments Commission—

'(1) There shall be an Appointments Commission

(2) The function of the Commission shall be to make recommendations to Her Majesty for the creation of life peerages; and no life peerage shall be created except in pursuance of such a recommendation.

(3) Before recommending to Her Majesty that a life peerage be conferred upon a person who is a member of a registered political party, the Commission shall consult the leader of that party, but shall be under no obligation to recommend any person nominated by the leader.'.

New clause 20—Creation of life peerages—

'(1) During the period while this Act remains in force, recommendations by the Appointments Commission to Her Majesty for the creation of life peerages shall be made in accordance with the following provisions of this section.

(2) Not more than twenty two recommendations shall be made during any period of one year.

(3) Not more than seventeen of the recommendations referred to in subsection (2) shall be for the conferment of a life peerage on a person who is a member of a registered political party; and such recommendations shall be made in proportion to the respective numbers of votes cast for registered political parties at the previous General Election.

(4) This section does not apply to peerages conferred under the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876 or to peerages conferred by law and custom on archbishops and bishops of the Church of England.'.

Amendment No. 11, in title, line 2, after 'about', insert

'appointments to the House of Lords and'.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: The amendment, which stands in my name and those of several hon. Members, would curtail the use and the endowment of patronage in the appointment of Members of the House of Lords and, by parity of reasoning, thereafter any Chamber that replaces the House of Lords in due course.

[Mr. Marshall-Andrews]

Like the Bill, the amendment is poetically simple. Like the Bill, it is brief, but perfectly formed. Like the Bill, it is modest in its aims and in its aspirations. Also, it is entirely consistent with the aims of the Bill—so consistent that it has been a matter of disappointment to me and those who tabled the amendment that the Government have not felt able to adopt it in this otherwise outstanding legislation.

To understand why I say that the amendment is consistent with the aims of the Bill, it is necessary to analyse the true iniquity of the hereditary principle. In Committee, we have spent considerable time debating those iniquities. Primary among them is the obvious iniquity of power being delivered by inheritance. We have said on many occasions that, at the last knocking of the 20th century, it is entirely appropriate that we should, as a matter of urgency, set about creating a genetically modified, or at least a genetically nullified, second Chamber.

All those arguments ignore the true vice of the hereditary principle—deferred patronage. Not one person who sits in the House of Lords by reason of the hereditary principle did not, at some stage in his family history, owe that fact to either the patronage of politicians or the largesse of kings.

I have no hesitation in saying that history dictates to us that patronage is the curse and the blight of the British political system, and has been for 700 years. The way in which that patronage has been exercised over 700 years has always tended to corrupt for the simplest of all possible reasons: it is transparently the personal donation of favour. The personal donation of favour will always carry with it the reciprocal responsibility that should be aired, and reciprocal responsibilities are the handmaiden of corruption. I suspect that my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, for whom I have boundless respect, would find it difficult to disagree with those remarks.

Mr. Gerald Howarth (Aldershot): Does the hon. and learned Gentleman think that Sir Winston Churchill was corrupted by the award of the honour of a knighthood for services to our country?

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: The hon. Gentleman is one of the great mediaevalists in the Chamber, and one of the very few who has stood fast by the hereditary principle. I admire him enormously for that, but he has failed to listen to what I said. I said that patronage always tends to corrupt. Many people may avoid corruption, but the tendency to corrupt in the body politic is everything. I hope that that is a consistent and reasonable answer to the hon. Gentleman's interesting intervention.

Sir Patrick Cormack: Do the hon. and learned Gentleman's objections to the hereditary principle extend to the monarchy?

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: Yes. I have no hesitation in saying that I am a republican, and have been for as long as I can remember. I am perfectly happy to debate that issue with the hon. Gentleman at any time and in a more convenient place. The two issues are not unrelated. Many republicans in the House will find it easy to support the terms of the Bill and the amendment.

Sir Teddy Taylor (Rochford and Southend, East): Will the hon. and learned Gentleman give way?

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: I think that, at this rate, my speech will take a long time. Yes, of course I shall give way.

Sir Teddy Taylor: I shall try not to hold up the hon. and learned Gentleman for long. Do the objections about hereditary peerages that he quite sincerely makes apply also to life peerages? Who does he think should sit in the second Chamber? Is he proposing an elected senate, or nothing at all?

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: It will not surprise the hon. Gentleman to learn that that is the kernel, the gravamen and the purpose of the amendment. Briefly, the answer to his first question is yes, and the answer to his last question is no. I shall come back to those issues if I may.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. and learned Gentleman in full flow, but I hope that that is the end of that particular exchange. We must not have a Second Reading debate now: we must deal with the amendment.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: I accept your rebuke, Sir Alan, on my own behalf and on behalf of the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor).

We should examine the principle and the historical vice of patronage—while, of course, staying well within the terms of the amendment. Those who, throughout history, have criticised and been in the front of voicing dissent about the use and the endowment of patronage have always found themselves in some considerable danger. If we make our dissent clear now in the liberal world that we inhabit, the only danger that we face is that we irritate our Whips. Terrible though that may be, it is a great deal better than being burnt.

It is worth recording that Henry VIII invented the unique torture of being boiled alive for anyone who dissented from the use of the king's patronage or his use of the prerogative to appoint whom he so wished, such as Cranmer. It has occurred to me—staying well within the parameters of the amendments, Sir Alan—that, had I made these or other observations at the time of Cardinal Wolsey, I would have been put on the barbecue a long time ago.

The Chairman: Order. It may help the hon. and learned Gentleman to know that those powers are not available to the Chair.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: That is why I provoked you, Sir Alan. I gather some comfort from the fact that, were such torture ever to be visited on me, my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) would be on a nearby bonfire.

The true vice that underpins and underlines the amendment is not merely the principle of appointment by patronage to the House of Lords or to any such House that should replace it: there is a far worse evil. Governments of all shades and of all political persuasions have, since 1974, admirably shown that unelected peers can be placed in the House of Lords by the use of patronage, and ere their bottoms have hardly touched the red leather of the House of Lords, they are imported straight into the corridors of power and of government.

All parties of all shades of political opinion have made such appointments—the Labour party is as guilty as the Conservatives, if not more so. Since 1974, 140 unelected appointments have been made to the heart of government from the House of Lords. Those people were often elevated to the House of Lords for the express purpose of placing them immediately in the centre of government.

Not for those gifted and gilded people is the impertinence and inconvenience of election. Not for them, as for all hon. Members of this House, is the impertinence and inconvenience of the drudgery of tramping up more and more steps, of listening endlessly to our electors and our electorate, and of proselytising for our Government or for the Opposition whom we hope will replace the then Government. Not for them is the problem of listening to the lamentations of the poor, the sick and the disabled time after time, week after week in our surgeries and during our election campaigns.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): I do not accept patronage, but it is interesting that Ministers are subject to patronage, and, for all I know, even Speakers and Deputy Speakers are chosen by patronage. What about my hon. and learned Friend's own profession as a lawyer? Do we elect judges and Queen's counsel? The barristers who apply to be QCs are appointed by the Lord Chancellor. Such appointments are all forms of patronage.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: I could not agree more. I am delighted that my hon. Friend made that point. I do not want to stray outside the bounds of the amendment—I see the expression on your face, Sir Alan. I am being tempted, but I shall not stray from the point, save to say that if my hon. Friend had listened to the many debates in which I have been involved on how judges and QCs should be appointed, he would know that I am as against the powers and the use of patronage in those circumstances as I am in this case. I have always regarded the vice of patronage as a particularly British vice, and we now finally have the opportunity to deal with it.

Mr. Winnick: Elect the judges.

7 pm

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: It is difficult for me to hear my hon. Friend, so if he does not mind I shall continue with my speech.

Opposition Members have referred to the high quality of Members of the House of Lords, not only the hereditary peers who not infrequently make their contribution but the life peers. I endorse what they have said. I also endorse what was said by the Leader of the House, both during today's debate and on Second Reading, when certain caddish imputations were made against the Leader of the House of Lords on the basis of her lineage. My right hon. Friend, immediately and spiritedly, leapt to her defence, pointing out that she is a woman of outstanding intellect and ability. Let me add that, as well as possessing a luminous intellect and an immense political capacity, the Leader of the House of Lords has the great attributes of grace and wit.

After that uncharacteristic fawning, let me also say that the Leader of the House of Lords has no place in Government. I have not the slightest doubt that, if she were elected to the House of Commons, she would be an adornment to Government, and I would be the first to say so; but she has not been.

Mr. Christopher Leslie (Shipley): May I return my hon. and learned Friend to the subject of his amendment? Amendment No. 14 states simply—my hon. and learned Friend has spoken of the need to be short, concise and simple—

> "In this Act 'the exercise of patronage' means on the recommendation of a Minister of the Crown."

If the amendment were passed, the Government could not nominate anyone to the House of Lords, but, as I read it, the Leader of the Opposition or the other political parties could do so. Why does my hon. and learned Friend seek to punish only the Labour party and the Government?

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: If my hon. Friend has not yet considered a career in the Cratchit area of the law, he should do so at once.

All appointments to the House of Lords are made on the recommendation of a Minister of the Crown. That is the prerogative of Ministers, although as a matter of convention they take account of recommendations made by the Opposition. However, I should be happy to discuss with my hon. Friend the possibility of a small technical amendment, in the spirit of statutory constructiveness. I always enjoy that, and I suspect that my hon. Friend understands full well what I was saying.

Two counter-arguments may well be raised against what strikes me—and, I hope, many others on both sides of this elected Chamber—as a transparently incontrovertible argument. The first is that the legitimacy of the electoral principle, which is fundamental to all my political beliefs, has been eroded by the power of the party political machine. Because the party political machine has so much power, it may be argued that a second Chamber consisting of nominated Members who have undergone, say, the Nolan tests is necessary to combat that power. My bisyllabic answer to that is "Rubbish". The party machine is only as powerful as we wish it to be: we can control our own party machines, and should not necessarily lie down in front of them.

In any event, although we all stand in the middle of the party machines, the fact that I am a member of the Labour party and have been for 30 years is simply a shorthand way of telling my electorate in the clearest terms what I believe, and have believed fundamentally for all that time. I need not stand on their doorsteps and tell them that I believe in the national minimum wage, that I believe in devolution or that I believe fundamentally in the precepts of the welfare state, because all that is implicit in the fact that I am a member of the Labour party and stand on that ticket. I must, however, persuade them that I will be industrious, and that I have the ability to listen to their lamentations. If I fail, I will fail the test of the electorate—and that happens.

[Mr. Marshall-Andrews]

It is sometimes said that it is axiomatic, and part of a well-known rubric, that in certain areas a donkey could be elected. In certain areas a donkey standing either for Labour or the Conservatives could indeed be elected, but in many it could not. I suspect that 50 or 60 former Conservative Members who lost their seats after the coming of the grim reaper in 1997 are saying, "I lost by only a few hundred votes. I might not have lost if I had been a better constituency Member." Others may be saying, "I won by only a few hundred votes. Thank God I was as diligent and conscientious as I was." The electoral principle is still fundamental to all that we do in this Chamber.

The second counter-argument, which the Leader of the House may raise, is that in the White Paper, although not in any statutory enactment, there is an undertaking on the part of the Prime Minister to divest himself voluntarily of certain of the powers of patronage that he holds, and to invest them in a commission. The commission will, of course, be appointed by him. It will deal with Cross Benchers, and the Prime Minister will aim for rough parity between the parties. That, incidentally, will mean the creation of some 95 Labour peers. When those 95 are there, to redress the balance in relation to the 90-odd hereditary peers who will remain when the rotten peg is kicked away—as it will be in due course—we shall have a built-in majority of 90-odd Labour peers. The next time—pray God, in many millennia—the Conservative party, or some other party, takes power, it too will redress the balance, and the whole wretched business will start again.

The time has come for us to take control of our elected destiny, and the Bill can enable us to do so. The amendment can undoubtedly be supported by those who believe in a wholly elected Chamber—of whom there are many—and by unicameralists like me. As I said the other day, it distresses me more than I can say to hear hon. Members on both sides of the House say that we need a House of Lords to act as a check on the Executive. We are the check on the Executive, and always should be. People say that we have not the time to be a check on the Executive, because of the overwhelming amount of legislation. That argument takes no account of the fact that devolution will take much of the burden from us, and the fact that the Executive should bear the burden of serving legislation to us in a form, and with an agenda, with which we can deal properly over a parliamentary Session, rather than delivering it to us in its present form.

Mr. Shepherd: If I heard the hon. and learned Gentleman correctly, he said that the amendment could be supported by unicameralists and those who believed in an elected House. What about the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876, relating to the Law Lords? What about the bishops? The amendment does not remove them, and the hon. and learned Gentleman has not commented on that aspect.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: I can only say that, in the overall sweep of the proposed measures, I have left the bishops behind. I have discussed the Law Lords with the hon. Gentleman, and I have no quarrel with the concept of their sitting in a second Chamber. As for the bishops, I would be minded to accept the hon. Gentleman's amendment.

Mr. Phil Hope (Corby): The more I listen to the debate and the interventions from various parts of the Chamber, the more it seems that my hon. and learned Friend is plunging us into a debate on patronage in uncharted waters. Surely he recognises that the arrangements for a transitional House and for a royal commission that will operate according to a strict timetable and which will deal with those issues directly and comprehensively, offers a far better approach than the amendments.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: That intervention distresses me a little. I anticipated that someone would say, "That is the business of a royal commission. Whether we will be saddled with patronage into the next millennium is a matter for a royal commission of the great and good." We have seen them and they are the great and good, I suppose. I suspect that nothing very radical will come out of the royal commission; in fact, I would wager quite a lot of money that nothing radical will come out of it. The idea that the House of Commons does not understand the elementary principle of patronage and must therefore ask a royal commission of the great and good to tell us whether we should continue with legislation that would allow a second Chamber to be appointed by the patronage of politicians is an abnegation of our responsibility.

Mr. Hope: Surely the whole point about the royal commission is that the report will come back to a Joint Committee of both Houses and will be decided on by the House of Commons. My hon. and learned Friend's argument is completely defeated by the point that he has just made.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: There is a touching faith in royal commissions and in Joint Committees of the Houses of Parliament, but one of the problems with the royal commission is that its remit is far too wide. It has not been asked to tell us how to do something that we want to do; it has been asked what we should do.

There is no problem with the House of Commons saying to a royal commission, "You can go away and tell us by comparative studies"—and with a large and very expensive secretariat—"what the options are," but the two options that we are—

The Chairman: Order. I have allowed the hon. and learned Gentleman to embroider his arguments to make his case, but he has now embroidered far enough. This is not a general debate about patronage. It is specifically about whether patronage should be exercised in particular circumstances. He must come back to the narrow confines of his amendment.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: I accept that stricture entirely.

I finish with a unicameralist point, which falls strictly within the ambit of patronage and raises the question of whether we should press the amendment. It is as well that we realise in the House of Commons that continually clinging to the existence of a House of Lords, whatever the means by which it is elected—whether it be through patronage, whether people are pushed or driven in from the streets, or whether they are appointed by lottery—is an admission that it is an alibi for our shortcomings. For that reason, I have moved the amendment and will listen with interest to what the Government have to say.

Mr. Tyrie: I have much sympathy with what I have just heard from the hon. and learned Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews). I particularly agree that there does not seem to be any need for the royal commission to take a look at patronage. The terms of my new clauses are much narrower and more closely confined than the hon. and learned Gentleman's sweeping effort to attack patronage.

I have tabled two new clauses. The first, new clause 17, is designed to remove the direct power of patronage from the Prime Minister to appoint his people to the House of Lords. Its intention is to reduce the extent to which appointments, or the promise of appointments, to the Lords can be used as a tool of control. It is intended to increase the likelihood that appointments will be made on the ground of someone's capacity to play a constitutional role in the Lords, rather than merely as a means of bestowing an honour.

The main function of a second Chamber should not be to serve as some elaborate lollipop for superannuated commoners, or friends or cronies of the Prime Minister of the day. It should be a place that is not just capable of exercising some constitutional check on the Executive, but which is keen to do so. Therefore, new clause 17 gives absolute discretion to the Appointments Commission to make recommendations to the Prime Minister.

I may be a little optimistic, but my impression is that the White Paper half agrees with that approach. It reads on page 45:

> "There would be a case for considering an enhanced role in overseeing this process"— political appointments—

> "for the Appointments Commission, if it continued to function", that is, after the interim period.

Without my new clause, most patronage powers will still be in the hands of the Prime Minister, even after the Bill is passed. With it, at least some of those powers with respect to the Lords will be at one remove. He will, of course, appoint the appointees, which is why I have tabled new clause 20.

7.15 pm

New clause 20 takes the powers of new clause 17 further. It limits the number of appointments that can be made in absolute terms in any one year. Even if a Prime Minister succeeds in exercising disproportionate influence over the Appointments Commission, the new clause will still restrict his power of patronage. It should eliminate the process of packing the Lords.

Dr. Phyllis Starkey (Milton Keynes, South-West): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Tyrie: I will in a moment.

The numbers set out in new clause 20 may look odd at first, but they are straightforward. Subsection (2) limits the overall number of appointments in any one year to 22. That figure is the average annual number of appointments to the House of Lords since 1958, when life peerages were introduced. Under subsection (3), only 17 of those would be permitted to be explicitly party political appointments.

At the moment, 25 per cent. of surviving peers created since 1958 are Cross Benchers and 75 per cent. have stated party political affiliations. I have applied the same 75:25 ratio in a rough and ready way to the figure 22 to arrive at 17. It comes out at 16.5; rounded up, it is 17. That is where the figures 22 and 17 come from.

Under subsection (3), political appointments would have to be made in proportion to the votes cast for each party at the last general election.

Dr. Starkey rose—

Mr. Linton rose—

Mr. Tyrie: I will give way to the hon. Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey) first.

Dr. Starkey: It was precisely that point that I wanted to take up. Has the hon. Gentleman done a mathematical model of how his proposals would work out? I confess that I have not, but it seems that, with the creation of 17 life peerages a year, it would take an unconscionable time for us to achieve anything near parity between the Labour party and the Conservative party. Has he been so good as to create the background computer model so that we know how many years the process will take?

Mr. Tyrie: I do not agree that that is the right approach to achieve proportionality. My new clause is not targeted at achieving that objective, but may I suggest another way to achieve proportionality, if that is what the hon. Lady so desires? We might, for example, introduce a retirement age at 75. A disproportionate number of elderly life peers are Conservative. I think that she will find, if she looks, that a retirement age of 75 would deliver exact proportionality between Labour and Conservative life peers.

Addressing that issue is not the purpose of the new clause; indeed, I would be straying from my intention if I did so. The purpose of the new clause is broadly the same as that of the amendment tabled by the hon. and learned Member for Medway.

Mr. Linton: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Tyrie: I will, but then I must get on.

Mr. Linton: I am glad to hear that the hon. Gentleman's sights are set on the target of patronage, but would not the consequence of the new clause be to retain for ever the Conservative party's stranglehold on the House of Lords?

Mr. Tyrie: I have just tried to answer that point by pointing out that it will do no such thing. That is contingent on whatever other changes are desired. That is not the purpose of the new clause. I have already suggested one alternative route that I considered taking, which I have discussed with the Clerks; I may yet table an amendment as a means of moving in that direction.

[Mr. Tyrie]

Subsection (3) of new clause 20 would provide that political appointments should be roughly proportional to the votes cast at the previous general election. Applying that principle—bearing in mind the run of Conservative victories—should imply not a House of exact proportionality but one that would inevitably, because of the time lags involved, leave rather more Conservative peers in the upper House than the number of Labour peers there are now. If Labour succeeded in winning a string of general elections, the position would be reversed. Appointment by strict proportionality does not imply a House that is always in exact balance.

On that I pray in aid of my subsection the Labour party manifesto, which reads:

> "Our objective will be to ensure . . . party appointees . . . more accurately reflect the proportion of votes cast in the previous General Election."

Therefore, by implication, Labour is accepting the principle that numbers in the upper House should not always—because of the possibility of a string of general election victories by one party—be exactly even.

I shall not deal with the details of subsection (4) save to say that it would exclude bishops and judges from the provisions of the new clause.

I think that the practicality of my new clauses deserves a moment or two of consideration. The Registration of Political Parties Act 1998 gives us some hope that the new clauses could be practical amendments and provides, for the first time, clear definitions of what constitutes party political affiliation. All parties are currently in the process of creating formal registration systems. Although I did not consider it worth adding to the new clauses to deal with the matter, I think that a sensible approach to it would be that, when an applicant is being considered for a peerage by the Appointments Commission, he or she should be required to sign a declaration stating whether he or she had any party political affiliation.

The case for addressing the patronage issue has already been made eloquently today. However, I should like to address the issue in a different—perhaps less emotional, or less trenchant—manner than that of the hon. and learned Member for Medway.

Patronage has been a problem in Lords reform for very many years—going back well before the Life Peerages Act 1958. Many of those who considered the issues concluded that the power of patronage is a severe drawback, if not a complete bar, to the likelihood of ever enabling a fully appointed upper House to work effectively.

It is important to bear in mind that the Lords will become a fully appointed House, unless the Weatherill amendment is passed. It is worth recalling the conclusions of several of those who have given thought to the issue in the past. Winston Churchill, for example, in a 1925 memorandum to a Cabinet Committee—which, as it happens, was a Conservative one which was working up proposals for a partly elected upper House—wrote:

> "Once a chasm has been cut between past and present mere nomination"— of peers—

> ". . . will be a trumpery foundation. The nominated senators, or whatever they were called, would owe their position solely to the favour of a party leader."

Although that was Churchill's view with a Conservative hat on, that was also his view when he was a Liberal. As early as 1907, in a political journal, he argued:

> "Abruptly we may dismiss all those ingenious plans . . . for creating an august senate of unrepresentative persons."

As it happens, for most of the interwar period, Churchill wanted an elected upper House. As he said:

> "If we are to leave the venerable if somewhat crumbled rock on which the House of Lords now stands there is no safe foothold until we come to an elected chamber."

I think that the reform that we are considering will find itself moving inexorably and inevitably in that direction.

Concern about the power of patronage in an appointed House was one of the reasons why Churchill concluded that an elected Chamber would eventually be the end point of any reform, and why he ended up supporting one.

Worries about the power of patronage have, of course, pursued more recent reformers. The original reform proposals thought up in 1958, which led to life peerages, were much more sophisticated than the ones that finally ended up on the statute book. The Conservative committee that was thinking through those proposals originally argued that, in the long run, there should be a ceiling on the number of peers serving in the upper House. Any ceiling inevitably means that the annual number of appointments becomes limited to vacancies by death.

Richard Crossman was one of the very few serious Labour thinkers on those issues—the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) also is a distinguished member of that group. Richard Crossman's 1968 proposals also contained a de facto limit on patronage. I shall not describe all the details of those proposals, as I am sure that the Committee would find it incredibly boring if I were to do so.

The Home report, which was produced by the Conservative party in the 1970s, also proposed capping the size of the House of Lords, at about 400. That would have limited patronage in much the same way as the 1958 proposals.

I quite deeply regret that a belt-and-braces approach—such as I am proposing—to the restriction of patronage is required. However, clearly, the worst fears of some of those who had concerns earlier in the century about the relationship between an entirely appointed House and patronage are now being realised.

No one would suggest that, over the years, all the abuses have been on one side. Historically, perhaps Liberal abuses of the power of patronage towards the beginning of the century are the most salient and the most memorable. But the problem has recently turned into a crisis, as every conceivable convention on the appointment of peers is being overridden by the current Labour Government. I shall confine myself to only two such breaches of precedent.

The first is that the current Prime Minister is appointing a higher proportion of Labour peers, as against other parties, than ever before. More than 50 per cent. of his appointees take the Labour Whip. By convention, since 1958, the percentage has never risen above 50 per cent. Since 1958, Callaghan, Wilson and my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath)—all Prime Ministers—kept the percentage below 50 per cent.; not once has it risen above 50 per cent. Now, under the current Prime Minister, it is rising above 50 per cent.

The second precedent—and its breach is more serious—goes back hundreds of years. Packing the Lords has always been regarded as unconstitutional. On all previous occasions when swamping or packing was considered, it was justified on only one ground: the need to avoid gridlock between the two Houses. That held true in the very first case that I know of—in 1713, to pass the treaty of Utrecht—as it did during passage of the great Reform Act 1832, when, rather as with the treaty of Utrecht, the threat was to create a dozen or 15 peers. In 1911, the threat was to create about 100 peers, or possibly even 200 peers, to pass the Parliament Act 1911 and to end the gridlock.

The 1911 Act—with its limitation on the power of delay, followed by the further limitation, in 1949—removed the justification of packing the upper House to deal with gridlock, as it removed that gridlock.

The plain fact is that—right now—the Prime Minister is packing the Lords, in breach of a centuries-old parliamentary convention.

Mrs. Dunwoody: I should not like to suggest that the hon. Gentleman is being slightly selective in his rendition of history, but the reality is that—whatever one thinks about the creation of large numbers of life peers—over a number of years, previous Prime Ministers' refusal to appoint Labour peers created the disastrous imbalance. If those who support the hon. Gentleman's amendments had been prepared to put pressure on the previous Conservative Prime Minister, we might not be facing the current situation.

Mr. Tyrie: I do not have the figures to hand. For a time in the 1970s, of course, Labour did not make nominations to the upper House. Had it done so, those nominations would have become appointments. A very long-standing convention holds that some Opposition nominations for peerages should be accepted. As I said, there has always been an acceptance of the need for balance, which requires that less than 50 per cent. of appointments by any Prime Minister should be for his own party.

Historically, we have had an average of 22 peers appointed a year. We now have an average of 66—three times the previous annual rate. If that is not packing, I do not know what is.

7.30 pm

Mr. McWalter: Would the hon. Gentleman like to reflect on the fact that every Conservative Prime Minister finds the upper House already packed in his favour and any Labour Prime Minister is trying only to mitigate the damage?

Mr. Tyrie: Several hon. Members have referred to the effect that my amendment would have on the balance. I have tried to explain that it is not designed to deal with that. I am trying to deal with the exercise of patronage by the Prime Minister to control his party.

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): The hon. Gentleman is giving us a scholarly account and a detailed remedy. Has it occurred to him that there is an alternative to the elaborate schemes of percentages and numbers? Let the people decide who is in the House of Lords—which I hope would not be called that—just as happens for the House of Commons. I was in the House in the early 1950s when successive Colonial Secretaries came forward with proposals for colonial administrations. They sounded exactly like the hon. Gentleman's proposal, giving a certain number to the Governor, a certain number to the white community, a certain number to the black community and so on. Democracy has a refreshing simplicity and acceptance. The hon. Gentleman should consider it when he gives further thought to the issue.

Mr. Tyrie: The right hon. Gentleman is right. I am not supposed to advertise in the Chamber, but I commend to him my paper on the subject. I came out in favour of an elected upper House some time ago. That remains my view, just as it has been the view of a large number of Conservative thinkers throughout the century, including Curzon, Churchill, F E Smith, Lord Home and Lord Carrington. I am not alone.

For much of this century, the Labour party has been in favour of unicameralism, as is the hon. and learned Member for Medway. Three times this century it has been part of Labour manifestos. I realise that I am being dragged into a digression, but it is important to bear in mind that the great divide in the Chamber on the issue—some divides cut across parties—is between the unicameralists and the bicameralists. The majority of bicameralists have been Conservatives. Unicameralism has always flourished better among Labour Members.

I shall conclude my comments on the scale of the patronage that we are talking about. [Hon. Members: "Hear, hear."] It is interesting to hear that Labour Members feel that it would be a good idea for the Prime Minister to hang on to the patronage that he is exercising and abusing.

The figure of 66 new peers a year excludes several peerages that have been given to those who are registered as having given large donations to the Labour party but have decided to sit on the Cross Benches. That figure of 66 and my points about party balance understate the real situation. The Prime Minister is clearly abusing his powers of patronage, as they have been exercised by all previous Prime Ministers. I regret that the customs that had built up around appointments to the Lords have been so flagrantly abused and ignored. I regret that my amendments have become necessary, but they have and I urge the Committee to support them.

Mr. Benn: These debates have been among the most interesting ever. An understanding of our constitution and the House that is not normally available to us has emerged from our exchanges. I listened to the hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie) with great interest. The colonial parallel came readily to mind.

We boast of democracy, but, when I was born, women were not trusted with the vote until they were 30. We have had a Parliament for 700 years, but only in my lifetime has the principle of universal adult suffrage been accepted. I do not believe that democracy is as deeply entrenched in the hearts and minds of parliamentarians as some hon. Members believe.

Mr. Wells: Would the right hon. Gentleman like to reflect on those colonial constitutions?

The Chairman: Order. I do not think that any such invitation should be proffered and it should certainly not be accepted.

Mr. Benn: I could refer the hon. Gentleman to some of my writings on the subject, but I shall not detain the Committee.

These debates have clarified the position. The Government have no policy for a second Chamber. The Opposition have no policy for a second Chamber. I am not making a party point. This is a more serious point—nobody wants to change the House of Lords except to alter the political balance. The Conservatives are not as committed to the hereditary system as they make out. When I was 11, they got rid of a king because he wanted to marry Mrs. Simpson. If they had been committed to the hereditary system, they would have stuck with him through thick and thin. The Conservatives have done well out of the current system, so they want to hang on to it. Now that the Labour party has got to power, it sees the benefits of patronage.

Some people think that I am cynical, but I believe that there will never be a second stage. When the new Chamber is set up, it will have the legitimacy of everyone having been freshly appointed. Even the hereditary peers will just have been made life peers by the Prime Minister. No Labour Cabinet will go to them a year later and say, "By the way, we are slaughtering you and introducing a new system."

My hon. Friend the Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) shrewdly pointed out that we want to get our legislation through. The problems that we would have had if we had tried this two years ago during our first year's legislative programme will apply next time as well. In a couple of years, when the royal commission and the Select Committee have reported, how many Labour Members will want to go over the issue again when it could endanger the rest of our legislation because the new Lords will not want the changes?

I pay tribute to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews), who made a classic parliamentary speech. We are planning to set up a second Chamber appointed by eight men and one woman—the Prime Ministers who have been in power since the Life Peerages Act 1958. Three of them are dead, so we are setting up a Chamber appointed by five men and one woman, claiming that it is better than what we have. It is not better than what we have. What we have is rotten, but we shall be entrenching patronage.

How does the Prime Minister of the day get his patronage? He harnesses the powers of the Crown. The possibility of other people creating peerages has been raised, but I am afraid that the fount of honour has only one tap—the Prime Minister. Nobody else can undo the fount of honour. The Labour Prime Minister—a socialist Prime Minister—is turning on the tap of royal patronage, allegedly to produce a better House. He will produce a House stuffed with people who have earned his approval—the largest number—or that of some other Prime Minister.

The hereditary system is unacceptable. I have always believed that we should be allowed to elect our Head of State. That point is not relevant or in order, but it anticipates a possible question. I do not say that with any hostility to anyone who holds hereditary office, because they cannot be blamed for that. If someone has a hereditary job, it is not his fault. When Harold Wilson rather foolishly attacked the 14th Earl of Home, Lord Home replied very wittily, "I presume that he is the 14th Mr. Wilson." That very clever response put Harold down in a way that did not always happen. It has nothing to do with heredity. With the balance of power that exists in the House of Lords, Labour Governments get four years and Conservative Governments get five—because the delay of a year is a veto when it comes to the fifth year.

My hon. Friend the Member for North-West Norfolk spoke with feeling about getting Bills through. I sat in many legislative committees in the Cabinet in which the party's leader in the House of Lords had to warn the Cabinet that a Bill would be delayed in the Lords. Bills are killed before they start because of the huge majority in the Lords.

As I have made clear, I am in favour of an elected House. We do not need the complexity suggested by the hon. Member for Chichester, who is skilled in history and knowledge. If every European constituency elected one man and one woman within the existing boundaries, we could have a second Chamber by 1 October. If we passed the amendment tabled by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway, that would take over from the second Chamber. The idea has such simplicity that I am sure it will scare some people.

Mr. Tyrie: Does the right hon. Gentleman think that there is much likelihood of securing a largely elected House from his own party?

Mr. Benn: This debate has brought the House of Commons back into existence, as people begin to realise that patronage applies not only in the House of Lords, but in this House. After all, the Leader of the Opposition summarily sacked his party's leader in the House of Lords because he disagreed with him. Certain penalties may be incurred in my party if one steps out of line. My hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) is having a little trouble because patronage is being extended in terms of the mayor of London. The debate has brought the Commons out of hiding. As my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway said with passion, we should have the right to decide and not be told what to do.

Mr. McWalter: Does my right hon. Friend accept that some of us may be unhappy with his suggestion, on the ground that it seems to set up a conflicting mandate—that is, it equals powers? Some of us are not of the view that a relationship similar to that between the United States Congress and Senate would be a real development, and we want to see some other way of entrenching our democracy.

Mr. Benn: I understand my hon. Friend's position, but the constitution of this country is loaded with conflicting jurisdictions, the biggest one of which is the Commission in Brussels, which can repeal our legislation without it ever coming to the House of Commons. Local government clashes with national government, and the Greater London council clashed with Mrs. Thatcher. Arguments may develop between the Scottish Parliament, the Welsh Assembly, the mayor of London and this House. There are more nuclear weapons in this country governed by the President of the United States—who is answerable to the Senate—than there are weapons of our own. I hope that my hon. Friend will not be too tracked into the idea that there must be only one centre of power. The real centre of power is Crown power, which never comes to us at all. We could go to war without ever asking the House of Commons—and we do.

The best way is to have a small, elected second Chamber, using every European constituency, with one man and one woman for each. We would have a small Chamber representing England, Scotland, Wales and so on, and at the critical moment when the Bill was passed—with the amendment tabled by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway—responsibility would be transferred. That is my conviction. I do not know whether we will do that. If we do not, it will be because neither Front Bench wants to lose the patronage that the present system and the new system give.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: The right hon. Gentleman is obviously concerned about the patronage being exercised by the Labour Prime Minister. The hon. and learned Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews) said that we have the power to control the Executive. We are a small number on the Opposition Benches. There are a large number of Labour Members of Parliament in whose hands lies the power to control the Executive. If the right hon. Gentleman could persuade them that the Prime Minister was wrong in his excessive abuse of patronage, something might be done.

Mr. Benn: Patronage is an abuse, whoever has it. I do not want the debate to deteriorate into a silly exchange over different Prime Ministers and how many peers they have made. The existence of the power to put someone into Parliament without their being elected is an abuse of democracy. That is my conviction. It is quite straightforward; I am not attacking anyone who uses it. As I said to the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath), patronage is not just about the people who get it, but about those who hope for it. Every Prime Minister is surrounded by hangers-on who hope that, if they are nice to him, they will get a peerage.

I have never forgotten that, on the day Harold Wilson resigned, I went through the Lobby with him. Everyone in the Chamber must have been through the Lobby with the Prime Minister, and there are always people saying, "What a brilliant speech, Prime Minister . . . I did enjoy your question . . . Would you come to my constituency?" On the day Harold resigned, no one spoke to him at all. The man was stripped of his patronage by his own resignation. It made a profound impression on me, which I keep to this day.

7.45 pm

I must not anticipate a Bill—for which I now have all-party support—to take all the Crown powers, including the power of patronage, from the Prime Minister and put them into this House to be authorised by vote. If we did that, we would make the final advance towards a democratic system. In Britain, we are allowed to elect only a third of our constitution; we do not elect the second Chamber and we do not elect the Head of State.

The Prime Minister's powers do not come from the electorate; once he has a majority, they come from the Crown. Until we look at all those issues together, we will not make sense. Getting rid of a few old hereditary peers will not move us a little bit closer to the democratic society in which I would like to live.

Mr. Maclennan: I, too, have a memory similar to that of the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) scorched into the back of my mind. Within five days of Harold Wilson's resignation, I went into the Members' Dining Room and saw him sitting there alone, clearly lonely. I took it upon myself to sit beside him; something I would have hesitated to do a week before, lest it be thought that I was currying favour with him.

There are other respects in which I found the development of the thinking of the right hon. Member for Chesterfield extremely interesting. At one stage, he was less enthusiastic about a second Chamber. I am happy to hear that he has thrown his weight behind an elected second Chamber. As others have said, there have been three occasions, at least, when the Labour party has campaigned for a unicameral solution.

Mr. Benn: For the record, I wrote a pamphlet 42 years ago on turning the Privy Council into a second Chamber. I do not hold to that view now, but please acquit me of being a unicameralist. I have always thought that a second Chamber had useful functions to perform.

Mr. Maclennan: I am happy to hear that, and I note the distinction between the right hon. Gentleman's position and that of the hon. and learned Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews), whose trenchant speech and powerful statement—that patronage tends to corrupt—is one with which we all ought to agree. We witness it in this place. When the hon. and learned Gentleman said that we were elected to control the Executive arm of Government, it was an aspiration that, no doubt, he and others have voiced to the electorate. However, we must have a realisation of the corrupting effect of patronage on the exercise of that power in this Chamber.

It is partly for that reason that it is so important that we have a second Chamber—perhaps one from which no Ministers are drawn in patronage, and which does not offer the opportunities to Governments to draw into their wake those who are elected to scrutinise their activity. I would like the royal commission to consider that.

I hope that our debate and its probable outcome will not be taken by the royal commission to show that the House, not having made the amendment, pins its colours to a second Chamber in which patronage is a predominant element. Such a Chamber would be basically undemocratic. The more it is appointed, the less democratic it will be and the less value it will have in our constitution as a watchdog and a restraint on the Executive.

I do not expect the amendment to be passed, partly because the Government are committed to the view that they should not take a stand on the second Chamber's composition and powers before the royal commission has reported. As they have such a substantial majority, they will undoubtedly carry the day.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: It is always interesting to hear the right hon. Gentleman's exposition of Government policy, which is often much clearer than when we hear it from the Treasury Bench. If the royal commission says that patronage is an essential part of a second Chamber, will the Liberal Democrats accept that?

[Mr. Marshall-Andrews]

Mr. Maclennan: Our view is a great deal clearer than that of the Labour party. We have decided in considerable detail how we believe the upper House should be constituted. We think that it should be predominantly elected, and we have held that position for many years. As the right hon. Member for Chesterfield said, election is essential.

I argued strongly within our party that the second Chamber should be filled entirely by election, and I believe that our constitution is tending in that direction. On that, I agree with more than one Conservative Member. Once we have unlocked the issue and exposed the anachronism and anomalies, the great good sense of the British public will be brought to bear on the subject, and the views expressed by Winston Churchill as a Liberal in 1907 will be seen to be contemporary and appropriate.

It is ludicrous to have different categories of Members, some of them elected, with undoubted legitimacy, and some appointed, with questionable legitimacy. A system with two classes of citizen in the upper House simply will not last, although it may be an acceptable staging post. That is why it is not unprincipled to advocate an incrementalist approach to a written constitution.

As the right hon. Member for Chesterfield said, we have no experience of the interactions involved; more's the pity, perhaps. Without the interruptions of wars or revolutions or events such as those that brought about the fifth republic in France, these exercises in Cartesian logic are something that the British public have found exotic and have not been willing to embrace.

Mr. Gordon Prentice (Pendle): Why does the right hon. Gentleman resist the amendment, when it applies only to a transitional House and to new appointments made by patronage in that transitional House?

Mr. Maclennan: That is not how I read it. My understanding was that the amendment was designed to enunciate a principle that would have lasting force. I find it difficult to take exception to that principle; however, it is not part of the Bill, but part of what is to come. In that spirit, I hope that we can return to the matter and that the royal commission will take from this debate a sense that even those who are not willing to support the amendment will none the less judge the report by the extent to which it is committed to the principles enunciated by the right hon. Member for Chesterfield and by others, such as the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd).

Mrs. Dunwoody: I understand the right hon. Gentleman to say that he would find it difficult to deal with two classes of Members. Am I mistaken, or does his party support, for European elections, precisely the creation of two classes of Member?

Mr. Maclennan: We support one class of Member: one elected by the British people. Election may be from different bases, but I am defending the principle of election. That is a unitary principle that cannot and should not be watered down. Granted, not all political parties have such internally democratic systems of presenting their candidates to the public as the Liberal Democrat party—but that is perhaps to follow a red herring further than is necessary in the interests of keeping in order.

I hope that the royal commission will understand that we want a legitimate second Chamber and that legitimacy is directly proportional to election. The less the Chamber is elected, the less account will be taken of it by the country and by the Government. The arguments may be wise, sophisticated, knowledgable and independent, but, if they are not delivered by elected people, they will not carry weight. The country needs a second Chamber that carries weight, which is why the principle of election should be given much greater weight than it has been given in the discussions hitherto.

Mr. Winnick: The amendment is superficially attractive, but I believe that my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews) has jumped the gun and that it is inappropriate for us to decide today the composition of a second Chamber. After all, a royal commission has been appointed, so why anticipate its findings? My hon. Friend and others are at liberty to make representations to the royal commission, but when he says that patronage should be completely excluded he is saying that there is no need for a royal commission to investigate the matter, because we can make a decision tonight. I do not believe that we should do that.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: I ask my hon. Friend exactly the same question as I asked the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan). If the royal commission says that the Prime Minister's patronage should be an important and integral part of appointments to the second Chamber, will he accept that?

8 pm

Mr. Winnick: I shall certainly deal with that in the course of what I hope will be my brief remarks.

As my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway has already admitted, the amendment has united Labour Members with differing views about the composition of the second Chamber. In one respect, if in one only, I agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn)—I do not want a single Chamber either. I believe that that would be wrong, and am very much in favour of a second Chamber. Others argue the related case that any second Chamber must be democratically elected or it will have no legitimacy.

I witnessed a similar sort of coalition in 1969, when Labour and Conservative Members united, even though normally their views were very different. How quickly time passes: I have gained some grey hairs in the intervening 30 years, but at least I am sitting in the same corner seat as I occupied then, and I was pleased to return to it after 18 years in opposition.

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway asked me a question about the second Chamber. I believe strongly that a fully elected second Chamber would be a direct challenge to this House. If that were the Government's proposal, I would not vote for it. I hope that I am as democratic as anyone else. My right hon.

Friend the Member for Chesterfield spoke about the changes and reforms pioneered, to a large extent, by Labour Members. If I had been around at the time, I hope that I would have fully supported reforms such as votes for women, universal adult suffrage, and the abolition of the property qualification.

I do not believe, in expressing my opinion tonight, that I have ceased to be a democrat. I have believed, strongly and for many years, that a fully elected second Chamber—the essence of the amendment, and a proposal also made by the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd)—is the inevitable consequence of the removal of patronage. That is why I am speaking to this amendment.

Dr. Stephen Ladyman (South Thanet): I have never quite understood the argument about the legitimacy of a directly elected second Chamber and the potential for confrontation with this House. Would it not be possible to set the precedence of this House in statute, and thereby resolve the problem?

Mr. Winnick: Of course. If the second Chamber were to be a fully democratically elected House, I have no doubt that, in the very nature of things, we would set down certain superior powers for this House. No one is suggesting that the two Houses would have equal powers.

Sir Patrick Cormack rose—

Mr. Winnick: What would happen in practice is that, in the event of a clash between this House and a fully elected second Chamber, that Chamber would have as much legitimacy as this House. It is bound to.

Mr. Mark Fisher (Stoke-on-Trent, Central): Of course.

Mr. Winnick: I, however, want this House to be supreme, and to be the decisive voice in law-making—

Mr. Grieve rose—

Mr. Fisher rose—

Sir Patrick Cormack rose—

Mr. Gordon Prentice rose—

Mr. Winnick: I am sorry to arouse such controversy. That was not my aim. I used to leave that to my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield, but I just want to finish my point. When we were in opposition and there was a Conservative Government—and especially since we have been in government—how many times, when the House of Lords has rejected a measure, have hon. Members—Front-Bench and Back-Bench alike—dismissed that House's right to intrude in such matters? We have always claimed that we in this House decide matters, but that will not be possible with a fully elected second Chamber. We should have no illusions on that score.

Mr. McAllion: A Scottish Parliament will be a fully elected second Chamber. Why does my hon. Friend think that it will be unable to coexist with the fully elected House of Commons?

The Chairman: Order. If I may, I ask the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) to wait a moment before he responds. I think that we are getting involved in a debate that is too wide. The amendment is about the power of patronage to the House of Lords that will exist as a result of the passage of this Bill. It cannot be occasion for the much wider debate about an elected Chamber or a non-elected Chamber. Obviously, arguments against patronage might well refer to a preference for an elected Chamber, but only in passing: it is not the central part of the debate.

Mr. Winnick: I accept that, Sir Alan, and although I had a very good response to my hon. Friend the Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion), your guidance means that I am obviously not in a position to give it.

Sir Patrick Cormack: Would not the hon. Gentleman agree that it is a little quaint to talk of patronage as if it exists only in the other place? In this House, the Chief Whip is the Patronage Secretary, and there are hon. Members who are desperate for patronage and anxious for preferment.

Mr. Winnick: I see that Sir Alan is wearing a worried and anxious look. Clearly, I would be in difficulties if I were to pursue that question—although I did earlier, when I mentioned judges, Ministers and the rest. Their positions are all the result of patronage, and the notion that, in itself, patronage is absolutely evil and must never be countenanced is nonsense. It is part of life—certainly it is part of every walk of political life.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: Can we not make a distinction between patronage that puts people at the heart of the legislature, and patronage in other areas of life?

Mr. Winnick: What about Ministers? They carry a tremendous amount of authority, but are not subject to any election to become Ministers. If I were able to pursue the matter, Sir Alan, I could mention people in very senior positions, perhaps outside Parliament, whose authority is very great and who are subject to appointment in all sorts of ways. Not least among them are the most senior judges in this country.

I conclude by saying that I have strong views, which I have expressed. Obviously, those who believe in a fully elected second Chamber have equally strong views. However, the purpose of the royal commission is to examine all such questions. It is right and proper that it has been set up, and it should have as much representation as possible from people with strong views such as myself, my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway, and many others. It is not our function tonight to make a decision about whether patronage should be excluded.

Mr. Letwin: Will the hon. Gentleman clarify something of great interest to me, if not to the rest of the House? Is he asserting that there is no problem with the supremacy of the Executive at present, and no excess of patronage in our constitution?

Mr. Winnick: No, I am not saying anything of the kind. Part of the function of this House is to keep the Executive in check. One can criticise, as Conservative Members do, and say that we are not doing our job as well as we should. That is fair enough for the Opposition, although I personally believe that Select Committees are effective. If necessary, I will be controversial and criticise the Government. I do not lack the necessary courage, but I always bear it in mind that I was elected as a Labour candidate. I was not elected as an independent, any more than was the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin). We must bear such factors in mind when deciding whether to take a certain line.

[Mr. Winnick]

It is not for us tonight—although it will be in the future—to make the final decision about the second Chamber, which is what we would be doing if the amendment were to be accepted. In those circumstances, I hope that it will be rejected decisively.

Mr. Shepherd: I think that the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) should accept his peerage as soon as possible, before the amendment tabled by the hon. and learned Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews) comes into effect.

I am truly disappointed in the hon. Member for Walsall, North, if only because he has a touching faith in royal commissions. We must remember that this House has not even had an opportunity yet to discuss the White Paper, with its extraordinary contentions. In point of fact, the amendments are a device to allow us to try to examine the shape of the House of Lords, or the second Chamber, in the future.

One of the most remarkable features of the House is that we are often denied the opportunity to discuss the most important, relevant and immediate subjects that confront us. The Bill is drafted almost to ensure that any comment we may make on the future composition of the House of Lords will be out of order. It is a nightmare, and it is nonsense.

I gave a cheer for the hon. and learned Member for Medway. It is a great privilege, of course, to be able to hear him without having to pay a king's ransom in fees, and for that reason, if for no other, some patronage should perhaps be put in his direction. I cheer, too, the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) who has voiced what many Members of the House feel. The Committee has seemed to come alive, and we are having a debate on Back-Bench amendments that have brought out a large number of Government supporters. Our depleted numbers have been well represented too. The debate has even diverted from his journey to Downing street the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan). That is a rare privilege, and we should acknowledge it.

The debate has not, however, produced the principal actors in the drama. We hardly see the Prime Minister, so important and grand is he. He can boom forth an Act that will consecrate and secure his patronage without troubling himself with its passage, or troubling us with his presence in the House. That is how contemptuous the Crown in Downing street—the right honourable Prime Minister—now is of the House of Commons.

The Prime Minister's spinning wheel has also deserted the Chamber. It would be too much to expect the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) to attend a debate that is clearly beyond the control of the bleeper machines with which we are all issued so that we may be summoned to address the great issues of the day.

Mrs. Beckett: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will recognise that we have seen neither hide nor hair of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Shepherd: What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. My right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition voted, and I give a cheer for that, but a vote is one thing. The tradition and custom of the House used to be that those who seek to govern us, and who govern us only because they have the support of the majority of the Members of the House, should occasionally attend the House, if only to salute those who slave away in the salt mines to try to give effect to their will.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: My hon. Friend may recall one of the formidable episodes of the previous Government. At 4 am once we were all at a low ebb, and through the door came, immaculately turned out, the then Prime Minister, ready to attend upon debates on important constitutional matters.

The Chairman: Order. I had more or less made up my mind that the encomium to Back Benchers given by the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) should cease so that he could move on to the terms of the amendment.

8.15 pm

Mr. Shepherd: I am obliged to you, Sir Alan, for a ruling that exhibits the very limitations that restrict us. We are confronted with an issue, yet we may not address its substance. I am not qualified to comment on the dress sense of my right hon. Friend the Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major), and I was not summoned here to do so. I agree, Sir Alan, that it does not seem greatly in order to try.

The House is attempting to wrestle with a matter of importance. There is a White Paper, and we have not discussed it. We are leaping into the dark with a flurry of explanatory footnotes. The right hon. Member for Hartlepool gave us his attention yesterday and has been here today. On Second Reading, he advised us that he, and he alone, was responsible for feeding us a royal commission. He has, of course, departed the scene now.

We are grappling with an horrendous process. The absurdity is that a growing number of Members across the Floor of the House are articulating a profound belief that we should rein in the powers of Downing street. Those of us who have sat here for more than one Parliament have transferred from one side to another of the Chamber. The complaints of yesterday, which we rejected so grandly when we were in office, are now our complaints.

What gels and cements subservience into us? I was elected only by the people of Aldridge-Brownhills, just as the right hon. Member for Chesterfield was elected only by the people of Chesterfield. Our authority is not on sufferance from the Prime Minister, even one whose general policy we might support. Before us is a proposal for the future that will curtail patronage.

The right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross has not commented on the fact that his own party leader glues his party together by the exercise of patronage. There is no question about that. For all the right hon. Gentleman's grand phrases—and his even grander equivocations—about where he stood on the terms of the amendment, I was not sure whether he, a distinguished lawyer, knew whether he would vote for or against the amendment. At the end of his lengthy speech, I was none the wiser.

I earnestly ask the House to support the hon. and learned Member for Medway. He offers a chink by which to remove patronage as the basis for future membership of the House of Lords—the same reason for which I tabled amendment No. 15. After a period, when the present beneficiaries of patronage have suspired their last at the end of their labours, we would be left with a House passing laws, but constituted only of judges and bishops and archbishops of the Church of England.

No one in Aldridge-Brownhills thinks that a serious suggestion. My constituents would be puzzled if a House were satisfactory to the Government that merely contained bishops, however worthy they may be. No matter how much we may seek out the bishops for spiritual guidance—even, sometimes, for temporal advice—we should not seek them out to make our laws. As for Law Lords, I should gladly turn to them for advice on the meaning of the laws on which we have decided, but I cannot think in truth that they should make the laws that they themselves will judge. That is why the amendment is so important.

Mr. Swayne: On the subject of bishops, is there not a danger of Cardinal Wolsey's words being fulfilled? The cardinal wished that many things were reformed, but feared that others would come after who might reform upon the reformations, and so proceeding, there would be nothing left. I fear that we are being led in that direction, and that we are unpicking delicate questions that may leave the very monarchy exposed.

Mr. Shepherd: I wish my hon. Friend well on the Bench of bishops. As for the concept of the monarchy exposed, I merely have to think of Lady Bracknell. This myth has been exploded. The Scandinavian democracies of Norway, Sweden and Denmark have no hereditary peerage to act as legislators, yet their attachment to their present constitutional arrangements is in some respects perhaps even stronger than our nation's attachment to ours.

Mr. Rogers: Does the hon. Gentleman really believe that it is impossible to have patronage in Government and society? I will briefly tell him a story about Wales. We were in opposition for 18 years. After we came to power someone asked me, "What are you doing trying to abolish all the quangos? We've been waiting for 18 years to be appointed to them". Last year, democracy was extended. Labour Members voted for that extension in the form of the Welsh Assembly and the Scottish Parliament. I do not think that we have abolished any quangos in Wales. We will now have a democratically elected Welsh Assembly and more appointed—through patronage—quangos. The two will always be together.

Mr. Shepherd: That is the wisest of observations. Of course, you would not want me to go into the ways of Labour patronage in Wales, Sir Alan. I am merely dealing with the nature of patronage in the upper Chamber. I want to grasp the principle that the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) described. The Prime Minister is anxious that the hon. Gentleman's concept of patronage should not come about in Wales and is making personal visits there—more, it seems, than he makes here. His candidate for the leadership of the Labour party—

The Chairman: Order. I do not want to hear any more of that.

Mr. Shepherd: Two Members from Cardiff would dispute that, Sir Alan.

We are dealing with patronage in the House of Lords and simple principles have been annunciated. The hon. and learned Member for Medway said something important. We are the elected representatives; we are capable of accomplishing these things. We have not yet discussed the White Paper, we cannot look to the future and we are being asked to leap in the dark. The amendment was a simple device to pull the carpet aside and enable us to suggest a way forward.

I do not have overweening respect for a royal commission whose members include a former Chief Whip, a former Foreign Secretary and great bureaucrat, and a former Back-Bench Labour Member. Why does that constitute the future for democratic Government? What Act provides for it? It is in itself an act of patronage.

Mr. McWalter: Will the hon. Gentleman reflect on the idea that those who dislike those making the appointments call it patronage and those who like the person making the appointments call it judicious selection on merit?

Mr. Shepherd: I am sure that we could think up acronyms that sum up our views—judicious this, judicious that or whatever.

Let us give it a whirl and go for it; let us make this our one statement to resonate with a royal commission which has only nine months to review all these matters, forgetting the years of service and understanding of democratic principles that are represented in this Chamber. I support the amendment tabled by the hon. and learned Member for Medway.

Mr. Mackinlay: I will come to amendment No. 13 in a moment. First, I must draw the attention of the Committee to new clause 10, in my name, which would at least put a declaration of intent on the face of the legislation—

The Chairman: Order. Although I have done the hon. Gentleman the compliment of selecting his new clause, it is in a grouping under clause 4 and it would not be in order to refer to it at this stage.

Mr. Mackinlay: I take your point, Sir Alan and I will refer to the arguments advanced by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews). The thrust of his remarks was to cast doubt about whether there will be a second stage to this reform, to illustrate the problems of the interim House, how Members would be appointed to it and the patronage that would ensue.

Before consideration of the Bill by the House, I argued with Ministers that they should give Labour Members in particular, although not exclusively, some indication that they intended that there should be a second stage. Problems are presented by the so-called interim House, which many of us find unpalatable because of the amount of patronage involved. I tried to persuade Ministers that the Bill should contain some indication that there would be a second stage, but they said that it could not be done. The Parliament Act 1911 contained an indication of a second stage of reform, although it did not come about—it stated that it would lead to a democratically elected House. I do not think that one can pre-judge that, although I want a democratically elected House. The architects of this legislation should have put on the face of the Bill an indication that there would at least be some form of second stage. I regret that they felt unable to do so.

[Mr. Mackinlay]

I fear that, five years from now, despite the protestations of my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, we will not have had the second stage. That will in no way be a reflection on her. On the contrary, I am certain that she intends that there should be a second stage. However, I suspect that, some years from now, when some of us are asking when it will happen, she will no longer be Lord President of the Council. She will have moved on, or been moved on. Also, the Government will no doubt then face pressures similar to those faced by others who have been committed to radical reform of the upper House. They will say that there is not the legislative time. There will be other pressures—perhaps they will not be able to get the agreement of the Opposition. I believe that the whole matter will simply be kicked into touch.

8.30 pm

I give notice, Sir Alan: five years from this date, if I am returned at the next general election, I intend to stand on a point of order and draw attention to the official record of our deliberations this evening. I shall either strike my breast while saying, "Mea culpa, mea culpa, mea maxima culpa—I was wrong," or I shall show that the Government's commitments on introducing a second stage have not come about.

The reason why I am so concerned is patronage—which is addressed by the amendment moved by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway. I do not believe that it is possible to construct a method of appointment that will avoid all the problems or the sins of patronage, while giving representation to minorities, dissidents, the awkward squad, the eccentric and the bloody-minded. I put it to the Committee that all those ingredients are essential if there is to be true deliberation in a parliamentary Chamber.

It so happens that the democratic process, albeit crudely and inadequately, succeeds in throwing up the bloody-minded, the eccentric, the difficult and the truculent. Therefore, like many other hon. Members, I am drawn inexorably to the conclusion that, instead of patronage, we should have a democratically elected Chamber.

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Mackinlay: Yes, although I notice that the hon. Gentleman has only dipped into this debate.

Mr. Butterfill: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that it would be possible for the House of Commons to restrict the element of patronage available to the Prime Minister of the day by limiting the number of appointments that he could make and using alternative forms of patronage? My hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) has pointed out that judges and bishops sit in the upper House, not through the Prime Minister's patronage, but through other means. We could extend such patronage to trade unions, the Royal College of Nursing and to other professional bodies. The power of patronage need not belong exclusively to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Mackinlay: Either the hon. Gentleman has not been listening to me, or I have conveyed my argument inadequately. I am complaining not just about the patronage of the Prime Minister, but about patronage in general. The hon. Gentleman describes the great and the good, the glitterati—that magic circle of people who run the country whether the Government are Labour or Conservative. The system that he proposes will not produce people who are prepared to challenge the system.

Let me illustrate that point. As some hon. Members know, I am concerned about the democratic deficit in relation to Gibraltar. Once, in an argument with a Minister on the subject, I said that there should be representation for Gibraltar at Westminster; out of frustration, I suggested that Gibraltar should be given a seat in the House of Lords for a representative. The Minister paused and conceded that there might be something in my suggestion, but then added, "You're not suggesting that fool Bossano are you?" I tell that story because "fool" is Government-speak for someone who is truculent—an irritant. If one is truculent or an irritant, one is, ipso facto, a fool and so disqualified from receiving patronage.

That is reflected in many ways. Many Members of the House of Lords are articulate people who contribute fully to debates. However, when deciding whom we want in the second Chamber, we have to take into account human nature: I would never appoint someone who irritates me, nor would my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition. We need some way of throwing the irritants up into the upper Chamber and the only way to do that is through democracy.

Despite the power of the arguments advanced by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway, I was truly shocked and horrified by his suggestion that we should have a unicameral Parliament. I believe that we need an upper Chamber of Parliament that has legitimacy and some powers to frustrate and irritate the Government, whatever party is in office. I suspect that my new Labour colleagues will not be in government for ever—I hope that they last for a long time, but the ebb and flow of politics will continue in the United Kingdom—but we as legislators have to step back and recognise that we have to build in the means to frustrate the Government, whatever their colour.

I want the view of the House of Commons ultimately to prevail and I want the manifesto presented by the winning party to prevail. However, the devil is in the detail and that has to be fully examined, and that does not currently happen in the House of Commons; the upper House has traditionally had the potential to fulfil that role. I believe that we need a second Chamber that is comprised differently from the House of Commons and that can force a degree of reflection on the excesses of the Government, or on the badly drafted legislation that, from time to time, passes with some dispatch through Commons procedures.

My hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) says that such a Chamber would present a challenge to the House of Commons, but I do not accept that. Most democracies of a size similar to ours are bicameral and, overwhelmingly, they have a popular upper House that is entrenched in a written constitution. Lacking a written constitution, we could put a provision in primary legislation that the view of the House of Commons will ultimately prevail. That does not mean that there should not be a period of reflection. My hon Friend suggested that, if an upper House is elected, it will be equal to this House. First, I have demonstrated that that need not be the case. Secondly, it presupposes that the election for the other place would be held on the same day and for the same proportion of Members as the election for the House of Commons.

In an earlier debate, I expressed my view that, instead of patronage, there should be a rolling programme of fixed-term elections to another House, so that there is never at one time a snapshot that gives that House a mandate. Every Member would have legitimacy drawn from the people who elected him or her. Unless there were a massive and continual loss of confidence in a particular Government, the governing party would, even in the worst-case scenario, have a substantial, if not the largest, wedge of seats in the upper House. Of course, on occasions, the Executive would have to negotiate, work hard and persuade.

One of the problems of this place is that we have parliamentary dictatorship. That phrase was coined by Lord Hailsham—Quintin Hogg—probably in reference to the period following the 1983 general election, when there was a massive Conservative majority. Now the Labour party has a substantial majority and, although I welcome that, we need to review in detail propositions put forward by any Government with a large majority.

Mrs. Beckett: My hon. Friend should recognise—this is, I fear, a consistent pattern—that, when Lord Hailsham spoke about the dangers of elective dictatorship he was talking about the possibility of the Labour party holding such power. It never bothered him when the Conservative party was in that position.

Mr. Mackinlay: That may well be Lord Hailsham's position. He chopped and changed a great deal and moved about like a yo-yo.

The hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie) referred to possible abuse. If I cannot persuade the Committee of my view on the basis of Quintin Hogg's expression, I ask hon. Members to reflect on the large majorities produced by our existing electoral system, which I expect will endure for a long time. Governments obviously want enthusiastically to support and push through their manifesto, but a braking mechanism is necessary so that details are considered and such foolishness as the poll tax legislation does not result. That is a classic example of legislation being pushed through the House with no brakes being applied.

Mrs. Dunwoody: Will my hon. Friend bear it in mind that the method of election can produce a direct form of patronage? For example, he might think that a bicameral system that used proportional representation or a system of closed lists, in which parties rather than individuals are chosen on the basis of their position on a list, would produce checks and balances, but I have very severe reservations about that.

Mr. Mackinlay: If I trespassed on to that subject, Mr. Lord, you would pull me up. Obviously, I have views about a revised electoral system and the methods of selecting and electing candidates for the European Parliament.

We are trying to minimise patronage and abuse, and we cannot, in this Bill, legitimately sustain the case for a parliamentary Chamber that does not have a democratic base. I say to my hon. Friends, and also to Opposition Members: surely we can trust the electorate. Why are we so afraid of democratic elections for a parliamentary Chamber? Of course there would be a change of culture and a change in the relationship between the two Houses, but so be it—I welcome that. At present, far too much is choreographed and so much is certain.

Sir Patrick Cormack: Does the hon. Gentleman acknowledge that, if we had a wholly elected second Chamber—that option may eventually be chosen—enormous power would be given to the party machines and no Cross Benchers would ever be elected?

Mr. Mackinlay: I am pleased that the hon. Gentleman has mentioned Cross Benchers: they have no legitimacy whatsoever. Whom do they represent? Only themselves. Conservative Members have said that great contributions have been made by Cross Benchers, and indeed that is so, but many people who are not in the House of Lords would have made great contributions if they had been in the Lords. We can all think of wonderful people who, no doubt, if ennobled, would make wonderful contributions in the House of Lords. The choice of appointment is arbitrary. People who are Cross Benchers are those who have found the favour of a Prime Minister or Leader of the Opposition. Even when the Bill is passed, with this fancy commission, the oligarchy of the great and the good will still make the selection. There will not be many people from Dock road, Tilbury on the list, will there?

Sir Patrick Cormack: The hon. Gentleman misses the point. Two hundred and six or 210 of the Cross Benchers are hereditary, so they are not there as a result of immediate patronage. However, as we know to our cost in this Chamber, in an elected Chamber people can be elected only if they represent a party and have a party ticket. That gives enormous power of patronage—of choice—to the party. That is the sort of Chamber that we would have.

Mr. Mackinlay: I am prepared to do battle in my party, as I do, and I will live with that. Every democracy has imperfections, and it is a fact that political parties are controlled by party managers, but, by and large, I believe that we have shown, in our respective parties, that we can cope with that, and we shall endeavour to fight our corner. I am catching the eye of the Deputy Chief Whip, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley), who wants me to conclude. I shall do so in a moment, but that is an illustration of the fact that they want to choreograph everything. They find parliamentary debates irritating.

[Mr. Mackinlay]

Mr. Martin Bell (Tatton) rose—

Mr. Tyrie rose—

Mr. Mackinlay: I will give way to one independent in the Chamber.

Mr. Bell: Is the hon. Gentleman maintaining that a Cross Bencher has no part to play in this House?

Mr. Mackinlay: A Cross Bencher who is elected demonstrably has a large part to play in this House, because he has the mandate of the people to whom he presented himself at an election, but an appointed Cross Bencher has no mandate, and can speak for himself or herself only. They may or may not make common-sense contributions. In a democracy that has reached the stage that ours has, we cannot have people in Parliament who have no electoral base; it is absurd.

I urge my hon. Friends to try to prove me and other doubters wrong, by demonstrating much more forcefully that there will be a second stage. I should like to know, either in the debate or elsewhere, how the Labour party will prepare its evidence to the royal commission and whether, after that evidence has been presented to the royal commission, I am expected to sign up to whatever is presented. In this very important constitutional debate, we need some relaxation of rules of party discipline. We need the freedom to generate ideas and express them to ascertain reactions.

I suspect that, if there were a free vote in the House of Commons, there would be at least a narrow majority for a democratically elected upper House. However, we may well not be presented with that opportunity. In the absence of any constitutional convention, hon. Members are "the constitutional convention". I hope that that will be borne in mind.

I believe that my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, or whoever replies to the debate for the Government, has a duty on this occasion to flesh out how and when the Joint Committee will work. Will it be able to take evidence? Will its sittings be limited? What will be its size and scale? There is nothing to prevent the Joint Committee from comprising the whole House. I believe that the recent Australian Constitutional Convention embraced most of the Members of the House of Representatives. We need to know that, because we are acquiescing in something without knowing all the ground rules.

8.45 pm

Mr. Wells: Amendment No. 13 is a compromise. Unfortunately, it says:

"or shall in future be appointed a member of the House of Lords by the exercise of patronage".

I would have preferred it to continue, "or shall be appointed by a member of the House of Lords by exercise of patronage"—in which case we would have left the House of Lords without hereditary peers or life peers, but with bishops and Law Lords only. In so doing, we would point up the fact that this Bill is a leap into the dark—as my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) said. It is a leap into the dark because we do not know the membership of the two Chambers committee. We now know some of the composition of the royal commission—and we are all drawing our own conclusions from its chairmanship and membership as to its remit. It is certainly not intended to engage in a serious discussion about important constitutional matters—if for no other reason than it is to report within nine months.

My starting point is not the same as that of the hon. and learned Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews). I would leave the House of Lords roughly as it is at present, with some major changes regarding retirement arrangements and size. It is a strange and a crazy place. I believe that the right to sit in a legislature by virtue of birth is crazy and unacceptable. However, I would leave the House of Lords undisturbed because it is doing some useful work—which I acknowledge and pay tribute to, as did the Leader of the House, my hon. Friend the Member for South Staffordshire (Sir P. Cormack) and many others. Yet this Bill will not allow the House of Lords to remain as it is—we must face that fact.

It has been suggested that we should consider electing people to the House of Lords. That is clearly one option. It has also been suggested that we should continue the patronage system and appoint an unspecified number of people to the House of Lords by virtue of their success in life or, by some other means, provide the majority in the House of Lords that is necessary in order to pass without delay or obstruction whatever legislation the House of Commons has decided upon.

It is clear that that is what the Government intend: they are prepared to appoint at least 55 people in addition to the appointments that they have already made to the House of Lords to ensure that there is a rough balance between Conservative and Labour Members, without taking into account Cross Benchers who will support much of the Government legislation. The Government's objective is clear: they wish to create a Chamber that will be subservient to this place and will do what they say.

That appointed Chamber will be created by virtue of patronage of the grossest kind and the exercise of increasing Executive power. The right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) and many other hon. Members have drawn attention to the immense power of the Prime Minister, which he gains by means of Crown patronage and by using the monarch in order to extend his power well beyond the capacity of the House of Commons to gainsay him or call him to account. Without this amendment, the Bill would leave us in that position.

The amendment would make us think about where we are going. I think that we are being driven inexorably down the route of a unicameral Parliament. There is no way that any Prime Minister or Executive will endorse a scheme of elections that will second-guess the House of Commons that they control. They simply will not do it: turkeys do not vote for Christmas and Prime Ministers do not vote for second Chambers that obstruct their power and control over the House of Commons. That is entirely logical.

An elected second Chamber may seem like a nice idea, but why do we need a second Chamber to second-guess the first Chamber if it is working properly? We must consider that question in relation to this Bill. The House of Commons is not working properly because of the huge patronage power of the Prime Minister, because we do not consider Bills properly, and because Select Committee procedures are incomplete. Much reform is needed. Once we pass the Bill, the House of Commons must reform and recapture the power that it has lost to the Executive over the years.

I commend the amendment because it will prevent the creation of a Chamber of which we cannot be certain whether it is temporary or permanent. The present one, as I pointed out earlier, has lasted 88 years. Once the Government get control of the second Chamber, they will have increased power of patronage. Lord Cranborne told me that, despite the House of Lords being dismissed as a useless debating chamber, he has people from the Conservative side of affairs who have given some service, usually to industry and business, but also to sport, the arts and so on, lining up to become life peers and wanting the exercise of patronage.

The House that would be created by the Bill without the amendment would fall in public opinion and would be seen to be made up of Tony's cronies. Presumably, after the Prime Minister has left office, it would consist of the next Prime Minister's cronies. That is a despicable way to appoint a second Chamber. We shall not get an elected Chamber, and we shall have huge arguments over that. An elected Chamber would quarrel with this Chamber.

We are therefore inexorably driven to a unicameral Parliament. If there is to be a unicameral Parliament, we must recapture the powers over the Executive that this House has lost, and we shall have to reform this House in great detail.

Mr. Fisher: I welcome the amendment, as it gives us the opportunity to discuss what role, if any, should be played by appointment and patronage in determining the membership of the second Chamber.

At last we are reforming the House of Lords and abolishing the hereditary principle. That is long overdue, and I congratulate the Government on fulfilling their manifesto commitment to end the hereditary principle. There are, however, two aspects of the House of Lords that I find unacceptable. The first is that its membership is, in large part, hereditary. The second is that it is not democratically elected. The Bill attempts to reform only the first of those two defects.

The amendment is important because it allows us to discuss the second defect. The question goes right to the heart of politics: how should any society decide who should govern, who should legislate and who should determine the membership of the bodies that legislate and govern? I believe that all the key legislative and administrative institutions, and above all Parliament, should be elected by the people, by direct democratic election.

Throughout this century, ever since the 1911 Act, we have tolerated the hereditary and unelected House of Lords because we could not change it. Here at last we have a Labour Government with a good working majority, a will to challenge the House of Lords and the mandate to reform it. I have waited for all that for the 35 years that I have been in the Labour party and all my political life.

That is wonderful, but we are planning to correct only one of the political defects of the House of Lords, and we seem to be planning to perpetuate the other. Is that the case? What will the royal commission consider? Is the Government's mind still open to a wholly elected second Chamber? I believe that it is for this Chamber and the Government to determine the principles on which the other Chamber should be constituted, and it is for the royal commission to consider the details.

Tonight we are discussing the principle—the shape. That should not be left to a royal commission. It is a matter that only an elected body such as ourselves—elected by the people of this country—should determine. There is an enormous distinction between the principles and the detail.

If the royal commission is not to consider the principles, why is it that the Government appear to believe in appointment and in patronage as the way of determining membership of the second Chamber? They do not believe in that for any other body. They have done extraordinary work in creating an Assembly for Wales and a Parliament for Scotland, and in restarting directly elected democracy in Northern Ireland. There is no element of appointment or patronage in any of that—everybody is directly elected.

What about local government, where the Government also plan reforms? If any Opposition Member proposed that the reform of local government should be based on patronage and appointment, rather than direct election, the Government would rightly ridicule any such suggestion and laugh it out of court. What about the European Parliament, to which there was indirect appointment, rather than election, until 1979? Would the Government want to return to an appointed European Parliament? If not—and, of course, they would not—why do they want to have a system of appointment built into the membership of the second Chamber?

Mr. Gerald Howarth: The hon. Gentleman talks about the European Parliament. Is he aware that a Labour Member of the European Parliament was effectively deprived, not of his membership of the European Parliament, but certainly of the Labour Whip, by the withdrawal of patronage by the Prime Minister on the ground that that Labour MEP opposed the closed-list system?

Mr. Fisher: That individual is a Member of the European Parliament for the duration of the Parliament, because he was elected by his constituents. He is a Member by election, not by appointment.

Mrs. Beckett: That person walked out.

Mr. Fisher: I give way to my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House.

Mrs. Beckett: I was not intervening on my hon. Friend, but should say to the hon. Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth), who clearly does not know what he is talking about, that nobody was deprived of the Labour Whip. A couple of people chose to leave the Labour party in circumstances where nobody was seeking to remove them. That was nothing whatever to do with the closed list and the hon. Gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Fisher: I entirely agree with my right hon. Friend. We are discussing how to determine membership. Those people are Members of the European Parliament because they were elected to it.

[Mr. Fisher]

My hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick), whom I respect in many matters, does not want a directly elected second Chamber because it would have a legitimacy that would threaten this Chamber. I believe that he is fundamentally wrong—there is a great difference between primacy and legitimacy. That view was held by Mr. Michael Foot, and others whom I also respect, but it is a poor argument and simply not true.

Fundamentally, that argument lacks confidence in this Chamber and in our ability to design a remit for the second Chamber that would provide legitimacy of its own, but not legitimacy that had primacy over us. It would be for this Chamber—in determining our role and that of the second Chamber—to determine the separation of powers and maintain our primacy.

Mr. Grieve: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Fisher: The Committee wants to move swiftly to a vote, so, if the hon. Gentleman does not mind, I will not give way. He has already spoken.

If the amendment is put to a vote, I shall vote for it. I have never voted against the Government, and I shall do so with considerable regret and sadness, but this question goes to the heart of our politics. As several hon. Members have said, it is a simple question: who should decide who sits in Parliament? I believe that it should be the people. We are accountable to our constituents. That is what gives us our authority. That is why we are Members of Parliament. The same should be true of the whole of our Parliament—of the other Chamber, as well. The people should decide who sits in that Chamber, not Members of this House. We have our chance to extend that principle of democracy right across our Parliament. We should grasp it.

9 pm

Mr. Letwin: It has been a privilege for someone relatively new to the House to listen to the entire debate, which has been occasioned by the amendment tabled by the hon. and learned Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews) and colleagues from both sides of the House. His eloquence and that of my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd), the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), my hon. Friend the Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie) and others has been occasioned by the fact that this group of amendments takes us to the heart of the great issues that the Bill raises.

At the heart of the Bill is the question whether the Executive currently have an overweening power that must be addressed, whether the Bill in its current form and without amendment does that, or whether the Bill as drafted makes that problem worse.

On Second Reading, my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) and I argued vigorously in the first day's debate that this country suffers from a lack of scrutiny of critical measures that come before us in this House and in the other place. There is a lack of scrutiny of the Administration, of the 3,000-odd statutory instruments that come before us, of the legislation by prerogative power in Brussels, of appropriations and primary legislation. We argued then and I argue now that, without any of the amendments, the Bill does nothing to solve any of those problems. In fact, it worsens them, because, as many hon. Members on both sides have said, it creates a second Chamber that is even more in the hands of the Executive—were that possible—than today's Chamber.

The question that we have been debating for the past few hours is how best to address that problem within the confines of the Bill. The amendment of the hon. and learned Member for Medway is a radical solution that, in many respects, attracts us. It would become yet more radical by intention if amendment No. 15 tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills were accepted. If the amendment was tabled with the purpose of allowing us to speak about the final solution for the House of Lords—if I can use that dreadful phrase, by which I mean the second phase—it has provoked the profoundest reflections, expressed in the right spirit. We owe my hon. Friend a great favour.

It is the duty of Her Majesty's Opposition to consider what has, alas, befallen us. We are not merely a debating society discussing a possible future phase 2. I think that it was the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) who said that, in the absence of a constitutional convention, the House is the constitutional convention. We face the reality that, as things stand, the House is so in the grip of the Executive that, de facto, it is they who are turning into the constitutional convention, and they have been able to introduce wide-ranging constitutional reforms with hardly a check. As a result, there is a great likelihood that we will have a second Chamber that is interim in name only. That point has repeatedly been made today, yesterday and on Second Reading by hon. Members on both sides of the House.

It falls to Her Majesty's Opposition—I hope that the Government will feel that it falls to them also—to consider the question of how we shall be governed in what may be a very long interim period. In that context, we see a problem with the amendment tabled by the hon. and learned Member for Medway. Although it serves admirably to force the issue and to push towards phase 2, were it to be implemented in the form in which he proposes it, and were there never to be such a phase or were there to be a prolonged interim period, the power of the other place would dwindle remarkably. If amendment No. 15 were also accepted, a further problem would ensue. Indeed, we might have a House that was no House at all: we might have unicameralism by default. In that event, hon. Members who seek that as a long-term solution would have achieved their goal, but I suspect that they are few in number, and that neither Her Majesty's Opposition nor the Government seek such a result at present.

We must address the serious question of how we are to deal with a Bill that will bring us an interim Chamber, and try to find a solution to the problem that amendment No. 13 rightly raises.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: Does the hon. Gentleman really believe what he has just said? If the amendment were passed, it would concentrate the Government's mind something wonderful, and it would not defer the long-term reform of the House of Lords that all Labour Members support root and branch; indeed, it would hasten it beyond our dreams.

Mr. Letwin: The hon. and learned Gentleman is right. It would concentrate the mind something wonderful, and, taken with amendment No. 14, it would concentrate it even more. Alas, that is the very reason why, I am presumptuous enough to guess, the Government will not accept either amendment. We therefore face a practical problem: we shall have an interim House that will not benefit from amendments of this kind for the very reason advanced by the hon. and learned Gentleman—that it would force an early move to a system to which we believe the Government have not the slightest intention of moving in the early future.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: Is it not nonsensical to suggest that the transitional House will extend into the indefinite future without collusion between the two Front Benches? If the Liberal Democrats and the official Opposition are calling for a directly elected Second Chamber, it simply is not practical politics—especially given the divisions on the Labour Benches—for the transitional House to continue indefinitely. It will not happen.

Mr. Letwin: I fear that the divisions of which the hon. Gentleman speaks—the divisions in the Labour party—will prevent the Government from moving rapidly towards a system that would split their party very fast. The Government may have the necessary courage; Opposition Members hope that they will. They may establish a royal commission that will produce serious results, but, in framing the commission's terms of reference, they have done their best to prevent such an eventuality. None of us has any more faith than the hon. Gentleman's colleague, the right hon. Member for Chesterfield, that the interim solution will soon disappear and give way to phase 2. Even if it does, there will be a period during which the interim solution is the solution: during which—this is the serious aspect of today's debate—we shall have a House of Parliament formed by the Bill.

This is not just a debating society; we are making a constitution, for at least a period. The hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) is bound to grant me that. I speculate that it will be a long period, and he thinks that it will be short, but for a time that will be our constitution.

Because the Government, however regrettably, will not accept the amendments, my hon. Friend the Member for Chichester has come up with a different proposal: an attempt to control patronage by means of an Appointments Commission, whose members will be appointed by the Speaker and which will be free from prime ministerial patronage. Perhaps the Government will see fit to accept his proposal, which would be splendid. The Opposition, however—some of my hon. Friends may blame me for this—have learnt something from the excessively supine attitude of Liberal Democrats. We have sought to table new clauses that are eirenic, constructive and abominably nice from the Government's point of view—new clauses that make it as easy as possible for the Government actually and practically to address, within the spirit of their own measure, the problem to which their Bill would give rise without such amendment. That is the intention of new clauses 5, 4 and 3.

I put the new clauses in that order because we designed them to meet specific aims. New clause 5 is intended to give the widest possible effect to our intentions. If the Government reject it because they think that it goes too far, we offer them new clause 4; if the Government think that even that goes too far, why! in our boundless attempt to be "Liberal Democrat" and constructive in our pursuit of a less bad Bill, we offer them new clause 3.

New clause 5 is based on a document to which my hon. Friend the Member for Chichester referred and which should be familiar to Ministers. That document states:

> "Our objective will be to ensure that over time party appointees as life peers more accurately reflect the proportion of votes cast at the previous general election. We are committed to maintaining an independent cross-bench presence of life peers."

It is not a document that will appear unduly revolutionary to Ministers. It is, of course, the Labour party manifesto. New clause 5 should have the appearance of some legitimacy as it attempts to translate into legislative practice precisely the words that I have just read from the Labour party manifesto. In so doing, it tries to remove some—only some, but some—of the power of the Executive through the patronage of the Prime Minister under the Crown.

New clause 5 gives the Appointments Commission statutory existence in the first place. In passing, may I say that it is remarkable that the Bill does not do that? It is remarkable because, throughout the passage of the Bill, Ministers have said that they intend to have such an Appointments Commission and have made much of the fact that the commission, rather than the Prime Minister, will appoint Cross Benchers. Is it not odd, then, that there is no Appointments Commission mentioned in the Bill? Through new clause 5, we introduce such a commission. We also invoke a rule of double proportionality: first, that the appointments that the commission makes in respect of party representatives should be proportional to the results of the votes in the last general election; and, secondly, that Cross Benchers should be appointed in proportion to the number of people not voting in the last election.

I do not describe those devices as grand or wonderful. They are simply a constructive attempt to get through to Ministers something better than the ghastly, overweening patronage in the Bill. What better source for that can we possibly find than the proposals in the Labour party manifesto?

Mr. Winnick: The hon. Gentleman criticises at every opportunity the patronage of the present Government. As an Opposition spokesman, there is no reason why he should not do that, but the Prime Minister has said that he will give up the veto on nominations by the Conservative party and other political parties. Is the hon. Gentleman aware—obviously, he was not in the House at the time—that, following the 1983 election, Michael Foot, then Labour leader, made a number of nominations and the then Prime Minister, Lady Thatcher, vetoed nearly all of them? That was excessive patronage by the then Prime Minister over nominations by the Opposition party. That was an abuse of patronage.

Mr. Letwin: I am glad that the hon. Gentleman raises that point because the next thing that new clause 5 does is precisely designed to address that. It puts in the hands of the Speaker the appointments of the Appointments Commission. It distances the commission entirely from prime ministerial patronage. That is surely an aim that Labour Members, Conservative Members and Ministers should share.

[Mr. Letwin]

New clauses 4 and 3 are merely variants on that theme. They attempt to give, by statute, registered political parties—hence without the Prime Minister's veto of which the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) speaks—and the Speaker, via the Appointments Commission, a clear role in appointments which distances those appointments from the Prime Minister.

I cannot understand why Ministers should find it difficult to accept one or other of the new clauses—of course, in some revised form if Ministers object to their drafting. Any one of them would at least represent an important advance on a Bill that will create a new Chamber that may last a long time, and will have the disastrous effect of putting in place a huge number of new placemen.

Mr. Winnick: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for allowing me to intervene so soon after my first intervention.

Does the hon. Gentleman accept that what Lady Thatcher did in 1983 was a great abuse of patronage, which has never been repeated by the present Prime Minister and that there has never been the slightest suggestion that he would do so?

9.15 pm

Mr. Letwin: The hon. Gentleman sorely tempts me to start repeating some of what my hon. Friend the Member for Chichester said about current patronage, but I shall not, because I do not want now to engage in party political bickering. We are talking about a Bill that very soon will create a new House. Surely it falls to us to try to remedy the problems to which the hon. Gentleman alluded—regardless of which party gives rise to the problems or the Government who are responsible for them. Many hon. Members have spoken eloquently to that purpose in this debate, and I do not see why we should allow ourselves to descend into party political bickering when such a matter is under consideration.

It may be argued that there is no need for this group of amendments. I half suspect that, in his reply, the Minister will tell us that there is no need for them. He will tell us, perhaps, that the Neill Committee, the Political Honours Scrutiny Committee and I know not what other worthy bodies—of which there are many—can be appointed by the Prime Minister but that their members can, nevertheless, display an admirable independence. That is perfectly and abundantly true.

Members of the Neill Committee have been—to the Government's considerable discomfiture—extremely independent-minded in their critique, for example, of the recent Welsh referendum. We shall owe to them much of what I hope will be enacted by passage of the Referendums Bill, promoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan), and in the Government's future legislation. I do not for a moment deny that we will owe such future provision to the independence of those committee members.

Before the Minister makes that argument today, however, I hope that he will reflect on the fact that his own logic is utterly destroyed by his own proposals. If the Minister really believes that the Prime Minister will be able to appoint or select Members of the upper House on a basis that will ensure their independence, the Government do not need an Appointments Commission.

It is very odd that the Leader of the House should have made such great play of the fact that the Prime Minister will hand over selection of Cross Benchers to such a commission. If the Prime Minister is capable entirely of selecting an independent Appointments Commission, why not simply select an entirely independent set of Cross Benchers? The fact is that the Government have admitted that there is at the very least a problem of appearance, and possibly—

Mrs. Beckett: We have the Nolan principles.

Mr. Letwin: We know that; there are all sorts of Nolan principles, which could apply also to the selection of peers—why not? They cannot because the right hon. Lady and her colleagues admit implicitly that there is a problem at least of appearance and perhaps in reality.

The Government believe that we need an Appointments Commission. Why not therefore move one stage further, at least, and hand the selection of that commission to the Speaker—as all hon. Members have confidence in that source? Alternatively, why not allow the registered political parties to make, without a veto, political appointments to the Appointments Commission? We offer either alternative, or both, with or without the Labour party manifesto's own proportionality rules. We offer a complete menu of possibilities.

Today, it falls to the Government to show the Committee that they really mean not to increase—as, unfortunately, we suspect that they do mean to increase—patronage by adopting at least one of our proposals, given that they are, alas, unlikely to adopt the far more radical proposals of the hon. and learned Member for Medway or my hon. Friends the Members for Aldridge-Brownhills and for Chichester.

Mr. Tipping: This has been a wide-ranging debate. Some hon. Members may think that it has ranged too widely. Although the debate has sometimes been emotive, we can be proud of its vigour, and of the light that it has shed in the Chamber. I intend to stick to the narrow parameters of amendment No. 13, and shall perhaps be the only hon. Member to do so.

As we know, the Bill is a simple one, and will remove hereditary peers from the other place. It is fascinating that, although the Bill focuses on hereditary peers, for the past two and a half or three hours the debate has focused on life peers.

Mr. Shepherd: I am slightly puzzled. It sounds as though the Minister is winding up, and I am not sure why he should be. Other hon. Members seem to want to speak to the amendments in Committee.

The Second Deputy Chairman of Ways and Means (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. That is a matter for the occupant of the Chair.

Mr. Tipping: I am sure that the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd), who has much more experience in these matters than I do, will know that it is a matter for the Chairman. I look forward to hearing your decision, Mr. Lord.

The focus has been on life peers and how they should be selected in the interim stage. The other main subject of the debate has been the powers of patronage. My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews) made a strong speech on the subject, describing his amendments as short but perfectly formed. I thought for a moment that he was applying the description to himself. However, the deficiencies in his amendments became clear when he was challenged by my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Mr. Leslie) and by the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills. If my hon. and learned Friend's amendments were passed, Labour Ministers would not be able to appoint to the interim House, but Conservatives would.

Mr. Andrew Lansley (South Cambridgeshire): If amendment No.13 and new clause 17 were both passed, would it not be possible for the prerogative to be exercised by the Appointments Commission? That would not result in the interim House dwindling away as the Minister suggests.

Mr. Tipping: I listened carefully to the interesting and scholarly speech of the hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie). We are talking about trying to balance the numbers of Labour and Tory peers, but his new clause would result in Tory peers keeping control of the House. He has not done his sums. When we challenged him on how long it would take to achieve equity in the upper House, he did not have the answer. It would take a long time. One of the themes of the debate is that, when the Conservatives are faced with losing influence and power in the upper House, they switch to arguments about how peers should be found for the interim Chamber.

Mr. Tyrie: It is a shame that the Minister is suggesting that my new clause was an attempt at a party political fix. It was nothing of the sort, despite the mutterings of the Leader of the House. I made it clear that I am sympathetic towards other proposals, which would not necessarily sit with this group of amendments, that would result in roughly equal numbers of Labour and Conservative Members in the upper House. I referred to the possible introduction of a retirement age of 75. I have done my sums on that idea, which would leave Labour with six more Members than the Conservatives. It is a travesty to suggest that I have been engaged in a party political fix.

Mr. Tipping: The hon. Gentleman may confuse his intention with the effect of his new clause, which would be negligible change. I would have more sympathy with the hon. Gentleman's point had he not made so much play of what he called the Prime Minister's abuse of power. I know that he has consulted the record carefully, but he has not told the full story. Conservative Prime Ministers have used their powers of patronage to a similar extent to the present Prime Minister.

Mr. Lansley rose—

Mr. Tipping: I shall not give way any more. I have been generous with my time. I have listened to a great many speeches from Conservative Members.

My hon. Friend the Member for Shipley pointed out deficiencies in the amendment. The hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills had to table a new amendment to make up for those deficiencies. My hon. and learned Friend would say that he was not worried about the technicalities or the drafting, but that he was interested in the big picture—the vision thing. However, the vision thing about which he tried to tell us—as is often his way—was the abuse of patronage by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: My hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Mr. Leslie) was simply wrong to say that the Opposition could appoint by recommendation to the House. Does my hon. Friend the Minister accept that?

Mr. Tipping: If my hon. and learned Friend consults the record tomorrow, he will see that he acknowledged the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley. We are aware of the dangers inherent in prime ministerial control of access to the fount of honour. We have suffered from that in the past, and that is why the current Prime Minister—unprecedentedly—has taken steps to reduce his sole powers of patronage.

Let me remind the Committee of those steps. First, we have committed ourselves not to seek more than broad parity of numbers with the main Opposition party, and to allow proportionate creations for the Liberal Democrats and other parties, including Cross Benchers. That is a smaller share of the overall strength of the House than we proposed in the manifesto, and we will still be in a 2:1 minority in the House.

Secondly, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has promised that we will not interfere in the details of nominations from the other party leaders or from the Appointments Commission. That is the first time that such a public commitment has been given. Conservative Members may complain, but their record on constitutional change during their 18 years in power can be described only as a black hole.

Finally, we have undertaken to set up an independent Appointments Commission to make recommendations for Cross-Bench peers. I will not go into the detail of the arrangement now, but there is one issue to which I wish to draw attention. The new body will take over the functions of the Political Honours Scrutiny Committee in relation to all peerages. That means vetting them for propriety. The standards of propriety in question will be those recommended by Lord Neill in his report on the funding of political parties. The arrangements for ascertaining whether a peerage has in any way been bought will be strengthened. That will apply to all peerages, including those recommended by the party leaders.

The hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) who spoke—or, perhaps, wound up—for the Opposition, spoke at length of the deficiencies in the amendment tabled by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway, although he was, in principle, sympathetic. He felt that it would not be acceptable to the Government—or, perhaps, to himself—for reasons that he spelled out. At a very late stage, the hon. Gentleman mentioned for the first time new clauses 3, 4 and 5.

The hon. Member for West Dorset described, quite rightly, new clause 3 as the minimalist position, built on—in a step-ladder approach—by new clauses 4 and 5.

[Mr. Tipping]

He tried to persuade us that the appointments body that he would ask the Speaker to set up would be better than the Appointments Commission that we recommend. He said that our Appointments Commission would be set up under the Nolan rules. I remind him that those Nolan rules were introduced by the previous Conservative Government and were strengthened by this Government.

Mr. Letwin: If the Nolan rules are good enough for the appointment of that commission—and if there is no problem with something appointed by the Prime Minister under the Nolan rules—why not use the Nolan rules to appoint Members of the other place?

9.30 pm

Mr. Tipping: It remains to be seen whether the Nolan rules can be applied to the body that the hon. Gentleman recommends. It is not clear what accountability would apply to the form of commission proposed in new clause 3. Is Madam Speaker being asked to apply Nolan principles? Will there be a fixed term of membership? What rules will the commission have to follow in selecting names? With the greatest respect to Madam Speaker, has she the necessary resources? I believe that a tried and tested set of procedures, instituted by the Tories and strengthened by us, is preferable to what the new clauses would do.

Hon. Members of all parties have been gripped tonight by the idea of the interim House. How long is that interim House to remain? Let me remind hon. Members of our manifesto commitment to remove hereditary peers from the second Chamber. We have set up a royal commission with an independent—a Tory—chairman, to report by the end of the year. What the White Paper says is our intention. The royal commission is being asked to report by the end of 1999, to enable the Government to make every effort to ensure that the second stage of reform has been approved by Parliament by the time of the general election.

We are determined to honour our manifesto commitment. We have begun, as the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan) said, an evolutionary, step-by-step process. I am confident that we can keep to the timetable.

Change is occurring. There has been a remarkable change in the attitude of Tory Members towards hereditary peers. There has been a change in the pace of debate. There is now a real desire for open debate both with and within the royal commission. Let us have the confidence, after years of struggle, to achieve that change. This time, it is in our grasp, if we take the route that the Government have recommended and reject the amendments and new clauses.

Sir Teddy Taylor: Because of patronage and the current lack of pressure, some of us thought that there would not be a vote on the amendment, as there have not been votes on many other controversial amendments. In case there is a vote, I hope that the hon. and learned Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews) appreciates that quite a few of those who will vote for the amendment utterly reject his arguments and his scenario for the future. The amendment would achieve what I want to achieve, but not what he wants to achieve.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: I cannot think of a better solution than to have the hon. Gentleman voting with me but rejecting all the arguments that I have made.

Sir Teddy Taylor: The last thing that I want is to form a popular front, but, as the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) pointed out, people might look at the record, and I would not want them to think that I was supporting the hon. and learned Member for Medway because of his absurd arguments.

The idea that abolishing hereditary peers and putting life peers in their place gets rid of patronage is a load of old codswallop. There is far more patronage involved in appointing life peers than in the succession of hereditary peers.

If we get rid of hereditary peers and have an elected House instead, as the hon. and learned Member for Medway would like, the Government should appreciate what we are doing to the constitution. I have just come back from Scotland. The House of Commons has always followed the idea that one person should represent an area and be answerable to its people, but now in Scotland people will have a Euro Member, although goodness knows what he is meant to do; a Westminster Member, with no power to handle Scottish affairs; regional Scottish Members, although no one knows what they are meant to do; directly elected Scottish Members; and councillors. It is nonsense. People might have five separate representatives, all of different parties. Instead of trying to deal with people's problems, they will simply blame each other.

We will not help if, on top of that mess, we tell the people of Glasgow that we want them to elect a senator as well. I hope that the hon. and learned Member for Medway, who has great ideas on legal matters, will appreciate that, if we go down that road, we will have an army of politicians and create confusion where we used to have a good system.

The House of Lords performs the limited job of making the Executive stop and think for a year. Basically, that can be done by the hereditary peers, who in no way try to overturn the political views of the House of Commons. The figures in fact show that more proposals from Conservative Governments have been stopped than proposals from Labour Governments. If we are to abolish that useful, limited constitutional safeguard, it would be better to have no second Chamber at all.

If we go ahead and have another elected Chamber, it will cost a lot of money and create much confusion. In addition, it will destroy many of the principles of our democracy that have worked well. It is very easy to muck everything up. People should appreciate that our constitution has served us well. I and others will vote for the amendment, but certainly not for the absurd, republican views expressed by the hon. and learned Member for Medway.

Mr. Grieve: I shall be brief. The speech made by the Parliamentary Secretary was a classic of new Labour, in that what was being offered was new patronage—a sanitised version of the old patronage. I can understand why he made it, but it was not good enough.

I have had serious reservations about the direction in which the second Chamber should go. By having a directly elected second Chamber, can we achieve and keep some of the qualities evident in the independence of the present House of Lords? That question has caused me some concern, and I have sometimes wondered whether some form of appointed—or partially appointed—second Chamber might not be sensible.

However, I am bound to say that the more I have considered the matter, the more convinced I have become that the general thrust of what the hon. and learned Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall-Andrews) says is correct. I believe that we need an elected second Chamber, and that we should apply ourselves creatively to determining the system of any election that might be held, the timing of that election and the criteria governing it. We must try to ensure that those who go to the second Chamber, which will have more limited functions, will be able to reflect a greater spirit of independence from party control than is evident in this House. That would create a good system of checks and balances for the future.

On that basis, the hon. and learned Member for Medway has done a great service to the House by providing the vehicle for this debate. He is to be commended for what he has done.

Question put, That the amendment be made:—

The Committee divided: Ayes 51, Noes 269.

Division No. 69] [9.39 pm

AYES

Allan, Richard
Atkinson, Peter (Hexham)
Barnes, Harry
Bell, Martin (Tatton)
Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Bennett, Andrew F
Best, Harold
Brake, Tom
Butler, Mrs Christine
Caton, Martin
Chaytor, David
Clapham, Michael
Clifton-Brown, Geoffrey
Cummings, John
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (Llanelli)
Dawson, Hilton
Etherington, Bill
Ewing, Mrs Margaret
Fisher, Mark
Flight, Howard
Flynn, Paul
Godman, Dr Norman A
Grieve, Dominic
Hancock, Mike
Heath, David (Somerton & Frome)
Hogg, Rt Hon Douglas
Hopkins, Kelvin
Hurst, Alan
Jones, Ms Jenny (Wolverh'ton SW)
Lewis, Terry (Worsley)
Livingstone, Ken
Llwyd, Elfyn
McAllion, John
McDonnell, John
Mahon, Mrs Alice
Marshall-Andrews, Robert
Mitchell, Austin
Morgan, Alasdair (Galloway)
Prentice, Gordon (Pendle)
Sanders, Adrian
Sawford, Phil
Sedgemore, Brian
Shepherd, Richard
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Llew (Blaenau Gwent)
Stott, Roger
Swinney, John
Taylor, Sir Teddy
Wareing, Robert N
Wise, Audrey
Wright, Anthony D (Gt Yarmouth)

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Bill Michie and
Mr. Bowen Wells.

NOES

Adams, Mrs Irene (Paisley N)
Ainger, Nick
Ainsworth, Robert (Cov'try NE)
Anderson, Donald (Swansea E)
Armstrong, Ms Hilary
Ashton, Joe
Austin, John
Banks, Tony
Barron, Kevin
Bayley, Hugh
Beard, Nigel
Beckett, Rt Hon Mrs Margaret
Begg, Miss Anne
Benton, Joe
Berry, Roger
Betts, Clive
Blears, Ms Hazel
Blizzard, Bob
Borrow, David
Bradley, Peter (The Wrekin)
Bradshaw, Ben
Brinton, Mrs Helen
Buck, Ms Karen
Burden, Richard
Burgon, Colin
Burnett, John
Byers, Rt Hon Stephen
Campbell, Mrs Anne (C'bridge)
Campbell, Menzies (NE Fife)
Campbell-Savours, Dale
Cann, Jamie
Caplin, Ivor
Casale, Roger
Chapman, Ben (Wirral S)
Chisholm, Malcolm
Clark, Rt Hon Dr David (S Shields)
Clark, Paul (Gillingham)
Clarke, Eric (Midlothian)
Clarke, Rt Hon Tom (Coatbridge)
Clarke, Tony (Northampton S)
Clwyd, Ann
Coaker, Vernon
Coffey, Ms Ann
Coleman, Iain
Connarty, Michael
Cook, Frank (Stockton N)
Cooper, Yvette
Corbett, Robin
Cousins, Jim
Cox, Tom
Cranston, Ross
Crausby, David
Cryer, Mrs Ann (Keighley)
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Cunningham, Rt Hon Dr Jack (Copeland)
Cunningham, Jim (Cov'try S)
Darvill, Keith
Davey, Edward (Kingston)
Davey, Valerie (Bristol W)
Davidson, Ian
Davies, Geraint (Croydon C)
Davies, Rt Hon Ron (Caerphilly)
Davis, Terry (B'ham Hodge H)
Dean, Mrs Janet
Denham, John
Dewar, Rt Hon Donald
Dismore, Andrew
Dobbin, Jim
Dobson, Rt Hon Frank
Donohoe, Brian H
Doran, Frank
Dowd, Jim
Drew, David
Drown, Ms Julia
Eagle, Angela (Wallasey)
Eagle, Maria (L'pool Garston)
Edwards, Huw
Efford, Clive
Ellman, Mrs Louise
Ennis, Jeff
Fatchett, Rt Hon Derek
Fitzsimons, Lorna
Follett, Barbara
Foster, Don (Bath)
Foster, Michael Jabez (Hastings)
Gapes, Mike
George, Bruce (Walsall S)
Gerrard, Neil
Gibson, Dr Ian
Gilroy, Mrs Linda
Godsiff, Roger
Gordon, Mrs Eileen
Griffiths, Jane (Reading E)
Griffiths, Nigel (Edinburgh S)
Griffiths, Win (Bridgend)
Grocott, Bruce
Grogan, John
Gunnell, John
Hall, Mike (Weaver Vale)
Hall, Patrick (Bedford)
Hamilton, Fabian (Leeds NE)
Hanson, David
Harman, Rt Hon Ms Harriet
Harris, Dr Evan
Heal, Mrs Sylvia
Heppell, John
Hesford, Stephen
Hewitt, Ms Patricia
Hodge, Ms Margaret
Hoey, Kate
Home Robertson, John
Hood, Jimmy
Hope, Phil
Howarth, George (Knowsley N)
Hughes, Ms Beverley (Stretford)
Hughes, Kevin (Doncaster N)
Humble, Mrs Joan
Hutton, John
Iddon, Dr Brian
Illsley, Eric
Jackson, Ms Glenda (Hampstead)
Jackson, Helen (Hillsborough)
Jamieson, David
Jenkins, Brian
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Jones, Helen (Warrington N)
Jones, Martyn (Clwyd S)
Jowell, Rt Hon Ms Tessa
Kaufman, Rt Hon Gerald
Keeble, Ms Sally
Keen, Alan (Feltham & Heston)
Keen, Ann (Brentford & Isleworth)
Kidney, David
Kilfoyle, Peter
King, Andy (Rugby & Kenilworth)
Kumar, Dr Ashok
Ladyman, Dr Stephen
Lawrence, Ms Jackie
Laxton, Bob
Leslie, Christopher
Levitt, Tom
Lewis, Ivan (Bury S)
Linton, Martin
Lloyd, Tony (Manchester C)
Lock, David
Love, Andrew
McAvoy, Thomas
McCafferty, Ms Chris
Macdonald, Calum
McGuire, Mrs Anne
McIsaac, Shona
McKenna, Mrs Rosemary
McLeish, Henry
Maclennan, Rt Hon Robert
McNulty, Tony
Mactaggart, Fiona
McWalter, Tony
Mallaber, Judy
Mandelson, Rt Hon Peter
Marsden, Gordon (Blackpool S)
Marshall, David (Shettleston)
Marshall, Jim (Leicester S)
Martlew, Eric
Maxton, John
Meacher, Rt Hon Michael
Meale, Alan
Merron, Gillian
Milburn, Rt Hon Alan
Miller, Andrew
Moffatt, Laura
Moonie, Dr Lewis

Moore, Michael
Morgan, Ms Julie (Cardiff N)
Morley, Elliot
Morris, Ms Estelle (B'ham Yardley)
Mudie, George
Mullin, Chris
Murphy, Denis (Wansbeck)
Naysmith, Dr Doug
O'Brien, Bill (Normanton)
O'Brien, Mike (N Warks)
O'Hara, Eddie
Olner, Bill
Öpik, Lembit
Osborne, Ms Sandra
Pearson, Ian
Pendry, Tom
Pickthall, Colin
Pike, Peter L
Plaskitt, James
Pollard, Kerry
Pope, Greg
Powell, Sir Raymond
Prentice, Ms Bridget (Lewisham E)
Prescott, Rt Hon John
Prosser, Gwyn
Purchase, Ken
Quin, Rt Hon Ms Joyce
Quinn, Lawrie
Radice, Giles
Rapson, Syd
Raynsford, Nick
Reid, Rt Hon Dr John (Hamilton N)
Rendel, David
Robinson, Geoffrey (Cov'try NW)
Roche, Mrs Barbara
Rogers, Allan
Rooker, Jeff
Rooney, Terry
Ross, Ernie (Dundee W)
Rowlands, Ted
Ruane, Chris
Ruddock, Joan
Russell, Bob (Colchester)
Russell, Ms Christine (Chester)
Ryan, Ms Joan
Salter, Martin
Savidge, Malcolm
Shaw, Jonathan
Sheerman, Barry
Shipley, Ms Debra
Smith, Rt Hon Andrew (Oxford E)
Smith, Angela (Basildon)
Smith, Miss Geraldine (Morecambe & Lunesdale)
Smith, Jacqui (Redditch)
Smith, John (Glamorgan)
Smith, Sir Robert (W Ab'd'ns)
Soley, Clive
Southworth, Ms Helen
Squire, Ms Rachel
Starkey, Dr Phyllis
Steinberg, Gerry
Stevenson, George
Stewart, Ian (Eccles)
Stinchcombe, Paul
Strang, Rt Hon Dr Gavin
Straw, Rt Hon Jack
Stringer, Graham
Stuart, Ms Gisela
Stunell, Andrew
Taylor, Ms Dari (Stockton S)
Taylor, David (NW Leics)
Taylor, Matthew (Truro)
Temple-Morris, Peter
Thomas, Gareth (Clwyd W)
Thomas, Gareth R (Harrow W)
Timms, Stephen
Tipping, Paddy
Touhig, Don
Trickett, Jon
Truswell, Paul
Turner, Dennis (Wolverh'ton SE)
Turner, Dr Desmond (Kemptown)
Turner, Dr George (NW Norfolk)
Twigg, Stephen (Enfield)
Tyler, Paul
Vaz, Keith
Vis, Dr Rudi
Wallace, James
Watts, David
White, Brian
Whitehead, Dr Alan
Williams, Alan W (E Carmarthen)
Wills, Michael
Winnick, David
Wood, Mike
Worthington, Tony
Wright, Dr Tony (Cannock)
Wyatt, Derek

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Graham Allen and
Mr. Keith Hill.

Question accordingly negatived.

THE CHAIRMAN, being of the opinion that the principle of the clause had been adequately discussed, put forthwith the Question, pursuant to Standing Order No. 68, That the clause stand part of the Bill.

Question agreed to.

Clause 1 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

To report progress and ask leave to sit again.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

Committee report progress; to sit again on Monday 22 February.

NORTHERN IRELAND GRAND COMMITTEE

Ordered,

That—

(1) the draft Appropriation (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 be referred to the Northern Ireland Grand Committee;

(2) at the sitting on Thursday 25th February, the Committee shall consider the draft instrument referred to it under paragraph (1) above; and

(3) in respect of the sitting on Thursday 25th February, Standing Order No. 115 (Northern Ireland Grand Committee (delegated legislation)) shall have effect with the substitution in paragraph (2) of the Order for the words 'two and a half' of the word 'three'.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

DELEGATED LEGISLATION

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): With permission, I shall put together the motions relating to delegated legislation.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 118(6) (Standing Committees on Delegated Legislation),

RATING AND VALUATION

That the draft Railways (Rateable Values) (Scotland) Order 1999 which was laid before this House on 21st January, be approved.

COUNTRYSIDE AGENCY

That the draft Development Commission (Transfer of Functions and Miscellaneous Provisions) Order 1999, which was laid before this House on 27th January, be approved.

EDUCATION

That the draft Education (Student Support) Regulations 1999, which were laid before this House on 4th February, be approved.

EDUCATION (SCOTLAND)

That the draft Education (Student Loans) (Scotland) Regulations 1999, which were laid before this House on 8th February, be approved.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

Question agreed to.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY DOCUMENTS

Motion made, and Question put forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 119(9) (European Standing Committees),

REFORM OF THE COMMON AGRICULTURAL POLICY

That this House takes note of the unnumbered Explanatory Memorandum, dated 20th November 1998, from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, relating to reform of the Common Market organisations for beef, cereals and milk and for the development of rural development policy in the European Union; and supports the Government's intention to negotiate an outcome which takes account of the interests of UK producers, consumers and taxpayers alike and of developing countries and to press for a reformed Common Agricultural Policy with substantially reduced overall costs, which is more economically rational, which reduces the bureaucratic burden on farmers, which provides a better framework for targeted environmental and rural development support, which contains fair and common rules to ensure that the UK's farm and food industries can exploit their competitive advantage in European and world markets, which facilitates the accession of associated countries and which offers the medium-term prospect of benefits to developing countries.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

Question agreed to.

DELEGATED LEGISLATION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With permission, I shall put together the motions relating to delegated legislation.

Ordered,

SCHOOL STANDARDS AND FRAMEWORK ACT

That the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 (Proposals under section 211 of the Education Act 1996) (Transitional Provisions) Regulations 1998 be referred to a Standing Committee on Delegated Legislation.

RENT ACTS (MAXIMUM FAIR RENT) ORDER

That the Rent Acts (Maximum Fair Rent) Order 1999 be referred to a Standing Committee on Delegated Legislation.

EDUCATION (INFANT CLASS SIZES) (GRANT) REGULATIONS

That the Education (Infant Class Sizes) (Grant) Regulations 1999 be referred to a Standing Committee on Delegated Legislation.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR CLINICAL EXCELLENCE

That the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (Establishment and Constitution) Order 1999 and National Institute for Clinical Excellence Regulations 1999 be referred to a Standing Committee on Delegated Legislation.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

Yemen

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

9.52 pm

Mr. Keith Vaz (Leicester, East): Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for this opportunity—[Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. I shall be grateful if hon. Members leave the Chamber quickly and quietly, so that we can proceed with the Adjournment debate.

Mr. Vaz: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am grateful for this opportunity to raise the situation in Yemen that has developed over the past two months. The issue is of relevance, not only to the families and friends of those who have been taken hostage or detained in Yemen, but to all those with an interest in the middle east as a whole, and to the British Asian community.

At the start, I should declare my interest: I am the chairman of the all-party group on Yemen. My parents went to Aden from Bombay as economic migrants; they were part of the immigrant Indian community living in British-occupied south Yemen in the 1950s, and I was born in Aden in 1956. I spent the first nine years of my life there, before leaving with my family to escape the escalating conflict. I was educated at St. Joseph's Convent school in Aden and have wonderful memories of my early childhood in Yemen. They were some of the happiest days of my life—eating sardine sandwiches on the beach in Aden, watching the great ships preparing for the Suez canal. In my wildest dreams, I never envisaged one day speaking on this subject in the British Parliament.

I returned to Yemen for the first time last year, when I led a delegation of representatives from the travel industry to promote relations between our two countries. In Sana'a, I met President Ali Abdullah Saleh, the Ministers of Health, Culture and Justice and the Speaker of the Yemeni Assembly. I also spent a day in Aden and returned to Sana'a by car, without incident.

Returning to Yemen brought home to me just what investment opportunities the country holds for Britain and the immense good will that exists towards Britain. Much has changed, but Yemen remains a beautiful and special country. It is no wonder that so many people want to visit it and return there even after being taken hostage.

Yemen is an extremely difficult nation to comprehend, although it is very familiar to British people. I have already mentioned the under-populated south, which was ruled by the British until 1967, and many young men in the 1950s completed their national service at the station there, including, I am told, the father of our Prime Minister. After the British left, south Yemen was taken over by Marxists, while the much more heavily populated north never came under colonial rule.

The country was united in 1990, but unity was initially not solid, and a civil war broke out in 1994. What is more, in the rugged and mountainous north, the Government's authority is weak, and independent tribesmen seek to control vast areas of the country. That is ideal terrain for hostage-taking, and 132 hostages have been taken in Yemen since 1992.

[Mr. Vaz]

The foundation of the recent crisis can be seen in those historical and geographical problems. Before moving on to the crisis, however, I should like to pay tribute to the role played by President Ali Abdullah Saleh, since he came to power in 1978, in maintaining a stable Government in spite of those enormous difficulties and steering the course of reunification. In the past year, he has been aided by Prime Minister Iryani and the democratically elected Assembly.

The recent crisis, like the country's history, is riddled with complexities. Three sets of hostages have been taken; two groups of people have been arrested and detained; there have been problems concerning people with dual nationality, and there is a melting pot of value systems, ranging from traditional tribal beliefs to rising Islamic awareness.

The crisis began on 28 December, when 16 western hostages were taken. I am sure that I express the sentiments of the whole House when I offer my condolences to the families of Ruth Williamson, Margaret Whitehouse and Peter Rowe, who were killed the following day. Clearly, a number of questions need to be answered about exactly what happened on 29 December and why the rescue attempt went so tragically wrong. I understand that teams from Scotland Yard have been in Yemen since then. Will my right hon. Friend the Minister shed some light on the work that they have been doing, the level of co-operation that they have received from the Yemeni authorities and what, if any, discoveries they have made? How many officers from Scotland Yard are in Yemen and what have they been doing there?

Just as we offer our condolences to the families of the dead, our thoughts go to the nine British survivors of the rescue attempt, as well as John Brooke and Eddie and Mary Rosser, who were taken hostage in January and later released. No one can imagine what an ordeal it has been for them to have been taken as hostages.

At the heart of the current crisis is the case of the British men who have been detained in Aden. Confusion seems to have surrounded the case of Gulam Hussain, Sarmad Ahmed, Shahid Butt, Mohssin Ghailan and Malek Nasser since they were first detained on 24 December. What were they doing in Yemen? Why did it take until 7 January for final confirmation to be received that those five men had been detained? Why did it take until 14 January until they were charged and why did not the trial begin until 27 January? What truth is there in the allegations by the five men of torture and sexual abuse?

In the conversations that I have had with Yemeni Ministers, they have made it clear that allegations of torture are untrue and that they have complied with every reasonable request. However, I should be glad to hear from my right hon. Friend what issues are still outstanding.

I have also spoken to Gareth Pierce, the lawyer acting for those detained. She has stressed the importance of allowing the detainees access to an independent doctor. What progress can my right hon. Friend report on that issue?

I should also stress that although the detainees were charged quickly, the trial is proceeding extremely rapidly, perhaps much too rapidly, and, as the House knows, has restarted today. It is important that sufficient time is given for the defendants to prepare their case.

On 14 January, I met the families of the five men. I do not wish to pre-judge the case of the five men, but the families struck me as honest, decent, ordinary citizens, shocked by what had happened to their loved ones, in search of sympathy—

It being Ten o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mrs. McGuire.]

Mr. Vaz: The families struck me as shocked by what had happened to their loved ones and in search of sympathy, understanding and answers to their questions about what had happened. They were obviously bewildered by events. They deserve our sympathy. Some of the families are now in Yemen. Will my right hon. Friend the Minister confirm that the consular officials are doing everything that they can to help the families?

Since then, three further British citizens have been detained. Shazad Nabi, Ayad Hussein and Mohammed Mustafa Kamal have now been transferred to Aden. That has added further complexity to the case, especially as Mohammed Kamal is only 17 and is the son of Abu Hamza al-Masry, the London Muslim leader, who has made some extraordinary statements. It seems that what happens to them will affect the trial of the other five men. Perhaps the Minister will shed light on what the Foreign Office has been doing in those latest three cases.

It is highly unusual for a consular case such as this to be imported into British domestic community politics. According to a written answer supplied to me by my right hon. Friend the Minister on 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 392, there are currently 2,266 British nationals imprisoned overseas—including two of my constituents, who are in gaol in Venezuela. What is different about this case is the fact that the British Muslim community has taken the issue to heart, believing that the Foreign Office and the British Government are less committed to the case of those five men than to other consular cases because the men in question are of Asian origin.

I commend my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on the way in which he has handled this crisis, and the sensitivity that he has shown to the Yemeni authorities and the British Asian community. In my view, the Foreign Secretary deserves particular praise for the way in which he came to the House on the first day after the Christmas recess to make a statement on the crisis, and for his initiative in speaking to the Yemeni Prime Minister three times in the early stages of the crisis, to impress on him the importance of the British detainees being given full access to doctors and lawyers. I thank my noble friend Baroness Symons for having agreed to meet me four times to brief me on developments, and for meeting the families of the detained men and their lawyers.

On the allegation of the Foreign Office not acting quickly enough because the men were Asian, I believe that our Foreign Secretary would be the last person in this world to let that happen. He is highly regarded in the Arab world, and his speech last October in Blackpool showed enormous respect and sensitivity to Muslim nations and to the Muslim and Asian communities.

I shall now discuss what I consider to be the ways in which the crisis can be solved. The main goal must be to ensure that Anglo-Yemeni relations remain intact and that the men currently detained in Aden get a fair trial. As I have said, when I visited Yemen last year I was struck by the good will on the part of the Yemenis toward Britain, and by the eagerness of Ministers, from the President down, to discuss openly and frankly the salient issues affecting the middle east. In 1986, trade with Yemen was worth £82.6 million, and Britain has been heavily involved in efforts to redevelop the port of Aden, and to develop the tourism industry. Britain and Yemen obviously have a lot to lose from any straining of relations.

I place on the record my appreciation of the role played by the excellent Yemeni ambassador to Britain, Dr. Hussein Al-Amri, who understands fully the importance of these relations and has done an enormous amount of work in very difficult circumstances. Any nation, including ours, would be severely tested when world media attention focuses on it on such complex issues as hostage taking, terrorism and fundamentalism. It is amazing how Yemen has coped.

The Yemeni Government have said that they have acted as they have in order to continue the fight against international terrorism. I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Minister will agree that joint co-operation between Britain and Yemen to combat terrorism is vital, and I hope that he will offer his support in the continued fight against it.

The only way to maintain strong bilateral relations is for contact to be maintained at the highest possible level. We need to bring outstanding matters to a close. Early contact between the Foreign Secretary and Prime Minister Iryani was extremely important in ensuring that the Britons in Aden were charged, and that the trial got under way. Anglo-Yemeni relations will suffer if this high-level contact is not maintained. I was very pleased to read that a meeting took place between our Prime Minister and the President of Yemen last Monday in Amman at the funeral of King Hussein. I wonder whether my right hon. Friend the Minister can tell us more about those discussions.

However, I am puzzled by one point. Britain has strongly advised its citizens to leave Yemen and has evacuated British Council teachers from the country. Yet the German Foreign Minister and Green party leader, Joschka Fischer, has just been to Yemen. If a German Minister is safe in Yemen, why not a British Minister? Our ties with Yemen are much longer and more historic than those of any other country. As the Deputy Foreign Minister Abdullah al-Saidi said:

> "Yemen and Yemenis consider themselves good friends of the British people".

Secondly, I am sure that my right hon. Friend will agree that the trial of the Britons in Yemen must be concluded in a fair and open manner according to the due process of international law. That means that the men who face trial must understand what is happening in the court process and what is happening in terms of their defence. We expect nothing less. The Yemeni ambassador has given me an assurance that the trial will be conducted according to due process. Has my right hon. Friend received those assurances as well?

In addition, I propose two further means of speeding up efforts for a solution. I reiterate the suggestion that I made to the Foreign Secretary in the House on 11 January: it would be extremely helpful if he sent a special envoy to Sana'a and Aden to supplement diplomatic efforts that are already being undertaken. I do not wish to undermine the work that has already been done by Ambassador Victor Henderson and Consul-General David Pearce—I know from the help that they gave to my delegation what an effective team they are. I simply feel that, because of this highly complicated situation, we need a high-profile expert with a solid diplomatic background and knowledge of the middle east, such as a former permanent secretary, to go to Yemen and continue the dialogue.

Finally, I return to a theme that I have mentioned on other occasions in the House: the need for a new unit in the Foreign Office with specific responsibility for British tourists and other visitors to foreign countries. If such a unit had existed, procedures for dealing with the taking of hostages and the detentions would have been in place and I believe that the crisis could have been handled more smoothly. Families in such situations must be kept informed constantly, as the families of James Miles and Paul Loseby, and of Edgar Fernandes—whose cases I have raised previously—have discovered.

There is also a need for better administrative streamlining. As I understand it, three of the four Foreign Office Ministers have been involved in the case: my noble Friend, who deals with consular matters; my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), who deals with kidnappings; and my right hon. Friend who is in the Chamber tonight and who has geographical responsibility for this region.

I know how eager the Yemenis are to resolve this crisis without any lasting damage to Anglo-Yemeni relations. We should be equally keen to do so. This is not a relationship of former colonial master and former colony, but one of partnership. I hope to visit Yemen when the time is right—indeed, I was planning to go last week, but I postponed my visit when I had the chance of introducing this Adjournment debate.

I am confident that there is enough good will on both sides to ensure a speedy solution to the problems. We must make sure that that good will is utilised and built on in a constructive way in order to prevent any new, dramatic and unexpected turn of events from destabilising the situation further. Nothing would please this son of Yemen more than for the country of my birth and my adopted country—where I have spent three quarters of my life—to work together. We are, after all, bound together by history.

10.9 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Derek Fatchett): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) and thank him for the way in which he has raised this issue. Hon. Members will have been moved by his descriptions of his early years in Yemen, and we understand his strong affiliation to that country. I wholly agree that the relationship between the United Kingdom and Yemen must be one of partnership: a partnership of equals in which we have shared diplomatic, political, commercial and other links. My hon. Friend is right to say that both sides want that relationship to develop over the next few years. He is also right to say that despite our history, the content of that relationship at present is somewhat thin.

The trade between the United Kingdom and Yemen added up to only £81 million during the past calendar year, with a massive imbalance towards the

[Mr. Derek Fatchett]

United Kingdom. We are not major trading partners, and there is surely the potential for much further development. Also, Yemen is not a beneficiary of a substantial international development programme. My hon. Friend will be delighted, however, to hear that the programme, which currently stands at £600,000 a year, is likely to be trebled to £1.8 million by 2000-01. On that basis, at least, our international development involvement in Yemen will become more significant.

My hon. Friend spoke about the events that have taken place in Yemen since 24 December, and the impact of those events on the relationship between the two countries. He was absolutely right to send his good wishes and those of every hon. Member to the families of Ruth Williamson, Margaret Whitehouse and Peter Rowe. I add the condolences and sympathy of the Government to those expressed by my hon. Friend.

My hon. Friend asked about the investigations that are taking place with the participation of representatives of the Metropolitan police force. Those investigations are continuing. We hope that the Metropolitan police will be able to produce a report in the not too distant future. They are happy with the co-operation that they have received from the Yemeni authorities and will continue to work with them.

I stress to my hon. Friend that the remit of the investigation by the Metropolitan police is limited to the events surrounding the hostage-taking and the sad deaths of Ruth Williamson, Margaret Whitehouse and Peter Roe. Their remit does not extend beyond those incidents.

My hon. Friend dealt with the cases of the five British citizens currently detained in Aden—Gulam Hussain, Sarmed Ahmed, Shahid Butt, Mohssin Ghailan and Malek Nasser. I shall explain to my hon. Friend the role that the Foreign Office plays in such cases. My hon. Friend knows the situation well, but it is always worth while repeating the responsibilities of the Foreign Office.

We do not have a responsibility for prosecuting or defending particular cases. We cannot act as barristers, solicitors or lawyers on behalf of any UK citizens charged overseas. As my hon. Friend mentioned in his opening remarks, a substantial number of British citizens are held on charges throughout the world.

We must do two things. First, we must ensure that we have access to British citizens, and that we can maintain contact and links between them, their families and their lawyers. Secondly, we must do what we can to ensure that there is due process—a fair procedure before trial, and a fair trial. Our objectives are thus limited but extremely significant: to carry out our consular responsibilities towards any UK citizen who is detained overseas, and to ensure that there is due process and a fair trial. We are wholly committed to discharging those responsibilities in the present case.

There has been some suggestion, which my hon. Friend hinted at but then dismissed, that the Foreign Office has been less active in this case than it may otherwise have been. There is implicit in that a suggestion the idea that because we are dealing with five young Muslim British citizens, their treatment and the rights accorded have not been the same as in other cases. Let me lay that totally to rest. We see our responsibility as extending to all British citizens, regardless of their background, colour or religion. We will discharge that responsibility to all our citizens. I give a strong personal commitment to my hon. Friend: I assure him that, as long as I am a Foreign Office Minister, I will do everything to ensure that there is parity and equality of treatment.

My hon. Friend raised a number of points about the way in which we have discharged our consular functions in relation to the five. It may be useful if I set out some of the background information, which will help him to understand what has happened. As he rightly said, the five were arrested on 24 December. On 29 December, Yemeni officials, who were discussing that day's sad killing of four of the 16 tourists taken hostage the day before, mentioned that they had arrested some British passport holders earlier that day. No names or other details were made available to the British embassy or to the staff.

At that point, British embassy officials asked for further information and for permission to see whichever British nationals may have been arrested. I re-emphasise to my hon. Friend that we received the first piece of information from the Yemeni authorities, incomplete as it was, five days after the arrest of the individuals. On 29 and 30 December, the British embassy continued to ask the Yemenis for further information about the alleged arrest of British nationals and for access to them, if the report of those arrests were true.

On 31 December—a week after the arrests had taken place—Mr. Shahid Iqbal telephoned the Foreign Office to report that three British nationals, a dual national and a French national had been arrested in Yemen. He had surnames, but no other details. He undertook to obtain further details and left at the Foreign Office a Birmingham telephone number.

No further contact was received from Mr. Iqbal. On 4 January, the Foreign Office, through an official, telephoned him. At that stage, full names were obtained and forwarded to the British embassy in Yemen for verification. On 5 and 6 January, the British embassy made repeated inquiries about possible arrests in Yemen of British nationals, asking for confirmation. To labour the point a stage further, my hon. Friend will be interested to know that on 7 January—13 days after the arrests—the Yemeni authorities confirmed that they had indeed carried out the arrests. They provided the names of the individuals and, at that point, the embassy asked for immediate access to the five.

I stress to my hon. Friend that those 13 days were a crucial period in which the British embassy and the Foreign Office in London were both trying to find out what had happened. The full information, as he will now realise, was not forthcoming from the Yemeni authorities. It took us until 7 January to confirm that five British citizens had been arrested in Yemen.

It is important in that context to say to my hon. Friend that I am confident that Foreign Office officials—in Yemen and in London—acted properly, with efficiency and with due diligence and speed. However, they could not put pieces of an incomplete jigsaw together, because the vital piece of information was not forthcoming from the Yemeni authorities.

Thereafter there has been continual contact between our officials in Yemen and the Yemeni authorities, and between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the Yemeni Prime Minister. My noble Friend Baroness Symons, who represents the Government on consular matters, has met the Yemeni ambassador and the families and representatives of those who have been detained.

My hon. Friend will also wish to know that I had a meeting on 20 January with leading members of the United Kingdom Muslim community, plus representatives of the families and the lawyer representing the families. The British Government at ministerial and official level have sought information, and have tried to ensure that the due process takes place. I can say with some confidence that that catalogue of events and action by the Foreign Office shows that we have fully discharged our consular responsibility, and have sought to ensure that the individuals involved receive a fair trial. We have also tried to ensure that they have access to a lawyer and to medical advice. They have been visited, and the consular staff can see the five involved.

We cannot make a judgment on the guilt or innocence of these individuals, and my hon. Friend does not ask us to do so. That is not our task. My hon. Friend is right that these are matters for Yemeni law, and they will be dealt with by due process under the Yemeni legal system. We want to ensure that the due process takes place, and that there is proper regard for the Yemeni constitution.

Mr. Vaz: Some of the relatives and others wish to travel to Yemen to have contact with the detainees. Is it still the Foreign Office's view that it is unsafe to go to Yemen? If so, are the Government suggesting that more British citizens should be evacuated from Yemen? The ambassador is still there, as are many other British citizens.

Mr. Fatchett: The ambassador and staff are doing an excellent job. I should like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to them for their efforts in these trying and difficult circumstances. I wish them well with their task.

As my hon. Friend knows, we have toughened up our travel advice. We advise people that it would be unwise to travel to Yemen. I think that he would agree that we are wise to provide evidence of the dangers, because recent events suggest that the Foreign Office would be criticised if we did not offer that advice and more British citizens were taken hostage. We are right to offer that advice, and we shall continue to do so.

Our consular responsibilities for the five, and for the three who have also been charged with offences in Yemen, include ensuring that the due process takes place and that access is allowed. I can assure my hon. Friend that we shall continue to carry out those responsibilities.

My hon. Friend spoke about how these cases are playing in the Muslim community in the United Kingdom. That is why I met leaders of the Muslim community in January, and why I have subsequently had a further meeting to discuss a range of issues. I can confidently say that at those meetings, the community leaders recognised the role that the Foreign Office must play and the way in which we have discharged our responsibilities.

My hon. Friend also referred to terrorism. It would be wholly wrong to imply that these individuals have been involved in any terrorist activities, and neither my hon. Friend nor I will do that. The issues of criminality, guilt or innocence are matters for the court. My hon. Friend is right to say that the United Kingdom and Yemen have a shared interest in defeating terrorism. That is why, last September, we introduced new legislation to toughen up our laws on terrorism. We introduced a new range of offences to ensure that the United Kingdom cannot be used as a haven from which to organise and plan attacks against Governments and individuals in other countries.

The new legislation has been welcomed by Governments throughout the world as an earnest sign of the Government's intention to take the issue of terrorism seriously, and we shall continue to take a hard line against terrorist activities. We do so wherever we can, and we share with the Yemeni Government and with other Governments in the region the belief that there should be no home for those who, through their actions, try to inflict pain and suffering on innocent people.

I get slightly irritated when others around the world say that the United Kingdom is soft on terrorism. I remind those people that we have experienced terrorism in the past two decades, and have faced up to it. We know its evil nature, and we know that it makes victims of the wholly innocent—those who have no political affiliations or axes to grind, but are in the wrong place at the wrong time. We know about terrorism, and the United Kingdom will certainly not be soft on terrorism. I say that not just on behalf of this Government; if ever there were a change of Government in the United Kingdom, I am sure that there would be a similar approach to terrorism.

My hon. Friend made a number of suggestions about how the Foreign Office could build up relationships with Yemen and deal with the current issues. He spoke of sending an envoy. We have already done that: there is an ambassador. Moreover, we already have a Minister responsible for Yemen—me—and a Foreign Secretary, who has been in touch with the Yemeni Prime Minister on a number of occasions. An additional person would not help in these circumstances. We need to build up our bilateral relations, and to discuss issues in which we have a common interest. What we must never do is create the impression that we are sending an envoy to Yemen to question the Yemeni legal system, and to make judgments about individual cases. That would set a dangerous precedent. What we need to do is what we have done in working towards the objective of establishing individuals' right to a fair trial.

My hon. Friend said that we should have a special Foreign Office unit to co-ordinate our activities in circumstances such as this. I am always a bit sceptical about the establishment of further units: it seems to me that, when a Department has no other response, it sets up another organisational unit. I suggest to my hon. Friend that we do not need a unit, but that we do need to co-ordinate effectively. The fact that three Ministers are working on the issue is not a sign of inefficiency; it is a sign of the importance that we attach to the issue, and shows that we are able—thanks to great skill on the part of our officials—to co-ordinate their activities, and to ensure that we have an effective co-ordinated policy. I know that is what my hon. Friend wants, and I am not sure that the unit that he suggests would help us to achieve his objective.

Mr. Vaz: I understand that our Prime Minister met the President of Yemen in Amman during the funeral of King Hussein. Could any part of that discussion reflect on the issues that we are discussing today?

Mr. Fatchett: Yes, to the extent that the meeting took place, but it took place on the margins of King Hussein's funeral, and obviously people's minds were on that occasion rather than on other issues. Contact was made, but it was not a substantive occasion on which the specific issues to which my hon. Friend has referred could be discussed.

My hon. Friend has shown a keen understanding of, and commitment to, his country of birth. Yemen has a good friend in the House of Commons, and in my hon. Friend, who raised difficult issues in a sensitive way. I thank him for that. I hope that I have been able to give him detailed information that will enable him to conclude that, although we must deal with a number of difficult issues, once they have been resolved we can continue to build up bilateral relations between the two countries.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-nine minutes past Ten o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 8 February 1999

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Road Schemes

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the road schemes which are proceeding following the outcome of the national Roads Review and (b) those roads which are to be considered by regional planning conferences which could have an effect on areas of outstanding natural beauty or National Parks, detailing for each the designation affected. [67024]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 January 1999]: Environmental concerns were a major consideration of the assessment of schemes during the Roads Review. The Road Programme inherited from the previous Government contained 21 schemes which would affect National Parks or Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty. The following lists show the schemes which are to proceed as part of the Targeted Programme of Improvements following the national Roads Review which will impact on specific National Parks or Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty.

Scheme Name	National Park or AONB
A34 Chieveley/M4 J13 Improvement	North Wessex Downs AONB
A41 Aston Clinton Bp	Chilterns AONB
A2 Bean-Cobham Widening Phase 2	Kent Downs AONB
A21 Lamberhurst Bp	High Weald AONB

The following scheme, which was not sufficiently advanced to be considered for the Targeted Programme of Improvements, will be progressed through its preparatory stages so that if, after full appraisal and statutory procedures, it is eventually endorsed, it can be taken forward without delay.

Scheme Name	National Park or AONB
A57/A628 Mottram-Tintwhistle Bp	Peak District NP

In addition, a number of schemes are to considered by Regional Planning Conferences in the context of the programme of wider multi-modal studies announced recently. These studies cover in some cases very wide areas of the country. Solutions to these studies will by no means necessarily be road based and will rarely be solely road schemes. We therefore cannot list AONBs or National Parks within these areas in the same definitive way as for identified road proposals. Environmental impact is an important consideration in our new approach to appraisals and its assessment will be integral to the study process. Any consequences for AONBs and National Parks of solutions coming out of the studies would be explicitly identified at that point.

Night Flights (Heathrow)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many night flights (a) landing and (b) taking off from Heathrow carried (i) passengers and (ii) airfreight in each of the last five years. [68576]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The total runway movements in the night quota period (11.30 pm and 6 am) each season for the last five years are set out.

Season	Arrivals	Departures	Total runway movements[1]
Winter 1993–94	[2]—	[2]—	2,589
Summer 1994	[2]—	[2]—	3,204
Winter 1994–95	[2]—	[2]—	2,939
Summer 1995	[2]—	[2]—	3,266
Winter 1995–96	[2]—	[2]—	3,059
Summer 1996	2,527	313	2,840
Winter 1996–97	2,567	255	2,822
Summer 1997	2,722	285	3,007
Winter 1997–98	2,542	224	2,766
Summer 1998	2,765	334	3,099

[1] Total runway movements include all movements counted against the night movements limit and noise quota, movements by exempt types of aircraft and movements given dispensations.

[2] The split between arrivals and departures is not readily available due to the basis on which records have been retained.

Full details of the split between passenger and all-cargo movements for each season are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. On the basis of available data, about 8 per cent. of movements in winter 1993–94, and 5 per cent. in summer 1995 were all-cargo flights including mail with similar amounts in intervening seasons (ie slightly more in winter than in summer). In summer 1998 there were 96 such movements, 3 per cent. of the total. A significant amount of cargo is carried in the holds of passenger aircraft.

Vehicle Registration Documents

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason the Council of Ministers has resolved to apply the Committee Directive on the Registration Documents for Vehicles (EC 65/98) five years after the entry into force of that Directive. [68966]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The five year implementation period will provide Member States with sufficient time to introduce the new harmonised system for vehicle registration documents. Member States are free to introduce the new documentation before then if they wish to do so.

Council Properties (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Wandsworth Borough Council on its policy of selling council properties in certain areas of the borough. [69070]

Mr. Raynsford: I have had no such discussions. However, officials of the Government Office for London regularly discuss with Borough officials many aspects of the Borough's housing strategy and of its performance as a housing authority as part of the annual Housing Investment Programme allocation process. Sales of council properties are one aspect of those discussions.

Environmentally Friendly Vehicles

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has had with his European Union colleagues on the development of environmentally friendly vehicles by European vehicle producers. [69093]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Significant developments are taking place in Europe on the promotion of environmentally friendly vehicles by European vehicle producers. A number of directives were agreed in 1998, setting future emission standards for cars, vans and vehicles with heavy-duty diesel engines. Last year a voluntary agreement was concluded between the EC and European motor manufacturers, to reduce by 25 per cent. the CO_2 emissions from new cars by 2008. When the UK's Cleaner Vehicles Task Force publishes its first report in the coming months, we will wish to discuss its contents with colleagues in Europe.

I and my Ministerial colleagues keep in close contact with our European counterparts on these matters. During January my right hon. Friends the Minister for the Environment and the Minister of Transport had liaison meetings with the respective Ministers of the new German Government.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions he has had with the German Government on the United Kingdom's rules relating to the import and export of spent nuclear fuel; and if he will make a statement; [69157]

(2) if he will make a statement on his policy relating to the import and export of spent nuclear fuel; and if he will make a statement; [69156]

(3) if imports of spent nuclear fuel from Germany primarily to alleviate the shortage of on-site waste storage capacity at German nuclear facilities, contravene Government policy; and if he will seek advice on this matter from the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee. [69159]

Mr. Meale: The Government's policy is that spent nuclear fuel may be imported into the UK provided that the prime purpose is the recovery of reusable material.

BNFL provides nuclear fuel reprocessing services on a fully commercial basis. Since 1976 all reprocessing contracts have contained the option for the return of waste arising from reprocessing to the customer country. The Government have made it clear that this option should be exercised, and all wastes returned.

It has also been made clear to the German Government that the UK would not be willing to offer long-term storage in the UK for spent nuclear fuel that will not be reprocessed. It follows that, should existing reprocessing contracts be cancelled at any time, German material held in the UK at that time would have to be returned.

Peat Extraction

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to protect internationally important lowland raised peatlands from damage caused by commercial peat extraction for horticultural and gardening use; and if he will make a statement. [69149]

Mr. Meale: My Department has reconvened its Working Group on Peat Extraction to consider whether existing policies and guidance on peat extraction are still appropriate.

The Group is looking at a range of issues surrounding peat extraction, including the need for safeguarding peat bogs of national and international importance, and the development and marketing of peat alternatives.

A report of the Group's discussions, including recommendations for action, is in preparation. This will assist me and other Ministerial colleagues to decide what further action is necessary.

In the meantime, we have asked English Nature for advice on the position at Wedholme Flow and Thorne and Hatfield Moors on the best present scientific assessment as to the effects of commercial peat extraction on the areas of international importance.

Temporary Airside Passes

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what restrictions are imposed by his departmental regulations on the taking airside of (a) cameras and (b) mobile phones by holders of temporary airside passes at British airports; [69072]

(2) what security screening requirements are imposed by his departmental regulations on holders of temporary airside passes before they can go airside at British airports; [69057]

(3) what is the maximum length of time laid down in his departmental regulations for which a temporary airside pass can be issued at a British airport; [69073]

(4) what the rules are under his departmental regulations on checking of references before the issue of a temporary airside pass at British airports; [69056]

(5) how many breaches of his departmental regulations covering the issue of temporary airside passes at British airports were confirmed during (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [69058]

Dr. Reid: References are required only for the issue of a permanent pass. Temporary passes are issued on the basis of proof of identity, but such passholders must be escorted at all times. They are normally issued for up to three days, although a limited number of "special" passes are issued for temporary access up to 31 days when this is justified. Temporary pass holders are required to undergo the same screening process as all permanent staff and passengers before entry to the Restricted Zone of an airport. There are no Departmental Regulations restricting holders of temporary airside passes from taking cameras and mobile telephones airside. However, all items taken airside are searched and particular attention is given to electrical and electronic equipment, such as cameras and mobile telephones.

There have been no breaches of the Department's Regulations on the issuing of airside passes at British airports in 1997 or 1998.

Following an article in a newspaper on 20 January, Ministers ordered an immediate inquiry into how a journalist had obtained a temporary pass to Heathrow airport by posing as a cleaner; also that an urgent reappraisal of the regulations governing the issue of passes at UK airports be carried out.

At the same time, all the temporary passes issued to the company concerned were withdrawn, with no new ones to be issued until the Department's inspectors were satisfied that the necessary procedures were being carried out. These actions are currently being pursued, but it is too early to comment further.

New Deal (Communities)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in implementing the New Deal for Communities since its launch. [69414]

Mr. Meale: Communities, local groups and public bodies in the 17 local authority districts eligible to run pathfinders have brought forward proposals for neighbourhoods they consider would benefit from the New Deal for Communities. On the basis of those proposals, we expect to announce shortly which partnerships we will support, as they develop a detailed long term strategy for change.

M6 Congestion

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has received from the study group set up by his Department to examine ways of reducing traffic congestion on the M6 motorway between junctions 6 and 10; and what actions he proposes to take as a result. [69549]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have recently finished a consultation exercise with regional planning bodies on the programme of twenty six studies proposed in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England", and we will make an announcement on the final programme shortly. The West Midlands to North West Conurbation multi-modal study will examine options for reducing congestion on the M6 through modal shift. Work on the first tranche of studies will begin in the spring.

Outer London Orbital Rail Link

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy in respect of the creation of an Outer London orbital rail link; and if he will make a statement. [69819]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government welcome any viable proposals which might contribute towards a better, more integrated public transport system. Railtrack is responsible for stewardship of the rail network. It will set out its plans for the maintenance, renewal and enhancement of the network in its next Network Management Statement, which is due to be published in March.

Endangered Species

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to prevent trade in endangered species within the European Union. [69820]

Mr. Meale: The trade in endangered species is regulated by the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES), which is implemented within the European Union by Council Regulation (EC) No. 338/97. Commercial trade in wild taken specimens of species listed in Annex A of the Regulation is strictly prohibited, although exceptions may be made for research, breeding or educational purposes. The sale of these species is also controlled, including captive bred specimens.

Train Services (Seating)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the average width of a standard class seat on mainline train services in (a) 1989 and (b) at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement. [69828]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is not available.

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what independent assessment his Department has undertaken of London Transport's planned timetable for the opening of the Jubilee Line extension. [69823]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport's (LT's) planned timetable for the opening of the Jubilee Line extension is independently assessed on an on-going basis by the Secretary of State's Agent, Ove Arup and Partners. Ove Arup has been reporting regularly to Ministers since the start of construction. It is on the basis of its reports that we are confident that the extension will be open in time to serve the Millennium celebrations at North Greenwich.

Railtrack (Property Assets)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the implications for the delivery of increased rail usage of Railtrack's policy towards the disposal of its property assets. [69891]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The disposal of property assets owned by Railtrack is a commercial matter for the company. However, its powers of disposal are limited. Closure of railway lines (as well as passenger services, stations and light maintenance depots) which have been used in connection with railway passenger services at any time within the last five years are subject to consideration by the Franchising Director, the Rail Regulator and the Secretary of State, and wide consultation.

Millennium Dome (Transport)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussion he has held with Connex in respect of the use of Charlton station for transporting visitors to the Millennium Dome; what is (a) the present and (b) the maximum number of trains per hour which can call at Charlton; and if he will make a statement. [69827]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Surface rail interests are represented at my Millennium Access Co-ordination Group by the Association of Train Operating Companies (ATOC). The Managing Director of Connex South Eastern represented ATOC at the first meeting of my group in June 1998, at which we discussed Railtrack's proposals to redevelop Charlton station to improve the interchange with the new Millennium Transit bus service that will operate between the station and the Dome.

In November, ATOC reported to my group that Connex were considering the provision of additional train services to Charlton for Millennium Experience visitors. The present off-peak service at Charlton station is six trains per hour in each direction to/from Charing Cross/Cannon Street. The maximum number of trains per hour will be dependent upon capacity constraints at all stations on the line and access arrangements for services.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) discussions and (b) correspondence he has had with (i) the Traffic Director for London and (ii) Greenwich Council in drawing up contingency plans for transporting visitors to the Millennium Dome should the Jubilee line extension not be open in time, giving in each case the first date of their involvement. [69826]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have, through my Millennium Access Co-ordination Group, asked London Underground Limited to lead the production of contingency plans to manage problems on any of the main transport links to the Millennium Dome site.

The Borough of Greenwich became a member of my Millennium Access group in November 1998 prior to which date the interests of all boroughs were represented by the Association of London Government. Greenwich were present when London Underground presented an overview of the contingency plans to the group last month. I have not had any correspondence with Greenwich on this subject.

I have had no discussions or correspondence with the Traffic Director for London on the plans. I have, however, invited him to attend the next meeting of my group, at which we will be examining London Underground's proposals in more detail. The Traffic Director for London has been a member of the contingency planning working group since November 1998.

Beacon Council Scheme

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will consult on proposals for a beacon council scheme; and if he will make a statement. [70218]

Ms Armstrong: We intend to publish a prospectus tomorrow inviting views on proposals for a beacon scheme to identify and select the best councils, so that others can benefit from their experience, and in the longer term allow new freedoms and flexibilities to be tested.

Motorway Noise

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce details of the revised criteria and ring-fenced annual budget for the Highways Agency for new measures to reduce motorway noise. [69784]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We announced in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England" that we propose to establish revised criteria and a ring-fenced annual budget to provide noise mitigation on some existing trunk roads. We will make an announcement on this shortly.

Bull Bars

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to ban vehicles with bull bars from public roads. [69258]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Having considered the responses to a consultation exercise on options for national action on bull bars, we are currently in the process of identifying how best to take matters forward. As we have always made clear, any action on aggressive bull bars must deal effectively with the complexities involved. It is also clearly sensible for us to take the opportunity to consider bull bars in the context of the wider issue of making all new cars more pedestrian friendly.

Climate Change Programme

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his target date for the publication of the new UK Climate Change Programme. [69567]

Mr. Prescott: The Government aim to publish the new UK Climate Change Programme in good time for UK ratification of the Kyoto Protocol.

Rural Railways

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Organisation Instruction and Guidance issued to the new Strategic Rail Authority in relation to Rail Passenger Partnership funding will allocate a fixed proportion of this funding for use in rural rail infrastructure. [69205]

Dr. Reid: My right hon. Friend is currently considering the terms of revised planning criteria for the Franchising Director to apply in appraising support for passenger rail services. These will guide the allocation of funds for Rail Passenger Partnerships by the Strategic Rail Authority, which will be operating in shadow form from April pending legislation. I cannot anticipate publication of the revised criteria, but applications in respect of rural rail infrastructure will be welcome.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to provide for a defence to a charge arising from breach of regulations relating to vehicle emissions where the car in question has passed its MOT within 28 days before the date of a roadside check. [69568]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are currently reviewing the way in which compliance with vehicle emissions standards is enforced at the roadside. The question of mitigating circumstances is being taken into consideration in that process and an announcement on future policy will be made in due course.

Young Homeless

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to assist young, homeless persons. [69598]

Mr. Raynsford: For young people to be without a suitable home can blight their lives and future development and lead to the social exclusion that this Government are determined to tackle. The problems of youth homelessness go beyond the simple provision of accommodation; many other factors are involved and all sectors, statutory, voluntary and business have a contribution to make.

That is why we have established the Youth Homelessness Action Partnership to bring together senior representatives of central governmental, local government and the voluntary sector. The Partnership is currently working on producing an agreed definition of youth homelessness and estimating the numbers involved. It will also identify what works in tackling and preventing youth homelessness, including the role of local strategies, and disseminate good practice to all the key players. The Partnership will also contribute towards the evaluation of the impact of Government policies on youth homelessness. The work of the Partnership will be underpinned by research to be commissioned later this year.

We have refocused our DETR section 180 grant programme, which provides grants to voluntary sector organisations concerned with homelessness, to give priority to projects that prevent and tackle youth homelessness. £8.1 million is available in 1998/99 and over 200 projects around England are benefiting from these grants.

The Government are committed to reducing the most extreme example of homelessness—rough sleeping—to as near to zero as possible in our towns and cities. The Prime Minister asked the Social Exclusion Unit to address the issue of rough sleeping as one of its first priorities. Their report sets a tough initial target of reducing the number of people sleeping rough throughout England, to a third of its current level by 2002.

A new Ministerial Committee, chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Housing, has been established to ensure effective co-ordination of Government policy in preventing and tackling rough sleeping. The DETR will be responsible for co-ordination of the overall strategy for England on rough sleeping; including housing, health access to employment and training and benefits.

We will establish a new body for London which will be responsible for reducing the numbers of people sleeping rough in the Capital. The new body will have an integrated budget of £143 million over the three years until 2002 to combat rough sleeping and the causes of rough sleeping.

Outside London, the SEU confirmed that local authorities are in the best position to take the lead on tackling rough sleeping and single, including youth, homelessness. To support local authorities in achieving the target reduction in rough sleeping in their area we have launched a new Homelessness Action Programme which will provide £34 million over the next three years to help voluntary organisations outside London to tackle and prevent rough sleeping. We announced details of over 250 voluntary sector projects which will benefit from this programme on 5 February.

We have also strengthened the safety net for families and vulnerable individuals who are homeless unintentionally. The revised Code of Guidance on Allocations and Homelessness which will be issued later this year will provide more advice to help local housing authorities develop effective strategies to assist single homeless people including young people.

Packaging Waste

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on any additional costs for recycling packaging waste arising from recent changes in the law and the method for distributing such costs. [69611]

Mr. Meale: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member of Hazel Grove, (Mr. Stunell) on 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 335.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to ensure that wasteholders have a right of access to the Packaging Waste Recovery Note System in respect of waste they deposit for recycling. [69610]

Mr. Meale: The Advisory Committee on Packaging referred to this issue in its further advice set out in Sir Peter Parker's letter of 22 December to my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, a copy of which is in the Library. The Committee recommended that

> "individual businesses, who are obligated members of the packaging chain and bring waste for reprocessing, should be given first refusal on the PRN when waste is accepted for reprocessing and that reprocessors should make reasonable forward provision for such parties who wish to have PRNs".

We are grateful for the Committee's advice and my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment hopes to make an announcement on this and other aspects of the Packaging Recovery Note system shortly.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications for the sale of school playing fields have come before him since 1 May 1997. [69613]

Mr. Raynsford: The Secretary of State's consent to the disposal of land by local authorities under their general powers is only required where they wish to do so at less than the best reasonably obtainable consideration.

which is normally open market value. No such applications for consent for the sale of school playing fields have come before him since 1 May 1997.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications for school playing fields development he has approved. [69614]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is not held on this basis. The results of appeals and called-in applications are not classified by sites of this type. It is, therefore, not feasible to assemble such information, except at disproportionate cost.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers are available to local authorities to require owners of listed buildings to maintain them; how he monitors the performance of local authorities in discharging their duties in respect of listed buildings; and what powers he has in respect of listed buildings which a local authority fails to protect. [68852]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

Owners of listed buildings are under no specific duty to maintain their properties, though it will normally be in their interest to do so. However, local authorities have statutory powers to take action where a building has deteriorated to the extent that its preservation may be at risk. An authority can serve a repairs notice on the owner of a listed building specifying works it considers necessary for the building's preservation. If no action is taken in response to the notice, the authority can begin compulsory purchase proceedings. In the case of an unoccupied listed building, an authority can—having served notice on the owner—carry out works it considers urgently necessary for the building's preservation and recover its costs.

My right hon. Friend has powers which are broadly similar to those of local authorities and which he can exercise where he considers that an authority has itself failed to take action. However, his policy is to treat them as reserve powers for use only in exceptional circumstances.

My Department does not specifically monitor the performance of individual local authorities, but we would normally expect to look into cases where important buildings are reported to be at risk. Planning Policy Guidance Note 15: Planning and the Historic Environment urges all authorities to maintain and strengthen their commitment to stewardship of the historic environment, to reflect that commitment in their allocation of resources and to consider the use of their statutory powers wherever appropriate.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list his official engagements outside London planned for February. [69842]

Mr. Prescott: It is not the practice to give details of my forthcoming engagements.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Devolved Powers

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the President of the Council what steps she proposes to take to ensure that announcements of Government policy on matters which will be devolved take into account the roles of the National Assembly for Wales and the Scottish Parliament. [68614]

Mrs. Beckett: Ministers are aware of the areas within their responsibility which will be devolved to the Scottish Parliament and the National Assembly for Wales under the provisions of the Scotland Act 1998 and the Government of Wales Act 1998. Ministers are taking this into account in preparing and making announcements of Government policy.

Oral Questions

Mr. Winnick: To ask the President of the Council what was the total number of oral questions tabled to all departments, excluding the Scottish and Welsh Offices but including the Prime Minister in the last session; and what percentage were (a) on the Order of Business on the day in question and (b) actually answered orally. [69575]

Mrs. Beckett: 26,625 oral questions were put down in the last session to all departments excluding the Scottish and Welsh Offices, but including the Prime Minister.

7,437 or 27.9 per cent. were on the order of Business on the day in question and 3,149 or 11.8 per cent. were actually answered orally.

Portcullis House

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what is the expected final cost of Portcullis House; when it is due to be completed; what is the cost of (a) furniture, (b) catering facilities, (c) exterior decoration and (d) interior decoration; how many (i) hon. Members, (ii) Parliamentary staff and (iii) ancillary staff will be accommodated in the new building; and if he will make a statement. [69103]

Sir Sydney Chapman: As previously reported, the forecast outturn cost of the project is £250m. In addition to the capital costs, this figure includes furniture and fittings, professional and construction management fees and VAT. In accordance with the brief agreed by the House in 1992, the building will provide accommodation for 205 hon. Members and at least as many Members' staff. The precise number will depend on individual hon. Members' working arrangements. At this stage figures for the number of ancillary staff, who will be mainly from the Serjeant at Arms and Refreshment Departments, are not available. The select committee and conference rooms will also be heavily used.

Much of the furniture has yet to be purchased but the budget figures total £3.7m. These figures include the furnishing of the select committee and conference rooms and other communal areas including the refreshment and library facilities as well as the offices of hon. Members and their staff. The cost of the catering equipment, furniture and fittings is £2.4m. All the surfaces, both internal and external, are self-finished so there are no costs that could be attributed to decoration. The building is due to be occupied early in 2001. Work remains on schedule.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

Miss McIntosh: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to her oral statement of 1 February 1998, Official Report, column 593, concerning the lack of insurance cover for travel on 1 January 2000, if she will list the relevant authorities examining the issue in each sector. [69573]

Mrs. Beckett: It is the responsibility of the transport industry to ensure that their transport services can be delivered without increased risk to the public over the Millennium. However, relevant public authorities are taking steps to ensure that this work is done. These include the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Civil Aviation Authority, Maritime and Coastguard Agency, the Rail Regulator, Railtrack, the Health & Safety Commission and the Highways Agency. These organisations are also working with relevant international organisations, including the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO), the International Air Transport Association (IATA) and the International Maritime Organisation to look at the safety of international travel.

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and relevant regulators are also facilitating a programme of independent assessment of preparedness across the UK transport sector as part of a programme of work that is being led by Action 2000 through the National Infrastructure Forum. The first results from this work should be published in the Spring.

With respect to the availability of travel insurance over the Century date change, I understand that insurance cover remains available for both travel companies and transport companies, as well as for individual members of the public over the Millennium, although any policies may be subject to a number of specific Year 2000 related exclusions.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid Fund

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost to the Legal Aid Fund of paying Civil Court fees in (a) county court proceedings and (b) High Court proceedings in each of the last five years. [69227]

Mr. Hoon: Information on the amount paid for Civil Court fees is not available, as they are claimed as disbursements and the Legal Aid Board does not record these fees as a separate amount.

DEFENCE

REME

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by county the number of REME officers and regulars recruited in each of the last three years [69328]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information shown in the table reflects the numbers of REME officers and soldiers recruited through the various Army and Armed Forces Careers Offices in each county, in each of the last three years; it does not necessarily reflect individual's areas of origin.

	1996		1997		1998
County	Officers	Soldiers	Officers	Soldiers	Officers	Soldiers
Avon	1	6	0	13	0	11
Bedfordshire	1	0	0	3	0	7
Berkshire	2	8	0	8	0	13
Buckinghamshire	0	11	0	4	0	0
County Durham	0	14	0	7	1	11
Cambridgeshire	0	27	0	19	0	18
Cheshire	2	18	1	24	0	26
Cleveland	0	13	0	20	0	23
Cornwall	0	6	0	7	0	10
Cumbria	0	23	0	10	0	16
Derbyshire	0	16	0	11	0	13
Devon	0	39	2	40	0	34
Dorset	1	0	1	0	0	0
Essex	0	23	0	18	0	24
Greater London	1	24	1	10	0	24
Manchester	0	13	0	16	0	15
Gloucestershire	0	5	2	7	0	8
Hereford and Worcestershire	0	18	0	21	1	15
Hampshire	1	35	1	41	2	50
Hertfordshire	1	0	1	0	0	0
Humberside	0	18	1	20	0	11
Kent	0	31	0	24	0	20
Lancashire	0	93	0	62	0	66
Leicestershire	0	11	0	4	0	14
Lincolnshire	1	34	0	28	2	23
Merseyside	2	27	0	7	0	16
Northern Ireland	1	15	0	12	2	20
Norfolk	0	10	0	9	0	9
Northampton	0	10	0	18	0	9

County	1996 Officers	1996 Soldiers	1997 Officers	1997 Soldiers	1998 Officers	1998 Soldiers
Northumberland	0	13	0	8	0	8
Nottingham	1	18	1	15	3	18
Oxford	1	5	0	7	0	5
Border Region	0	4	0	4	0	4
Central Region	0	11	0	15	0	10
Dumfries and Galloway	0	9	0	10	0	7
Fife	0	17	0	13	0	11
Grampian	0	8	1	6	0	8
Highland	0	11	0	14	0	9
Lothian Region	0	11	1	6	0	9
Strathclyde	2	59	1	64	0	62
Tayside	0	22	0	12	1	16
Shropshire	0	7	1	9	2	6
Somerset	0	16	1	14	1	9
Staffordshire	2	14	0	8	0	12
Suffolk	0	11	0	2	1	9
Surrey	1	5	1	5	0	4
Sussex	1	13	1	11	0	4
Tyne and Wear	0	52	1	31	0	27
Clwyd	0	13	0	7	1	13
Dyfed	0	4	0	6	0	4
Gwynedd	0	9	0	3	0	1
Mid Glamorgan	0	7	0	9	0	5
South Glamorgan	0	10	2	10	1	12
West Glamorgan	0	14	0	14	0	10
West Midlands	0	35	0	27	2	20
Warwickshire	0	0	1	0	0	0
Wiltshire	0	12	0	11	0	13
Yorkshire	1	85	2	85	3	97
Not recorded	0	31	0	10	0	12

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if HQ 101 Battalion REME was listed for closure in the first round of recommendations for the future of the Territorial Army proposed by HQ Land Command. [69346]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 657.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many REME regulars were recruited in the North West; how many REME recruits came from North Wales during each of the last five years; and how many of these were recruited via the cadets. [69329]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information shown in the table reflects the numbers of REME soldiers recruited through Army and Armed Forces Careers Offices in the areas shown. It does not necessarily reflect individuals' areas of origin. The numbers shown as Ex-Cadet reflect those who are known to be former cadets and are included in the main total.

Year	North West Numbers	North West Ex-cadet	North Wales Numbers	North Wales Ex-cadet
1994	71	15	3	2
1995	115	21	28	8
1996	151	33	22	7
1997	109	15	10	2
1998	125	12	14	3

The regions used are those defined in the publication "Regional Trends" published by the Office for National Statistics.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the cost to his Department of empty houses vacated by (a) officers and (b) other ranks moving from Chorley 101 REME to Queensferry. [69332]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Vacancies created by the departure of families moving with 101 Bn REME from the Preston area to North Wales are expected to be filled by families attached to other Army units in the Preston area. While there may, therefore, be some short term vacancies associated with this changeover, no costs in terms of long term voids are anticipated at this time.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date TAVRA North West was consulted about the decision to transfer HQ 101 Battalion REME to Queensferry. [69317]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The North West Territorial and Auxiliary Volunteer Reserve Association were consulted on this proposal on 12 October, at a meeting held at Headquarters Land.

Territorial Army

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) the Territorial Army's and (b) the cadets' role in recruiting regulars for the army; and if he will list the recruitment figures for regulars by region in each of the last three years. [69327]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Neither the Territorial Army nor the cadet forces have a specific role in recruiting to the regular Army. However, a number of members of both organisations go on to join the regular Army. The numbers of recruits to the regular Army, by region, in each of the last three years are as follows.

Region	1996 Total	1996 Ex TA/Cadet	1997 Total	1997 Ex TA/Cadet	1998 Total	1998 Ex TA/Cadet
East Anglia	618	171	551	143	518	155
East Midlands	1,286	393	1,136	274	1,288	287
North West	2,067	458	2,097	442	2,363	408
North	1,701	497	1,703	398	1,848	390
South East	2,632	1,031	2,158	737	2,395	603
South West	1,168	346	1,168	335	1,308	313
West Midlands	1,049	308	1,019	304	1,210	290
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,649	424	1,599	394	1,887	430
Northern Ireland	473	135	419	122	529	122
Scotland	1,660	426	1,642	400	2,117	491
Wales	813	217	922	234	1,047	214
Location not recorded	393		153		87

The regions are as defined in the publication "Regional Trends" published by the Office for National Statistics. The figures reflect numbers recruited by Army/Armed Forces Careers Office in the regions in question. They do not necessarily indicate individuals' region of origin.

Compensation Claims

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) on 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 529, if he will list the year of submission of each claim for compensation on the grounds of (a) post-traumatic stress disorder and (b) physical injury, with the geographical region where it is alleged the injuries were sustained. [69607]

Mr. Spellar: The years in which my Department received the (a) post traumatic disorder claims and (b) physical injury claims to which my hon. Friend refers are set out in the table.

Year claim submitted	Post traumatic stress disorder claims	Personal injury claims
1979	—	2
1985	—	3
1988	—	4
1989	—	3
1990	—	19
1991	—	39
1992	—	51
1993	—	90
1994	10	136
1995	16	232
1996	40	574
1997	39	1,053
1998	43	1,498
1999	7	12

Information regarding the geographical region where the alleged injuries were sustained could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Patrols (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many (a) foot and (b) mobile patrols were carried out in support of the RUC, broken down by approximate district council constituency between (a) 11 May and 8 June 1998 and (b) 9 November and 7 December 1998; [69884]

(2) how many patrols were carried out by each battalion stationed in Northern Ireland broken down by police division and approximate district council constituencies between (a) 11 May and 8 June 1998 and (b) 9 November and 7 December 1998. [69883]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It is not possible to differentiate between foot and mobile patrols as many patrols are a combination of both. The information requested about patrols in general is set out in the table.

Battalion	Police division	Approximate district council boundaries	Number of patrols 11 May-8 June 1998	Number of patrols 9 November–7 December 1998
3 Inf Bde
Armagh Roulement Battalion[1,2]	H	Armagh, Newry and Mourne	414	308
East Tyrone Roulement Battalion	K	Cookstown, Dungannon	244	123
Ballykinler Battalion	G	Down, Ards, Newry and Mourne	118	6
3 R Irish	J	Craigavon, Lisburn, Banbridge	355	300
8 R Irish	H	Armargh	470	280
8 Inf Bde
Ballykelly Battalion	N	Limavady, Strabane	22	7
Londonderry Battalion	N	Londonderry, Strabane	127	12
Omagh Battalion[1]	L	Omagh, Dungannon, Fermanagh	128	133
4 R Irish	L	Fermanagh	229	218
5 R Irish	O	Magherafelt, Limavady, Colerain, Moyle, Larne, Antrim, Ballymena, Ballymoney	27	0

Battalion	Police division	Approximate district council boundaries	Number of patrols 11 May-8 June 1998	Number of patrols 9 November–7 December 1998
39 Inf Bde
Belfast Roulement Battalion	B	Belfast	324	0
Holywood Battalion	D	North Down, Carrickfergus, Newtownabbey	211	0
7 R Irish	A and E	Belfast, North Down, Castlereagh	12	0
9 R Irish	D and B	Lisburn, Antrim	81	0

[1] Included the Drumadd Roulement Battalion whose Squadrons supported other battalions in 3 Infantry Brigade's are until 16–17 November 1998 when it was re-located to the mainland.

[2] Includes one company of the Province Reserve Battalion.

[3] Includes one company of the Rural Reinforcement Battalion for the period 11 May-8 June only. It was re-located to the mainland on 23 September 1998.

A patrol is defined as any foot or mobile patrol in support of the RUC regardless of size or duration. Patrols conducted by the Army for local security around bases are not included.

Some battalions operate in more than one Police Division.

Police Divisions are not co-terminous with District Council boundaries. These delineations are therefore only approximate and in some cases a Council area may be covered by more than one Battalion, e.g Lisburn.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on policing MoD areas 24 hours a day; what was his Department's budget for such policing for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; what assessment he has made of such policing (i) nationally and (ii) in Gloucestershire; what discussions he has had with RAF Command Security about this issue; and if he will make a statement. [69505]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence Police provide a civilian policing service to the Ministry of Defence and are available to provide a response 24 hours a day from police officers based at MOD establishments, mobile Area Police Teams, and other specialist services.

My Department's expenditure on MOD police has been as follows:

Year	£ million
1995–96	134
1996–97	130
1997–98	134

The forecast expenditure for 1998–99 is £137 million.

The requirement for Ministry of Defence Police is kept under continual assessment both nationally across the Department and at individual Establishments and geographical areas of the Defence Estate. Gloucestershire is included in these assessments. RAF Command Security are fully involved in these discussions.

Armed Forces Pension Scheme

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries' armed forces pension schemes have been studied as part of the UK Armed Forces Pension Scheme Review announced on 23 September 1998. [67127]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In undertaking the Review of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme the MOD will be looking at examples of good practice in other pension schemes. The Review is in its early stages and we have not yet finalised which foreign Armed Forces pension schemes we shall examine. We would, however, expect to consider the schemes of major NATO allies and other Western Armed Forces.

ASTOR Programme

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned in-service date for the ASTOR programme; and what changes to that date have taken place since May 1997. [69026]

Mr. Spellar: The In Service Date, ISD, in May 1997 was 2003. Since then the bidders for the Airborne Stand-Off Radar, ASTOR, programme have been asked to review the feasibility of this in their bids for the Full Development and Production phase of the programme.

The Department is currently in the process of evaluating bids, and it would, therefore, not be appropriate to make specific comments on any aspects of the bids at this time. On current plans we aim to announce a decision on the project in the spring, and award a contract later this year. The new ISD is dependent upon the selected bid.

RN Naval Base Clyde

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, columns 460–61, on RN Base Faslane, on what date BP4 probes started to be used at RN Naval Base Clyde to monitor personnel leaving the reactor compartments of nuclear submarines. [69088]

Mr. Spellar: The BP4 probe has been in use at HM Naval Base Clyde for approximately 15 years.

RN Base Faslane

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the radiation hotspots discovered in M11 workshop at RN Base Faslane in 1989. [69466]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No radiation "hotspots" were discovered in the M11 workshop in 1989.

Future Engineer Tank

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Future Engineer Tank; and if he will list the project milestones. [68516]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The Future Engineer Tank programme will provide the Army with modern armoured bridge launchers and engineer vehicles to support the Challenger 2 Main Battle Tank. A number of potential solutions have been identified and the MOD plans to let feasibility study contracts with Vickers Defence Systems, Alvis Vehicles Ltd. and OBRUM, in partnership with Marconi Electronic Systems (Land and Naval). Depending on the results of the feasibility study phase, which are expected to report next year, we expect to select one contractor to develop and manufacture both variants.

We currently require an in service date of around 2004.

RAF Dishforth

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the long-term future of RAF Dishforth. [69178]

Mr. Doug Henderson: On current plans, RAF Dishforth will continue to be used both as a helicopter base and for training aircraft operating from RAF Linton-on-Ouse.

Tornado

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the average flying hours in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998 for Tornado F3 aircraft in service with the RAF. [69383]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Tornado F3 aircraft each flew an average of 24.5 hours per month in 1997 and 21 hours in 1998.

Canberra Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the average flying hours in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998 of Canberra aircraft in service with the RAF. [69674]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Canberra aircraft each flew an average of 21 hours per month in 1997 and 17 hours in 1998.

European Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department adopted the European parliamentary constituencies as a geographical unit for decision making. [69378]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department has not adopted the European Parliamentary Constituencies as a geographical unit for decision making.

Departmental Property

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list property owned by his Department which he plans to dispose of with outline proposals for (a) housing, (b) industrial use and (c) other uses, indicating the size of each site and the number of houses or premises projected. [69572]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

London Irish Rifles Company

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made to assure the continuity of the London Irish Rifles Company. [69485]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The London Irish Rifles will form part of the new London Battalion, which is part of the new structure for the Territorial Army announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 17 November 1998, Official Report, columns 749–71. The London Battalion, which has yet to be given formal name, will have 6 companies with a total strength of some 658 volunteers. The intention is that the units that will make up the London Battalion will be able to retain their capbadge affiliations within the new structure, if they so wish.

RAF Manston (Military Equipment)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigations are taking place into an incident in May 1998 involving a cargo of military equipment flown from RAF Manston destined for South Africa which failed to reach its destination; and if he will make a statement. [68236]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

The investigation of alleged breaches of United Kingdom export controls is a matter for HM Customs & Excise. It is not normal practice to comment publicly about the existence or nature of such investigations.

TREASURY

Nicaragua

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans the Government have to write off the debt of Nicaragua with UK institutions. [68469]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The UK has written off all aid loans debt to Nicaragua. We have also pledged that Nicaragua need make no debt service payment to the UK over the next three years, at which time Nicaragua is expected to qualify for debt write off under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what financial assistance has been given to Nicaragua in the relief effort since Hurricane Mitch; and what assistance he will provide in the future. [68468]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The UK has contributed £10 million to the trust fund set up by the International Financial Institutions for assistance to meet Nicaragua's multi-lateral debt service obligations and participated in an international debt relief package for Honduras and Nicaragua at the Paris Club, which will amount to over $100 million dollars of debt relief.

Electronic Warfare

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for the Home Department of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 75, on electronic warfare, what responsibilities of his Department for measures against information warfare will come within the lead responsibility of the Secretary of State for the Home Department. [68314]

Dawn Primarolo: The Home Secretary's reply of 25 January set out his new responsibilities to co-ordinate action across government and to work with the private sector to ensure adequate protection for the UK's critical IT infrastructure. The responsibilities of individual Departments have not changed.

In this context, HM Treasury has responsibility for the regulatory framework for the financial sector. Within this framework, the Financial Services Authority has operational responsibility for banking supervision, which includes ensuring that banks have sufficient systems and controls to protect themselves against the possibility of attack. The Bank of England oversees the UK payment systems industry.

Inland Revenue and HM Customs and Excise have responsibility for ensuring the robustness of their systems against attack.

Defence Pensions Expenditure

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list his latest estimates and forecast expenditure in cash terms for (i) defence superannuation less charges, (ii) civil superannuation less charges and (iii) pension increase payments for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–00, (d) 2000–01 and (e) 2001–02. [68379]

Mr. Milburn: Latest figures for net pensions expenditure can be found in Supply Estimates 1998–99, Main Estimates (Cm 635, April 1998). Supply Estimates for 1999–2000 will be presented to Parliament in the Spring. Figures for historical figures are available in the Appropriation Accounts of the respective departmental votes.

International Bodies (UK Contributions)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the United Kingdom's net contribution to (a) the European Union, (b) NATO, (c) the United Nations, (d) the Council of Europe, (e) the WEU and (f) the OSCE in the latest year for which figures are available. [67119]

Mrs. Roche: In 1997–98, the latest year for which figures are available, the United Kingdom's net contributions were:

£ million

Organisation	1997–98 net contributions
European Community Budget	2,567
NATO	122
United Nations	82
Council of Europe	17
WEU	2
OSCE	6

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the United Kingdom's total financial contribution to the EU in 1997–98. [69165]

Mrs. Roche: The United Kingdom's net contribution to the EC Budget in 1997–98 was £2.6 billion.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will extend footnote 3 of Table A2 in the 1998 Comprehensive Spending Review to cover the years 1993–94 to 1997–98. [68389]

Mrs. Roche: Outturn figures for the UK's net contribution are published each year in the Departmental Report of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments, the last being Cm 3917 of April 1998. The most current estimate of the figure for 1997–98 is £2.6 billion.

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide latest estimates and forecasts for (i) local authority self-financed expenditure and (ii) Scottish non-domestic rate payments, for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–01 and (e) 2001–02. [68393]

Mr. Milburn: The latest estimate and forecasts of local authority self-financed expenditure are shown in the table.

Local authority self-financed expenditure

	£ billion
1997–98 estimated outturn	13.7
1998–99 estimated outturn	14.5
1999–2000 forecast	15.5
2000–01 forecast	16.6
2001–02 forecast	17.9

Scottish Non-Domestic Rates payments distributed to local authorities for 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are £1,326 million, £1,395 million and £1,441 million respectively.

As of 1 July 1999, responsibility for Scottish non-domestic rates will be devolved to the Scottish Ministers and the Scottish Parliament. The Scottish non-domestic rates yield for 2000–01 and 2001–02 will therefore depend on decisions by the Scottish Ministers and the Scottish Parliament.

Child Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he would estimate the rates of child benefit for the first and subsequent children from April 1999 required to ensure that if a higher rate taxpayer in receipt of child benefit paid tax on it at (a) the higher rate or (b) the standard rate, the net cash amount of benefit received remained at the level already announced from April 1999; if he would further estimate (1) the gross annual programme cost of increasing child benefit to those levels and (2) what would be the net cost to the Exchequer of raising child benefit to those levels (i) with no taxation and (ii) with higher rate taxpayer recipients paying tax on the benefit at the higher rate, taking into account the consequential effects on working families tax credit, income support payments and other means-tested benefits. [67795]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The required rates of child benefit and the gross and net costs, are given in the table. The net costs take into account the consequential effects on income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit. Entitlement to Working Families Tax Credit is not affected by changes to child benefit rates.

From April 1999	Rates of child benefit First child (£)	Subsequent children (£)	Gross cost (£ billion)	Net cost with no taxation (£ billion)
	14.40	9.60	—	—
(a) To give equivalent net cash amount when taxed at the higher rate of 40 per cent.	24.00	16.00	5.5	4.4
(b) To give equivalent net cash amount when taxed at the basic rate of 23 per cent.	18.70	12.45	2.4	1.9

If all child benefit payments to those mothers or lone fathers who were liable at the higher rate of 40 per cent. were taxable, the yield for 1999–2000 would be about £60 million with the child benefit rates at (a) and about £50 million with the child benefit rates at (b). Taxing child benefit for higher rate taxpayer recipients has no consequential effects on benefits.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many vacancies there were in operation posts of Customs and Excise in (i) South Wales, (ii) Newcastle-upon-Tyne and (iii) West Yorkshire in (a) January 1995, (b) January 1996, (c) January 1997, (d) January 1998 and (e) at the latest available date. [68815]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The following figures show the vacancies filled during the periods in question.

	South Wales	Newcastle/West Yorkshire
January 1995	[1]—	32
January 1996	93	117
January 1997	98	164
January 1998	132	29
January 1999	0	2

[1] No figures available

Scottish Consolidated Fund

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what powers of direction he will have over money transferred to the Scottish Consolidated Fund as a consequence of increased investment in specific, nominated projects in England and Wales; if such money would have to be used by the Scottish Parliament for identical projects in Scotland or for projects in the same departmental heading; and what monitoring role his Department would have over the use of such money. [68599]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The Scottish Parliament will have the maximum freedom to determine its own expenditure priorities within the funds allocated to it. Control and scrutiny of spending by Ministers of the Scottish Parliament will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament. The Treasury will continue to collect and publish information on spending in Scotland.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to establish a public service agreement between the Treasury and the Scottish Executive over moneys transferred to the Scottish Consolidated Fund; what will be the purpose of such an agreement; and what discussions he has had with the Scottish Office on this issue. [68430]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 February 1999]: I have no plans to establish a public service agreement between the Treasury and the Scottish Executive.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the real terms annual percentage change in spending in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland between 1996–97 and 2001–02 on (i) education, (ii) health, and (iii) transport, broken down into (1) roads and (2) rail, (iv) housing, (v) police and (vi) local government. [68431]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The allocation of expenditure to the programmes listed (with the exception of police spending in Wales) will be matters for the National Assembly of Wales and the Scottish Parliament when they assume powers on 1 July.

Smuggling (Tobacco and Alcohol)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what work is being undertaken by HM Customs and Excise to include seizures at airports, EU diversion fraud and smuggling in freight containers originating outside the EU within the estimates of the revenue from (a) tobacco and (b) alcohol lost as a result of smuggling. [69532]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise's current estimate of the annual revenue lost (excise duty and VAT) through the smuggling of tobacco products by air passengers is £50 million. This estimate is contained in a report laid in the House of Commons on 19 November 1998. There is no estimate of the revenue lost through smuggling by air passengers of alcoholic drinks, but this is not believed to be on a comparable scale.

HM Customs and Excise are currently working with representatives of the trade and other interested parties to establish robust methodologies for the measurement of excise duty evasion as a whole. This work is in keeping with one of the recommendations of the report of the Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review, which was published in July 1998.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate by HM Customs and Excise of the revenue lost on (a) tobacco and (b) alcohol products as a result of smuggling and bootlegging in the current financial year; and what are the final figures for the last financial year. [69531]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise estimates for the revenue lost (excise duty and VAT) through smuggling of alcohol and tobacco products are produced on a calendar year basis. Their most recent estimates are contained in a report laid in the House of Commons library on 19 November 1998.

In 1998, Customs estimate that £1,000 million was lost through cross-Channel smuggling of tobacco products, and £220 million through such smuggling of alcoholic drinks. The equivalent estimates for 1997 are £790 million for tobacco products and £180 million for alcoholic drinks. Customs also estimate that the annual revenue currently lost through smuggling of tobacco products by air passengers is about £50 million.

These estimates exclude any amounts for revenue lost through smuggling in very large freight consignments, for which Customs have not published any estimates.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further resources are planned for HM Customs and Excise to combat smuggling and bootlegging from sources (a) within and (b) outside the EU in addition to those already announced since May 1997. [69553]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs has been allocated £35 million under the Comprehensive Spending Review to tackle evasion of alcohol and tobacco duties. This includes over 100 additional front line staff, both at ports and inland, to combat the smuggling and distribution of illicit goods. The staff will not deal exclusively with goods from within or outside the EU; they will tackle fraudulent activity whatever the source. They will all be in post by 1 April.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions are taking place with customs authorities outside the EU to determine the amount of smuggled alcohol and tobacco products which originate outside the EU. [69529]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise are currently working with representatives of the trade and other interested parties to establish robust methodologies for the measurement of excise duty evasion as a whole. For measurement purposes, the split between EU and non-EU sourced smuggling is a secondary factor.

Customs and Excise have contact with many non-EU customs authorities for operational purposes.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons seizures at airports, EU diversion fraud and smuggling in freight containers originating outside the EU are excluded from the official HM Customs and Excise estimate of the revenue lost on (a) tobacco and (b) alcohol products as a result of smuggling. [69528]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise's current estimate of the annual revenue lost (excise duty and VAT) through the smuggling of tobacco products by air passengers is £50 million. This estimate is contained in a report laid in the House of Commons on 19 November 1998. There is no estimate of the revenue lost through smuggling by air passengers of alcoholic drinks, but this is not believed to be on a comparable scale.

Customs' published estimates of the scale of cross-Channel smuggling and smuggling by air passengers are based on statistical surveys of returning UK passengers conducted each year by Customs. Due to their hidden nature, and lower incidence, it is not practical directly to measure EU diversion fraud and smuggling in very large freight consignments by such means. However, HM Customs and Excise are currently working with representatives of the trade and other interested parties to establish robust methodologies for the measurement of excise duty evasion as a whole. This work is in keeping with one of the recommendations of the report of the Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review, which was published in July 1998.

ECOFIN

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the (a) Ministers and (b) officials, indicating the departments represented, who were present at the ECOFIN meeting on 26 January. [69249]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 4 February 1999]: There was no meeting of the Economic and Finance Council (ECOFIN) on 26 January. The Chancellor of the Exchequer attended a meeting of ECOFIN on 18 January, accompanied by a number of officials.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the EU countries which, at the ECOFIN meeting in Brussels on 26 January, declared (a) in favour and (b) against ecological tax reform; and if he will make a statement on the Government's policy. [69306]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The ECOFIN Council agreed at the meeting held on 1 December 1998 to mandate officials to continue work on a framework of energy taxation based on the draft Energy Products Directive. The meeting held on 26 January was a technical working group discussion on the draft Directive. Member States were not asked to say whether they were in favour or against ecological tax reform. The working group is expected to report back to ECOFIN in due course.

The Government's position on the Energy Products Directive is that we favour some aspects of the proposal, such as higher minimum rates of tax on road fuels.

However, we could not accept, for social policy reasons, any obligation to impose new taxes on domestic fuel and power. Our attitude to new taxes on business use of energy will depend on the decisions we take in the light of Lord Marshall's report on 'Economic Instruments and the Business Use of Energy' which was published on 3 November 1998.

Barnett Formula

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has (a) to review and (b) to alter the Barnett formula. [69238]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 4 February 1999]: I have no such plans.

Financial Services Bill

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to announce a timetable for the setting up of the Joint Committee on the proposed Financial Services Bill; when the proposed Membership of the Joint Committee will be announced; what criteria will be used in proposing members; and when the proposed remit of the Joint Committee will be announced. [R] [69183]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The Joint Committee will be appointed after discussions through the usual channels and the necessary motions will be tabled soon.

Counterfeit Euro Notes

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has evaluated on the printing of counterfeit Euro notes in advance of their distribution; and if he will make a statement. [69196]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 4 February 1999]: There is no specific evidence available at this stage of any counterfeit Euro notes. But police intelligence is constantly alert to the possibility of such activity. Moreover, there is a framework of international co-operation already in place to combat the counterfeiting of the Euro currency.

Brazilian Parrots

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the letter of 28 October from the Financial Secretary to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (3/5658/98) concerning the Customs and Excise investigation into Lear's macaws and other parrots, what is the current position in respect of the Lear's macaws and their return to Brazil. [65406]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 21 January 1999]: The Lear's macaws and other parrots have been seized as they are suspected to be liable to forfeiture. They are being kept in secure accommodation pending civil condemnation proceedings.

Pensions Mis-selling

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases have been referred to the police for criminal prosecution as a result of pensions mis-selling in the last five years. [68806]

Mrs. Roche: None.

Financial Services Industry

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the European Court of Justice Ruling (C172/96) on the UK financial services industry; what estimate he has made of the cost of the ruling to HM Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement. [68816]

Dawn Primarolo: The European Court of Justice ruled (C172/96) on 14 July 1998 that foreign exchange (forex) transactions are supplies for VAT purposes. This ruling will effect the extent to which financial institutions will be able to recover VAT on purchases relating to these transactions. In some cases, it will reduce the amount of VAT recoverable, but for those UK financial institutions with a wide range of non-EU, international customers it should increase the amount of recoverable tax. This is because these institutions will now be able to recover the VAT on forex transactions supplied to persons outside the EU where they were not previously able to do so. Some of these same institutions may also benefit if they apply the ruling to forex transactions which were made before 14 July 1998. The ECJ ruling will have no significant effect on the costs of HM Customs and Excise.

Child Care Vouchers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that child care vouchers issued by employers should not be counted as part of an employee's taxable income; and if he will make a statement. [68964]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have no plans to exempt employer-provided child care vouchers from tax as a benefit in kind. Help for child care costs will be available to those who need it most through the child care tax credit, which forms part of the Working Families Tax Credit, to be introduced from 5 October this year.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) of 14 January 1999, Official Report, columns 430–31, on the New Deal for Young People, what assumptions in respect of savings in benefits and increased tax revenue from those funding work are made in his calculations of the cost per job; and if it is his intention to apply this methodology to other Government programmes. [66592]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 January 1999]: I warmly endorse the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on the New Deal for Young People on 14 January 1999, Official Report, columns 431–31. Expenditure on the New Deal is, as he said, money well spent. Early evidence suggests that the New Deal has speeded up the rate of exit from unemployment and the rate of entry into jobs amongst 18–24 year olds.

The Government's estimate of the average cost of jobs secured so far through the New Deal does not rely on assumptions in respect of savings in benefits and increased tax revenue. However, it does take general account of these factors when assessing the effectiveness of employment or other analogous programmes. As the New Deal increases sustainable employment and reduces structural unemployment, revenue would be gained and benefit outlay reduced as a result. This would contribute to the Government's Welfare to Work agenda, reducing dependency, maximising self-determination and contributing to the development of communities.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make available details of his travel arrangements for attending international meetings of finance ministers in September 1997. [70306]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Details have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the cost of the chartered helicopter he used between the airport and his hotel in Mauritius when he attended the Commonwealth finance ministers meeting in September 1997; [69412]

(2) what assistance the British High Commission in Mauritius gave in arranging to charter the helicopter used by the Chancellor of the Exchequer between the airport and the hotel during the Commonwealth finance ministers meeting in September 1997. [69413]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 1 February 1999]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I am giving today to my hon. Friend the Member for Halton (Mr. Twigg), Official Report, column 31.

Windfall Tax (Agricultural Land)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce a tax on windfall profits on the sale of agricultural land for development purposes. [69308]

Dawn Primarolo: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be making his Budget statement on 9 March.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing both expenditure and per capita expenditure for (a) Northern Ireland, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) England for the years 1992–93 to 1998–99, analysed by the same programmes as Table 7.6B of Cm 3901. [69565]

Mr. Milburn: Tables showing identifiable General Government Expenditure (GGE) and identifiable GGE per capita, by territory and broad function, for the years 1992–93 to 1996–97 were published in Chapter 7 of the last edition of Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses (PESA) (Cm 3901). Tables for the years 1993–94 to 1997–98 will be published in PESA 1999–2000.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Colombia

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when her Department first made contact with the Pathfinders rescue organisation following the earthquake in Colombia. [69367]

Clare Short: My Department has not been contacted by the Association of Pathfinders in relation to the Colombian earthquake. The International Rescue Corps and RAPID UK, which are partners of the Association of Pathfinders, were in contact with my Department and undertook, independently, search and rescue work in Colombia. Both organisations were facilitated in their efforts in-country by the British Embassy in Bogota.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has to assist Colombia following the recent earthquake disaster. [69479]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 723.

Technical Assistance Programmes

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of her Department's budget for 1997–98 was spent on technical assistance. [69478]

Clare Short: In 1997–98 DFID spent £676 million on technical co-operation (comprising capital-related TC, stand alone TC, grants and other aid in kind). This represented 65 per cent. of the Department for International Development's bilateral programme and 33 per cent. of total expenditure.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the technical assistance programmes that her Department funded in 1997–98. [69477]

Clare Short: Technical co-operation expenditure in 1997–98 was allocated regionally as follows:

Country	£ million	Percentage
Africa	197	29
of which, South of the Sahara	186	28
America	62	9
Asia	173	26
Europe	87	13
Pacific	5	1
Non-region specific	152	22
Total	676	100

Technical co-operation (TC) currently comprises expenditure on capital-related TC, stand alone TC, grants and other aid in kind as follows:

personnel

training and scholarships

knowledge generation (including technology development and research) support to the development work of the UK and international voluntary organisations grants to the British Council and for other development work by the UK institutions non-emergency appeals through multilateral agencies

British Partnership and Heads of Mission Gift schemes funding of land and geological surveys in developing countries provision of books, equipment and other supplies in support of TC funding of evaluation of aid activities

cost of certain pensions and related payments where the UK has taken over responsibility from the governments of developing countries.

Know How Fund

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the budget of her Department from the Know How fund for 1999. [69068]

Clare Short: The Know How Fund budget for financial year 1998–99 is that published in the Departmental Report: £79 million.

Future years are currently being considered in the Resource Allocation Round.

The final figure will be published in the next Departmental Report in March 1999.

Overseas Aid

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much was spent on overseas aid in 1997–98 by her Department in (a) India, (b) Pakistan, (c) Bangladesh, (d) Zimbabwe and (e) Kenya. [69166]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development bilateral programme expenditure in 1997/98 to the countries specified is given in the table.

1997–98	£ million
India	80.9
Pakistan	27.8
Bangladesh	38.9
Zimbabwe	12.2
Kenya	29.2

Aid Debt

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much bilateral aid debt of developing nations has been cancelled by Her Majesty's Government since 1 May 1997. [69225]

Clare Short: In September 1997, as part of the Mauritius Mandate, we agreed to cancel the outstanding aid debts, worth £132 million, owed by those lower income Commonwealth countries that are committed to pursuing the international development targets, that are following sound policies which benefit the poor and promote responsive and accountable government, and that are bearing down on corruption. To date, under this initiative we have cancelled aid debts worth £29 million.

In August 1997 we agreed a package of assistance to help the Government of Antigua and Barbuda with the costs arising from the influx of people from Montserrat following the volcanic eruptions there. This package included debt relief of £1.25 million.

In addition, in the last two financial years, we have forgone repayments of aid loans totalling £38.8 million under debt relief agreements reached before May 1997.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of her Department's budget in the year 1997–98 was paid (a) directly to other Governments, (b) to non-Governmental organisations outside of the United Kingdom and (c) to the EU. [69226]

Clare Short: The information is as follows:

(a) Amounts paid directly to recipient country governments (that is, financial aid, programme aid, aid and trade provision, and debt relief) totalled £257 million in 1997–98. This represented 25 per cent. of DFID's bilateral programme expenditure in that year (12 per cent. of total expenditure).

(b) Payments to non-governmental organisations outside the UK are not separately identifiable in the statistics for 1997–98.

(c) Our contribution to the EC in 1997–98 was £536 million which represented 56 per cent. of DFID's multilateral programme expenditure in 1997–98 (26 per cent. of total expenditure).

Human Rights

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the countries with whom she has discussed their human rights record during the last 12 months. [69401]

Clare Short: Efforts to secure human rights, including economic and social rights, are an integral part of building sustainable development. These issues are part of my dialogue with all countries where we work.

Street Children

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the countries in which her Department currently supports programmes to assist street children. [69389]

Clare Short: The main countries in which we are currently funding programmes to assist street children are listed. In addition to these country-specific initiatives, we support organisations with programmes for street children in a large number of countries. These include The Consortium for Street Children, UNICEF and the International Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour of the ILO which, between them, cover all countries.

Brazil

Ecuador

Kenya

India

South Africa

Russia
India
Tanzania
Myanmar (Burma)
Zambia
Uzbekistan
Kurdistan
Bangladesh.

PRIME MINISTER

Business Costs (EU Directive)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the EU directives which he has identified as affecting business costs and which he is seeking to renegotiate. [69743]

The Prime Minister: The Government are committed to working with the Commission and other Member States to ensure that EC legislation does not impose unwarranted burdens on business.

We are actively engaged in the SLIM initiative (Simpler Legislation for the Internal Market) which revisits specific EC rules to find ways of making them more effective and less burdensome on individuals and business. Under our Presidency of the EU, we secured agreement to reviews of EC legislation covering electromagnetic compatibility, insurance and social security. We are now participating in further reviews of dangerous substances, pre-packaging and company law legislation.

The Government are also working to ensure that the impact of new EC legislation is properly assessed. For example, our Presidency of the EU saw the launch of a pilot European Business Test Panel, which consults business on specific proposals at an early stage in the legislative process. We are also seeking early implementation of the Business Environment Simplification Taskforce recommendations to reduce the administrative burdens on small firms. And the commission has now made a commitment to improve its business impact assessment system, known as the fiche d'impact.

"This Morning" (Interview)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the full transcript of his interview on ITV's "This Morning" programme on 1 February. [69995]

The Prime Minister: The transcript was provided by the programme. I have placed a copy in the Library.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received on the accuracy of the transcript of his interview on 1 February issued by his office to journalists on 2 February; and if he will make a statement. [69994]

The Prime Minister: None.

Homelessness

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will establish a post of co-ordinator of the Government's policies in respect of the homeless. [69271]

The Prime Minister: Government policy on homelessness is co-ordinated by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Housing, in consultation with her colleagues, particularly my hon. Friends the Minister with responsibility for housing, transport and European affairs for Scotland, the Minister with responsibility for the environment and agriculture for Northern Ireland and the Minister responsible for housing in Wales. The problems of rough sleeping are particularly intense in London, where there is borough and district fragmentation and a large number of rough sleepers. We are creating a new single unit for the capital with a unified budget for tackling these issues including housing, health, employment and resettlement to link the work of central Government departments and agencies, local authority services, the voluntary sector and business, as recommended by the Social Exclusion Unit. My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Housing expects to announce the appointment of the new head of the London Unit shortly.

Carers

Kali Mountford: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to publish the Government's National Strategy for Carers. [69764]

The Prime Minister: The Government's National Strategy for Carers, "Caring about Carers", is being published today. It describes what we have done so far to support people who provide care for their relatives or friends who are sick, disabled, vulnerable or frail. The Government intend to ensure that all of our policies take account of the needs of carers the majority of who are women. We are also introducing some major new initiatives.

I announced plans for a National Strategy for Carers, which I asked my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), now the Minister of State, Home Office to lead, on 10 June 1998.

The report of the National Strategy for Carers is the result of a consultative process, involving a large number of Government departments, carers' organisations, representatives of the National Health Service and of local authorities, other voluntary organisations which help to support carers and the people for whom they care, and a number of individual carers.

Two-thirds of carers of working age are in paid employment, and the Government's family-friendly employment strategy will help them to combine paid work with their caring responsibilities. We propose to give carers, like all employees, the right to time off to deal with a family emergency. For those carers who cannot combine paid work with caring, perhaps because they need to care for a large part of each day, our policies are focused on proper support whilst caring and on enabling them to return to work when their caring responsibilities cease.

The National Health Service and local authorities need to provide carers with information about services and to involve them in the planning of those services, so that carers' main needs are met better than they have been in the past. The Government's National Priorities Guidance to health and local authorities will require those authorities to help carers to maintain their physical health and emotional wellbeing.

We have already announced an extra £750 million over the next three years to promote independence through prevention of illness and disease and through rehabilitation. Carers and the people they care for will benefit from this.

In addition, we are providing funding from within the Comprehensive Spending Review Plans, totalling £140 million over the next three years in England, to local authorities to enhance the provision of services which allow carers to take a break from their caring responsibilities. The new ring fenced special grant will total £20 million in 1999–2000, £50 million in 2000–01, and £70 million in 2001–02.

The Government also intend, when Parliamentary time allows, to introduce new legislation to extend local authorities' powers to address carers' needs directly, which is frequently not possible at present.

The Government wish to ensure that all carers have access to a support service in the area in which they live. Health and local authorities, acting together, will be asked to involve carers and their organisations in drawing up jointly agreed plans (for inclusion in their Joint Investment Plans) for provision for carers in their areas, including for carers' support services.

We intend to trial a new question on carers for the 2001 Census. This should provide better information about the distribution of carers between local authority areas and on the numbers of young carers and those from minority ethnic groups.

The Government are also announcing today that the scheme for reductions in council tax for disabled people will be changed from 1 April 2000, so that those who live in accommodation which is valued at band A and which has an extra room which they need because of their disability, or enough floor space to allow wheelchair circulation, should receive a reduction in council tax similar to that currently given for the other bands.

The National Carers' Strategy also contains the Government's proposals to support young carers, including the provision of help for them in schools.

It is the Government's intention to continue work to support carers and to monitor implementation of these new initiatives.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list (a) the number of meetings of, (b) the membership of, (c) the budget of and (d) the issues addressed so far by, the Social Exclusion Unit. [69574]

The Prime Minister: The Social Exclusion Unit was established in December 1997. It currently consists of 29 permanent, seconded and temporary staff from a wide range of backgrounds inside and outside the Civil Service.

Members of the Unit meet frequently with Ministers, officials from other departments, and people with a wide range of experience from outside Government.

To date, the Unit has completed projects on:

Truancy and School Exclusion (report published May 1998)

Rough Sleeping (report published July 1998)

Neighbourhood Renewal (report published September 1998).

The Unit is currently working on:

Further policy formulation on the problems facing poor neighbourhoods, leading to the publication of a new national strategy on neighbourhood renewal to be unveiled in the year 2000.

Reports to me on Teenage Parenthood and 16–18 year olds not in education, training and/or employment.

The Unit's total budget for 1998–99 is £822,917.

Professor Lawrence Freedman

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Prime Minister what are the (a) role and (b) responsibilities in the Cabinet Office of Professor Lawrence Freedman. [69490]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 3 February 1999, Official Report, columns 646–47.

Gibraltar

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister when he next intends to raise Spain's closure of the Gibraltar frontier on 29 January with his Spanish counterpart. [69701]

The Prime Minister: The border between Gibraltar and Spain was closed on 29 January by a demonstration of Spanish fisherman and their sympathisers. We raised the matter with the Spanish authorities. This demonstration stopped on 30 January. We remain concerned that free movement across the border should be allowed, in conformity with EU obligations, and will continue to make this point to the Spanish authorities at every suitable opportunity.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Portadown

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland that sums have been identified for a boost package for Portadown linked to efforts to resolve the Drumcree crisis; and from which sources these sums are to be appropriated. [67778]

Mr. Paul Murphy: No decisions have yet been taken about a package of measures for the Portadown area.

Autism

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what assessment she has made of provision by health and social service boards in Northern Ireland of specialist placement for young persons and adults with autistic spectrum disorder; and if she will make a statement; [68556]

(2) what assessment she has made of the provisions for children with autism; and if she will make a statement. [68557]

Mr. McFall: The Department of Health and Social Services has not made any assessment of provisions of specialist services for people with autism. However, the Department of Health and Social Services Boards, together with the Department of Education, have supported a diagnostic scoping study commissioned by the Northern Ireland voluntary organisation Parents and Professionals and Autism (PAPA). The aims of the study are to evaluate the effectiveness of the current range of services for people with autism and make recommendations for the enhancement of service provision.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many young persons and adults with autistic spectrum disorder are provided with specialist services; and if she will make a statement. [68554]

Mr. McFall: The Department of Health and Social Services does not collect information on people with autistic spectrum disorder or the specialist services with which they are provided.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions she has had with representatives of health boards about the provision for treatment of children with (a) Kanners autism and (b) autistic spectrum disorder; and if she will make a statement. [68559]

Mr. McFall: The Department of Health and Social Services has not had any discussions with Health and Social Services Boards specifically about the provision of treatment of children with Kanners autism or autistic spectrum disorder. The special health and social needs of autistic children are provided by Trusts' learning disability and child health staff, as appropriate, and the Department is in regular contact with both Boards and Trusts about the provision of care in those specialties.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many children with autistic spectrum disorder in Northern Ireland are educated in schools or units which specialise in teaching children with autism; and if she will make a statement; [68555]

(2) what plans she has to ensure that every child with autism in Northern Ireland receives a minimum of an hour's one-to-one teaching each day by a qualified teacher; and if she will make a statement. [68558]

Mr. McFall: Information on autistic children in Northern Ireland is not held centrally. However, the Education and Training Inspectorate estimate that some 265 children with autistic spectrum disorder are currently enrolled at those special schools which cater for children with severe learning difficulties. The training provided for the teaching staff in these schools includes training to assist them in teaching children with autism. Education and Library Boards may arrange for particular levels of teaching support to be provided for individual children in accordance with their special educational needs and I have no plans to specify the minimum provision to be made for children with autism at this time.

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if she will list for the week ended 23 January the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many involved (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican groups; [68725]

(2) if she will list for the week ended 23 January the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) shootings which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many in each category were committed by (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [68724]

Mr. Ingram: Between 17 and 23 January 1999, there were 4 shooting incidents and 3 bombing incidents.

The numbers of casualties as a result of paramilitary attacks are as follows:

	By Loyalists	By Republicans
Assaults	4	0
Shootings	2	1
Total	6	1

Note:

Figures may be subject to minor adjustment in the event of further information coming to light

The figure for shooting incidents includes 3 separate incidents resulting in 3 casualties as a result of paramilitary attacks and the fourth incident is not yet attributable to any grouping.

The bombing incidents reported are not yet attributable to any grouping; however, one has been claimed by the Orange Volunteers and two by the Red Hand Defenders.

Prisoners (Early Release)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the prospective release dates of all prisoners qualifying for early release under the Belfast Agreement. [69091]

Mr. Ingram: The information in respect of prospective release dates is shown in the list. It provides the calculated release dates in accordance with the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 for prisoners who have successfully applied to the Sentence Review Commission and who have received Substantive Determinations. Those listed with prospective calculated release dates falling after 28 July 2000 have a right to be released on that day. Details of individual prisoners names are not given for sensitivity and safety considerations. The information contained in the list is as at 4 February 1999.

15 February 1999
21 February 1999
1 March 1999
13 March 1999
14 March 1999
15 March 1999
15 March 1999
24 March 1999
28 March 1999
1 April 1999
3 April 1999
13 April 1999
13 April 1999
15 April 1999
17 April 1999
23 April 1999
26 April 1999
30 April 1999

10 May 1999
16 May 1999
16 May 1999
22 May 1999
6 June 1999
15 June 1999
16 June 1999
21 June 1999
21 June 1999
21 June 1999
10 July 1999
10 July 1999
14 July 1999
16 August 1999
26 August 1999
31 August 1999
1 September 1999
6 September 1999
7 September 1999
7 September 1999
10 September 1999
14 September 1999
17 September 1999
19 September 1999
10 October 1999
12 October 1999
20 October 1999
21 October 1999
1 November 1999
16 November 1999
20 November 1999
23 November 1999
26 November 1999
10 December 1999
11 December 1999
11 December 1999
16 December 1999
20 December 1999
21 December 1999
11 February 2000
11 February 2000
14 February 2000
21 February 2000
21 February 2000
7 March 2000
13 March 2000
20 March 2000
22 March 2000
25 March 2000
27 March 2000
10 April 2000
22 April 2000
4 June 2000
8 June 2000
19 June 2000
22 June 2000
1 July 2000
15 July 2000
15 July 2000
24 July 2000
31 July 2000
29 August 2000
20 September 2000
5 October 2000
5 October 2000
8 October 2000
22 November 2000
1 December 2000
1 December 2000
1 December 2000
1 December 2000
7 December 2000
8 February 2001
19 February 2001
16 March 2001
24 March 2001
17 April 2001
26 May 2001
8 June 2001
9 June 2001
16 June 2001
21 June 2001
23 June 2001
23 July 2001
24 July 2001
25 July 2001
27 July 2001
12 August 2001
25 September 2001
25 September 2001
25 September 2001
1 October 2001
21 October 2001
21 October 2001
22 October 2001
4 November 2001
12 November 2001
14 November 2001
24 December 2001
12 February 2002
13 March 2002
13 March 2002
29 April 2002
12 June 2002
25 June 2002
8 July 2002
28 August 2002
18 November 2002
11 March 2003
13 March 2003
8 April 2003
25 July 2003
6 August 2003
10 November 2003
2 December 2003
7 February 2004

15 February 2004
16 March 2004
24 March 2004
14 October 2004
19 March 2005
10 May 2005
10 August 2005
17 August 2005
2 November 2005
18 November 2005
18 November 2005.

Wild Animal Imports

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to bring Northern Ireland law into line with that of Great Britain regarding the import of wild animals. [69285]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 4 February 1999]: A consultation paper setting out proposals for Northern Ireland legislation equivalent to the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 was issued by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland on 5 February 1999. A copy has been placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Sports Organisations (Media Takeovers)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policy on takeovers of sporting organisations by media organisations. [65634]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1999]: The Director General of Fair Trading advises on mergers which qualify for investigation under the Fair Trading Act 1973. Where a merger raises concerns in respect of a particular market it can be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) for investigation. All cases are considered on their individual merits.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which papers relating to BSkyB's takeover of Manchester United were brought to the attention of his predecessor, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson); and what meetings his predecessor attended with (a) BSkyB and (b) Manchester United's management. [67287]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 27 January 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow), on 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 363, and to the reply to Question 65643 tabled by the Member for Buckingham, answered above.

Mirror Group Flotation

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when he expects to publish the report of the inquiry into the flotation of the Mirror Group; [65587]

(2) if he will publish an interim report into the inquiry on the flotation of the Mirror Group. [65586]

Mr. Byers: The Inspectors have not completed their inquiries. No interim report has been prepared by them. It is important for the inspection to be completed as quickly as is possible and for a final report to be submitted. The publication of an interim report could delay the publication of a final report.

Hollis Industries Plc

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which of his Department's Ministers had responsibility for his Department's inquiry into alleged accounting offences by Hollis Industries plc during the period from September to December 1998. [65592]

Mr. Byers: On 23 September 1998 my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) decided, after a discussion with the Permanent Secretary, that neither he nor any other DTI Minister should be involved in these inquiries and that they should be handled by officials. Ministers remained accountable to Parliament for any actions or decisions taken by officials.

Gas Generation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what economic appraisal he has made of the additional energy costs to British industry which would result from an extension of the moratorium in gas generation approvals after spring 2000. [69180]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 4 February 1999]: As set out in paragraph 10.18 of the October 1998 White Paper, "Conclusions of The Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government response to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee" (Cm 4071), the Government do not consider that the stricter policy on consents for gas-fired power stations will have an adverse impact on competitiveness. This conclusion will remain valid, both before and after Spring 2000, if the conditions for relaxing the policy have not been met.

Former Ministers

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps were taken by his predecessor to ensure that the business affairs of the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) were investigated by his Department without ministerial involvement. [66451]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 January 1999]: On 23 September 1998, the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry decided, after discussion with the Permanent Secretary, that neither he nor any other DTI Minister should be involved in the inquiries the Department was making following certain allegations relating to companies with which my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) had been involved. No papers generated by the Department's inquiries, or concerning their substance, were at any time shown to my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson).

Export Licences

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department has taken to evaluate and audit the military, security and police equipment exported to Saudi Arabia by British Aerospace which, under the Al Yamamah agreement, is exempt from export licence requirement. [68330]

Mr. George Robertson: I have been asked to reply.

Equipment supplied to Saudi Arabia under the Al Yamamah programme is covered by contracts placed on British Aerospace by the Ministry of Defence. Prior to contract placement, the same criteria as those used for export licensing are applied when evaluating requirements.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the export licences granted to GKL Group for the export of armoured vehicles components and weapons to Indonesia since 1988. [68329]

Dr. Howells: Inquiries are being made under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Where confidential information is involved, the parties concerned may be asked if they consent to its disclosure, and this can take some time. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible, and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the military and paramilitary export licences granted to (a) Sky Air Cargo and (b) Occidental Airlines between 1 January 1996 and 1 January 1999, indicating the export category and country of destination in each case. [68238]

Dr. Howells: The export of specified military and paramilitary equipment is controlled under entries in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated, and no standard or open individual export licences covering goods with such ratings are recorded as having been issued to these companies between 1 January 1996 and 1 January 1999.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by the then Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry (a) resigned his directorships and (b) sold his share holdings in (i) Juniper Communications Ltd., (ii) Juniper Production Ltd., (iii) Kaizuka Films Ltd., (iv) Spring Communications Ltd. and (v) Attractions Ltd. [67865]

Mr. Byers: The Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry resigned his directorships and sold his shares in Juniper Communications Ltd., Juniper Productions Ltd., Kaizuka Films Ltd., and Spring Communications Ltd. on 16 July 1998. The completion of formalities in relation to the legal (ie. non beneficial) interest in the shares occurred on 14 January 1999. As set out in his statement of 29 January 1999, which was placed in the Libraries of both Houses, he and his wife have retained a limited financial involvement with Juniper Communications Ltd. He resigned as a director and sold all of his shares in Attractions Ltd. on 7 January 1999.

Ministerial Office Attendance

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the days on which he attended his office between 23 December and 8 January. [67476]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 25 January 1999]: I attended when necessary.

Commercial Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what rules or guidance his Department has to govern the (a) formal and (b) informal interaction between his civil servants and commercial lobbyists. [66216]

Mr. Byers: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 4, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice).

Electro-shock Batons

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) which Saudi Arabian organisation was identified as the end user on the 1993 trans-shipment licence granted by his Department for the transfer of electro-shock batons from the United States to Saudi Arabia via the United Kingdom; [68195]

(2) how many electro-shock batons were shipped from the United States via the United Kingdom to Saudi Arabia under the trans-shipment licence that his Department granted in 1993; and if he will identify the company listed as the end user on the trans-shipment licence. [68196]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the letter dated 1 August 1997 to her from the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), in which he stated that this licence covered the transhipment of 90 batons. A copy of this letter was placed in the Library of the House. The stated end-user was the security staff of the Arabian Oil Company Ltd.

Research Councils (Studentships)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many research council funded studentships have been unfilled in (a) 1998–99, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1996–97. [67156]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 26 January 1999]: Table 1 sets out the data for the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council (BBSRC), Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council (EPSRC), Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC), Medical Research Council (MRC), and Natural Environment Research Council (NERC). Table 2 sets out the data separately for the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council (PPARC) as the introduction of the four year "MPhys/ MSci" degrees at undergraduate level has affected take-up, and PPARC's current policy has allowed carry over of unfilled studentships from year to year.

Table 1: Unfilled studentships

Research council	1996–97 Provision	Unfilled	1997–98 Provision	Unfilled	1998–99 Provision	Unfilled
BBSRC	740	7	740	10	740	16
EPSRC	3,782	219	3,725	376	3,814	558
ESRC	921	0	981	8	1,166	24
MRC	340	23	351	20	350	17
NERC	544	13	538	3	546	6
Total	6,327	262	6,335	417	6,616	621

Notes:

1. The figures show the number of new studentships made available each year which were not taken up.
2. For BBSRC, the take-up figures are as at 1 January, for EPSRC 1 November, for ESRC 15 October, for MRC 30 September, and for NERC 31 July. The 1998–99 figures for BBSRC, EPSRC and MRC are provisional, as confirmation of the take-up of studentships may continue for several months yet, for example, in EPSRC's case until 31 March.

Table 2: Research Studentships

Research Council	1996–97 Provision	Taken up	1997–98 Provision	Taken up	1998–99 Provision	Taken up
PPARC	150	112	158	172	167	171

Notes:

1. The figures show the number of new research studentships awarded in each year and the number taken up. PPARC's policy has allowed carry over of unfilled studentships from year to year.
2. PPARC also made provision of 15 advanced course studentships in 1996–97, all of which were taken up.

Working Time Directive

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the implementation of the Working Time Directive in the mining industry. [68912]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Draft regulations to implement the Working Time Directive were published for consultation on 8 April. DTI Ministers received a couple of responses from the quarrying sector but have not received any representations from the coal mining industry in response to the consultation or since.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what role will be played by the Minister with special responsibility for small firms in the Government's consultation with small businesses on the proposed levy for the Food Standards Agency. [68972]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 2 February 1999]: As Minister with responsibility for small firms I am concerned to ensure that the arrangements over the levy to recover some of the costs of establishing the Food Standards Agency are fair to the smaller businesses involved. My hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs takes a strong interest in the development of these proposals and will continue to be involved as they evolve.

Power Stations

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the power stations with FGD, indicating their capacity and the cost of installation of FGD in each case at current prices. [69065]

Mr. Battle: There are two power stations currently fitted with FGD abatement: Drax, owned by National Power plc with current registered capacity of 3,945 MW, and Ratcliffe, owned by PowerGen plc with a current registered capacity of 2034 MW.

In the February 1995 prospectus for the sale of the Government's remaining shares in the two companies, National Power estimated the capital cost of installing FGD at Drax at about £650 million and PowerGen estimated the capital cost of installing FGD at Ratcliffe at about £250 million. These estimates were made at the time the FGD plant was being installed.

In recent years, the cost of FGD plant has fallen. On 27 January 1999, Eastern Generation Ltd. applied for consent under Section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 to retrofit FGD abatement to its 2012 MW plant at West Burton. In its original announcement of the project, Eastern Generation estimated the cost as being "in excess of £100 million".

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates he has made of the cost of electricity per KWh produced by (a) existing coal-fired power stations, (b) new CCGT gas-fired power stations and (c) existing coal-fired power stations with FGD. [69064]

Mr. Battle: The costs of electricity from gas-fired and coal-fired power stations were considered as part of the Government's Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation.

The views of consultees and the Government's conclusions relating to new CCGT gas-fired stations and existing coal-fired stations, with and without FGD, are set out in paragraphs 5.38 to 5.41 of the Government's October 1998 White Paper "Conclusions of The Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government response to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee" (Cm 4071).

Protected Coal Market (Emissions)

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the impact on emissions of Government policies which have protected the market for coal. [69566]

Mr. Battle: The White Paper of October 1998, "Conclusions of The Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government responses to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee" (Cm 4071), set out the Government's programme of reform in the electricity market and introduced a stricter policy on consents for gas-fired stations to protect diversity and security of supply while the programme of reform was under way. The White Paper discussed the environmental aspects of the Government's policy in Chapter 9 (Achieving sustainable energy supplies). An environmental appraisal was provided as Annexe H.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review the issuing of statutory redundancy payments by his Department. [68033]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The responsibility for making a statutory redundancy payment lies in the first instance with the redundant employee's former employer. It passes to the National Insurance Fund, however, in cases where the former employer is insolvent or otherwise unable to meet it, for example by reason of severe financial difficulty. We keep this aspect of the employment rights legislation under review, but have no plans to change it at present. The Department's Redundancy Payments Service processes applications for payment, working to performance targets published in its Service Charter and reviewed annually.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if it is his policy to ensure that the MAI is negotiated in open session in the World Trade Organisation. [69487]

Mr. Wills: Negotiations on the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) are no longer taking place. The Government are now pursuing a long-held objective, shared by their EU partners, of placing the international investment issue on the agenda of the World Trade Organisation. However, any investment negotiation in the WTO would be a new negotiation, based on a new set of objectives to be established by consensus. The Government will continue to work within the WTO to achieve the maximum degree of openness on this and on other issues, and will keep the British public fully informed of their own actions.

Civil Aircraft and Research Demonstration Budget

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce the Civil Aircraft and Research Demonstration budget. [69500]

Mr. Battle: Details of the allocations for all DTI budgets, including CARAD, will be announced when the Department publishes its Expenditure Plans Report in March.

Company Closures

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when (a) Juniper Communications Ltd, (b) Juniper Productions Ltd, (c) Kaizuka Films Ltd, (d) Spring Communication Ltd and (e) Attractions Ltd ceased trading. [68793]

Mr. Byers: Records at Companies House show that none of the 5 companies indicated has ceased trading, in the sense of being dissolved. However, 3 of them, Juniper Productions Limited, Kaizuka Films Limited and Spring Communications Limited, are currently dormant.

Cassini Space Probe

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the potential environmental risks of NASA's Cassini Space Probe. [69215]

Mr. Battle: Before launch, NASA have commissioned two independent risk assessments, and scientists of the European Space Agency, of which the UK is a member, independently evaluated the mission. The spacecraft design meets demanding safety criteria set by the United Nations and independent US health and safety organisations.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people in Wales are claiming compensation for suffering from vibration white finger; and if he will make a statement. [69537]

Mr. Battle: The total number of Vibration White Finger claims received by IRISC, the Department's claim handlers, from people in Wales is 6,286.

I am pleased that the complex negotiations between the DTI, who inherited British Coal's liabilities, and the Plaintiff Solicitors Group, who represent the majority of the claimants, have produced an agreement on the compensation levels for miners suffering from VWF. The agreement announced in the High Court in Manchester on 22 January means an end to uncertainty for the some 31,000 ex-miners who have made claims to date. They can now look forward to receiving fair compensation which will be based upon a claimant's British Coal working history, age and the medical assessment of the level of damage caused by the use of vibrating tools.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to paragraph 12 of the Safeguards Office Review of The Nuclear Materials Accountancy Aspects of the UKAEA's Dounreay Shaft Inventory report, what were (a) the number of man days expended on safeguards by [illegible]atom inspectors and (b) the number of facility attachments, material balance areas and particular safeguards provisions applying to Dounreay. [69625]

Mr. Battle: A precise figure for the number of man-days expended by Euratom inspectors at Dounreay is not available because such information is not recorded routinely by the Safeguards Office. However, Euratom safeguards inspector presence at the site is essentially continual.

There are currently eight material balance areas at Dounreay. The particular safeguards provisions for the site are contained in a single document. In the early 1980s, the Prototype Fast Reactor (PFR) fuel cycle at Dounreay was designated for inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) under the terms of the UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement, at which time three facility attachments were agreed. No facilities at Dounreay are currently designated for inspection by the IAEA.

Cashmere Export Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to visit Leicester to meet representatives of the cashmere export industry. [69014]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has no plans to visit Leicester to meet representatives of the cashmere export industry at present. The Department of Trade and Industry does however understand the industry's concerns over the threatened US tariffs arising from the banana dispute. I can assure my hon. Friend that we are working hard with the European Commission to resolve this dispute, and will be pleased to meet hon. Members who wish to discuss the matter further.

British Aerospace

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he met (a) the Chairman and (b) the Chief Executive of British Aerospace plc during 1998; and what subjects were discussed on each occasion. [68625]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 1 February 1999]: I did not meet the Chairman or Chief Executive of British Aerospace plc during 1998.

Art Market

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he expects the draft Directive on artists' resale rights to be decided on at the next meeting of the Internal Market Council. [69277]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The draft Directive on artists' resale rights is expected to be on the agenda for the meeting of the Internal Market Council on 25 February. While a large majority of member states, unlike the United Kingdom, support the principle of harmonisation in this area, it is not yet clear whether it will be ready for agreement by then. The Government are continuing to make clear their opposition to this measure, and are working to try to minimise the damage it would do to the competitiveness of the UK's international art market.

Minister for Science

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what action has been taken to avoid conflict of interest in respect of the biotechnology responsibilities of the Minister for Science and the Gatsby Trust Foundation; [66696]

(2) what responsibility the Minister for Science has concerning matters which relate to the Gatsby Trust Foundation. [66694]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 20 January 1999]: There is no such body as the Gatsby Trust Foundation. However, the Minister for Science established the Gatsby Charitable Foundation and has made substantial charitable donations to it. However, since his appointment as a Minister he has had no involvement in the Foundation's grant-making decisions. Furthermore, Lord Sainsbury wrote to the Trustees on 31 July 1998 asking them not to disclose or divulge to him any information regarding the investments of the Foundation while he is in Government.

Lobby Companies (Ministerial Access)

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the lobby companies and their clients that had access to his predecessor, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), in his official capacity at meetings in the Department or at specially arranged meetings between July and December 1998. [67324]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 27 January 1999]: I am not aware of any such meetings.

SCOTLAND

Retail Petrol Supplies

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many petrol filling stations closed in Scotland (a) in 1997 and (b) in the period 1 January to 30 June 1998. [68924]

Mr. Macdonald: Information on petrol filling station closures is not held centrally. The study "Petrol Stations in Rural Scotland", however, found that during the last six months of the study five closures occurred between late summer and late winter 1997. The study also reported that the number of petrol retail outlets across the UK reached a peak in the 1960s, following which there has been a gradual and continuing decline.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he and his officials have held with the Director General of Fair Trading since 1 January 1998 on the issue of retail petrol supplies in rural areas of Scotland; and what was the outcome of those discussions. [68922]

Mr. Macdonald: Officials at The Scottish Office have regular discussions with officials of the Office of Fair Trading, most recently about the allegations concerning Esso, about which I am writing to the OFT myself. The Office of Fair Trading has a duty to keep markets under review, with a view to identifying anti-competitive or monopolistic behaviour. I understand officials from the OFT are to meet representatives of Highlands and Islands Hydrocarbons Action Group in March, and will also shortly be meeting representatives of Esso.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many petrol filling stations in the Highlands and Islands enterprise area are supplied respectively by (a) Shell, (b) BP, (c) Esso and (d) other suppliers. [68921]

Mr. Macdonald: Information obtained in 1997 for the purposes of the study "Petrol Stations in Rural Scotland" showed that the number of petrol filling stations in the Highlands and Islands Enterprise Area supplied by Shell, BP, Esso and others is as follows:

	Number
Shell	33
BP	90
Esso	74
Other	61
Total	258

Note:
The information obtained related to local authority areas, and therefore includes all petrol stations in Argyll and Bute Council's area, some of which is outwith the area served by HIE.
Source:
Environmental Resources Management and Dr. R. Sidaway (1997) Petrol Stations in Rural Scotland. Commissioned by The Scottish Office Rural Affairs and Natural Heritage Division

From 1 July 1999, assistance to industry will be a matter covered by the Scottish Parliament, but competition and energy policy will continue to be reserved to Westminster.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the retail petrol market in the Highlands and Islands enterprise area; and if he will make a statement. [68923]

Mr. Macdonald: Any assessment of competition in the retail petrol market in the Highlands and Islands Enterprise area, or indeed elsewhere, is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading, but The Scottish Office itself examined aspects of the retail petrol market in the study Petrol Stations in Rural Scotland, published in July 1998. As a result, £400,000 a year over the next 3 years has been allocated to carrying out infrastructure work at remote petrol stations. This year, £240,000 of this support is going to the Highlands and Islands Enterprise area. I met with representatives of Esso myself on 3 February to discuss the present situation.

From 1 July 1999, assistance to industry will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament, but competition policy and the activities of the OFT will continue to be reserved to Westminster.

Prisoners (Offences)

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of offences by inmates referred to the police by prison governors in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [68546]

Mr. McLeish: Information concerning the number of offences referred to the police by prison governors is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Prisons (Drug Use)

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of reported drug use there were in prison establishments in Scotland (a) in each of the last 12 months and (b) in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [68544]

Mr. McLeish: Figures on reported drug use in prison establishments in Scotland are available from the mandatory drug testing (MDT) programme. This includes samples taken as part of a random sample (10 per cent. of all prisoners each month); from prisoners suspected of misusing drugs; from prisoners known previously to have used drugs; from prisoners being assessed for specific opportunities, including open conditions and home leaves; and as part of reception testing of those recently admitted to prison.

Interim figures for the financial year April 1998 to March 1999 are available for the period up to and including December 1998, and are shown in the table:

Month/year	Number tested	Number positive	Percentage positive
1998
April	1,110	328	30
May	1,018	312	31
June	1,066	320	30
July	1,050	322	31
August	1,101	339	31
September	971	270	28
October	1,086	271	25
November	1,064	289	27
December	901	242	27

Final figures for the financial year 1998–99 will be reported in the 1998–99 Scottish Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts. For the last three months of the financial year 1997–98, figures were as follows:

Month/year	Number tested	Number positive	Percentage positive
1998
January	977	319	33
February	1,027	311	30
March	1,116	333	30

Figures are not available prior to February 1996, the date from which mandatory drug testing was phased in across the Scottish prison estate.

In the last two months of the financial year 1995–96, testing took place in two establishments. A total of 315 urine samples were taken, of which 135 returned positive, a rate of 43 per cent.

In the financial year 1996–97, 4,855 samples were taken from prisoners, of which 1,654 returned positive results, a rate of 36 per cent.

In the financial year 1997–98, 12,093 urine samples were taken from prisoners in the mandatory drug testing programme, of which 3,779 returned positive results, a rate of 31 per cent.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Police (Manpower)

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police officers per head of population there were in each police force and in total (a) on the last date for which figures are available, (b) in May 1998, (c) in May 1997 and (d) in April 1992. [68548]

Mr. McLeish: The figures, to the nearest available dates, per thousand population are shown in the table.

	30 September 1998	30 June 1998	30 June 1997	31 March 1992
Central	2.58	2.54	2.47	2.36
Dumfries and Galloway	3.02	2.97	2.81	2.60
Fife	2.44	2.44	2.43	2.28
Grampian	2.30	2.30	2.23	2.26
Lothian and Borders	3.01	3.04	3.06	2.96
Northern	2.36	2.33	2.30	2.37
Strathclyde	3.18	3.18	3.21	2.95
Tayside	2.94	2.93	2.84	2.69
Total	2.91	2.91	2.90	2.74

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police officers there were in each police force and in total (a) on the last date for which figures are available, (b) in May 1998, (c) in May 1997 and (d) in April 1992. [68547]

Mr. McLeish: The figures, to the nearest available date, are shown in the table.

	30 September 1998	30 June 1998	30 June 1997	30 March 1992
Central	710	700	681	645
Dumfries and Galloway	445	437	414	385
Fife	850	849	847	790
Grampian	1,214	1,214	1,180	1,161
Lothian and Borders	2,641	2,668	2,689	2,534
Northern	659	653	643	653
Strathclyde	7,233	7,228	7,302	6,763
Tayside	1,154	1,149	1,116	1,053
Total	14,906	14,898	14,872	13,984

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those functions carried out by civilian staff in each police force; how many civilian staff were employed in each police force in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [69025]

Mr. McLeish: Civilian support staff in each police force are under the direction and control of the chief constable, who is responsible for the functions they perform. Guidance issued to chief constables in Police Circular No. 9/1996 distinguishes between tasks which do not require police powers and should normally be done only by support staff, and tasks which can be done mainly by support staff but require some contribution from police officers. I have arranged for a copy of this Circular to be placed in the Library of the House.

The numbers of civilian staff requested are shown in the table.

	30 September 1998	30 September 1997	30 September 1996
Central	187	183	158
Dumfries and Galloway	176	182	127
Fife	247	240	234
Grampian	449	419	379
Lothian and Borders	972	936	936
Northern	272	256	252
Strathclyde	1,910	1,878	1,736
Tayside	372	348	331
Total	4,585	4,442	4,153

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Prison Visitors (Drug-related Offences)

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many visitors to prisons were arrested for drug related offences in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [68543]

Mr. McLeish: All prisons face the risk of prisoners visitors seeking to bring illegal drugs into establishments, and take a variety of measures to prevent it. Appropriate action is taken where there are reasonable grounds for suspicion, and any visitor who is caught is referred to the police. Records are not, however, maintained by the Scottish Prison Service of the number of arrests which arise from such action.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Prisoner Activities

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of purposeful activity per week undertaken by prisoners, broken down into (a) education, (b) training, (c) work and (d) rehabilitation programmes in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [68545]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is not available centrally in the detail sought. Figures for the number of prisoners engaged in work are recorded and provided in the Scottish Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts. The numbers involved in vocational training are collected separately. The figures are shown in the table:

Year	Average daily number of convicted prisoners employed	Percentage of prisoners employed involved in training
1993–94	4,146	12.5
1994–95	4,094	12.0
1995–96	3,982	11.3
1996–97	4,001	13.8
1997–98	3,932	10.1

Targets for participation in rehabilitation programmes were first set for the Scottish Prison Service in 1996. In 1996–97, 381 prisoners completed cognitive skills programmes and 67 completed sex offender programmes. In 1997–98, 635 prisoners completed cognitive skills programmes and 91 completed sex offender programmes.

The Scottish Prison Service is developing a computerised management information system for regime activity to support continuous improvement in prisoner programmes and other opportunities. From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Police Stations

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police stations there were, in each police force and in total (a) on the last date for which figures are available, (b) in May 1998, (c) in May 1997 and (d) in April 1992. [68549]

Mr. McLeish: The figures requested for 1992 are shown in the table. The number of police stations is no longer collected centrally.

	Number of police stations at 31 December 1992
Central	23
Dumfries and Galloway	25
Fife	56
Grampian	77
Lothian and Borders	60
Northern	92
Strathclyde	199
Tayside	50
Total	591

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Speed Cameras

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average (a) capital cost and (b) annual running cost of a new speed camera. [69021]

Mr. Macdonald: A fixed site camera of the type used on trunk roads in Scotland costs around £52,000, including installation. Police forces administer the operation of these cameras and information on running costs is not held centrally.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Legal Aid

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average annual cost of a legal aid case in each of the last five years; what was the annual change in (a) real and (b) cash terms; and if he will make a statement. [69022]

Mr. McLeish: The information is set out in the table.

£

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Average case costs
Criminal	882	958	957	1,000	1,073
Civil	1,011	1,176	1,425	1,583	1,685
Advice and Assistance	87	90	92	97	99
Annual change in cash terms
Criminal	n/a	+76	−1	+43	+73
Civil	n/a	+165	+249	+158	+102
Advice and Assistance	n/a	+3	+2	+5	+2
Annual change in real terms
Criminal	n/a	62	−28	13	46
Civil	n/a	149	209	111	59
Advice and Assistance	n/a	1	0	2	0

These figures illustrate that average case costs for the three main categories of legal aid show a rising trend even when inflation is discounted. We are determined to address value for money while maintaining access to justice.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure on legal aid in each of the last five years; what was the annual change in expenditure in cash and real terms; and if he will make a statement. [69023]

Mr. McLeish: The information is set out in the table.

£ million

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Total expenditure on legal aid cases	124.418	132.052	133.36	143.149	145.065
Change in cash terms	n/a	+7.634	+1.308	+9.789	+1.916
Change in real terms	n/a	+5.774	−2.466	+5.514	−1.761

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current eligibility criteria for receiving legal aid; and if he will make a statement. [69024]

Mr. McLeish: Advice and assistance on matters of Scots law is available without contribution to any applicant in receipt of income support, income-based Job Seeker's Allowance and family credit. It is also available without contribution to any applicant whose disposable income (in respect of the 7 days up to and including the date of application) does not exceed £72 and whose disposable capital does not exceed £1,000. Advice and assistance is also available subject to a contribution to any applicant whose disposable income is between £72 and £172 and whose disposable capital does not exceed £1,000.

Assistance by Way of Representation (ABWOR) is a form of advice and assistance available in criminal proceedings and in certain non-criminal proceedings such as mental health tribunals and failure to obey a court order. Solicitors can provide ABWOR if an applicant satisfies the advice and assistance financial tests.

Civil legal aid is available subject to applicants satisfying the statutory tests of financial eligibility, probable cause and reasonableness. It is available without contribution to any applicant in receipt of income support or income-based Job Seeker's Allowance. It is also available without contribution to applicants whose annual disposable income and capital do not exceed £2,625 and £3,000 respectively. Applicants with an annual disposable income between £2,625 and £8,571 and disposable capital between £3,000 and £8,560 must pay a contribution.

Summary criminal legal aid is granted by the Scottish Legal Aid Board and solemn criminal legal aid is granted by the courts.

No formal means test is applied to an applicant for criminal legal aid. Instead, it must be demonstrated that the accused could not meet the expenses of his defence without causing undue hardship to himself or his dependants. In addition, applicants for summary criminal legal aid must be able to demonstrate that it is in the interests of justice that it be awarded.

We are committed to ensuring access to justice, effective targeting and value for money from the legal aid budget.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Fixed Penalty Speeding Fines

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been raised by fixed penalty speeding fines; and what was the annual cost of administering them in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [69020]

Mr. McLeish: Information on the amount raised by fixed penalty speeding fines and on the administration costs is not available in the form requested. However, £3.2 million was received by district courts in Scotland in 1997–98 for fixed penalty notices for endorsable traffic offences, which included speeding offences.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

National Strategy for Carers

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made with the Government's National Strategy for Carers. [70302]

Mr. Dewar: The Government's National Strategy for Carers is being published today. It describes what the Government have done so far to support carers and how we can improve the quality of life for the many carers in our society by ensuring that the needs are identified and met. It focuses on how carers can be informed, involved and empowered, and how employers can help carers combine paid work with their caring responsibilities. It sets out what carers should be entitled to expect from service providers and how they can be helped by services in the neighbourhood in which they live. The strategy details proposals to support young carers.

The report is the result of a consultative process, involving a large number of Government departments, carers organisations, individual carers, representatives of the National Health Service and local authorities, other voluntary organisations which help to support carers and the business sector.

The National Health Service and local authorities need to provide carers with information about services which can support them in their caring role. They also need to involve carers in the planning and provision of services so that carers' needs are met better than they have been in the past.

Local authorities in Scotland have been allocated over £1 billion for social work this year, of which £5.1 million is specifically to provide respite and assist carers. Authorities will have an additional £51.3 million in 1999–2000 to meet their social work responsibilities and are expected to use some of these resources to improve services to carers; £5 million will be available to local authorities implementing the recommendations of the Action Plan to modernise community care, a key element of which is supporting carers.

The Government will also be consulting on proposals that time spent caring will entitles carers to a second pension (by 2050, up to an extra £50 per week in today's terms).

We intend to trial a new question on carers for the 2001 Census. This should provide better information about the distribution of carers between local authority ares and on the numbers of young carers and those from minority ethnic groups.

Consideration will be given to extending New Deal to help carers return to work and special help for disabled children, technology to help carers and housing and transport.

Legislation reducing council tax for disabled people will be introduced. The Government also intend to introduce legislation in England to allow local authorities to address carers' needs more directly than is possible at present, as the Minister of State, Home Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), has announced today. We would hope such legislation will be introduced in Scotland.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

It is our intention to continue work to support carers and to monitor implementation of these new initiatives.

Infectious Salmon Anaemia

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will assist salmon farmers in the Highlands and Islands to meet the costs of eradicating Infectious Salmon Anaemia; and if he will make a statement. [70303]

Mr. Dewar: Infectious Salmon Anaemia is potentially a very serious disease and the Government remain determined to eradicate this present outbreak in Scotland. That is the best outcome we can achieve, both for the salmon farmers and for wild salmon stocks. The salmon farming industry must recognise its responsibilities to deal effectively with this outbreak.

The Government have put in place various measures to eradicate ISA, and further measures will be announced shortly when an interim report by a joint Scottish Office/Industry Working Group is completed. I welcome the co-operation of the industry.

I recognise that this eradication programme is imposing significant costs on the industry, particularly for farms where ISA is confirmed. The Government continue to take the view that, in principle, it is for the fish farming industry to meet costs arising from measures taken to control the spread of serious fish diseases. Salmon farming, however, provides very valuable employment in the Highlands and Islands, and the continuing uncertainty, which is undermining confidence in the industry and among investors, presents a serious threat to the economic well-being of the region. In these circumstances I have agreed to enable financial aid to be provided through Highlands and Islands Enterprise to the industry. Up to £9 million will be available over 3 years, on a pound for pound matching basis for contributions from industry funds, to help individual farmers meet costs arising under the ISA eradication programme from new outbreaks of ISA. The detailed terms for such assistance will need to be settled. That offer of assistance is subject to approval by the European Commission under the usual state aid rules. No aid will be paid without the Commission's approval.

The assistance will be limited to a period of 3 years, and within that time salmon farmers will need to put in place alternative financial arrangements. We shall keep the eradication programme under regular review.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70035]

Mr. McLeish: No such services were provided.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

15. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints he has received about the CSA since 1 January. [68020]

Angela Eagle: Last month the Child Support Agency received around 2,500 complaints from individuals and hon. Members. My Ministerial colleagues and I have also received 106 letters from hon. Members, over the same period, though not all of these relate to operational issues.

Personal Advisers

18. Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what training will be provided to personal advisers working for the new deal for the disabled. [68023]

Mr. Bayley: The Personal Adviser Service is currently being piloted in six areas, with a further six planned to start in April. All Personal Advisers in the first six areas are trained to provide advice, guidance and counselling to disabled people to help identify and overcome their barriers to employment.

Savings (Retirement)

20. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the difficulties faced by those on low and modest incomes in providing for their retirement. [68025]

Mr. Timms: Our Green Paper "A new contract for welfare: Partnership in Pensions" recognised the difficulties in saving for retirement faced by those on low and modest incomes.

This is why we are proposing a new State Second Pension which will give more help to those with low earnings (up to £9,000), as well as carers and the long-term disabled with broken work records due to long-term disability.

From April 1999, the new minimum income guarantee will ensure a decent income in retirement for all.

Minimum Income Guarantee

23. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to ensure that all eligible pensioners claim the minimum income guarantee. [68028]

Mr. Timms: We are planning action to invite claims to the Minimum Income Guarantee at key points when entitlement may arise because a higher amount becomes payable—when a pensioner reaches the age of 75 and 80, or when he or she is awarded Attendance Allowance.

Later in the year, we plan to run a national publicity campaign which will be designed to get the message over to as wide an audience as possible that the Minimum Income Guarantee is an entitlement.

Family Credit

24. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families in the north-west at present receive family credit. [68029]

Angela Eagle: The latest information available is for August 1998 when there were 118,900 families in the North West receiving Family Credit.

Notes:

1. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample of Family Credit awards and as such are subject to a degree of sampling error.

2. Caseload figures are rounded to the nearest hundred and may not sum due to totals.

Source:

Family Credit 5 per cent. sample of awards.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of families who are currently in receipt of (a) £0-£4.99, (b) £5-£9.99, (c) £10-£19.99, (d) £20-£29.99, (e) £30-£39.99, (f) £40-£49.99, and (g) £50 or above a week in family credit; and if he will provide corresponding estimates for the proposed working families tax credit. [69493]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the tables.

Number of families receiving Family Credit by range of award, August 1998

Thousand

£ per week	All families
All cases	782.5
Under £5	11.7
£5-£9.99	15.7
£10-£19.99	44.0
£20-£29.99	55.1
£30-£39.99	68.3
£40-£49.99	75.5
£50 and over	512.2

Note:

Numbers are rounded to the nearest thousand and may not sum to the total.

Source:

Family Credit 5 per cent. sample of awards

Number of families receiving working families tax credit by range of award, 2000–01

Thousand

£ per week	All families
All cases	1,240
Under £5	30
£5-£9.99	50
£10-£19.99	130
£20-£29.99	110
£30-£39.99	80
£40-£49.99	90
£50 and over	750

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on a combination of the Family Credit 5 per cent. sample of awards and the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey. They are consistent with Pre-Budget Report forecasts.

2. Estimates do not include any behavioural changes arising from the introduction of the credit.

3. Estimates have assumed that any future increases in the credits or threshold are exactly offset by an increase in earnings of WFTC recipients.

4. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 5,000.

Housing Benefit

25. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he intends to take to reform the administration of housing benefit. [68031]

Angela Eagle: We are taking forward a wide-ranging review of Housing Benefit with the aim of simplifying and improving both the benefit itself and the way in which it is delivered. In the meantime, we have in place several measures to drive forward better delivery of Housing Benefit including the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate's programme of visits to local authorities, improved communications between the Benefits Agency and local authorities through the use of IT, and extra funding and support for local authorities to operate the verification framework.

33. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to review the operation of housing benefit. [68041]

Angela Eagle: We are taking forward a wide-ranging review of housing benefit in consultation with local authorities and other interested parties. The aim of the review is to simplify and improve both the benefit itself and the way in which it is delivered.

Active Modern Service Programme

26. Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on progress on the active modern service programme. [68032]

Angela Eagle: Significant progress has been made within the Active Modern Service Programme. In recent weeks we have selected a private sector partner; Affinity, who will work with us to develop new IT systems. These new systems will enable us to deliver improved Social Security services and deliver our welfare reform programme. Working in partnership with the Department of Education and Employment and Employment Services, we have begun development of a single gateway to the welfare system to help people back to work. Finally, we have started to evaluate the modern service prototypes, piloted in Camden and Lewisham. Both these pilots successfully tested the provision of an integrated service to customers and we are using the lessons learnt to feed into our plans.

Pensions (Disabled People)

27. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve the pensions of long-term disabled people. [68034]

Mr. Timms: Currently, those who are in receipt of certain disability benefits can earn credits towards their basic state retirement pension.

The Pensions Green Paper published in December set out our proposals to extend the new State Second Pension to long term disabled people with broken work records. They will receive flat-rate credits subject to a simple contribution test. This will represent a significant improvement in the financial position of disabled people in retirement.

Poorest Pensioners

28. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the support available for the poorest pensioners. [68035]

Mr. Timms: From April 1999 we are introducing a £2.5 billion package of measures to help tackle pensioner poverty over the next three years. This package includes a minimum income guarantee, delivered through income support, for the poorest pensioners and an annual payment towards winter fuel costs for all eligible pensioner households.

Lone Parents

29. Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures his Department is taking to assist lone parents to find work. [68037]

Angela Eagle: The Government are committed to providing viable choices for lone parents who, in the past, were written off to a life on benefit.

The New Deal for Lone Parents which was launched nationally on 26 October offers all lone parents on Income Support, for the first time, a personal adviser service to help them overcome the barriers to employment. The programme provides support and advice on training needs, jobsearch, better-off in-work calculations, child care and in-work support for those who need it. Current progress under the programme suggest that our approach is in tune with what lone parents want: the vast majority of lone parents who attend an initial interview decide to participate in the programme.

In addition to this, the Working Families Tax Credit will make work pay and the National Childcare Strategy will also help lone parents move into work: the Childcare Tax Credit under the Working Families Tax Credit will provide more support towards helping parents with child care costs; and a total investment of £470 million in the National Childcare Strategy, including £170 million from the Lottery for new out of school child care—to ensure that good quality affordable child care is available in every neighbourhood.

Pensions Green Paper

30. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received in response to the Government's Green Paper "Partnership in Pensions" (Cm 4179). [68038]

Mr. Timms: Our Pensions Green Paper has attracted a great deal of interest. We have already received a number of written responses and expect to receive many more by the closing date of 31 March.

State Pensions

31. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of the Government's proposed pensions reforms upon marginal savers. [68039]

Mr. Timms: The reforms outlined in "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions" should, through better quality and less expensive second pensions and more state support to reduce reliance on means tested benefits, increase the returns to voluntary saving.

35. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to increase financial security for retired people. [68043]

Mr. Timms: The Government's objectives are to provide security for those who cannot provide for themselves and to make it easier for people who can save, to do so. We have announced, in the Pensions Green Paper, that w[illegible]e replacing SERPS with a new State second pension for those on low incomes, or those who are unable to work because of caring responsibilities or disability. We also propose new stakeholder pension schemes, designed to help those on middle and higher incomes make provision for their retirement.

From April, we will introduce a new minimum income guarantee for pensioners of at least £75 a week for single people, and £116.60 for couples. We have announced that, as resources allow, over the long term, our aim is that it should rise in line with earnings so that pensioners can share in the growing prosperity of the nation. Those pensioners who are not able to build up an adequate pension during their working lifetime will be able to receive the minimum income guarantee.

36. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what increase in the basic state pension would be required to take it to the level of the EU average. [68044]

Mr. Timms: This information is not available. Because of the diverse nature of state pension schemes in European countries, it is not possible to make meaningful calculations of the sort requested.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase the over-80 age addition to the basic state pension. [68027]

Mr. Timms: We have no plans to increase the 25p age addition.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of (a) increasing the basic state pension to £75 for all single pensioners and (b) providing income support to guarantee pensioners an income of at least £75 per week; and if he will make a statement. [69503]

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State, Department of Social Security gave the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), Official Report, columns 624–25.

The estimated costs to Income Support of guaranteeing eligible pensioners an income of at least £75 per week, as outlined in the Comprehensive Spending Review package of measures for poorer pensioners, is £265 million.

Notes:

1. The estimate is based on increasing all the pensioner premium rates in April 1999 by £3.10 for single pensioners and £4.95 for pensioner couples, over and above uprating in line with prices. The April 1999–2000 rates of the single/couple personal allowance and the corresponding pensioner premium are as follows:

Income Support pensioners in receipt of the Ordinary Pensioner premium, those aged 60–74, singles—£75.00, couples—£116.60.

Income Support pensioners in receipt of the Enhanced Pensioner premium, those aged 75–79, singles—£77.30, couples—£119.85.

Income Support pensioners in receipt of the Higher Pensioner premium, those aged 80+, singles—£82.25, couples—£125.30.

2. The estimate is based on Departmental forecasts and uses the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey. The cost is at 1999–2000 prices and benefit levels, assumes existing levels of take up, and has been rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Child-raising Costs

32. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to assist parents with the costs of raising children. [68040]

Angela Eagle: From next April the largest ever increase in Child Benefit of £2.95 for the first or eldest child will be payable to all families, a similar increase in the family premium will ensure the poorest families see the benefit of the increase. This is in addition to the extra £2.50 a week for children under 11 paid through the income-related benefits from November 1998.

A Green Paper published last year set out our proposals for a new, simpler and more transparent system of child support to ensure that more lone parents receive the maintenance which their children are due.

We also plan to extend the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance (worth £35.85 a week) to 3 and 4-year-old severely disabled children. This will also provide access for them and their families to the Motability Scheme.

We consider that helping parents to work is the best form of assistance; the Working Families Tax Credit from October 1999 will provide more generous help to low income families.

Departmental Spending

34. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the level of his Department's planned total spending for (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000 and (i) 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [68042]

Mr. Darling: The Government's spending plans which were announced as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, have been generally welcomed as desirable, prudent and sensible, concentrating increases in the priority areas. Under these plans, spending on Social Security benefits will grow for this Parliament at less than half the rate of the previous Parliament.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to introduce changes to jobseeker's allowance. [68009]

Angela Eagle: A large-scale research programme to evaluate Jobseeker's Allowance is being conducted and will conclude later this year. The findings from that programme will enable us to consider what changes might need to be made. In the meantime, we will consider changes to Jobseeker's Allowance where problems occur or when a reason for amendment is identified.

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received in respect of the payment of jobseeker's allowance to employees made redundant when their employer goes into receivership. [69000]

Angela Eagle: We have received a number of letters on this matter. Since it came to our attention we have been working to simplify the complex legislation in this area. We are currently considering proposals for changes to the relevant benefit rules.

Carers

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional support he plans to provide to carers. [68021]

Mr. Bayley: The Government are committed to supporting carers in their valuable role. Many people with caring responsibilities are not able to make adequate provision for their retirement. Those carers who are in receipt of Invalid Care Allowance, Home Responsibilities Protection because they care for someone receiving Attendance Allowance or Disability Living Allowance and those who receive Child Benefit whilst their youngest child is under 5 will receive flat-rate credits to the new State Second Pension, helping to lift them above the Minimum Income Guarantee in retirement.

Means-tested Benefits (Pensioners)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update his estimates, based on the Family Resources Survey 1996–97 of receipt of means-tested benefits and liability for income tax among pensioners consistent with his answer of 5 November 1997, Official Report, columns 249–50. [68150]

Angela Eagle: The information is not currently available. Information on liability for income tax is not directly available from the Family Resources Survey. We need to refine the raw data further before we can provide the information. We anticipate that we will be able to do so after February 1999.

Disability Living Allowance (Constituent's Appeal)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mr. Price of Coalpit Heath, a constituent, can expect the appeal against the withdrawal of his Disability Living Allowance lodged on 27 October 1998 to be heard. [68585]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of claims to Social Security benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 4 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when Mr Price of Coalpit Heath, can expect the appeal against the withdrawal of his Disability Living Allowance (DLA) lodged on 27 October 1998 to be heard.

I should explain that the Agency aims to prepare cases for appeal within 30 days. This has not happened in Mr Price's case and our service, in this instance, has clearly been unsatisfactory. I apologise for this.

Part of the process of preparing an appeal is a re-appraisal of all the evidence, including that submitted in support of the appeal. In Mr Price's case, that evidence included a statement from Mr Price's General Practitioner which you sent to the Disability Benefits Unit on 16 November 1998.

This re-appraisal has now taken place and I can tell you that Mr Price's DLA has been re-awarded at the previous rate from 10 July 1998 for an indefinite period. Mr Price is being advised accordingly.

Clearly, in these circumstances the appeal will not need to go ahead. Should Mr Price want any more information about this, or any other aspect of his DLA award, the operational team leader, Colin Schools, on telephone number 01253 331019, will be pleased to assist.

May I thank you for drawing this to my attention.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [6[illegible]98]

Mr. Timms: The folllowing changes in responsibilities relate to this Department. They demonstrate our commitment to rationalising functions across Government in order to modernise service delivery and to implement policy as effectively as possible.

The Contributions Agency will transfer from DSS to the Inland Revenue from April this year. Responsibility for policy on National Insurance contributions is also to transfer to the Inland Revenue, but the date for this has not yet been set.

Family Credit and Disability Working Allowance will be replaced from October 1999 by Working Families Tax Credit and Disabled Person's Tax Credit: these will be the responsibility of the Inland Revenue. At the same time the Family Credit Unit will transfer to the Inland Revenue.

From April 1999, DSS funding provision for asylum seekers is being transferred to the Home Office. This is the precursor to new Home Office support arrangements for asylum seekers.

Responsibility for administration of Social Security, child support and vaccine damage payment appeals will be transferred to a new Departmental Executive Agency.

Existing DSS resettlement provision for London is to be combined with provision from other Departments within a new London body in April 1999. It is proposed that the remainder of the DSS resettlement programme be transferred to the programmes of the DETR (principally the Housing Corporation) in England and to the Scottish and Welsh Offices. This is consistent with the Social Exclusion Unit's proposals for a joined-up approach in its report on Rough Sleeping.

The Women's Unit and the Women's National Commission (NDPD) transferred to the Cabinet Office at the end of July 1998.

NIRS2

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants have been affected adversely by the introduction of NIRS2 computer system; and if he will break down this total by each claimant group. [68820]

Mr. Timms: I refer my right hon. Friend to the Written Answers I gave to the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) on 4 November 1998 Official Report, columns 603–06, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 18 January 1999, Official Report, columns 368–69.

180,000 Retirement Pensioners and 30,000 Widows Benefit recipients are currently in receipt of initial awards or emergency payments. Up to 20,000 Incapacity Benefit recipients may be affected, of whom 8,000 have been referred to Income Support. There are currently 36,000 Jobseeker's Allowance interim payments being made.

In some of these cases, the amounts being paid will be correct, but in many cases they will be less than the amount due. All will be reviewed once the NIRS2 system is fully operational.

Young Homeless

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to assist young, homeless persons. [69599]

Angela Eagle: This Department supports organisations which provide temporary accommodation and an active resettlement programme for single homeless people under Section 30 of the Jobseekers Act 1995. All of the projects receiving Section 30 funding cater for young people aged 18–25, and 35 per cent. cater for 16–17 year olds.

In the current financial year, over £13.2 million is available in revenue funding to enable projects to operate on a break-even basis and over £5 million in capital to build new hostels or to refurbish existing buildings. This supports over 4,200 bed spaces, with nearly 300 more being developed. Provision has increased in recent years, particularly for women, people under the age of 25 and those with specific problems, such as drugs and alcohol.

The Social Exclusion Unit's report on Rough Sleeping recommended that the Department's resettlement provision for London be combined with provision from other Departments within a new London body, from April this year. It is proposed that the remainder of the Department's resettlement programme be transferred to the programmes of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (principally the Housing Corporation) in England and to the Scottish and Welsh Offices. This better co-ordinated approach is intended to reduce the number of rough sleepers, including young people sleeping rough, by two thirds by 2002.

Income related benefits, including Housing Benefit when accommodation is found, are available to young homeless people, subject to the normal conditions of entitlement.

This Department is represented on the Ministerial Committee on Rough Sleeping, chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Local Government.

Pregnant Women

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the benefit arrangements for pregnant women below 18 years of age, (b) the special dietary provisions organised by social services for pregnant women and (c) the criteria for eligibility for (a) and (b). [69668]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the tables.

Benefits for pregnant women under 18

Benefits	Qualifying criteria
Jobseekers Allowance	Certain unemployed young people in prescribed groups, such as those at the end of the Child Benefit Extension Period can get JSA, as can those who can demonstrate that they would suffer severe hardship if JSA was not paid. Young people who are estranged from, or living apart from, their parents for good reasons (including the possibility of abuse) are one of the groups who can get JSA while looking for work or training.
Income support	Those incapable of work by reason of pregnancy, and those within 11 weeks of their expected week of confinement and up to 7 weeks following the date on which the pregnancy ends;
Social fund maternity payments	Awarded to recipients of Income Support, income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Family Credit or Disability Working Allowance (or, if under 19, be a member of a family where one of these benefits has been awarded) who make the claim within the prescribed time limits
Housing Benefit	Young people who live independently and have a liability to pay a commercial rent are entitled to claim Housing Benefit, irrespective of whether they are pregnant. If entitled they will receive the normal under 25 personal allowance (currently £39.85)
Council Tax Benefit	As there is no liability for Council Tax from anyone under 18, Council Tax Benefit is not paid to this group
Statutory Maternity Pay	(a) that she must have been continuously employed by her employer for at least 26 weeks into the 15th week (the qualifying week) before her expected week of childbirth and to have stopped work for that employer; (b) that her normal weekly earnings for the period of 8 weeks ending with the qualifying week are not less than the lower earnings limit for the payment of national insurance contributions; (c) that she is pregnant and has reached or been confined before reaching the start of the 11th week before the expected week of childbirth.
Maternity Allowance	(a) that she is pregnant and has reached, or has been confined before reaching the start of the 11th week before the expected week of childbirth; (b) that she has been employed or self-employed for at least 26 weeks in the 66 weeks immediately preceding the expected week of childbirth; (c) that she has actual paid employed earners and/or self employed earners national insurance contributions for at least 26 weeks in the 66 weeks immediately preceding the expected week of childbirth; (d) that she is not entitled to Statutory Maternity Pay for the same week in respect of the same pregnancy.

Special dietary provision	Qualifying criteria
Welfare foods	All pregnant women in families entitled to income support or an income-based jobseeker's allowance are entitled to receive milk tokens which may be exchanged for seven pints (or four litres) of cows' milk per week. Vitamin supplements are also available free of charge

Pensioners (Benefit Take-up)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers of pensioners currently receiving (a) housing benefit, (b) council tax benefit and (c) income support. [69817]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Income support, housing benefit, and council tax benefit pensioner recipients—May 1997

Benefit	Thousand
Income Support	1,720
Housing Benefit	1,853
Council Tax Benefit	2,646

Notes:

1. The Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit figures have been recently revised and supersede any previously released figures.
2. Figures at May 1997, the latest date for which figures for all three benefits are available.
3. Sample size 5 per cent.
4. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
5. Pensioners are defined as single people aged 60 or over, or couples where one or both members is aged 60 or over.
6. Information refers to benefit units, which may be a single person or a couple.
7. The information excludes second adult rebate cases.
8. There is an overlap in the figures as many people receive Income Support, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Source:

1. Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry, May 1997.
2. Housing Benefit Management Information System, annual 1 per cent. sample inquiries for recipients with and without Income Support/Jobseeker's Allowance (Income-based), taken at the end of May 1997.

At August 1998, the most recent date for which information on Income Support recipients is available, there were 1,651 thousand pensioners receiving Income Support.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

BBC Funding Review Panel

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the BBC Funding Review Panel will consider the concession for the blind; and if he will make a statement. [69101]

Janet Anderson: The review panel will consider the concession for blind people together with the other current concessionary arrangements.

Independent Radio Stations

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many independent radio stations catering principally for the Muslim community operate in the United Kingdom. [69060]

Janet Anderson: There are no full term independent local radio stations catering specifically for the interests of the Muslim faith. However, some independent radio stations which provide services for Asian communities, such as Sunrise Radio in Bradford and Asian Sound Radio in East Lancashire, operate in areas with a high Muslim population, and their service is expected to reflect this. In addition, the Radio Authority issues short term Restricted Service Licences which enable stations to broadcast during special events such as religious festivals. I understand the Authority licensed thirteen such short-term services for the most recent Ramadan festival.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received concerning the running of independent radio stations in the Greater London area; and if he will make a statement. [69061]

Janet Anderson: From time to time, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State receives representations about various aspects of the operation of individual radio stations. These include concerns about programme content and management of the licences. Under the provisions of the Broadcasting Acts 1990 and 1996, the Radio Authority is responsible for the award and regulation of all independent radio licences in the UK.

Millennium Dome (Catering)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if applicants for contracts for catering facilities at the Dome were interviewed by a panel which included a person who was not employed by the New Millennium Experience Company; [69085]

(2) what tendering procedure was used for the catering facilities in the vicinity of the Dome; [68179]

(3) what steps were taken by the NMEC to ensure that interviews for catering contracts were conducted by the same panel; [68175]

(4) what external legal advice was taken by the NMEC before commencing the tenders procedure for catering contracts. [68174]

(5) if all applicants for catering facilities at the Dome were interviewed by the same panel. [67269]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) adopted a competitive tendering process for procuring a range of catering services. The NMEC had previously sought general advice from Treasury Solicitors about public procurement rules and regulations to satisfy itself that the processes it was implementing to procure goods, works and services across the project reflected the competitive principles of public sector procurement. The interviewing panel comprised three voting and one independent members. The aim of the panel was to bring the bidders to a position where they were all on an equal footing given that the nature and the content of each bid varied. Consequently, therefore, the questions put to each bidder were framed differently depending on the written material provided by them. Of the three voting members, all were present at all interviews. The independent non-voting members varied and included the NMEC's Deputy Operations Director and the Chair of the NMEC Catering Review Group.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if visitors to the Millennium Dome will be able to purchase food free of Genetically Modified Organisms. [67484]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 January 1999]: Visitors to the Millennium Experience at Greenwich will be able to purchase a wide variety of foods including food free of Genetically Modified Organisms.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what provision there is for (a) Chinese food, (b) halal food and (c) kosher food at the Dome; [68183]

(2) what is his policy on the provision of ethnic food at the Dome. [67268]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company's policy is to provide as wide a range of catering services and food types as possible at the dome recognising the varied tastes which the anticipated 12 million visitors will have. Ethnic cuisine and food meeting some religious needs will be available. Foods from around the world will be showcased in the Global Food Court and elsewhere within the Dome.

Millennium Experience (Catering)

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list the procedures that were followed in respect of advertising, tendering and awarding the concession for supplying ice cream in the Millennium Experience and if similar procedures were used in respect of other concessions; [67668]

(2) to whom the concession for the supply of ice cream in the Millennium Experience has been granted. [67667]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has made no announcement about the supply of ice cream to the Dome. Since its establishment in 1997 the NMEC has been openly seeking private sector support for the project and, as a result, companies across all sectors of the economy have been free to approach NMEC with proposals. Very many have done so including those in the confectionary/ice cream sector. Where NMEC consider that such approaches hold a serious prospect of achieving commercial support which will not adversely impact on the integrity of the Millennium Experience, discussions are entered into. This was the case with approaches received from confectionary/ice cream suppliers where NMEC considered that their Official Supplier category of sponsorship support might be achievable. Official Supplier sponsorship is a well-established practice across major events and visitor attractions where there is a requirement or opportunities for enhancing commercial income.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what responsibilities which his Department had prior to the Comprehensive Spending Review are to be (a) discontinued by his Department, (b) transferred to another department, (c) transferred to an executive agency and (d) added to his Department over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02. [68399]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Comprehensive Spending Review did not result in the discontinuation or transfer of any DCMS responsibilities to other Government Departments or to executive agencies. A number of executive functions which prior to the Review were undertaken by the Department are being transferred to relevant NDPBs. These are:

funding of the Pairing Scheme to the Arts Council of England;

funding of the Sportsmatch scheme to the English Sports Council;

funding for the Heritage Grant Fund and the Architectural Heritage Fund to English Heritage;

funding for the Royal Society of Arts Art for Architecture scheme to the new national body for architecture; management responsibility for a number of central London statues and for Marble and Wellington Arches to English Heritage;

some executive functions relating to underwater archaeology will be transferred to English Heritage, subject to a legislative opportunity. Administrative responsibility for the Advisory Committee on Historic Wreck Sites will also be transferred out of the DCMS, in discussion with the heritage agencies of the other Home Counties, and the devolved administration once established; subject to Parliamentary approval, management responsibility for Parliament and Trafalgar Squares will be transferred to the Greater London Authority when it is established;

subject to agreement on the transfer of funding, responsibility for the maintenance of Marlborough House will transfer from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to DCMS on 1 April 1999;

the Department has agreed to take over responsibility from the Ministry of Defence for that part of the Public Meteorological Service related to basic weather forecasts that are provided for the BBC.

Millennium Dome (Safety)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Health and Safety Executive regarding public safety at the Millennium Exhibition in Greenwich. [64649]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 11 January 1999]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) are in regular discussions with the Health and Safety Executive and other relevant authorities regarding public safety at the Millennium Experience.

Millennium Dome (Trade Unions)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to include a display relating to the history of trade unions in the United Kingdom in the Millennium Dome. [64807]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has no plans to include a specific display on the history of trade unions in the Dome.

Millennium Dome (Sponsorship)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the total amount of sponsorship raised for the Millennium Dome by IMG. [67485]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 January 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) on 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 363.

Millennium Dome (Access)

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what arrangements have been made to ensure that the Millennium Dome is fully accessible for disabled people. [67251]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The Access Advisory Group was the first advisory group to be established by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC). It held its first meeting in June 1997 and considers accessibility and special needs issues in relation to the Dome. Members are drawn from a range of voluntary sector organisations covering physical, sensory and learning disabilities, mental health issues and the needs of older people. The group is chaired by Mr. David Phillips of Holiday Care Service.

The NMEC aims to provide for the needs of people with disabilities in an exemplary fashion, taking full account of advice from the experts on the Advisory Group. The Group has advised the Company on a wide range of accessibility issues including transportation, parking, the natural and built environment, displays and facilities, on-site information and promotional materials, ticketing arrangements, and disability awareness training.

Parking will be available for Orange Badge holders on a pre-booked basis, close to the Dome entrance. There will be landtrains available; there will be level, ramped or list access to all areas, displays and features; and there will be wheelchairs available for those who require them. Suitable toilets will be available at each of the six service cores in the Dome and elsewhere around the site.

Millennium Dome (Spirit Zone)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on progress in securing a sponsor for the Spirit Zone of the Dome. [68178]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) are making good progress towards securing support for the Spirit Zone from a number of sources.

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the membership of the Board of the NMEC and their remuneration. [68180]

Janet Anderson: Details of the New Millennium Experience Company's (NMEC) Board membership are set out in the Company's Annual Report and Financial Statements 1997–98, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House. Non-executive Board members receive no remuneration. Details of remuneration applicable to the executive Board members (the Chief Executive, the Managing Director and the Finance Director) are in the Annual Report.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what has been the cost of legal advice given to the NMEC. [68176]

Janet Anderson: As is normal practice across the public and private sector, the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) retains legal advisors and, as necessary, seeks specialist legal advice in order to satisfy itself that its legal duties and obligations are met in all aspects of the Millennium Experience project. As is also normal practice, the company has its own in-house legal team. Details of the contractual arrangements with legal advisors and payments made are commercially confidential.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the contract for legal advice to the NMEC was awarded to Sharpe Pritchard and Co.; and what tendering procedure was used. [68177]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) does not have a contract with Sharpe Pritchard for legal advice. Sharpe Pritchard are contacted as a parliamentary reporting service providing relevant extracts to the NMEC from the Official Report.

Millennium Dome (Waste)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what arrangements have been made for the disposal of waste generated by the Millennium Exhibition at Greenwich. [64650]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 11 January 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) on 1 February 1999, Official Report, column 455.

Heritage Lottery Fund

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of Lord Rothschild's statement at the time of the publication of the 1996–97 Annual Report of the Heritage Lottery Fund relating to the reduction of lottery funding for purposes related to heritage. [69161]

Mr. Alan Howarth: When the Lottery was launched in 1994, the good causes were expected to receive around £9 billion in total over the first licence period, that is £1.8 billion for each of the five good causes, including heritage. When we raised that forecast to £10 billion, we were able to provide £1 billion for the New Opportunities Fund without affecting the expectations of the original good causes. We now expect the Lottery to raise £10.6 billion for the good causes over the licence period, which ends in September 2001. £200 million of the extra £600 million will be shared equally between the heritage, the arts, sport and charities, with the balance of £400 million going to the New Opportunities Fund. The Heritage Lottery Fund can therefore now count on receiving at least £1.85 billion in total during the present licence.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 3 February that, following the reduction in the percentage income shares to the heritage, the arts, sport and charities from 16⅔ per cent. to 5 per cent. for thirteen weeks from 15 February in order to provide the extra revenue for the New Opportunities Fund, each is guaranteed to receive 16⅔ per cent. for the remainder of the licence period. This is in addition to the undertaking we have already given that these good causes are each gauranteed 16⅔ per cent. of Lottery proceeds after the current licence expires. These guarantees give the Heritage Lottery Fund a clear financial framework within which to plan its future spending and operate the new strategic approach to Lottery distribution we have introduced.

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which Ministers in his Department made use of (a) RAF and (b) chartered aircraft between 1 October 1998 and 31 January 1999; and if he will list the dates, destinations and costs of such flights. [69077]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 4 February 1999]: Neither I nor any of my Ministers have made use either of an RAF aircraft or of a chartered aircraft.

Holidays

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many holidays were taken in the United Kingdom by British residents in (a) 1994 and (b) 1998. [69392]

Janet Anderson: United Kingdom residents took an estimated 62.8 million holidays in the United Kingdom in 1994, according to the UK Tourism Survey. Short holiday trips, of 1–3 nights, accounted for fractionally over 50 per cent. of all holidays. The latest figures currently available from this annual survey are for 1997. They show an estimated 70.8 million holidays in the UK, 13 per cent. more than in 1994. Short holiday trips accounted for 53 per cent. of all UK holidays in 1997. The number of short holidays taken in the UK increased by 18 per cent. between 1994 and 1997.

Figures for 1998 are expected to be available in late Spring.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government have taken in the past two weeks to draw to the Spanish Government's attention their obligations under the European Community treaties in respect of the border with Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement. [69700]

Ms Quin: The Ambassador in Madrid has raised this issue on several occasions recently with the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs. We have made it clear to the Spanish authorities that we look to them to allow movement across the border in conformity with EU obligations.

Indonesia

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what military equipment has been licensed for export by UK companies to Indonesia since 1 May 1997. [69491]

Mr. Fatchett: The Government are soon to publish their Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls. They will list by country of destination the number of export licences issued in each equipment category, and give details of the military equipment for which licences have been granted.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has evaluated on the alleged use against civilians of arms exported from the UK to Indonesia. [69760]

Mr. Fatchett: No formal mechanisms exist at present for systematically monitoring the use of British defence equipment once it has been exported. We will not however issue licences for the export of equipment where we judge there is a clearly identifiable risk that the equipment might be used for internal repression.

Arms Embargoes

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the Orders in Council relating to arms embargoes circulated to British embassies and high commissions by his Department between 1979 and 1997. [69922]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: From 1979 to 1997, it was not normal practice to circulate copies of Orders in Council or summaries of them to British Embassies and High Commissions. It was the practice instead to circulate copies of the relevant UN Resolutions. Since July 1998 all FCO Departments and Posts overseas and all Whitehall Departments have been sent details of the scope and provisions of all new sanctions, including arms embargoes.

Burma

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy with regard to the participation of representatives of the Government of Myanmar in European Union-ASEAN discussions. [69483]

Mr. Fatchett: As an ASEAN member, Burma is entitled to be represented at EU/ASEAN bloc-to-bloc meetings. The next meeting, of Foreign Ministers, is due to take place in March in Berlin. The UK believes that the level of Burmese representation should be in keeping with the spirit of the EU Common Position, which reflects the EU's concern about the appalling human rights and political situation in Burma. We continue to make this position clear to our EU Partners.

Arms Control

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what position was taken by the United Kingdom representatives at the General Affairs Council on 25 and 26 January on proposals tabled by the German Government on arms control. [69482]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As there was no prospect of consensus on the Presidency's proposal concerning the Code of Conduct on Arms Exports, the UK did not intervene. Our position is that this issue should be considered during the annual review of the operation of the Code, which is due to take place towards the end of the German Presidency, in the light of experience.

Georgia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to mark the accession of Georgia to full membership of the Council of Europe. [69260]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Georgia has yet formally to accede to the Council of Europe (CoE).

The CoE Committee of Ministers is to consider the recommendation of the CoE Parliamentary Assembly that Georgia be invited to become a full member of the organisation, but with the requirement that Georgia meets certain specified commitments with stipulated timescales.

We shall support a decision endorsing the Assembly's recommendations.

Pakistan

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the actions of the Pakistan Government to limit the press freedom of the Daily Jang newspaper. [69894]

Mr. Fatchett: We are following developments in this case. I expect to raise the issue with the Minister of Information when I visit Pakistan on 8–10 February.

Angola

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to work through the UN to ensure that Dr Jonas Savimbi is prosecuted for crimes against humanity. [69386]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The major responsibility for the break down of the peace process lies with Jonas Savimbi, but military action is not going to result in an acceptable resolution of the present crisis. The only way forward is for both the warring parties to return to the negotiating table. I would not wish to take any measures which might undermine prospects for a negotiated settlement.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement in respect of the Government's policy towards UNITA. [69385]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our policy is to urge UNITA to fulfil its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol. It is their failure to do so which has led to the breakdown in the peace process and for which Mr. Savimbi must bear the main responsibility. But military action is not going to result in an acceptable solution of the present crisis. The only way forward is for both warring parties to return to the negotiating table. UN sanctions against UNITA were designed to encourage UNITA to fulfil its peace process obligations. The Government enforce all UN sanctions.

UN 661 Sanctions Committee

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the published minutes of the United Nations Security Council Resolution 661 Sanctions Committee. [69398]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait does not publish minutes of its meetings. It does however produce an annual report.

I have arranged for copies of the latest of these reports to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Arms Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the factors underlying the delay in publishing the first annual report on arms exports. [69399]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We regret the delay in publishing the first annual report on the UK's strategic export controls, and will publish the report as soon as possible.

Putting the report together has involved the careful checking and compilation of a vast amount of data. This process has been particularly time-consuming because the databases of the departments concerned which were in place during the period covered by the annual report were not designed to produce the necessary information. In addition, it became clear at a late stage of the process that there were significant inaccuracies in HM Customs and Excise data relating to the value of arms exports to individual countries, and this has had to be re-checked.

Private Military Companies

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to introduce regulation of private military companies in the United Kingdom. [69394]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government are still examining this issue. No final decision has yet been taken.

EU Funds

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the amounts paid by the EU to (a) Republic of Ireland, (b) Spain, (c) Portugal and (d) Greece in 1997–98. [69164]

Ms Quin: The EC budget year is the calendar year. According to the European Commission's report "Financing of the European Union" COM(98) 560, deposited in the House Library on 26 October 1998 (Batch list 121), expenditures from the EC budget on these Member States in 1997 were:

(a) Republic of Ireland: £6,071 million (8,605.8 mecu)

(b) Spain: £7,974 million (11,303.6 mecu)

(c) Portugal: £2,680 million (3,799.6 mecu)

(d) Greece: £3,915 million (5,550.2 mecu).

Ministerial Visits (Central Europe)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from United Kingdom embassies about the numbers and occasions of visits by ministers from other EU states who are comparable in rank to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to (a) Poland, (b) Hungary, (c) the Czech Republic, (d) Slovenia and (e) Estonia, since each of these countries submitted their formal applications for membership of the EU. [67060]

Ms Quin: [holding answer 26 January 1999]: British Embassies in Central Europe keep the FCO regularly informed of significant events in their host countries. However we do not keep detailed records of all visits by trade and other Ministers from EU countries to Central Europe. To provide a full answer to the question would necessitate disproportionate cost. I am listing details of those visits for which we do hold records.

The FCO and the DTI recognise the importance of the trade relationship with EU applicant states in Central Europe. Poland, the Czech Republic and Hungary are priority markets under the joint DTI/FCO Export Forum Initiative. The DTI and FCO collaborate in export and investment promotion activities in all of these countries, including ministerial contact.

Poland—Visits by other EU member state trade ministers (since 5 April 1994)

M. Dondoux, French Minister of Trade, March 1998

Hungary—Visits by other EU member state trade ministers (since 31 March 1994)

No records

Czech Republic—Visits by other EU member state trade ministers (since 17 January 1996)

No records

Slovenia—Visits by other EU member state trade ministers (since 10 June 1996)

Ms Anneke van Dok van Weele, Netherlands Minister of Foreign Trade, September 1996

Mr. Bjoern von Sydow, Swedish Trade Minister, September 1996

Mr. Johan Ole Norrback, Finnish Minister for European Affairs and Foreign Trade, October 1997

Mr. Piero Fassino, Italian Minister of Foreign Trade, January 1999

Estonia—Visits by other EU member state trade ministers (since 24 November 1995)

Mr. Anders Sundstrom, Swedish Minister of Industry and Commerce, May 1997

Mr. Leif Pagrotsky, Swedish Minister for Trade, October 1997

Mr. Antti Kalljomaki, Finnish Minister for Trade and Industry, December 1997

Mr. Leif Pagrotsky, Swedish Minister for Trade, May 1998.

Swathi Pankhania

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has received concerning the case of Swathi Pankhania, born on 18 March 1973, currently being dealt with in Bombay; [67234]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 147, concerning Swathi Pankhania of Leicester, Ref S787788, when the decision will be made in this case. [69314]

Mr. Fatchett: The position on this case was set out in a letter dated 25 January 1999 from the Migration and Visa Correspondence Unit to my hon. Friend. We expect medical formalities to be completed around the middle of February.

Kyoto Protocol

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to encourage the United States to ratify the Kyoto Protocol on climate change. [67967]

Mr. Prescott: I have been asked to reply.

It is important that all countries who agreed the Kyoto Protocol on climate change sign and ratify it, but it is particularly important that the US, as the world's largest emitter, should do so. Under the chairmanship of the UK, all G8 countries agreed last spring to sign the Protocol within a year; and the US did so during the Buenos Aires Climate Change Conference in November. The UK continues to play a significant role in international negotiations to finalise the rules on how the Protocol will operate, with the aim of promoting early ratification by all countries, including the US.

I met Vice-President Al Gore on January 30, and climate change was among the matters discussed.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assistance the British Embassy in Bangkok gave in arranging to charter a helicopter for the Chancellor of the Exchequer during his attendance at the ASEM conference in September 1997; and what the cost was of the charter; [68709]

(2) what assistance Diplomatic posts in South Africa gave in arranging a charter flight for the Chancellor of the Exchequer in September 1997 to Bangkok from (a) South Africa and (b) Madagascar; and what the cost was of the flight. [68708]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 1 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I am giving today to my hon. Friend the Member for Halton (Mr. Twigg), Official Report, column 31.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Safety Radio Communication Project

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent advice he has given to local fire authorities concerning participation of the Fire Service in the Public Safety Radio Communication Project. [69007]

Mr. George Howarth: A letter was sent to Chief Fire Officers on 11 January 1999 which advised them on developments in the strategy for replacing fire service main scheme radio systems, including possible take-up of the Public Safety Radio Communications project. The proposals had previously been agreed by the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council at its meeting on 17 November 1998. I have placed a copy of the letter in the Library.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total female prison population by category and in total (a) on 1 May 1997 and (b) at the latest available date. [69219]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is available for the last day of the month and is given for appropriate month ends in the table.

Population of females in prisons in England and Wales on 30 April 1997 and 31 December 1998, by type of custody

Type of custody	30 April 1997	31 December 1998
Untried	387	444
Convicted unsentenced	205	237
Sentenced:
Young offenders	249	310
Adults	1,734	2,051
Fine defaulters	9	3
Non-criminal prisoners	26	21
Total	2,610	3,066

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list his current planning projections of the future female prison population. [69174]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is available in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 1/99 "Projections of long-term trends in the prison population to 2006" published on 20 January 1999. The Bulletin details three alternative scenarios which project a total female prison population by 2006 of:

a) 3,900 (if custody rates increase by 1 per cent. and sentence lengths increase annually by 2 per cent.)

b) 3,600 (if custody rates increase by 1 per cent. but sentence lengths remain at 1998 levels)

c) 3,100 (if custody rates and sentence lengths remain at 1998 levels).

These projections take into account the effect of Home Detention Curfew which came into effect on 28 January 1999. A copy of the bulletin which shows in table 1 the projected female prison population under each scenario by year is available in the Library and on the Home Office Web Site http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/index.htm.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were sentenced to imprisonment for offences involving possession, supply or trafficking of controlled drugs in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [69176]

Mr. George Howarth: The information is given in the table.

Receptions of sentenced females into prisons in England and Wales by principal drugs offence, 1992–1998

Offence	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998[1]
Unlawful supply	63	70	72	136	144	186	227
Possession with intent	42	55	61	83	142	223	276
Possession	41	38	40	54	95	120	103
Unlawful import/export	128	132	112	122	187	210	216
Other drug offences	2	3	2	9	7	11	12
Total	276	298	287	404	575	750	834

[1] Provisional figures.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were held in prison in each member state of the European Union (a) in absolute terms and (b) in proportion to the size of their population for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [69177]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information is given in the table. It should be noted, however, that comparisons between penal statistics from different countries may be misleading due to differences in criminal justice systems, the types of sanctions available to the judicial authorities and the length of prison sentences imposed by the courts and served by offenders.

Female prison population[1] within the European Union, by member state, 1992 to 1997

	Number of female						rate per 100,000 general female
	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
England and Wales[2,3]	1,577	1,561	1,811	1,979	2,262	2,675	6	6	7	7	9	10
Northern Ireland	47	36	42	30	32	30	6	4	5	4	4	4
Scotland[2]	158	171	177	175	189	184	6	6	7	7	7	7
Austria[4]	338	341	335	345	367	413	8	8	8	8	9	10
Belgium[3]	404	348	385	382	378	360	8	7	7	7	7	7
Denmark	179	178	171	219	191	160	7	7	6	8	7	6
Finland[5]	102	111	112	127	141	134	4	4	4	5	5	5
France[6]	2,081	2,100	2,183	2,256	2,165	2,166	7	7	7	8	7	7
Germany	—	2,803	2,712	2,698	2,768	3,212	—	7	6	6	7	8
Greece	282	300	327	—	187	209	5	6	6	—	4	4
Ireland (Eire)	30	34	36	36	48	13	2	2	2	2	3	1
Italy	2,508	2,775	2,347	2,172	2,098	2,034	9	9	8	7	7	7
Luxembourg	22	16	19	29	26	—	11	8	9	14	12	—
Netherlands[7]	322	339	391	—	424	491	4	4	5	—	5	6
Portugal	659	795	840	—	1,281	1,470	13	16	16	—	25	29
Spain[8]	3,200	4,300	3,997	3,865	—	4,002	16	22	20	19	—	20
Sweden	199	234	290	330	321	297	5	5	7	7	7	7

[1] At 1 September

[2] Average population

[3] Includes prisoners held in police cells

[4] At 31 August

[5] At 1 January

[6] Metropolitan and overseas departments

[7] At 30 September

[8] At 31 December

Source:

Calculated from data in the Council of Europe S. PACE using population estimates supplied by the ONS.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the population of female prisoners in each of the past 10 years; and what estimate he has made of the figures for each of the next five years. [69262]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the average female prison population (up to 1997) is published in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (table 1.4 of the 1997 edition), a copy of which is in the Library. Information on the projected female prison population by alternative scenarios is given in table 1 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 1/99 "Projections of long term trends in the prison population to 2006" published on 20 January 1999, a copy of which is in the Library and on the Home Office Web Site http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/index.htm.

Information on the average female prison population in England and Wales is given in the table. The figures are for the central scenario—higher and lower scenarios are possible.

Average population of females in prisons in England and Wales, 1989–1998 (actual) and 1999–2004 (projected)

Year	Average population (Actual)	Year	Average population (Projected)
1989	1,767	1999	3,200
1990	1,597	2000	3,400
1991	1,561	2001	3,500
1992	1,577	2002	3,500
1993	1,561	2003	3,500
1994	1,811	2004	3,500
1995	1,979	—	—
1996	2,262	—	—
1997	2,675	—	—
1998	3,105	—	—

Animals Act 1911

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation amending the Animals Act 1911 to make it an offence to keep an animal in a situation where it was likely to be caused suffering. [69387]

Mr. George Howarth: The law places the responsibility for taking care of animals on their owners or keepers, who may not cause them harm, intentionally or through neglect. Under the Protection of Animals Act 1911, it is an offence to cause any unnecessary suffering to any domestic or captive animal.

Since the mistreatment of animals can take many forms, the 1911 Act has been widely drawn to apply to any situation of unnecessary suffering. There are no plans at present to amend the 1911 Act to make it an offence of being likely to cause unnecessary suffering.

Prisons (Illegal Drugs)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on reducing the supply of illegal drugs in prisons. [69179]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are committed to the reduction of illegal drug use in prison. Our strategy is set out in "Tackling Drugs in Prison", which we launched in May 1998. Following the Comprehensive Spending Review, the Prison Service will receive an extra £76 million over the next three financial years for its implementation.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors to prisons were found to be in possession of illegal drugs in each of the last three years for which figures are available; how many were referred to the police; what action was taken in respect of those not referred to the police; and if he will make a statement. [68958]

Mr. George Howarth: All visitors to prisons who are found in possession of illegal drugs are referred to the police.

In the last three years, the numbers of visitors arrested in connection with possible drug related offences are:

1996: 1,312

1997: 1,176

1998: 1,086.

The Prison Service does not record what action was subsequently taken by the police.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on Monday 25 January, Official Report, column 80, that he is to provide Governors with a new power to ban visitors for a specified time if they are caught bringing drugs into United Kingdom prisons.

Racist Attacks (Greater Manchester)

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the most recent figures for recorded racist attacks in Greater Manchester; and what measures he proposes to deal with this kind of crime. [69173]

Mr. Boateng: There were 624 recorded racial incidents in Greater Manchester in 1997–98. These are incidents recorded under the Association of Chief Police Officers' definition of a racial incident.

> "Any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation; or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person".

Incidents included here are wider than the normal definition of a crime in the crime statistics and include low level harassment.

A breakdown of the number of incidents recorded by the police in each police area in 1997–98 is given in the Home Office publication "Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System" 1998, a copy of which is available in the Library.

The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 introduced new statutory offences for racial crime which came into force on 30 September 1998. These correspond to the existing main offences which deal with violence against the person (except those which carry a maximum sentence of life imprisonment), criminal damage and offences of harassment. They include a test that there was either racial motivation or any aggravating evidence or racial hostility in connection with the offence and provide the courts with higher maximum penalties to reflect the racial aspect to the crime.

The introduction of specific racial offences will send out a strong message to society that such crime is unacceptable and will be dealt with very seriously by the courts.

Social Exclusion

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the role of the voluntary sector in addressing social exclusion. [69160]

Mr. Boateng: The Government regard partnership with voluntary and community organisations as crucial in combating social exclusion. Many such organisations have unique experience and knowledge of areas of need and opportunity. The voluntary sector is represented on the membership of seventeen of the eighteen Policy Action Teams set up following the Social Exclusion Unit report, "Bringing Britain Together".

Trans-sexual Prisoners

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the planned timetable for the drawing up of guidelines and consultation on the treatment of transsexual prisoners; what consultation is planned with non-convicted transsexual persons; who is to be responsible for drawing up of the guidelines; and if the guidelines will cover prisoners on remand; [69230]

(2) what guidelines are provided to prison service clinicians in respect of the treatment of transsexual prisoners. [69231]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service's Directorate of Health care is currently drawing up guidelines for the care, management and treatment of prisoners with gender dysphoria. The Directorate expects to begin consultation on a second draft of these guidelines shortly and will set a timetable for their completion and issue in the light of the outcome. The Parliamentary Forum on Transsexualism and the Gender and Sexuality Alliance, both of which have previously contributed to the development of these guidelines, will be amongst those invited to comment on the second draft. The guidelines, which will refer to both convicted and unconvicted prisoners, will supersede the current arrangements whereby prison staff seek advice from the Directorate of Health Care as required.

Swathi Pankhania

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Leicester, East dated 7 December 1998 and 25 January 1999, concerning Swathi Pankhania of Rushey Mead, Leicester (Home Office ref. S787788). [69229]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A reply will be sent to my hon. Friend shortly.

Electronic Warfare

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which Cabinet Committees are currently responsible for considering information warfare issues; and if that will change following his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 75. [68315]

Mr. Straw: As I said in my answer of 25 January 1999, I will be taking lead responsibility for the new work on protection against electronic attack and will consult my Ministerial colleagues as required. There are no immediate plans to change the Terms of Reference of any Cabinet Committee.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the costs (a) to central Government and (b) to local authorities in (i) 1998–99 and (ii) 1999–2000, under interim funding arrangements for asylum seekers, in respect of (1) single adults, (2) families and (3) unaccompanied children. [68578]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Asylum seekers who claim asylum at their port of entry may be entitled to income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit. Other asylum seekers may seek support from local authority social services departments. Local authorities are able to reclaim some of their expenditure by way of special grant from central government.

The information is not available in the form requested. But the information which is available was contained in the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury in his reply to the right hon. Member for Horsham (Mr. Maude) on 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 726.

Police Firearms

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many machine action weapons, shotguns and other firearms are currently held by United Kingdom police forces; what percentage of police personnel are trained in the use of each category of weapon; what plans are in place to increase the stock of such weapons by category, by (a) purchase, (b) lease hire or loan and (c) other arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [68946]

Mr. Boateng: Information on the number of firearms held by police forces in England and Wales is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The number of firearms held by police forces in Scotland is as follows:

Police force	Handgun	Shotgun	Rifle	Other	Total
Central Scotland	41	4	9	16	70
Dumfries and Galloway	45	4	13	22	84
Fife	42	4	6	10	62
Grampian	72	13	8	31	124
Lothian and Borders	123	14	14	29	180
Northern	89	15	30	20	154
Strathclyde	256	14	34	54	358
Tayside	87	19	32	21	159
Total	755	87	146	203	1,191

The number of firearms held by the Royal Ulster Constabulary is as follows:

Firearms	Number
Pistols/Revolvers	15,016
Machine action weapons	3,457
Shotguns	31
Sniper rifles	44

Arrangements for the purchase and storage of firearms are operational matters for chief officers of police. I understand from the Association of Chief Police Officers that there are no plans for any significant increase in the number of weapons held in England and Wales. Similarly, there are no plans to increase the stocks in Scotland or Northern Ireland.

Based on the most recently available figures, 5.3 per cent. of police officers in England and Wales and 4.63 per cent. of police officers in Scotland are trained in the use of firearms. This reflects the policy of using a small number of highly trained officers for firearms operations. Training reflects the range of weapons officers may need to use in dealing with firearms incidents.

All Royal Ulster Constabulary officers are trained in the use of handguns, and approximately 50 per cent. in the use of semi-automatic firearms. Shotgun and sniper rifle training involves very small numbers of officers.

Deportations

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons (a) were deported and (b) voluntarily left the UK pending deportation in January. [68795]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information on removals and voluntary departures resulting from deportation action is not yet available for January 1999.

Table 5.3 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, First Half 1998", a copy of which is in the Library, contains information on the numbers of persons who were removed or departed voluntarily as a result of deportation action in 1995, 1996, 1997 and the first half of 1998.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 1999, Official Report, columns 546–47, on deportation orders, in respect of how many deportation orders made in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996 deportation was not enforced because it was no longer appropriate. [69918]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Some 160 of the deportation orders made in 1994 have not been enforced on the ground that deportation is no longer appropriate. The figures for 1995 and 1996 are 170 and 140 respectively.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 1999, Official Report, columns 546–47, on deportation orders, if he will make it his policy to collect easily accessible information on the number of persons in custody or otherwise detained who are the subject of deportation action; and if he will make a statement. [69919]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information is currently collected on people who are detained under Immigration Act powers in prisons and detention centres. This will include people refused entry on arrival at a port and illegal entrants, as well as those who are subject to deportation action. However, those subject to deportation are not identified separately; and the figures do not include people still completing custodial sentences who are subject to deportation action, as the latter are not held under Immigration Act powers.

There is no pressing operational need to collect centrally separate information about the number of people in prison custody or otherwise detained who are subject to deportation action. However, the Immigration Service is currently in discussions with the Prison Service about the collection of data on foreign nationals in prison and will consider the desirability of including details of prisoners subject to deportation when new information systems are introduced.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances it is the policy of the Government that people serving prison sentences and who are the subject of deportation action should be released from custody prior to deportation. [69845]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A prisoner is expected to complete his sentence before being deported.

It is our practice to complete the necessary administrative action associated with deportation before the person concerned has completed his sentence so that deportation can take place on release from custody.

Where it is not possible to do this for legal reasons such as an outstanding appeal, or where the person is not immediately removable for other reasons, consideration is given to whether they should be detained under Immigration Act powers or whether they can be granted temporary release.

In deciding whether or not a particular individual should be detained, we apply the same criteria as are applied in other immigration cases. These criteria were set out in Chapter 12 of the White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—A Modern Approach to Immigration and Asylum", which was published last year.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if prison governors are informed of which prisoners in their charge are the subject of deportation action. [69846]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Governors should be aware of those prisoners who have been recommended for deportation by a court. In other cases, the police are required to notify the Immigration and Nationality Directorate where someone has been convicted of an offence of violence against the person, a drugs offence or an immigration offence or any other offence where a custodial sentence of 12 months or more has been imposed. Where it is decided to initiate deportation action in those cases, the Governor is asked to serve the notice informing the prisoner that the Secretary of State intends to deport him. The Governor will also be informed of cases where a deportation order has already been made—on other grounds—against someone who is serving a custodial sentence.

Immigration

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1998, Official Report, column 131, on immigration, if he will make it his policy to collect information on the number of cases in which he exercises his discretion to grant leave to remain in the United Kingdom to foreign nationals resident in the United Kingdom on the grounds of compassionate circumstances. [69917]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No. There is no operational need to collect these data so the public expense of collecting the information could not be justified.

Circuses (Winter Quarters)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Brigg and Goole (Mr. Cawsey) of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 75, what plans he has to extend animal welfare legislation to circus animals in winter quarters. [69494]

Mr. George Howarth: Circus animals in winter quarters are protected by the Protection of Animals Act 1911, under which it is a criminal offence to ill-treat or cause any unnecessary suffering to any captive or domestic animal, and by the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925. We are still studying the all party group for animal welfare's report on circus animals.

Police (Millennium Celebrations)

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources he has made available to the Metropolitan Police to ensure public safety and public order and to prevent crime at the time of the Millennium celebrations; and if he will make a statement. [69609]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The need to make adequate provision for both planned and contingency policing related to the Millennium celebrations in London is being taken fully into account in budget estimates for the Metropolitan Police, for 1999–2000, which the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District in consultation with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, is preparing for the Home Secretary's approval.

My right hon. Friend announced, in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Salford (Ms Blears) on 2 December 1998, Official Report, columns 194–97, that the Metropolitan Police should continue to receive additional funding in recognition of its distinct national and capital city functions which, in the next financial year, include policing related to Millennium celebrations; that he proposes that a special payment should therefore be made to the Metropolitan Police over and above that available through the principal police grant formula; and that he has set the amount of this special payment at £176 million. My right hon. Friend announced a funding allocation of £1,744 million for the Metropolitan Police for 1999–2000 in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, West (Mr. Salter), Official Report, columns 618–19. The final grant allocations for 1999–2000 as set out in the Police Grant Report, including the additional special payment of £176 million for the Metropolitan Police, were approved by the House on 4 February.

Circus Animals

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rules govern the treatment of circus animals; how he monitors the treatment of such animals; and if he will make a statement. [69499]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 761.

Home Detention Curfew Orders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners released on home detention curfew on or since 28 January have been returned to custody to date (a) as a result of offending and (b) for other reasons. [70021]

Mr. George Howarth: As of 7 February, 392 prisoners have been made subject to Home Detention Curfew. Four of these prisoners have had their licences revoked and been recalled to prison. Two of these recalls were as a result of a failure to comply with the curfew conditions. One recall was due to an inability to monitor the prisoner's whereabouts and one was in order to protect the public from serious harm. One of the two prisoners recalled for failing to comply with the curfew condition has been charged with a further offence.

Provisional Police Grants

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the provisional police grants announced in December 1998. [69204]

Mr. Boateng: I received 40 written representation on the provisional police grant allocations announced on 2 December 1998. I also met representatives from seven police authorities.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the results of the inquiry into the events at Holloway Prison on 13 August 1998. [69259]

Mr. George Howarth: An internal Prison Service inquiry into a series of incidents connected to the non-issue of medication to prisoners at Holloway prison has been completed. The Prison Service does not normally publish the findings of internal investigation reports.

The inquiry did, however, recognise some serious shortcomings in the management of medication which have now been addressed. The area manager and the governor are currently instituting a series of changes to ensure the effective delivery of medical services at the prison.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the percentage of people who have used (a) cannabis, (b) cocaine and (c) heroin in each of the past 10 years. [69261]

Mr. George Howarth: Figures for the percentage of people in the general population aged 16 to 59 using drugs during the last year, across England and Wales, are available on a reliable basis only from the 1994 and 1996 British Crime Surveys. These figures are given in the table. Equivalent findings from the 1998 British Crime Survey will become available when the report on the drugs component of the Survey is published later ~~this~~ year.

Table: Percentage of respondents aged 16–59 in the 1994 and 1996 British Crime Surveys who used drugs in the last year

Drug	1994	1996
Cannabis	8	9
Cocaine	—	1
Crack	—	—
Heroin	—	—

Denotes less than 0.5 per cent.

Committee for Infrastructure Protection

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Committee for Infrastructure Protection; and if he will list its members and terms of reference. [69559]

Mr. George Howarth: I am not aware of the specific committee to which the hon. Member refers. I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary gave in a reply today to the hon. Member for Beckenham (Mrs. Lait), Official Report, column 89.

Prisons (Passive Drug Dogs)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on providing passive drug dogs in prisons; and what is the cost of keeping each dog. [69635]

Mr. George Howarth: The use of passive drug dogs is an important element in the Prison Service's strategy for tackling the supply of illegal drugs into prisons. There are currently 34 passive drug dogs across the service, with around 50 additional dogs planned over the next three years. The annual cost of keeping each dog is approximately £2,087.

Press Complaints Commission

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will legislate to place the Press Complaints Commission Code of Practice on a statutory basis; and if he will include a provision banning discrimination to be exhibited in published material relating to a group of people. [68920]

Janet Anderson: I have been asked to reply.

No. The Government prefer effective self regulation overseen by the Press Complaints Commission to any form of statutory regulation.

WALES

Hip Replacements

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average cost of a hip replacement operation in Wales in the last year for which figures are available. [69217]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: A figure specifically for the average cost of a hip replacements in Wales is not readily available.

The costing system in Wales groups hip replacement procedures with other similar surgery.

The 1997–98 average cost across all Welsh NHS Trusts for the relevant group was £3,686.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

SSSIs (Damage)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce measures to reduce the incidence of damage to sites of special scientific interest in Wales. [69393]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The consultation paper 'Sites of Special Scientific Interest—Better Protection and Management' set out a number of measures that might improve the protection of SSSIs. Responses to that consultation are being considered.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the prospects for sheepmeat production. [69540]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I anticipate a marked increase in sheepmeat production following a heavy carry-over of the 1998 lamb crop into the 1999 season coupled with producers retaining ewes which would otherwise have been culled out.

An industry-led Action Plan for the Lamb and Beef sectors will be published shortly, with the support of the Welsh Office and the Welsh Development Agency.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Cervical Smears

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many women received cervical smear tests in the last year. [69545]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: 228,994 women resident in Wales received cervical smear tests during 1997–98, of which 216,673 were in the programme's target age group of 20 to 64 years.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Beef Farming

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for beef farming. [69539]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The long term future of the beef sector will depend to a large degree on the outcome of the negotiations on the Agenda 2000 proposals. If the current proposals are agreed, they will provide for a significant reduction in beef prices together with an increase in direct payments to producers to compensate for the reduction in prices. This will provide the sector with the opportunity to become more market orientated and may boost consumption. It is clear that reform of the regime is essential in the light of the structural surplus that currently exists in the beef sector. In the continuing negotiations on the Agenda 2000 proposals we will be seeking to ensure that all member states play their part in bringing beef production into line with consumption. I believe that, with planning and re-valuation of their costs structure, Welsh beef producers, where they can utilise their natural advantages such as an abundance of grass, good breeding stock and a wealth of technical expertise at their disposal, should be in a position to succeed.

An industry-led Action Plan for the Lamb and Beef sectors will be published shortly, with the support of the Welsh Office and the Welsh Development Agency.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Dairy Producers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to assist dairy producers in Wales. [69538]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The long term future of the dairy sector will depend to a large degree on the outcome of the negotiations on Agenda 2000. The current legal authority for milk quota is due to expire on 31 March 2000. The commission's Agenda 2000 proposals for the reform of the CAP dairy regime include: the extension of the milk quota regime from 2000 until 2006; a 15 per cent. cut in support prices over the first four years of that period; the introduction of direct payments; dairy cow premiums, to compensate producers for the price cuts; and an overall increase of 2 per cent. in the amount of quota at Community level.

An industry-led Action Plan for the dairy sector will be published shortly, with the support of the Welsh Office and the Welsh Development Agency.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Meet the People Meetings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of each of his Meet the People meetings; and how many (a) civil servants and (b) members of the public attended each meetings. [69268]

Mr. Michael: The information about the number of members of the public attending meetings under my Meet the People initiative is set out in the table. These meetings give the public the opportunity to speak directly to me about the work of my Department and about devolution issues. They have shown that people in various parts of Wales are interested enough to turn out on wet winter evenings to ask their questions. It has been clear from the questions and the discussion that those attending include people with interests in the business sector, local government, trade unions and voluntary organisations as well as members of the general public.

I have been accompanied by my private secretary and, with the exception of the public meeting in Newport, which was the first in the series of meetings, one official has attended to make the necessary arrangements. A press officer has attended 6 meetings.

The support provided by my Department is given as part of its normal duties and has been met from within existing resources. The only additional cost incurred by my Department up to and including 4 February, which covers the first 13 meetings, is £490. This relates almost exclusively to the provision of facilities, principally translation facilities, for the public meetings in Wrexham and Llandudno.

The meetings have provided an excellent opportunity to discuss both all-Wales issues and matters of local concern. Even the smallest meetings have been positive and lively, with individuals raising a series of issues. I have found them both challenging and rewarding.

Unitary authority area	Location	Members of the public[1]	Date and time of event
Newport	Newport	35	Friday 4 December 6 p.m.
Swansea	Swansea	50	Thursday 10 December 6 p.m.
Neath Port Talbot	Neath	100	Thursday 10 December 7.30 p.m.
Torfaen	Croesyceiliog	110	Friday 11 December 3.30 p.m.
Vale of Glamorgan	Barry	5	Saturday 12 December 10.30 a.m.
Wrexham	Wrexham	25	Thursday 17 December 7.30 p.m.
Flintshire	Mold	14	Friday 18 December 6.30 p.m.
Rhondda Cynon Taff	Pontypridd	40	Monday 18 January 7 p.m.
Pembrokeshire	Haverford west	90	Thursday 21 January 7 p.m.
Blaenau Gwent	Ebbw Vale	55	Friday 22 January 7 p.m.
Merthyr Tydfil	Merthyr Tydfil	20	Thursday 28 January 7 p.m.
Caerphilly	Pontllanfraith	55	Monday 1 February 6 p.m.
Conwy	Llandudno	80	Thursday 4 February 7 p.m.

[1] Approximate figures

Pendy Plastics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he plans to take to assist the employees of Pendy Plastics (Mainetti) of Deeside Industrial Park who are to be made redundant; and if he will make a statement. [69612]

Mr. Hain: As always when redundancies are announced my Department and its agencies are available to assist, where possible, those that will be affected by redundancy.

A meeting has been arranged for Tuesday 9 February with the company's Personnel Department. This will include representatives from the WDA, Flintshire County Council and the Employment Service who will be the initial contact point for those made redundant. CELTIC will also give advice and guidance as necessary and have asked the Employment Service to ensure that all those persons made redundant are registered for training.

The WDA is already in contact with other companies in the area who use similar manufacturing techniques, to ascertain whether they have vacancies requiring those skills, and all effort will be made to match workers to vacancies.

Everything possible is being done to help those affected by redundancy.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Epilepsy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines are issued by his Department to (a) health and (b) education authorities in Wales in relation to the provision of services and support needed by people suffering from epilepsy; and if he will make a statement. [69671]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: On 15 June 1995, the Chief Medical Officer for Wales issued to the NHS in Wales a report on 'Health Care for People with Epilepsy in Wales' (PM(95)). This report made a number of recommendations, gives useful background information and is a resource for staff involved in purchasing and providing care for this group of patients.

In December 1997, a Welsh Office Circular 'Supporting Pupils with Medical Needs' was issued to all Directors of Education in Wales together with an accompanying Good Practice Guide. The Guide contained a section describing the different types of epilepsy, its control and what can be done in the event of a pupil suffering a seizure.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

National Assembly

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what meetings have taken place in the past three months between his Department's ministers and other Government departments on the powers of the Welsh Assembly; and what the outcome was in each case. [69257]

Mr. Michael: Discussion of how the powers of the Secretary of State for Wales will transfer to the Welsh Assembly and the implications for other Government Departments arises frequently in meetings within Government.

All such discussions provide positive opportunities to prepare the ground for the transfer of powers. As far as the formal process is concerned, on 12 November last year, I published a draft of the Transfer of Functions Order which will determine the powers to be transferred to the National Assembly. Since then there have been a number of meetings at official and Ministerial level as well as comments from outside Government. These all help to inform the final draft Order which I hope will be ready to be laid later this month. I and my officials are also consulted on any Government Bill which makes provision for Wales. Some Bills confer powers directly on the Assembly.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total expenditure on primary and secondary education in Wales expressed as a proportion of the GDP of Wales; and what was the proportion in May 1997. [68609]

Mr. Hain: Public expenditure on primary and secondary education in Wales including early years and special education, is budgeted to be around £1,124 million in 1997–98 and £1,196 million in 1998–99. Expressed as a proportion of the 1997 GDP for Wales, the latest available, the figures are 4.1 and 4.3 per cent. respectively.

Capital expenditure is not available in the required detail for the period in question and has therefore been excluded.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Aquaculture

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if commercial aquaculture ventures are eligible for EU aquaculture development grants in Wales; and what changes to procedures relating to the availability and administration of these grants his Department has introduced for the coming year. [68840]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Commercial aquaculture projects in Wales are eligible for EU grants under the Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance (FIFG), and the administration of the FIFG scheme will be unchanged for the coming year.

I am currently considering applications for aquaculture grant against the competing priorities under other grant schemes and budgets.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Over 30 Months Scheme

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle are waiting for slaughter under the over thirty month scheme; and what is the average duration of such waits. [69489]

Mr. Rooker: In most areas of the country farmers are able to arrange for their OTMS animals to be slaughtered within a fortnight of booking with an abattoir or market. Abattoir slaughterings are currently averaging 17,000 animals a week in the UK, which would imply that there are only around 34,000 animals waiting to be slaughtered. An emergency service exists for the expeditious slaughter on-farm of animals which, in the opinion of a veterinary practitioner, require immediate slaughter.

Levy Scheme

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 691, how many (a) charitable, (b) voluntary and (c) other not-for-profit food outlets are currently subject to licensing. [69996]

Mr. Rooker: Charitable, voluntary or other not-for-profit status is not recorded as part of the registration procedure and so details of the number of premises falling into these categories are not available. There are no licensing requirements specifically for such premises.

Mrs. May: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the sale of fruit, crisps and other snacks at break times in schools will qualify a school for paying the flat rate levy proposed in support of the Food Standards Agency. [70011]

Mr. Rooker: The requirement to pay the proposed levy would depend on whether the premises concerned was required to register with the local authority under the Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991. These regulations make an exemption for premises which are concerned with the supply of beverages, or of biscuits, potato crisps, confectionery or other similar products and which are ancillary to a business (which may include a school) whose principal activity is not the sale of food.

Badger Culling Scheme

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government's badger culling scheme has measures in place (a) to record badger population densities and (b) to estimate the proportion of badgers culled. [68606]

Mr. Rooker: There are no validated methods for establishing badger populations from field evidence of badger activity. The Department is currently finalising contracts for research in this area, which will build on data collected during the randomised culling trial. Culling efficiency during the trial is being monitored and will be audited, and the data will subsequently be reviewed in the light of research. However, the trial has been designed to test practical options and has such statistical power that it is not necessary to know precise culling efficiencies.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government's badger culling scheme has been audited by external auditors. [68605]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 2 February 1999, Official Report, column 602.

Food Standards Agency

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to ensure the presence of scientific experience on the Governing Council of the Food Standards Agency. [68918]

Mr. Rooker: The members of the Agency will be appointed to bring together a reasonable balance of relevant skills and experience. Candidates will be selected for their ability to contribute effectively to that balance and for their personal qualities. We envisage that it will be essential for some members to have relevant scientific experience.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that the Food Standards Agency has sufficient funds for scientific research. [68824]

Mr. Rooker: Budgets for food safety and standards research currently funded by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and relevant research funded by other Departments, including the Department of Health, will be transferred to the Agency at the outset. It will be for the Agency to decide priorities for expenditure within the overall funds available to it.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to monitor the competence of the inspectorate attached to the Food Standards Agency and the adequacy of its staff resources. [68925]

Mr. Rooker: The Agency will have direct responsibility for meat hygiene inspection through the Meat Hygiene Service (which will be a separate executive arm of the proposed Agency), and for dairy hygiene inspections carried out by the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency. Other food hygiene inspections will continue to be the responsibility of local authorities. The draft Food Standards Bill provides powers for the Agency to monitor the performance of enforcement activities, including its own enforcement authorities, and to report on its conclusions. In monitoring enforcement performance, the Agency would be expected to have regard to the adequacy of the relevant staff resources.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 304, on intervention stocks, for what reason the information is not available. [68965]

Mr. Rooker: Member States participating in the EU Surplus Food Scheme are obliged to notify the European Commission of the eligibility criteria which they apply. The UK Government announced last year that the EU Surplus Food Scheme would not be operated in the UK; thus the issue of eligibility criteria does not arise here.

Member States who do participate in the Scheme are obliged to notify the European Commission of the eligibility criteria which they apply. The Commission does not publish this information.

Beef (Compensation)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if new entrants into farming will be eligible for the per cow compensation for the beef sector. [69019]

Mr. Rooker: The £120 million aid package announced by my right hon. Friend on 16 November 1998, Official Report, columns 624–40, included a £30 million increase in the funding of Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances (HLCAs) for cattle in 1999, an extension to the Calf Processing Aid Scheme (CPAS) until the end of March 1999, and £48.3 million in agrimonetary compensation to the suckler cow sector.

New entrants to farming will be eligible for HLCA and CPAS payments, as long as they comply with the scheme rules, but not for agrimonetary compensation, since this was the second tranche of compensation for exchange rate revaluations affecting the beef sector during 1997 and had, under EU rules, to be paid on the basis of production in the 12 months prior to the revaluations.

In order to respect the conditions set by the EU—and also to ensure that the money reached affected beef producers promptly—the first tranche of compensation was paid to producers who received Suckler Cow Premium in 1996. Payments under the second tranche also had to be made to beef producers who were affected by 1997 revaluations.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what data he has collated on the results of the tests which have been carried out in the United Kingdom for detecting the presence of genetically modified organisms in food or food ingredients. [69289]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 4 February 1999]: Enforcement of food labelling regulations, including legislation requiring the labelling of foods and food ingredients which contain genetically modified organisms, is the responsibility of Local Authorities.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the methods which are currently used in the United Kingdom for determining the origin, nature and quantity of genetically modified organisms present in food or food ingredients; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of these methods. [69288]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 4 February 1999]: There are two types of methods which have been developed for the detection of foods and food ingredients containing genetically modified material; those based on the polymerase chain reaction which can be used to detect novel DNA, and enzyme linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) methods which can detect novel proteins.

These methods are currently being validated at the European level by the EC Joint Research Centre.

Common Agricultural Policy

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will pursue with the European Commission the payment of subsidies to more farm animals in Italy last year than were known to exist; and what will be the financial consequences for the United Kingdom of the overpayment. [69194]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 4 February 1999]: Commission auditors are responsible for checking that member states have paid CAP subsidies according to the rules and the UK fully supports the Commission in this work. Any sums wrongfully paid by member states have to be repaid by them to the EU budget.

Farming (East Sussex)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the state of the farming industry in East Sussex. [67911]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The farming industry in East Sussex is currently suffering the effects of a depressed market for beef, sheep and pigmeat and has seen farming incomes fall by 35 per cent. in real terms between 1997 and 1998. In a county where over 40 per cent. of agricultural land is permanent grassland, so reflecting the importance of livestock, and where some two thirds of the land comprises the Sussex Downs and the High Weald, areas of outstanding national beauty which rely on current farming practices, this fall in market prices is understandably of concern.

The County benefits from Environmentally Sensitive Area status for the South Downs and farmers can seek financial assistance for work to enhance the environment under Ministry schemes such as the Countryside Stewardship Scheme, the Habitat Scheme, the Farm Woodland Scheme and the Organic Aid Scheme. Payments to the farming industry in East Sussex in 1997 under MAFF schemes totalled around £16.2 million. Figures are not currently available for 1998.

The Government recognise the importance of a sustainable, competitive and profitable industry and an attractive and viable countryside for the future. My noble Friend Lord Donoughue visited East Sussex on 3 February to listen to the views of representatives of farming interests.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Education Standard Spending Assessment

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list in respect of each local education authority in England the underlying increase in the provisional education standard spending assessment in 1999–2000 in cash terms, as a percentage, and as a percentage per pupil. [69844]

Ms Estelle Morris: The table sets out the information requested for the education SSAs for 1999–2000, which were finalised on 1 February. Some 85 per cent. of the total is allocated on the basis of pupil numbers with the remainder allocated on the basis of population and resident pupil numbers. This has two main effects in creating local variations around the national increases. First, the percentage increase for a given local authority will generally be higher than the national increase if its pupil numbers have risen more quickly than the national trend. Second, authorities with above average increases in pupil numbers will tend to see their overall education SSA per pupil rise by less than the national average rate because the 15 per cent. of the SSA which is not based on pupil numbers will not rise in line with the pupil numbers, and this has a consequential effect on the year-on-year change in the overall level of education SSA per pupil.

Final Education SSAs for 1999–2000

LEA	Education SSA (£ million)	Change (£ million)	Change (%)	SSA per pupil change (%)
City of London	0.8	0.0	1.7	7.7
Camden	87.4	4.0	4.8	4.7
Greenwich	126.2	6.0	5.0	5.4
Hackney	103.6	5.0	5.0	5.1
Hammersmith and Fulham	63.2	3.4	5.7	4.9
Islington	91.7	4.2	4.7	5.4
Kensington and Chelsea	40.2	2.7	7.1	5.9
Lambeth	111.4	6.9	6.6	5.0
Lewisham	127.5	6.9	5.7	5.1
Southwark	124.2	7.8	6.7	5.4
Tower Hamlets	145.6	8.0	5.9	5.7
Wandsworth	98.2	4.9	5.3	5.0
Westminster	66.8	4.3	6.9	5.4
Barking and Dagenham	84.3	5.2	6.6	4.5
Barnet	135.9	7.4	5.8	4.2
Bexley	105.9	6.0	6.0	4.1
Brent	123.1	5.8	4.9	4.3
Bromley	125.8	7.5	6.3	4.3
Croydon	140.4	8.0	6.1	4.5
Ealing	129.4	7.0	5.7	4.5
Enfield	139.3	8.0	6.1	4.4
Haringey	110.6	7.5	7.2	4.6
Harrow	81.1	3.5	4.5	4.6
Havering	99.0	4.5	4.8	4.3
Hillingdon	107.9	5.6	5.5	4.3
Hounslow	107.1	5.4	5.3	4.7
Kingston upon Thames	53.4	2.7	5.2	4.7
Merton	66.3	3.2	5.1	4.6
Newham	156.6	10.3	7.0	4.3
Redbridge	118.4	8.6	7.9	3.5
Richmond upon Thames	52.5	2.8	5.7	4.2
Sutton	78.8	4.6	6.2	4.2
Waltham Forest	111.1	7.0	6.8	4.1
Birmingham	506.0	23.3	4.8	5.3
Coventry	136.1	6.1	4.7	5.2
Dudley	120.4	6.5	5.7	5.1
Sandwell	136.0	6.4	4.9	5.2
Solihull	88.0	5.5	6.7	4.9
Walsall	124.6	6.8	5.8	5.0
Wolverhampton	111.9	5.7	5.4	5.0
Knowsley	85.2	4.0	5.0	5.3
Liverpool	238.3	9.3	4.1	5.6
St. Helens	76.5	3.0	4.1	4.9
Sefton	122.2	6.1	5.2	4.9
Wirral	148.7	6.8	4.8	4.9
Bolton	117.5	6.0	5.4	5.2
Bury	71.5	3.9	5.8	5.2
Manchester	207.7	9.6	4.9	5.9
Oldham	108.6	5.3	5.1	5.1
Rochdale	96.9	5.1	5.6	5.1
Salford	95.2	4.6	5.1	5.4

Final Education SSAs for 1999–2000

LEA	Education SSA (£ million)	Change (£ million)	Change (%)	SSA per pupil change (%)
Stockport	104.4	5.5	5.5	5.4
Tameside	95.6	5.4	6.0	5.3
Trafford	91.1	6.5	7.7	5.7
Wigan	125.3	6.3	5.3	5.2
Barnsley	87.4	4.4	5.3	5.3
Doncaster	136.1	6.2	4.7	5.2
Rotherham	116.1	6.6	6.0	4.8
Sheffield	195.0	11.1	6.0	5.1
Bradford	233.8	9.5	4.2	5.0
Calderdale	88.2	5.0	6.0	4.9
Kirklees	164.3	8.3	5.3	5.0
Leeds	292.4	14.8	5.3	5.2
Wakefield	129.0	6.5	5.3	5.1
Gateshead	78.3	3.4	4.6	5.1
Newcastle upon Tyne	111.0	5.0	4.7	5.0
North Tyneside	77.6	3.4	4.6	5.0
South Tyneside	68.8	3.4	5.1	5.2
Sunderland	129.1	5.7	4.6	5.3
Isles of Scilly	1.2	0.0	0.8	7.9
Cambridgeshire	190.0	11.3	6.3	5.2
Cheshire	263.8	13.8	5.5	4.9
Cornwall	189.8	11.1	6.2	5.1
Cumbria	195.5	10.0	5.4	5.1
Devon	243.8	15.9	7.0	4.1
Essex	524.1	29.2	5.9	4.0
Gloucestershire	214.8	12.7	6.3	5.0
Herefordshire	61.1	4.1	7.3	4.3
Worcestershire	198.2	10.9	5.8	3.9
Hertfordshire	446.5	23.6	5.6	4.1
Kent	553.5	29.7	5.7	4.1
Lancashire	468.5	25.3	5.7	5.0
Lincolnshire	250.7	15.3	6.5	4.8
Norfolk	286.5	17.4	6.5	4.8
Northamptonshire	257.8	14.8	6.1	5.0
Northumberland	129.3	6.3	5.2	4.9
Nottinghamshire	296.0	16.4	5.9	4.7
Oxfordshire	217.4	10.2	4.9	4.2
Shropshire	100.8	5.7	6.0	5.1
Somerset	175.6	10.9	6.6	5.2
Suffolk	250.3	14.1	5.9	4.8
Surrey	358.3	21.1	6.3	4.2
Warwickshire	187.6	10.1	5.7	5.2
West Sussex	269.2	15.5	6.1	3.7
North Yorkshire	219.7	13.6	6.6	4.9
Bedfordshire	161.0	7.4	4.8	4.1
Buckinghamshire	193.6	10.4	5.7	3.7
Derbyshire	272.4	15.6	6.1	4.9
Dorset	135.3	9.2	7.3	4.3
Durham	203.4	9.6	4.9	5.1
East Sussex	174.3	10.1	6.2	4.2
Hampshire	446.8	24.9	5.9	4.2
Leicestershire	228.2	13.6	6.3	4.8
Staffordshire	323.1	18.2	6.0	5.0
Wiltshire	159.1	10.1	6.8	4.5
Isle of Wight	53.2	2.6	5.1	4.0
Bath and North East Somerset	62.3	3.3	5.6	4.8
Bristol	134.2	7.0	5.5	5.4
North Somerset	68.0	3.6	5.6	4.9
South Gloucestershire	93.8	6.3	7.2	5.0
Hartlepool	42.6	2.2	5.4	5.1
Middlesbrough	68.5	3.1	4.8	5.2
Redcar and Cleveland	66.2	2.9	4.6	5.3
Stockton-on-Tees	82.1	4.5	5.8	4.9
Kingston-upon-Hull	114.8	5.2	4.8	5.2
East Riding	121.3	7.4	6.5	5.0
North East Lincolnshire	73.0	3.1	4.5	5.3
North Lincolnshire	65.0	3.2	5.2	5.3
York	60.3	3.5	6.1	5.3
Luton	87.6	4.3	5.2	4.3
Milton Keynes	92.7	4.3	4.9	3.9
Derby	96.8	5.3	5.8	5.0
Poole	50.0	3.2	6.9	3.9
Bournemouth	55.8	3.3	6.3	4.2
Darlington	39.7	2.2	6.0	5.0
Brighton and Hove	82.8	4.9	6.3	4.0
Portsmouth	72.8	4.1	6.0	4.3
Southampton	87.4	5.0	6.1	4.0
Leicester	134.9	5.6	4.3	5.1
Rutland	11.6	0.4	3.8	5.3
Stoke on Trent	99.5	3.9	4.1	5.2
Bracknell Forest	41.6	2.0	5.1	3.9
Windsor and Maidenhead	51.1	2.4	4.8	4.1
West Berkshire	60.9	3.5	6.1	3.8
Reading	48.0	2.7	5.9	4.2
Slough	59.0	3.3	5.9	3.8
Wokingham	58.5	3.0	5.4	3.9
Peterborough	78.9	2.5	3.2	5.0
Halton	59.4	2.5	4.5	5.5
Warrington	78.5	4.6	6.2	4.9
Plymouth	107.7	5.9	5.8	4.0
Torbay	49.9	3.4	7.3	3.9
Southend	68.9	3.9	6.1	3.9
Thurrock	60.5	3.9	6.8	3.8
Medway Towns	118.0	6.0	5.3	4.1
Blackburn	70.7	2.7	4.0	5.5
Blackpool	52.8	3.4	6.9	4.6
Nottingham City	116.7	6.1	5.5	5.1
The Wrekin	66.2	3.9	6.2	5.1
Swindon	73.3	5.7	8.5	4.0
England	20,414.0	1,100.0	5.7	4.7

Notes:

1. The cash and percentage change figures take account of local authority changes of function and new arrangements for funding music and student support services.

2. The education SSA per pupil figures have been derived by dividing the 1999–2000 SSA and the adjusted 1998–99 SSA by the total number of pupils aged 4 and over included in the relevant SSA calculations for that financial year.

3. The answer spells out the main reason why variations in the percentage increase in the SSA are negatively correlated with variations in the percentage increase per pupil figures. But an LEA would also receive an above average increase in overall SSA per pupil if:

(a) other data on population used in the calculations are increasing, relative to the national trend, while pupil numbers are static; or

(b) the growth in pupil numbers is concentrated in the post-16/secondary sectors which attract more SSA credit than younger children because they are more expensive to educate.

Standards Fund

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the budget for the Standards Fund for each year between 1998–99 and 2001–2002 and (b) the expenditure committed to date under the fund for each of those years. [70012]

Ms Estelle Morris: For 1998–99 the Standards Fund budget and expenditure committed is £625.5m. For 1999–2000 Local Education Authorities have been offered allocations from a Standards Fund budget totalling £843m. The expenditure committed for 1999–2000 will be known once Authorities have responded to those offers and to allocations yet to be made. These figures include grant contributed by the Department and contributions from Local Education Authorities. The Standards Fund programme is reviewed annually and decisions about the budget for 2000–2001 will be made in due course.

Foreign Students

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many non-UK resident EU students are attending English as a foreign language courses in further education colleges in the United Kingdom. [69634]

Mr. Mudie: The number of non-UK resident EU students attending English as a foreign language courses in further education sector colleges in England in 1996–97 was 6,100.

The numbers of such students studying in other parts of the United Kingdom are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Ofsted

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out the budget for Ofsted for the next three financial years. [69639]

Ms Estelle Morris: Total provision for Ofsted is as follows:

1999–2000: £96 million

2000–2001: £105 million

2001–2002: £107 million

Education Budgets (Administrative Costs)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the administrative costs for each of the last five years, as a percentage of the total budget, for (a) the Higher Education Funding Council, (b) the Further Education Funding Council and (c) training and enterprise councils, expressed as the national average figure, for that proportion of their responsibilities which is comparable with the responsibilities of the FEFC and the HEFC. [67670]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 28 January 1999]: The information that my hon. Friend has requested is listed in the table. The three figures are not comparable because of differences in responsibilities between TECs, the HEFCE and the FEFC. Accordingly, as with HEFCE and FEFC, TEC percentages have been calculated on total administrative costs and budgets. The percentage figure for TECs is much higher than either of the others because TECs are themselves directly involved in local business support and economic development.

Percentage

Year	HEFCE	FEFC	TECS
1993–94	0.37	0.92	12
1994–95	0.35	0.82	11
1995–96	0.33	0.79	12
1996–97	0.37	0.74	12
1997–98	0.29	0.76	13

Grammar Schools (Kent)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the grammar schools in Kent that OFSTED has identified as not performing adequately; and if he will make a statement. [69481]

Ms Estelle Morris: This is a matter for HM Chief Inspector of Schools and I have asked Chris Woodhead to write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Pupils (Examinations)

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each of the last 10 years for (a) England and (b) Wales how many pupils (i) left state education without having been entered for any CSE/GCSE or equivalent examination and (ii) were entered for such examinations in (1) one, (2) two, (3) three, (4) four and (5) five or more subjects; and how many such entrants failed to qualify in each subject paper they sat. [69092]

Mr. Mudie: The information requested on GCSE achievements for the last ten years for England is shown in the following table. The figures are based on maintained mainstream schools (excluding special schools) and relate to all 15 year old pupils (at the start of the academic year) whether they left school or not.

The information for schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

GCSE achievements of 15 year old pupils in maintained mainstream schools—England 1989–98

	Number attempting subjects	Number that failed some subjects	Percentage failing to achieve all subjects
1988–89
Did not attempt	37,170
Attempted 1 subject	12,240	3,290	26.9
Attempted 2 subjects	13,460	6,570	48.8
Attempted 3 subjects	14,890	8,160	54.8
Attempted 4 subjects	21,040	11,280	53.6
Attempted 5 or more subjects	471,680	27,370	5.8
1989–90
Did not attempt	35,930
Attempted 1 subject	11,150	2,100	18.8
Attempted 2 subjects	12,700	4,070	32.0
Attempted 3 subjects	15,060	6,500	43.5
Attempted 4 subjects	17,530	7,480	42.7
Attempted 5 or more subjects	444,550	19,850	4.5
1990–91
Did not attempt	31,970
Attempted 1 subject	8,460	1,770	20.9
Attempted 2 subjects	9,670	3,360	34.7
Attempted 3 subjects	9,750	4,380	44.9
Attempted 4 subjects	14,600	6,510	44.6
Attempted 5 or more subjects	434,450	16,630	3.8
1991–92
Did not attempt	25,343
Attempted 1 subject	7,598	3,018	39.7
Attempted 2 subjects	7,393	3,709	50.2
Attempted 3 subjects	8,921	5,047	56.6
Attempted 4 subjects	11,825	6,565	55.5
Attempted 5 or more subjects	426,639	18,818	4.4
1992–93
Did not attempt	19,973
Attempted 1 subject	6,453	2,486	38.5
Attempted 2 subjects	6,228	3,242	52.1
Attempted 3 subjects	7,289	4,342	59.6
Attempted 4 subjects	9,514	5,749	60.4
Attempted 5 or more subjects	417,702	18,121	4.3

GCSE achievements of 15 year old pupils in maintained mainstream schools—England—1989–98

	Number attempting subjects	Number that failed some subjects	Percentage failing to achieve all subjects
1993–94
Did not attempt	20,866
Attempted 1 subject	5,311	2,606	49.1
Attempted 2 subjects	4,519	3,018	66.8
Attempted 3 subjects	5,394	3,598	66.7
Attempted 4 subjects	7,757	4,961	64.0
Attempted 5 or more subjects	433,079	18,507	4.3
1994–95
Did not attempt	23,178
Attempted 1 subject	5,174	2,555	49.4
Attempted 2 subjects	4,082	2,866	70.2
Attempted 3 subjects	5,116	3,576	69.9
Attempted 4 subjects	7,284	4,802	65.9
Attempted 5 or more subjects	473,945	20,430	4.3
1995–96
Did not attempt	23,050	–	–
Attempted 1 subject	5,678	2,593	45.7
Attempted 2 subjects	4,093	2,769	67.7
Attempted 3 subjects	5,079	3,314	65.2
Attempted 4 subjects	7,383	4,555	61.7
Attempted 5 or more subjects	488,776	18,550	3.8
1996–97
Did not attempt	22,084
Attempted 1 subject	5,346	2,609	48.8
Attempted 2 subjects	3,838	2,550	66.4
Attempted 3 subjects	4,652	3,126	67.2
Attempted 4 subjects	6,774	4,300	63.5
Attempted 5 or more subjects	485,409	18,150	3.7
1997–98
Did not attempt	18,204	–	–
Attempted 1 subjects	5,790	2,641	45.6
Attempted 2 subjects	4,715	2,960	62.8
Attempted 3 subjects	5,393	3,021	56.0
Attempted 4 subjects	7,629	3,826	50.2
Attempted 5 or more subjects	476,157	11,682	2.5

Higher Education

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each of the last 10 years for (a) England and (b) Wales how many students entered higher education; and of these, how many (i) dropped out before completing courses and (ii) failed their final examinations. [69090]

Mr. Mudie: The numbers of students who entered higher education between 1988–89 and 1997–98 are shown in the table.

HE entrants[1] to English and Welsh institutions 1988–89 to 1997–98

Year	English institutions[2]	Welsh institutions[2]
1988–89	300,300	16,200
1989–90	322,000	18,000
1990–91	348,700	18,900
1991–92	401,800	21,700
1992–93	443,900	25,300
1993–94	470,800	26,100
1994–95	503,900	30,500
1995–96	528,200	33,800
1996–97	530,300	33,700
1997–98	541,500	33,000

[1] Includes enrolments by home and overseas students onto the first year of undergraduate courses, full-time and part time

[2] Excludes the Open University but includes all other higher education and further education institutions

The available information on drop-out consists of UK level full-time and sandwich first degree drop-out rates published in the Departmental Report. The table shows these drop-out rates for the same 10 year period.

UK[1] full-time and sandwich first degree drop-out rates

Percentage

Year	Drop-out[2]
1988–89	14
1989–90	16
1990–91	15
1991–92	17
1992–93	17
1993–94	[3]17–18
1994–95	[3]17–18
1995–96	[3]18–19
1996–97	n/a
1997–98	n/a

[1] The institutional coverage of the drop-out rates is restricted to the former UFC universities in the UK and former polytechnics in England.

[2] Drop-out covers all those leaving degree courses because of exam failure, ill health, personal and other reasons. It includes those switching to a lower level course but it excludes students transferring between degree courses or subjects.

[3] Ranges are given because the introduction of a new data source made it difficult to measure drop-out accurately.

Drop-out covers those who leave full-time and sandwich first degree courses for various reasons including exam failure but students who failed their final examinations are not separately identified. The drop-out rates relate to a narrower range of courses and have a different institutional coverage than the entrant figures shown.

The Department is currently working with the higher education funding bodies in the UK to develop a method of calculating drop-out rates which can be applied to all UK higher education institutions and which takes into account the non-traditional routes that some students follow. These routes may include changing courses or institutions, repeating years or leaving higher education for a year or more before continuing their studies.

Efficiency Gains

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to express efficiency gains as a percentage of his departmental budget; and if he will make a statement. [69631]

Mr. Mudie: I refer the hon. Member to the publication "Public Services for the Future: Modernisation, Reform, Accountability" (Cm 4181) which is available in the Library. This includes the Department for Education and Employment's Public Service Agreement, which describes the Department's objectives and resources and contains our specific efficiency and performance targets, including an annual efficiency gain of 2½ per cent. in running costs.

Nurses (Work Permits)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many work permits issued for nurses in each of the last five years were (a) newly admitted one year work permits, (b) one year work permit renewals and (c) new work permits of over one year duration. [68577]

Ms Hodge: For the information requested at points (a) and (c) I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 349.

The information requested at (b) is not available as work permit records do not link applications for renewal of a permit with the period for which the permit was originally approved.

Remploy (North Staffordshire)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with Remploy about their factories in North Staffordshire. [69059]

Ms Hodge: There have been no discussions between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and Remploy about their factories in North Staffordshire.

However, I am aware that Remploy management recently informed the workforce and unions in the three Remploy factories in Stoke, Trentham and Newcastle under Lyme of their intention to look into the feasibility of merging the three factories onto one site. I am told that two of the factories are in poor structural condition, and the third does not provide the necessary scope to expand operations. An important aim from any merger would be to provide a more modern facilities with a better working environment for the disabled employees.

I understand that there would be full consultation with the workers and trade union representatives on each site if the project looked feasible. If there was a merger, all existing disabled employees would be guaranteed a job at the new site and help with transport as necessary.

Early Education (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the participation rate of three-year-olds in early education in Hampshire. [69461]

Ms Hodge: The information is not available in the form requested. There were 559 three-year-olds in maintained nursery and primary schools in the Hampshire Local Education Authority area in January 1998. In addition, the Government have set a target to double the national participation rate of three-year-olds in free early education places to 66 per cent. by 2002, using the maintained voluntary and private sectors.

Childcare Unit

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the budget of the Childcare Unit. [69232]

Ms Hodge: The Childcare unit is taking forward work on the National Childcare Strategy. Some £470 million has been allocated to support the National Childcare Strategy in England from April 1998–2003, of which £300 million comes from the Department for Education and Employment budget.

The Childcare Unit's running cost budget for 1998–99 is £824,000.

Teacher Assessment

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many external assessors his Department estimates will be needed to implement his proposals for teacher assessment set out in the Green Paper; and how many teacher assessments an external assessor will be expected to conduct on average in an academic year; [69637]

(2) who will be the employer of the external assessors referred to in his Department's proposals for teacher assessment set out in the recent Green Paper; and who will determine their rates of pay. [69638]

Ms Estelle Morris: The independent external assessors will not be involved in the annual appraisal cycle, but will work with the headteacher, confirming his or her judgments made on the assessments at the new threshold and ensuring that a robust pay policy exists in the school which properly rewards good teaching. We are consulting on the role of the assessors, and will make further announcements in due course.

Education SSA (Southampton)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the increase in the standard spending assessment for education for Southampton Education Authority in the last three years for which figures are available. [69470]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table sets out the information requested in cash and percentage terms after allowing for local authority changes of function.

Underlying increase over previous year

Year	£ million	Percentage
1999–2000	5.0	6.1
1998–99	5.7	7.5
1997–98	1.8	2.5

Grants (Devon)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what grants have been made, or are planned to be made, by his Department to Torbay Council in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [69366]

Ms Estelle Morris: The table sets out the allocations for 1998–99 to Torbay through the education standard spending assessment system, the Standards Fund, Annual Capital Guidelines, the New Deal for Schools and the money to reduce infant class sizes. Figures for 1999–2000 are also set out where announcements have already been made. Torbay's share of the money for the New Deal for Schools and the reduction of infant class sizes in 1999–2000 will be announced in due course.

£ million

Programme	1998–99	1999–2000
Education SSA	46.7	49.9
Standards Fund	1.0	2.4
Annual Capital Guidelines	1.3	1.6
New Deal for Schools	0.6	—
Reduction of Infant Class Sizes (Capital)	0.2	—

To be announced

Notes:

1. The Standards Fund allocations include the LEA contribution to the programme.

2. Annual Capital Guidelines represent loan sanction, the repayment of which generates SSA cover through the Capital Financing SSA.

Infant Class Size Plan

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each local education authority in the most recent round of bids under the infant class size plan (a) the amount bid for and (b) the amount allocated. [68810]

Ms Estelle Morris: No allocations have yet been made. Class size plans are the subject of continuing discussions between the Department for Education and Employment and local education authorities, and thus the funding proposals associated with them may change.

Nursery Places

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to extend Government funding of nursery places to three-year-olds. [68324]

Ms Hodge: The Government have set a target to double the participation of three-year-olds in free early education places to 66 per cent. by 2002. In 1999–2000, the Government are making available £40 million to the 50 Local Education Authority areas with greater social need to bring forward the first 47,000 places, which will be found in all sectors and described in each Authority's Early Years Development and Childcare Plan. Over the following two years an additional £350 million will be available to expand places across all Local Education Authority areas.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines he has issued to local authorities in informing parents of three and four-year-olds of their rights of access to local provision of nursery places. [68325]

Ms Hodge: The Government have issued guidance to Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships about what information they should provide to parents about early education and child care. In every LEA area there is an early education place for all four-year-olds whose parents want one; expansion of places for three-year-olds will begin in 50 LEA areas from September 1999.

Grants and Awards

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the grants and awards that require bids from applicants which his Department is responsible for administering and awarding (a) nationally and (b) that people and groups within Wakefield Metropolitan District are eligible to bid for; if he will publish the deadlines for these applications; and if he will produce this list on a regular basis. [69089]

Ms Estelle Morris: A list of specific grants for education managed by the Department for Education and Employment for 1999–2000 which require bids from local education authorities, and the deadlines for those bids, are listed in the table. All local education authorities, including Wakefield Metropolitan District Council, are able to bid for these grants. This list will be produced as and when requested, normally grant programmes represented by these bids are revised annually.

Grant	Deadline
The Standards Fund Programme (as set out in DfEE Circular 13/98)	16 November 1998
Protecting and expanding local education authority music services	15 January 1999
New Deal for Schools Phase 3	22 January 1999
Reduction in Class Size (Revenue)	30 October 1998
Reduction in Class Size (Capital)	20 November 1998
Independent/State School Partnerships	5 February 1999
Voluntary Aided Schools Capital Grants	19 October 1998
Education Action Zones	16 April 1999

Education SSA (Leicestershire)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from Leicestershire schools about Leicestershire's education standard spending assessment for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [69471]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have received a number of representations from Leicestershire schools welcoming the underlying 6.3 per cent. increase in the education SSA for Leicestershire, but criticising the decision not to change the distribution formula. The Government will carry out further research over the next few years designed to improve the fairness of the current formula.

HEALTH

Nursing Care (Funding)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide guidance to health and local authorities regarding the funding of nursing care as a result of the R-v-North and East Devon Health Authority, ex parte Pamela Coughlan judgment. [66383]

Mr. Hutton: We understand North and East Devon Health Authority have submitted an application for leave to appeal against the judgment ex parte Coughlan. We will consider the need for guidance to health and local authorities once the result of the application is known.

Expenditure (London)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the NHS Executive for London plans to allocate the capital budget for 1999–2000; and on what basis. [64934]

Mr. Denham: Initial capital allocations for 1999–2000 will be notified to National Health Service trusts and health authorities in February. Further allocations will be made throughout the year following approval of business cases. Allocations will be made in accordance with the priorities set out in Health Service Circular 1998/214, copies of which are available in the Library.

ME

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of people in Britain diagnosed as suffering with chronic fatigue syndrome; and how many are receiving, or have received, specialist treatment for their condition. [67010]

Ms Jowell: The information is not available in the form requested. A number of definitions, disease descriptions or diagnostic criteria have been proposed to describe chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis. However, there is no general agreement as to which should be used. This makes the results from studies on the prevalence of CFS/ME difficult to interpret and there is no agreement on the incidence of the illness.

There is no information available on outpatient appointments. However, figures for CFS/ME for ordinary admissions and daycases in NHS trusts in England, for financial years 1995–96 to 1997–98 are shown in the table.

The National Health Service provides a considerable number of services to which sufferers from CFS/ME have access, because of the wide range of symptoms people with CFS/ME can experience they are seen within a wide range of hospital specialties. Under the present system it is for health authorities and general practitioners to plan and arrange the services available to people in their care, following an assessment of their needs.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Year	FCEs
1995–96	705
1996–97[1]	600
1997–98[1]	650

[1] Figures for 1996–97, 1997–98 are provisional, no adjustments have yet been made for shortfalls in data (i.e. the data are ungrossed)

Notes:

1. Ordinary admissions and daycases combined—finished consultant episodes (FCEs) by primary diagnochronic/post viral fatigue syndrome in NHS trusts in England.

2. ICD1 10 code used is G93.3.

3. An FCE represents a complete period of inpatient treatment under the care of an individual hospital consultant and in about 95 per cent. of cases represent a complete spell in hospital.

Source:

Department of Health, Hospital Episode Statistics

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the impact on voluntary sector organisations which employ nurses of the proposed public sector pay award for nurses. [69010]

Mr. Denham: The Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions allied to medicine makes recommendations on the remuneration of groups within their remit employed in the National Health Service.

Voluntary organisations are responsible for assessing, determining and reviewing their own running costs and it would be inappropriate for the Department to become involved in that process.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which establishments have paid a regular lead to nursing staff in each year since 1970; what was the annual value of the lead; what was its purpose; and if he will make a statement. [69054]

Mr. Denham: National terms and conditions for nursing staff include a range of leads and allowances paid under certain circumstances. Details of all such allowances were set out in Annex 1 of our 1998 evidence to the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine, copies of which are available in the Library. This included information on the current national rate of payment and a brief description of conditions for payment. Further information on conditions for payment is in the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council Handbook. The value of leads and allowances each year from 1970 can be found in the Advance Letters issued to the National Health Service, copies of which have been placed in the Library. All NHS bodies which employ nurses on national contracts pay these leads and allowances, if qualifying conditions are met. Since 1994 employers have had the flexibility to increase leads and allowances locally which some NHS trusts have done. In their sixteenth report for 1999, laid before Parliament by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, the Review Body recommended that London allowance and on-call and stand-by allowance should be increased and urged NHS trusts to increase relevant leads and allowances. The national rate of London allowance will increase by 15.4 per cent. from 1 April 1999 and on-call and stand-by allowance will also be increased by 19 per cent. from 1 April 1999.

HIV-Aids

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on HIV/AIDS prevention, care and treatment in 1997–98; and how much was spent on HIV/AIDS research in 1997–98 on projects wholly and partly funded by his Department. [69167]

Ms Jowell: In 1997–98 health authorities in England were allocated £199.3 million for the treatment and care of HIV/AIDS patients. This amount was not ring-fenced to allow health authorities flexibility to spend more or less in the light of local circumstances. The Department does not routinely collect information on the amount actually spent on HIV/AIDS services.

In 1997–98, local authorities were provided with £13.7 million as a contribution towards the cost of community care services for people with severe HIV and AIDS. The AIDS support grant scheme operates on a 70:30 basis with local authorities providing at least 30 per cent. of the total spent. The Department also made available £1.5 million to the voluntary sector through the Section 64 general scheme to provide care, support services and information to people affected by HIV and AIDS.

In 1997–98 health authorities in England were allocated £52.3 million which was ring-fenced for HIV Prevention activities and in the same year £4.6 million was spent on national health promotion campaigns and initiatives.

Departmental expenditure on HIV/AIDS research in 1997–98 was £117,000 for wholly funded work and around £1.275 million on partly funded research. The National Health Service research and development levy is also used to support research and development in health care settings. Project details are not held centrally and some further HIV/AIDS work may be supported by this route.

Waiting Times

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of patients waiting for more than 12 months for treatment in each year during the past 20 years. [69163]

Mr. Denham: The number of patients who had been waiting more than 12 months for hospital admission at the end of march and the end of September in each of the last 20 years (1978–98) is set out in the table.

			Admissions
	Ordinary	Day case	Total
September 1978	158,308	—	n/a
March 1979	185,195	—	n/a
September 1979	197,532	—	n/a
March 1980	196,983	—	n/a
September 1980	187,993	—	n/a
March 1981	180,774	—	n/a
September 1981	180,905	—	n/a
March 1982	175,554	—	n/a
September 1982	192,902	—	n/a
March 1983	198,546	—	n/a
September 1983	205,920	—	n/a
March 1984	194,614	—	n/a
September 1984	189,546	—	n/a
March 1985	171,197	—	n/a
September 1985	160,227	—	n/a
March 1986	161,326	—	n/a
September 1986	164,682	—	n/a
March 1987	162,273	—	n/a
September 1987	184,580	24,860	209,440
March 1988	182,161	25,764	207,925
September 1988	192,591	27,338	219,929
March 1989	193,952	29,359	223,311
September 1989	187,528	30,588	218,116
March 1990	175,777	32,083	207,860
September 1990	172,025	30,715	202,740
March 1991	145,109	24,652	169,761
September 1991	134,661	23,860	158,521
March 1992	69,000	11,585	80,585
September 1992	66,821	13,760	80,581
March 1993	45,195	11,682	56,877
September 1993	54,317	16,705	71,022
March 1994	46,404	18,104	64,508
September 1994	44,858	17,483	62,341
March 1995	21,750	10,444	32,194
September 1995	19,815	8,123	27,938
March 1996	3,686	890	4,576
September 1996	10,733	4,260	14,993
March 1997	20,732	10,476	31,208
September 1997	35,583	22,083	57,666
March 1998	40,170	27,853	68,023
September 1998	37,760	25,720	63,480

Note:

Before September 1987 figures relate to ordinary (overnight) admissions; the numbers of people waiting for day cases were not collected before this date.

Prostheses Users

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of extra contractual referrals (a) in total and (b) for prostheses users in each year since 1994–95. [69222]

Mr. Hutton: Information on extra contractual referrals (ECRs) outturn expenditure has been collected by health authorities since 1994–95. Actual outturn expenditure figures (unaudited) for ECRs are available from 1994–95 through to 1997–98 and forecast outturn figures for 1998–99. The figures are:

Year	£ million
1994–95	386
1995–96	438
1996–97	494
1997–98	530
1998–99	[1]495

[1] forecast outturn

Information on ECRs for prostheses users is not ~~collected centrally~~.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how his Department calculates the cost-benefit ratio of out of area referrals for prostheses users whose own limb centre cannot meet their individual needs for comfort, capability and cosmesis; [69223]

(2) how many extra contractual referrals were made (a) in total and (b) for prostheses users in each year since 1994–95. [69221]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally or validated, but it may be available at health authority level for individual health authorities.

Disablement Services

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if disablement service users are involved in assessing the effectiveness of mechanisms to address the variations in access to, and quality of, disablement services; [69169]

(2) what representations he has received about the effectiveness of mechanisms to address the variations in access to, and quality of, disablement services; [69153]

(3) what mechanisms are in place to help ensure consistent access to, and the quality of, disablement services; [69170]

(4) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of mechanisms to address the variations in access to, and quality of, disablement services; [69151]

(5) how his Department assesses the effectiveness of mechanisms to address the variations in access to, and quality of, disablement services. [69152]

Mr. Hutton: In carrying forward the programme of modernisation set out in our White Paper "The new NHS" we are aiming to reduce inequalities in the provision of health services, including services for disabled people, raise the quality of the services provided and involve users and carers more directly in the decisions made about those services. We have received representations from emPOWER, the charity consortium of users of prosthetics, orthotics, wheelchairs and electronic assistive technologies, about improving services for disabled people. We have discussed the issues with them and will be taking their views into account in the development of policies and services for disabled people.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will access the benefits of establishing a disablement services national service framework to help ensure consistent access to, and quality of, disablement services; [69168]

(2) what representations he has received calling for a disablement service national service framework. [69154]

Mr. Hutton: A rolling programme of National Service Frameworks (NSFs) was launched in April 1998. The initial programme of work is taking forward established frameworks on cancer and paediatric intensive care and developing frameworks for coronary heart disease and mental health. There will usually be only one new NSF a year and the next two NSFs will be for older people (spring 2000) and diabetes (spring 2001).

The charity consortium emPOWER has asked us to consider the establishment of a disablement services NSF and we discussed this idea with them at a recent meeting. Any proposal for the establishment of a disablement services NSF will be considered alongside other proposed potential subjects for an NSF.

NHS Trusts (Appointments)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS Trust and Health Authority appointments which were not made by the due date and which remained outstanding on 1 February. [69495]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

List of Health Authority and National Health Service Trust appointments which expired in 1998 and for which no appointment had been made by 1 February 1999

Region/Body	Number of Chairs	Number of Non-Executives
Eastern
Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust	0	1
Horizon NHS Trust	0	1
West Herts Community Health NHS Trust	0	1
North West
Chester and Halton Community NHS Trust	1	2
Christie Hospital NHS Trust	1	2
Clatterbridge Centre for Oncology NHS Trust	1	2
Liverpool Women's Hospital NHS Trust	0	1
Manchester Health Authority	0	1
Mancunian Community Health NHS Trust	1	1
Oldham Hospital and Community Services NHS Trust	0	2
Tameside and Glossop Community and Priority Services NHS Trust	0	1
Warrington Community NHS Trust	0	2
Wirral Hospital NHS Trust	1	1
Northern and Yorkshire
Calderdale and Kirklees Health Authority	0	1
North Cumbria Health Authority	0	2
London
BHB Community Healthcare NHS Trust	0	1
City and Hackney Community Services NHS Trust	0	2
Croydon Community Health NHS Trust	0	1
Enfield Community Care NHS Trust	0	1
Hillingdon Hospital NHS Trust	0	2
King's Healthcare NHS Trust	0	1
Mayday Healthcare NHS Trust	0	1
Moorfields Eye Hospital NHS Trust	0	1
North Middlesex Hospital NHS Trust	0	1
Pathfinder Mental Health Services NHS Trust	0	1
Trent
Central Nottinghamshire Healthcare NHS Trust	0	1
Grantham and District Hospital NHS Trust	0	1
Leicestershire Health Authority	0	1
Queen's Medical Centre, Nottingham, University Hospital NHS Trust	0	2
South East
East Surrey Health Authority	0	2
South West
Bath Mental Healthcare NHS Trust	0	1
Gloucestershire Ambulance Service NHS Trust	0	1
Gloucestershire Royal NHS Trust	1	0
Royal United Hospital Bath NHS Trust	0	1
West Midlands
Birmingham Heartlands and Solihull (Teaching) Hospitals NHS Trust	0	1
Walsall Community Health NHS Trust	0	1
Total	6	45

NHS Hospital Beds

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the level of provision of beds in NHS hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [69742]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced last September the establishment of a national inquiry into hospital beds. Once the inquiry is completed, its findings will be published.

Doctors and Dentists (Pay)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to implement in full the recommendations in paragraph 2.34 and 2.35 of the report of the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration; and if he will make a statement. [69923]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South-East (Dr. Iddon) on 1 February 1999, Official Report, columns 524–25. It gave the Government's response to these two pay review body recommendations to allocate an extra £50 million a year from 2000–01 to reward individual consultants for increases in workload and intensity of work.

Our negotiations with the profession on a new consultant contract are covering these issues. We will consider the recommendation very carefully in the context of the negotiations, and are willing to make an investment in rewards and incentives if the negotiations deliver a better service for patients. We will, therefore, decide on the level of any extra funding for future years, and how such funding might be allocated, when the negotiations are complete.

Nurses (Working Hours)

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has obtained concerning the extent to which inflexibility in working hours deters nurses from taking up employment in the National Health Service. [69636]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Executive ran a one-off survey in January 1998 to follow-up the 1995 Office of Population Censuses and Surveys report "Qualified Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors", which identified ways in which qualified nurses who had left nursing could be attracted back into the profession. The results from this survey, which include the impact of working practices, will be released shortly.

Viagra

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he is giving to doctors about the prescribing of viagra; and if he will make a statement. [69501]

Mr. Denham: The advice about Viagra contained in Health Service Circular 1998/158 stands. We will make a further announcement following careful consideration of all comments received during the six week consultation period on drug treatments for impotence which we announced on 21 January 1999.

Eastbourne District General Hospital

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the number of nursing staff currently employed at Eastbourne District General Hospital; and if he will make a statement. [69381]

Mr. Denham: The East Sussex Brighton and Hove Health Authority has a duty to ensure that the quality of care for those living in Eastbourne is satisfactory and are presently in discussion with Eastbourne District General Hospital on whether additional resources can be released in 1999–2000 to help raise the established numbers of nursing staff to average levels.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his estimate of the number of (a) retail businesses and (b) catering businesses which will be liable for the proposed Food Standards Agency levy which employ (a) fewer than 10 people and (b) fewer than 100 people; [68969]

(2) what is his estimate of the number of premises proposed to be liable for the payment of the Food Standards Agency levy which have (a) fewer than 10 employees and (b) fewer than 100 employees. [68968]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

There are about 175,000 retail food premises and about 340,000 catering premises in the United Kingdom, but data on the number of people they employ are not collected centrally. However, data on premises in which food represents the majority activity of business indicate that around 80 per cent. of premises employ fewer than 10 people, and around 99 per cent. employ fewer than 100 people. The Government will be seeking updated information on the number of premises liable for the levy from local authorities as part of the consultation process.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the proposed levy to fund the Food Standards Agency will be imposed on individual schools. [68975]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer on 2 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

Retail and catering premises required to register under the Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991, as amended (and equivalent Northern Ireland regulations), including those within schools, would be required to pay the proposed levy.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason the Government concluded that it would be more complex and costly to operate a levy to fund the Food Standards Agency which was confined to large food retailers. [68977]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

The entire food industry stands to benefit from greater consumer confidence, and therefore the Government propose to collect the levy from registered food premises at the final point of sale to the consumer. We believe that a flat rate fee, at the modest level proposed, represents a simple and transparent way of collecting the levy.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the proportion of the total yield of the proposed levy for the Food Standards Agency which will come from small businesses. [68979]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

This depends on the definition of 'small business' used. Under most standard definitions, a significant majority of food premises would fall within this category.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what efforts have been made to quantify in financial terms the benefits which the proposed Food Standards Agency will bring to its stakeholders. [68980]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

The principal benefits of the Food Standards Agency will be the protection of public health and greater consumer confidence. These benefits cannot be quantified in purely financial terms.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons the proposed levy to fund the Food Standards Agency will apply to premises dealing only in fresh fruit and vegetables. [68981]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government believe that the entire food industry stands to benefit from the Food Standards Agency and therefore proposes that all retail and catering premises required to register under the Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991, as amended (and equivalent Northern Ireland regulations), should make a contribution to the additional costs of the Agency. The only exception proposed is for premises whose only food sales are wrapped confectionery, soft drinks, crisps and similar wrapped products.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the proposals for a levy on businesses to pay for the proposed Food Standards Agency has been considered by the Better Regulation Task Force; and if he will make a statement. [68982]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

The proposals have been considered by the Better Regulation Unit, which supports the Better Regulation Task Force. The views of the Better Regulation Task Force are being sought as part of the current consultation, and any comments they make will be taken into account as part of this exercise.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when considering criteria for determining exemptions to the Food Standards Agency levy which premises the Government regarded as exceptionally vulnerable to the effects of the charge. [68978]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 3 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

No distinct categories of premises were identified as exceptionally vulnerable.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason the consultation draft of the Food Standards Bill provides that the levy on food premises may be different in different areas. [68976]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

The provisions in the draft Bill are enabling provisions, which have been drafted so as to allow flexibility to modify the details of the levy and the level at which it is set in secondary legislation, as necessary, subject to the approval of Parliament.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the level of the proposed Food Standards Agency levy upon business will be the same in all parts of the United Kingdom. [68970]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's intention is that the levy should apply in all parts of the UK in a consistent way.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of businesses for which a flat rate levy of £90 for the Food Standards Agency would create significant problems. [68971]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 2 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

A £90 annual levy equates to a levy of £1.73 a week. I do not anticipate that businesses will find that sum difficult to afford, but we hope to get more information on this through the consultation process currently underway.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 9 February 1999

NORTHERN IRELAND

Arrest Warrants

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the procedure for the review of an outstanding warrant of arrest issued by the RUC; how frequently an outstanding warrant is reviewed; and in what circumstances and by what criteria an outstanding warrant could be set aside. [69881]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 8 February 1999]: There are various types of arrest warrant:

1. Bench/arrest warrant
2. Committal warrant
3. Distress warrant
4. Extradition warrant
5. Enforcement of Justice warrant.

Different procedural arrangements for review apply to each. However, it should be noted that, generally, warrants issued under the appropriate legislation are returned if not executed, within the time specified therein. If a time limit is not specified the unexecuted warrant is returned to a court or issuing Justice at the end of twelve months for cancellation or re-issue.

Generally, warrants are not executed after a lapse of two years without instruction from the issuing authority in cases:

(a) to enforce appearance at Magistrates' Courts; and

(b) to arrest for trivial offences.

Except in cases of a serious crime or where delay in execution may result in the escape of the accused, a warrant which has been on issue for more than four years is not executed without instructions from the issuing authority.

The setting aside of an outstanding warrant is a matter for the issuing authority.

Police and Court Databases

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the headings under which police and court databases in Northern Ireland record (a) arrests, charges and convictions, (b) the personal details of individuals who are arrested, charged or convicted and (c) the employment details of individuals arrested, charged or convicted; and if the databases contain information on the numbers of individuals (i) whose employment may change from the time of their arrest to the time of their conviction and (ii) arrested, charged or convicted who may have served part-time or full-time in Her Majesty's armed forces or the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [69879]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Details of the fields of information held by the Royal Ulster Constabulary in its Court database are as follows:

Data held by central statistics unit of the Royal Ulster Constabulary

	Court statistics
CS Reference Number	Crime statistics Ref No—Unique number created by the system to identify each court record
Year	The year in which the case went to court
Court Code	The location of the court in which the case was heard, i.e. Bangor or Belfast etc.
Bill No.	Court Service reference number.
Court Date	The date on which the case was held.
Sex	Male, Female or other (businesses etc.)
DOB	The offenders date of birth.
Age	Age of offender—generated by the computer.
Occupation	The occupation of the accused, this only applies to members of the security forces, i.e. police, army or prison officer.
Ethnicity	The ethnic origins of the accused.
FCN	Force computer number—criminal record number issued to the defendant.
Offence Date	Date on which the offence occurred.
Sub Division	The radio call sign of the Sub-Divisional headquarters where the offence took place.
Previous Convictions	State if the defendant has any previous convictions.
TIC	The number of offences taken into consideration.
Scheduled	States whether the offence is scheduled or non scheduled. Scheduled offences are heard in crown courts and are of a more serious nature, i.e. terrorist or other serious crimes.
Additional	As the system can only hold seven offences, any additional charges are noted here.
Plea	Guilty or Not Guilty.
Prefix	States if the offences was attempted, siding and abetting, conspiring or inciting.
Offence Code	Numeric code of each offence.
Suffix	States if the offence was armed robbery or aggravated burglary.
Finding	Decision of the court—guilty, not guilty or sent to trial.
Type of Offence	States if the offence is primary or secondary and also if it is indictable/summary/motoring.
Disposal	Numeric code to identify the sentence.
Unit	Specifies if the penalty is monetary or of time duration.
Amount or duration	States the amount of the fine or the duration of the sentence.

This database does not contain information on the numbers of individuals whose employment may change from the time of their arrest to the time of their conviction.

The following information in respect of the databases of the Courts has been provided by the Northern Ireland Court Service, a unified and distinct civil service of the Crown, responsible to the Lord Chancellor.

Information recorded on court databases

		Belfast Crown Court	Belfast and Newtownabbey magistrates courts
(a)	Arrests	Not recorded	Not recorded
	Charges	Number against each defendant per offence category: Murder Manslaughter Wounding Burglary and Robbery Fraud and Forgery Sexual Offences Criminal Damage Offences against the State Drugs Theft and unauthorised taking	Number against each defendant per offence category: Indictable—Crown Court only Indictable—Tried Summarily Major motoring Minor motoring Other Summary
	Convictions	Number per defendant	Number per defendant
(b)	Personal details of individuals arrested, charged or convicted	Not recorded	Not recorded
(c)	Employment details of individuals arrested, charged or convicted	Not recorded	Not recorded

These databases do not contain information on the numbers of individuals (i) whose employment may change from the time of their arrest to the time of their conviction or on those individuals (ii) arrested, charged or convicted who may have served part-time or full-time in Her Majesty's armed forces or the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in her Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69512]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The headline pay settlement for the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) was 3 per cent. on the paybill and, together with the additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance-related increases, averaging 4 per cent. of which 0.5 per cent. was paid as non-consolidated non-pensionable bonuses. The increases were not staged.

The headline pay settlement for the Northern Ireland Office (NIO) was 2 per cent. on the paybill and together with the additional funds from staff turnover staff in post received performance-related increases averaging 3.5 per cent. The increases were not staged.

DEFENCE

RN Base Clyde

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which organisation maintains and refits nuclear submarines at RN Base Clyde; when the contract commenced; and what previous experience of such work the organisation had. [69062]

Mr. Spellar: Nuclear submarines are not refitted at HM Naval Base Clyde. Repair and maintenance on nuclear submarines at the Clyde Naval Base is conducted by Royal Naval personnel and Civilian contractors. To meet fluctuations in workload and when it has been considered cost effective to do so, contracts for maintenance work have been placed with civilian companies. These are principally Babcock Rosyth Defence Ltd., Devonport Management Ltd. and Rolls Royce and Associates, all of whom have wide experience in this work.

REME

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice he received from TAVRA North West on the proposal to transfer HQ 101 Battalion REME to Queensferry. [69344]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This advice was given in confidence, as part of internal discussion. I am therefore withholding the information under exemption 2 (internal discussion and advice) of the Code of Practice on access to Government information.

Procurement Contracts

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evaluation of past performance is included in the assessment of bids for defence procurement contracts; and what criteria are included when considering bids from contractors who have not previously supplied his Department. [69411]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD takes account of a company's capability and capacity, including past performance, when deciding which companies should be invited to tender. Where there is uncertainty about the ability of firms to meet the requirement, companies that have expressed interest, including potential new suppliers, are normally asked to complete a pre-qualification questionnaire to provide information on, among other matters, their technical capability and delivery history. As part of the implementation of Smart Procurement, we are seeking, jointly with Industry, to reinforce our procedures for taking account of past performance in assessing tenders.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the profit margins included in bids made by tenderers for defence procurement contracts. [69410]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry is unaware of the level of profit included in competitive bids for defence procurement contracts since this is a judgment for the tenderers to make. In non-competitive contracts the level of profits is negotiated in accordance with the Government Profit Formula, on a company-by-company basis.

RN Base Faslane

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if installed personal IPM7 monitors are in use at RN Base Faslane; if personnel are monitored by IPM7 when they leave the yard; and if he will make a statement on the practice at other nuclear establishments. [69465]

Mr. Spellar: One IPM7 walk through monitor is installed in the Clyde Naval Base. When leaving classified areas all personnel are monitored for contamination by trained Health Physics staff using hand held instruments. They also have the option of using the IPM7 at this stage. In the very unlikely event that personnel are contaminated, they are taken to the Health Physics Group for decontamination, which includes compulsory monitoring by the IPM7.

At MOD-owned nuclear establishments, it is the practice to monitor the working environment and exposed personnel for possible contamination. Contamination monitors are used as part of the overall monitoring arrangements.

Landmines

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress his Department has made in finding alternatives to landmines for use in military operations. [69561]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 8 February 1999]: There is no single weapon which can replace the capability previously provided by anti-personnel landmines. Work is continuing to establish how best to provide the required capability in the future, consistent with our obligations under UK and International law. Where necessary, anti-tank mines will continue to be used in military operations.

Royal Ordnance, Bishopton

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the overseas sources which will meet his Department's requirements for propellants following the closure of Royal Ordnance, Bishopton. [69569]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The supply of sub-components, including propellant, for equipment supplied under existing MOD contracts is a matter for Royal Ordnance and other prime contractors until the completion of the contract. Future MOD requirements for propellant will be subject to procurement decisions in due course. We expect that alternative sources of propellant will be available from friendly and reliable sources in Europe, or further afield.

Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when access will be restored to the website of the Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe. [69570]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Work is underway to restore access to the website of the Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe (SHAPE). This work is a matter for the SHAPE authorities.

Biological Detection Systems

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the prototype biological defence vehicles which his Department intends to purchase; [69560]

(2) what progress his Department is making on the development of personal biological weapons detectors. [69558]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 8 February 1999]: A number of vehicle-mounted Prototype Biological Detection Systems were accepted into service on 7 December 1998. They provide a deployable detection capability to supply field commanders with the information necessary to institute protective and medical countermeasures. These prototype systems provide an interim capability until the vehicle-mounted Integrated Biological Detection System enters service. This is currently the subject of a competition for full development and production.

MOD work on a personal biological agent detection system is currently at the research stage.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69519]

Mr. Spellar: The headline pay settlement was 2½ per cent. on the paybill and, together with the additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance-related increases averaging 4½ per cent. The increase was not staged.

Competitive Sport (Armed Forces)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of competitive sport in the armed forces. [70122]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Participation in competitive sport within the Armed Forces has long been recognised as playing a very considerable part in Service life. In addition to being a key means of promoting physical fitness, team spirit and of great benefit to maintaining high levels of morale, sport within the Armed Forces contributes to military effectiveness by developing personal qualities such as motivation, courage, resilience, stamina and co-ordination.

Market research indicates that opportunities for competitive sport within the Services is high on the list of factors which attract many potential recruits to join the Armed Forces. It is my Department's firm policy to promote fitness and a healthy lifestyle among personnel and to encourage fully the participation by members of the Armed Forces in structured sporting activities, together with adequate time to do so.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Wednesday afternoons are still set aside for competitive sport for armed forces personnel. [70128]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Armed Forces have traditionally set aside Wednesday afternoons, on an informal basis, to give personnel the opportunity to partake in competitive and non-competitive sporting activity. This is still encouraged although the level of participation is very much dependent on operational requirements and training commitments within the various chains of Command, with whom the final decision rests. In some cases representative sports are played on other days of the week in order to reduce the effect of absence from primary duties.

Northern Division

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of relocating and retasking existing brigades in establishing the proposed northern division. [70123]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No existing brigades are to be relocated as a result of the establishment of the northern division. Rather, there will be a transfer of responsibility for some existing tasks between Divisional and Brigade Headquarters; small numbers of staff will transfer accordingly, but the costs will not be significant.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of providing new and refurbished buildings in Edinburgh when 2 Divisional HQ moves from York to Edinburgh. [70127]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We estimate that the initial cost of refurbishing office accommodation at the Headquarters Scottish District in Craigiehall will be some £250,000; there is a project to rebuild the headquarters in due course and it was assumed in the review of the Army's divisional/district structure that this project would proceed at a cost of £7 million during the second half of the next decade.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what criteria he based his decision to move the Army's 2 Divisional HQ from York to Edinburgh. [70124]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The criteria were that the headquarters of the Northern Division should be able to carry out its role effectively and at reduced cost when compared with existing arrangements.

Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the past five years the Ministry of Defence Observer has attended a board meeting at the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research. [70023]

Mr. Spellar: Four.

Armed Forces Pensions

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the cost of backdating the changes which became operative from 1 April 1975 to the Armed Forces pension arrangements to cover all those who retired before 1 April 1975. [70230]

Mr. Spellar: The only change to the Armed Forces Pension Scheme which became operative on 1 April 1975 was the introduction of preserved pensions for those with insufficient service to qualify for an immediate pension. In line with public service pension scheme practice the improvement was not applied retrospectively to those who had already left the Armed Forces. An estimate of the cost of backdating the change is not available and could be obtained, if at all, only at disproportionate cost.

Furthermore, costs to MOD could not be considered in isolation from other Government Departments. It is the general practice for all public service pension schemes, when introducing improvements, to apply them only to those serving at the date of the change. If the pensions of all retired Scheme members were retrospectively increased each time a new improvement was introduced, changes to schemes would become very expensive and probably unaffordable.

Guards Battalions

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of trained officers and soldiers currently serving in the Guards battalions by nationality. [69856]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The following figures are limited strictly to those personnel serving with their battalions. It does not cover officers or soldiers from the Foot Guards posted to units or establishments away from their battalions, staff, headquarters, diplomatic staff, or training organisations. Where no nationality is know it is categorised as No Nationality.

	1 Grenadier Guards	Nijmegan Coy Grenadier Guards	1 Coldstream Guards	7 Coy Coldstream Guards	1 Scots Guards	F Coy Scots Guards	1 Irish Guards	1 Welsh Guards	Total
Strength of all trained officers
English	31	4	29	3	28	3	33	25	156
Scottish	—	—	1	—	11	—	1	—	13
Welsh	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	8	10
British	1	1	2	—	1	1	2	—	8
N Irish	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2
Manx	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—	2
No Nationality	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1
Indian	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1
Channel Island	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1
British/Irish Rep		—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1
Brit/US	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1
Total	33	5	35	3	40	4	43	33	196
Strength of all trained soldiers
English	475	63	565	96	178	39	420	130	1,966
Welsh	3	1	4	—	6	—	8	407	429
Scottish	10	3	21	1	290	49	19	6	399
N Irish	2	—	3	—	3	—	148	1	157
British	11	—	13	1	14	3	9	9	60
Citizen Irish Rep	1	—	—	1	—	—	39	—	421
Irish Rep/Foreign	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	—	3
Irish Rep/Resident	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	—	3
British/Irish Rep	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	—	2
Manx	—	—	—	—	—	1	1	—	2
Australian	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2
British Hong Kong	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1
New Zealander	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1
Rhodesian	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1
Trinidadian	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1
Eireian	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1
S African	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	—	1
Channel Islander	1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1
British/British Commonwealth	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—	1
Brit Nat/Foreign Restr	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—	1
Total	507	67	609	99	491	93	654	553	3,073

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is (a) the establishment and (b) the current strength of each of the regiments in the Foot Guards; and if he will list each element of company strength serving with them, indicating where each battalion has soldiers attached to it from another battalion, which battalion they are from and in what numbers. [69855]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Royal Tournament (Gun Competition)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the naval gun competition in the Royal Tournament. [70121]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We announced in September last year that the Royal Tournament in its current form will end in 1999. A special event will be held in the year 2000 to celebrate the millennium. As we said at the time of the announcement, the nature of events in 2001 and beyond are subject to further work on timing, location and format. The future of the naval gun competition is being considered as part of that process. At present nothing has been ruled in or out.

South Coast Biological Defence Trials

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the independent review conducted by Professor Brian Spratt of the South Coast biological defence trials. [70568]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Professor Brian Spratt has now completed his review of the microbiological defence trials conducted along the South Coast in the 1960s and 1970s. The MOD welcomes his main findings:

> That the trials would have caused no harm to the vast majority of people.
>
> That, although there may have been an unquantifiable risk of infection in a small number of people who had a serious underlying disease, such as cystic fibrosis, any such infections would have been infections of the chest or blood and would have occurred within days of release of the bacteria.
>
> That it is extremely unlikely that there is any link between the bacteria released in the trials and health problems reported by people who have suffered chronic ill health, miscarriages, or who have had children with disabilities.

I have arranged for a copy of Professor Spratt's full report to be placed in the Library of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Recycling

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee (1) what proportion of the consumption of each of the following materials on the Parliamentary Estate is currently recycled (a) paper, (b) kitchen oils, (c) lightbulbs and fluorescent tubes, (d) glass drinks bottles, (e) drinks cans, (f) refrigerant gases and (g) plastic products; [68734]

(2) if she will set targets for each of the next five years for the recycled proportion of (a) paper, (b) kitchen oils, (c) lightbulbs and fluorescent tubes, (d) glass drinks bottles, (e) drinks cans, (f) refrigerant gases and (g) plastic products consumed on the Parliamentary Estate. [68735]

Mrs. Roe: These are matters for the Serjeant at Arms. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers were (a) declarees at the point of entry and (b) non-declarees who were subsequently identified as seeking assistance in each quarter since 1 January 1997. [68584]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This information is not available in the form requested.

Asylum seekers may generally receive benefit in the form of income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit, if they are port asylum applicants, or support from local authority social services departments, if they are in-country asylum applicants or asylum appellants.

The information requested on those who seek support from local authority social services departments is not available. But on those who seek income support, statistics available on the number of urgent case payments that are claimed, awarded and refused are shown in the table. Only a small proportion of urgent case recipients are not asylum seekers.

The number of total urgent case payment claims broadly reflects the total number of asylum seekers who have sought income support; the numbers awarded indicate how many were on-arrival asylum applicants, the numbers refused are indicative of those who were in-country applicants (although this may also include a number of on-arrival applicants who do not satisfy the other rules of entitlement). But the latter do not include those in-country applicants who applied for support direct to local authority social services departments.

Number of urgent case payment claims, awards and refusals January 1997 to December 1998

	Number of urgent case payment claims	Number of urgent case payment awards	Number of urgent case payments refused
1997
January	2,051	1,347	685
February	1,879	1,103	594
March	1,682	1,257	623
April	2,475	1,348	731
May	2,431	1,458	645
June	2,121	1,300	675
July	2,621	1,305	1,166
August	2,376	1,192	841
September	2,642	1,399	1,048
October	2,480	1,458	1,060
November	2,448	1,062	776
December	2,379	1,112	711
1998
January	3,077	1,248	95[illegible]
February	2,544	1,288	953
March	2,900	1,504	1,142
April	2,723	1,221	1,146
May	2,401	1,110	1,050
June	3,064	1,449	1,134
July	3,348	1,437	1,806
August	3,372	1,719	1,796
September	3,418	2,215	1,829
October	3,698	2,168	2,314
November	3,270	1,922	1,883
December	2,899	1,959	1,447

Note:

Please note data are subject to amendment

Source:

Benefits Agency Management Information Statistics

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum were received from nationals of (a) Poland, (b) Romania, (c) Bosnia and Herzegovina, (d) Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, (e) Croatia, (f) Slovenia, (g) FYROM, (h) Albania and (i) Hungary in each month since 1 May 1997. [69990]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Asylum applications ' received in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, May 1997 to December 1998, by month, for selected nationalities

Principal applicants

Applications	Poland	Romania	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Federal Republic of Yugoslavia	Croatia	Slovenia	FYROM (Macedonia)	Albania	Hungary
May 1997	55	40	10	95	5	15	—	35	—
June 1997	30	55	15	110	5	—	—	50	—
July 1997	40	65	10	150	5	—	—	40	—
August 1997	40	65	10	200	10	*	*	40	—
September 1997	35	25	5	220	10	5	*	55	—
October 1997	35	85	10	240	5	*	5	30	—
November 1997	40	70	10	220	20	—	5	40	—
December 1997	90	75	10	295	50	*	10	50	—
January 1998	90	40	5	270	5	—	*	30	—
February 1998	95	55	5	270	5	*	*	30	—

Asylum applications[1] received in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, May 1997 to December 1998, by month, for selected nationalities

Principal applicants

Applications	Poland	Romania	Bosnia and Herzegovina	Federal Republic of Yugoslavia	Croatia	Slovenia	FYROM (Macedonia)	Albania	Hungary
March 1998	95	45	15	280	10	—	5	55	—
April 1998	140	70	10	385	10	*	—	30	—
May 1998	85	60	15	315	5	5	*	40	—
June 1998	100	50	15	680	15	*	*	55	—
July 1998	80	115	10	845	15	5	25	35	—
August 1998	140	95	15	905	15	—	*	55	—
September 1998	160	70	20	870	25	—	5	65	—
October 1998	200	115	15	1,160	30	—	*	70	—
November 1998	140	125	20	735	80	—	5	55	—
December 1998	265	170	10	675	115	—	5	40	—
Total	1,945	1,500	245	8,920	450	35	65	900	—

[1] Figures rounded to nearest 5, with * = 1 or 2

Source:

Immigration Research Statistics Service, RDS

Police Conduct

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many metropolitan police officers have been suspended from duty due to allegations as to their conduct and for (a) up to three months, (b) up to six months, (c) up to nine months, (d) up to 12 months, (e) up to 15 months and (f) over 15 months. [69069]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the total number of officers suspended from duty as at 1 February 1999 was 106, and that the other information requested is as follows:

Period of suspension	Number
Up to 3 months	29
Up to 6 months	19
Up to 9 months	14
Up to 12 months	13
Up to 15 months	14
Over 15 months	17

The suspension of a particular officer from duty does not imply that action will be taken against that officer. That depends on the outcome of investigations on the case.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the conclusions and recommendations of the review evaluated by his Department of strip searching procedures; and if he will place a copy of the final report in the Library. [69608]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service has completed its report on searching in prisons, but it has still to finalise recommendations and submit its proposals on how these will be implemented. A copy of the final report and its recommendations will be placed in the Library when this process has been completed.

Bus Lane Offences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions of private motorists charged with driving in a bus lane during the hours when such lanes are not authorised for use by private vehicles in the Greater London area there have been in each of the last three years. [69400]

Mr. Boateng: Prosecutions of private motorists are not separately identifiable in the statistics collected on motoring offences, nor can this offence be distinguished from other offences connected with neglect of traffic directions in the statistics collected centrally.

However, most bus lane offences are dealt with by fixed penalty notice, and information obtained from both the Metropolitan and City of London Police shows that 15,218 fixed penalties notices were issued by them for contravening a bus lane in 1996, 15,061 in 1997 and 14,846 in 1998.

Driving (Drugs)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce the incidence of driving whilst under the influence of illegal drugs. [69543]

Mr. Boateng: We are working closely with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and Association of Chief Police Officers. The Home Office Police Scientific Development Branch is researching into the possible development of roadside drugs screening technology and we support the Association of Chief Police Officers in its work to ensure that officers have the appropriate training to enforce the current legislation as effectively as possible. We will consider possible changes in legislation in the light of the results of the DETR research into the incidence of drugs in road fatalities.

Channel Islands (Separation of Powers)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proposals he has to review the constitutional separation of powers between Judiciary and Legislation in Jersey following the European Court of Human Rights decision in McConnell v. the United Kingdom; [69555]

(2) what proposals he has to review the constitutional position of the Bailiff of the Royal Court of Guernsey and the separation of powers in that island following the European Court of Human Rights decision in McConnell v. United Kingdom. [69556]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The European Court of Human Rights has not yet made a decision in this case. On 4 December 1998, the European Commission of Human Rights decided to refer the case to the Court and it will be examined in due course.

Home Detention Curfews

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he plans to monitor the effectiveness of the Home Detention Curfew Scheme. [69480]

Mr. George Howarth: An evaluation of the Home Detention Curfew (HDC) scheme is being carried out by the Home Office Research, Development and Statistics Directorate. The study will cover a variety of issues including the impact on prisoners and on the prison and probation services, assessments of suitability for HDC, the extent to which home detention curfews are successfully completed, recalls to prison, the rate of re-offending and the cost effectiveness of the scheme.

We expect results on the first year performance of the scheme to be available in mid-2000.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, columns 76–78, concerning the home detention welfare provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, when he proposes to write to the hon. Member for Hertsmere. [70280]

Mr. George Howarth: I wrote to the hon. Member on 8 February. A copy of this letter is in the Library. I will write again to the hon. Member when the remaining information becomes available.

Mr. Clappison. To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of the prisoners released under the home detention curfew provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 have been released subject to supervision by a probation officer; [70115]

(2) how many of the prisoners released since 28 January under the home detention curfew provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 are serving sentences as a result of convictions for offences (a) of violence, (b) of burglary and (c) to which Part 1 of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 applies; [70117]

(3) how many of the prisoners released since 28 January under the home detention curfew provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 have previous convictions for offences (a) of violence, (b) of burglary and (c) to which Part I of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 applies. [70116]

Mr. George Howarth: The data are not yet available and I will write to the hon. Member when they have been collated.

Departmental Efficiency Gains

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to express efficiency gains as a percentage of his departmental budget; and if he will make a statement. [69630]

Mr. Straw: My Department's Public Service Agreement (published in the White Paper "Public Services for the Future: Modernisation, Reform, Accountability") includes a target for the Home Office to achieve efficiency improvements of 3 per cent. a year; as well as targets for improvements against total spending on the police and the fire services of 2 per cent. a year, and on the probation service of 4 per cent. a year.

The White Paper describes the range of projects and targets which are in place to achieve these efficiency gains. For example, a Modernisation Programme has been launched which will develop better management, accommodation, personnel and Information Technology systems. Specific targets have been set, or are being developed, for correspondence, telephone response, sickness absence, procurement, processing of immigration casework and a number of other areas.

I have no plans to express these efficiency gains as a percentage of my budget, as this would be misleading in relation to the work that is underway. Rather, the efficiency improvements will be made up of a range of increases in output relative to input, budgetary savings and transfers of existing resources to meet new priorities.

Police Authority Contingency Reserves

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requirements his Department has laid down in respect of the contingency reserves to be kept by police authorities in England; and what guidance his Department provides in relation to the use to which such moneys should be put. [69473]

Mr. Boateng: Section 43 of the Local Government Finance Act 1992 requires Police Authorities to have regard to the level of reserves needed for meeting estimated future expenditure when calculating their budget requirement. The Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA) has recently re-issued to police authorities advice in determining the appropriate level of reserves and balances. CIPFA recommends that the level of balances for a Police Authority should be around 2 per cent. to 5 per cent., depending on local circumstances.

The Home Office provides no separate guidance to police authorities on the use to which reserves and balances should be put. The allocation of all resources, including reserves, is entirely a matter for the Chief Constable and the Police Authority.

Casinos

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many licensed casinos there are in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) the North West of England. [69377]

Mr. George Howarth: There are 100 licensed casinos in England and 4 in Wales.

16 casinos are in the north west of England, (Lancashire, Greater Manchester and Merseyside; Cumbria and Cheshire have none). One more is due to open in May or June this year.

Amusement Arcades

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many licensed amusement arcades there are in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) the North-West of England. [69374]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government do not collect figures on the numbers of amusement arcades.

However, BACTA (the trade association for the amusement machine industry) estimate that there are between 1,800 and 2,000 amusement arcades in Great Britain. They have no geographical breakdown.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted prisoners are housed in cells designed for two people but housing in excess of that number. [69462]

Mr. George Howarth: No centrally held data are available on the number of convicted prisoners housed in cells designed for two people but housing in excess of that number. This information could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

The Prison Service does record the numbers of prisoners housed in cells designed for single occupancy but housing two prisoners. Separate figures for convicted or unconvicted prisoners are not available. The average number of prisoners held two to a cell designed for one for the 1998–99 year to December is 12,080. No prisoners have been held three to a cell designed for one since March 1994.

Metropolitan Police (Legal Costs)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases in each of the last five years the Metropolitan Police has funded in whole or in part the legal costs of serving or former police officers facing criminal charges; and in how many cases funding is still continuing. [69843]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 8 February 1999]: At my request, the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis is arranging for information about the number of cases there are being funded in the current financial year to be collated, and I will write to the hon. Member when that is available. Relevant information for the previous four years is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Commissioner tells me that the Metropolitan Police are currently reviewing their system for recording such information.

Stephen Lawrence

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to make a statement on the inquiry into the death of Stephen Lawrence. [69342]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The Inquiry into the death of Stephen Lawrence is expected to report shortly. I will make a statement when I publish the report.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to all the Government's public consultations. [69777]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office issues public consultation documents from time to time. It usually publishes a synopsis of views when it gives a Government response to such consultation and those views made available in the Library. It would be of disproportionate cost to give a collation and assessment of all such documents.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69514]

Mr. Straw: In the non-agency Home Office, the headline pay settlement was 2.7 per cent. on the paybill. Together with the additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance related increases averaging 4 per cent. O.5 per cent. of these increases was staged and will be paid with effect from 1 April 1999.

Back Beat Club Raid

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent on (a) the surveillance operation and (b) the raid on the Back Beat Club in December 1998; how many police officers were involved; and what was the value and types of controlled drugs seized. [69311]

Mr. Boateng: This is an operational matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. He tells me that a number of people have now been charged following this police operation. As the matter is now before the court, I cannot comment further at this stage on matters which may be material to the case.

General Pinochet

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons he was not informed of the contacts on 14 October between the Metropolitan Police and his Department relating to the former's contacts with the 5th Central Magistrate's Court in Madrid; and what was the nature of the information passed on. [70254]

Mr. Straw: I was informed on Friday 16 October of the contacts between the Metropolitan Police and the 5th Central Magistrates Court. These contacts over the period 14–16 October related initially to a request to interview Senator Pinochet. Such requests for interview are, as a matter of routine, executed directly by the police or other law enforcement agencies. Where such requests are made directly to the Home Office they are referred to the police to execute. This was set out in my reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison), on 27 October 1998, Official Report, column 123.

Disclosure of information that passed between the Metropolitan Police and the 5th Central Magistrate's Court is a matter for the Metropolitan Police.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost to date to public funds of the arrest and detention of General Pinochet. [70282]

Mr. Straw: Costs in extradition proceedings are generally treated on a reciprocal basis. In this case, the United Kingdom is responsible for the costs of processing extradition requests made from Spain. In return, Spain is responsible for the costs of processing extradition requests made from the United Kingdom. The costs incurred in police operations are a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, and, in this case, for the Chief Constable of Surrey.

Figures on legal costs are not yet available. The costs of the hearings in the House of Lords have not yet been settled and no costs order will be made until the conclusion of the case.

As of today, the fees of Counsel instructed by the Treasury Solicitor's Department on my behalf are £69,125, of which £18,000 subject to agreement or taxation, is recoverable under a costs order made against Senator Pinochet in the Divisional Court in my favour. As of today, the fees of Counsel instructed by the Treasury Solicitor's Department as amicus curiae are £54,500.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who signed the initial warrant for the arrest of General Pinochet; where and at what time; with representatives from which bodies in attendance; with what prior warning to the person who signed the warrant; and at whose request. [70236]

Mr. Straw: The issue of a provisional arrest warrant is a matter for the police and the magistrate. The first provisional arrest warrant was signed by Mr. Nicholas Evans, Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, at his home at around 9–9.30 pm on 16 October 1998. I understand that officers from the Metropolitan Police Extradition Squad and clerks from Bow Street Magistrates' Court were in attendance. The Metropolitan Police applied for the warrant following receipt, via Interpol, of a request for the provisional arrest of Senator Pinochet issued by the fifth Magistrate's Court in Madrid.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which body served the arrest warrant for General Pinochet; at what time; with how many people in attendance; and with what armed backup. [70237]

Mr. Straw: The service of the arrest warrant is an operational matter for the Metropolitan Police. The first provisional arrest warrant for Senator Pinochet was served by two officers of the Metropolitan Police Extradition Squad at 11.45pm on 16 October 1998. In attendance were the head of the Metropolitan Police Extradition Unit and another officer; a civilian interpreter; a doctor; and two nurses. There was no armed backup.

Road Deaths (Penalties)

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a mandatory life ban on driving for those guilty of causing road deaths. [68262]

Mr. Boateng: Disqualification from driving is obligatory where a driver is convicted of causing death by dangerous driving or causing death by careless driving while under the influence of drink or drugs. The period is, however, currently a matter for the courts discretion. The Government keep all penalties under review but have no plans currently to impose a mandatory life ban.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the occasions on which he and Ministers in his Department have undertaken overseas visits in the course of their ministerial duties since 1997; and if he will give details of the purpose and duration of each visit. [67746]

Mr. Straw [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1999, c. 361–64]: On closer examination, the list provided contained three inaccuracies. The correct list of Home Office Ministerial visits overseas between 2 May 1997 and 25 January 1999 is now given in the table:

Minister	Dates	Places visited	Purpose of visit
Secretary of State and Joyce Quin	26.5.97 to 27.5.97	Brussels	Justice and Home Affairs Council Meeting
Joyce Quin	9.6.97 to 11.6.97	Prague	Council of Europe Justice Ministers Meeting
Lord Williams of Mostyn	15.9.97 to 19.9.97	Paris, Germany, Oslo	Fact-finding to look at procedures for investigating suspicious deaths, human-rights and community sentences
Alun Michael	16.9.97 to 18.9.97	New York	Visit New York Cares Scheme and New York Police
Joyce Quin	17.9.97	Paris	Debate at Ecole Nationale d'Administration
Joyce Quin	26.9.97 to 28.9.97	Sienna	Pontignano Conference
Secretary of State and Joyce Quin	9.10.97 to 10.10.97	Luxembourg	Informal Justice and Home Affairs Council
Joyce Quin	20.10.97 to 21.10.97	Strasbourg	Meeting with MEPs prior to UK Presidency
Secretary of State	20.10.97 to 21.10.97	Paris	Meetings with French Interior Minister and Minister of Justice
Joyce Quin	4.11.97 to 6.11.97	Stockholm	Studying of tagging and prison organisation
Alun Michael	16.11.97 to 17.11.97	The Hague	To present European Crime Prevention Awards and visit juvenile delinquents computer system and day training centre
Joyce Quin	3.12.97 to 5.12.97	Brussels	Justice and Home Affairs Council
Secretary of State	4.12.97 to 5.12.97	Brussels	Justice and Home Affairs Council
Alun Michael	5.12.97 to 8.12.97	Bosnia	To visit British Police serving in Bosnia
Secretary of State	9.12.97 to 10.12.97	Washington	G8 Meeting on Organised Crime

Minister	Dates	Places visited	Purpose of visit
Mike O'Brien	18.12.97 to 19.12.97	Luxembourg	Conference on European Year Against Racism
Mike O'Brien	4.1.98 to 14.1.98	Pakistan, India, Bangladesh	To observe entry clearance posts
Secretary of State	13.1.98 to 14.1.98	Madrid	Meetings with the Spanish Minister of the Interior and Minister of Justice
Secretary of State	26.1.98	Brussels	Meetings with the European Parliament Civil Liberties Committee, the EPLP and the ELDR
Joyce Quin	28.1.98	Brussels	To address the European Presidency Racism and Xenophobia Debate
Secretary of State	4.2.98 to 6.2.98	Washington, USA	Accompanying Prime Minister: Meetings with National Institute of Justice, Baltimore Police Department, Department of Justice and Attorney General Reno
Mike O'Brien	10.2.98 to 11.2.98	Brussels	To attend the 'Lets Kick Racism Out of Football' seminar
Lord Williams of Mostyn	15.2.98 to 16.2.98	Paris	To address the OECD Workshop on Global Network Society
Secretary of State and Joyce Quin	18.3.98 to 19.3.98	Brussels	To attend Justice and Home Affairs Council Meeting
Lord Williams of Mostyn	21.3.98 to 25.3.98	Thailand	To launch a UK funded course on Child Sex Exploitation
Joyce Quin	26.3.98	Amsterdam	To address the Dutch Probation Conference
Joyce Quin	8.4.98 to 9.4.98	Prague	To discuss EU enlargement
Joyce Quin	16.4.98 to 17.4.98	Warsaw	To discuss EU enlargement
Joyce Quin	21.4.98 to 22.4.98	Vienna	To address the UN Crime Commission
Joyce Quin	28.4.98 to 1.5.98	Budapest	To discuss EU enlargement
Secretary of State	14.5.98	Vienna	Meetings with the Austrian Interior Minister and Minister of Justice
Lord Williams of Mostyn	26.5.98 to 27.5.98	Milan	To visit the European Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods (ECVAM)
Secretary of State and Joyce Quin	27.5.98 to 29.5.98	Brussels	To attend the Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting
George Howarth	7.6.98 to 10.6.98	New York	To attend the UN Special Session on Drugs
Joyce Quin	29.6.98 to 30.6.98	Brussels	To address the European Presidency Civil Liberties and Legal Affairs Committee
George Howarth	30.6.98	Brussels	To address a meeting of the EU Civil Liberties and Internal Affairs Committees
Secretary of State and Kate Hoey	23.9.98 to 24.9.98	Brussels	To attend Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting
Secretary of State	15.10.98 to 16.10.98	Avignon	To attend and address a seminar on Family Law and Organised Crime
Kate Hoey	28.10.98 to 30.10.98	Vienna	Informal Justice and Home Affairs Council
Mike O'Brien	3.11.98 to 6.11.98	Ethiopia and Nigeria	To attend entry clearance conference and observe entry clearance posts
Kate Hoey	4.11.98 to 5.11.98	Strasbourg	Council of Europe Ministers meeting on tackling organised crime
Secretary of State and Kate Hoey	2.12.98 to 4.12.98	Brussels	To attend Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting
Kate Hoey	6.12.98 to 8.12.98	Budapest	Visit to firm up co-operation on organised crime following successful bid for twinning project
Mike O'Brien	11.1.98 to 15.1.98	Slovakia, Czech Republic and Poland	Meetings with Government Ministers regarding asylum seekers
Secretary of State	27.1.99	Strasbourg	To visit the European Court of Human Rights

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Planning

14. Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans for the reform of the planning system. [68277]

Mr. Caborn: The statement "Modernising Planning", published in January 1998, set out a comprehensive agenda for action to improve the operation of the planning system at European, national, regional and local levels. Following consultation, changes are now being implemented. I propose to publish a report on progress shortly.

Urban Design

15. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action the Government are taking to improve the quality of urban design. [68278]

Mr. Caborn: The Government take every opportunity to encourage higher standards of urban design and will be considering what further measures might be appropriate when the Urban Task Force reports in the early Summer. In the meantime, the Government are encouraging good design by publishing good practice guidance, including: "Places, Streets and Movement", a companion guide to "Design Bulletin 32", published last autumn, which aims to improve the design of housing layouts; and a more general "Good Practice Guide on Design in the Planning System", which we expect to publish in the Spring. In addition, design competitions were held for the Millennium Villages in Greenwich and Allerton Bywater, which demonstrate the Government's commitment to encouraging better quality development.

Air Freight (Regional Airports)

16. Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to promote air freight trade at regional airports. [68279]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In "A New Deal for Transport", the Government said that they would encourage the growth of regional airports to meet local demand. This applies to both passenger and cargo traffic. My Department has just commissioned a study to improve our knowledge of the UK freight industry and the ways in which Government action could support it.

Capping

18. Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans to cap local authority budgets in 1999–2000. [68281]

Ms Armstrong: As promised in our Manifesto we have abolished crude and universal capping. We will decide whether there is any need to use our capping powers once authorities have set their budgets.

Crossrail

19. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the proposal by a consortium of local authorities, led by the Corporation of London, to achieve a private finance initiative for the Crossrail project. [68282]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Representatives of the Corporation of London told my officials last summer that there is interest in the City in investing in Crossrail. My officials asked the Corporation to invite those willing to invest in the project to approach the Department. We have heard nothing about this since.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

20. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of re-routing traffic from the M6 and M42 to the Birmingham northern relief road. [68283]

Dr. Reid: Assessments of the impacts of the Birmingham Northern Relief Road are set out in the Department's Evidence and Environmental Impact Assessment Statement presented to Public Inquiries held into the proposals during 1994 and 1995.

Council Tax Benefit Subsidy

21. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will postpone the implementation of proposals to limit the payment of council tax benefit subsidy in 1999–2000 to allow for consultation on the impact of its introduction. [68284]

Ms Armstrong: We have consulted fully on our proposals. There is no reason to delay introduction of the scheme.

Leisure and Tourism

22. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department is undertaking on planning for leisure and tourism. [68285]

Mr. Caborn: A research project on Planning for Leisure and Tourism is currently being undertaken for my Department. It is looking at how planning policy guidance for England could best facilitate leisure and tourism developments whilst achieving more sustainable patterns of development and travel. The final report is expected in July.

Fishing Vessel Accidents

25. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the findings of the consultations he undertook concerning the consultative document "Fishing Vessel Accidents and the Recovery of Those Lost at Sea". [68288]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have today published an analysis of the responses made to the consultation paper. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The Government's response to the consultation exercise will be published in due course.

SSAs (West Sussex)

27. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the revision of standard spending assessments for West Sussex county council. [68290]

Mr. Raynsford: The Standard Spending Assessment for West Sussex County Council for 1999–2000 is £464.8 million, an increase of 3.7 per cent. from the previous year.

Planning Fees

28. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the level of planning fees. [68291]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's aim has been to raise planning fees gradually over a number of years until they enabled 100 per cent. recovery of local authorities' total estimated costs of determining planning applications. The two fee increases introduced in 1997 have brought us to this point and we have no immediate plans to raise fee levels. However, in the context of Best Value, my officials are currently working with the Planning Officers' Society on more systematic ways of measuring planning costs. This work may form the basis of a revision of planning fees in due course.

Passenger Rail Services

29. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to enhance the reliability and quality of passenger rail services. [68292]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A National Rail Summit will be held on 25 February to build upon the short-term measures agreed with franchisees and Railtrack last November and to kick start a long-term effort to improve standards across the railway network. We will be looking to the rail industry to demonstrate at the Summit how they propose to deliver year-on-year improvements in performance.

North West Regional Development Agency

30. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he next intends to meet the members of the North West Regional Development Agency to discuss arrangements between sub-regional structures and the region. [68293]

Mr. Caborn: I plan to meet the North West Regional Development Agency Board within the next few weeks.

Urban Renaissance

31. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the urban renaissance report produced by the urban task force. [68294]

Mr. Caborn: An urban renaissance is vital in order to improve city environments and to tackle the problems of social exclusion. I welcome the Urban Task Force's Halfway Report 'Urban Renaissance'. The report shows that the Task Force's consultation exercise has gathered valuable contributions from a wide range of sources. This gives assurance that the Task Force's final recommendations will have a sound base. The Task Force will produce their final report and recommendations to the Deputy Prime Minister in the early summer.

Public Transport (Derbyshire)

32. Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to improve access to public transport in rural parts of Derbyshire. [68295]

Dr. Reid: We have already allocated just over £1.5 million for improved bus services in rural Derbyshire as part of the additional funding for rural transport of £50 million announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor in his last budget. Over half of Derbyshire's allocation will be used to fund the Southern Derbyshire Rural Access Initiative, a scheme aimed at improving transport links to help combat social exclusion in rural areas. There will be further allocations in future financial years. In addition, £600,000 has been allocated to Derbyshire for rural and non-package minor works in the local transport capital settlement for 1999–2000.

Rail Services (Northampton)

33. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the west coast main line upgrade on rail services to Northampton. [68296]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. I understand that Railtrack is shortly to provide the Rail Regulator and the Franchising Director with a report on its Strategic Review of services between London and Northampton. The Review will identify options for meeting future demand and improving services.

As part of his assessment of the type and level of services the network should provide, the Franchising Director, acting as part of the shadow SRA, will consider the options identified by Railtrack against the planning criteria already approved by Ministers. A report to Ministers is expected during the second half of the year.

London Borough Councils (Elections)

34. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for annual elections to borough councils in London. [68297]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's White Paper, "Modern Local Government—In Touch with the People" (Cm 4104) sets out our policy for more frequent elections for councils, including for London boroughs which would have elections by thirds in each of the years between elections to the Greater London Authority.

Buses

35. Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the role of buses in the integrated transport policy. [68298]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our Transport White Paper last year made it clear that we see buses as having a central role in an integrated transport policy, with a renewed emphasis on quality services meeting passengers' needs. We shall be issuing a further paper shortly setting out our proposals in more detail.

Waterways (Freight Transport)

36. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he intends to introduce targets for the increased use of waterways for freight transport. [68299]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are committed to encouraging greater use of inland waterways, and will be re-examining the rules of the freight grant scheme with a view to increasing the number of applications for inland waterways projects. There has been a significant increase in the 1998–99 budget. However, as the scheme is demand-led it is not possible to set meaningful targets.

Planning Enforcement

37. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action the Government have taken to encourage the dissemination of good practice on planning enforcement. [68300]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government have encouraged good practice on planning enforcement by publishing "Enforcing Planning Control: Good Practice Guide for Local Planning Authorities", in July 1997. The Guide covers good practice on investigation, negotiation and formal action, illustrated by actual cases. A copy of the Guide is available in the Library.

Pension Funds (Bus Employees)

38. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the return of the bus employees superannuation trust pension funds to its members. [68301]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 167.

Company Cars

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures the Government plan to take to reduce excessive mileage by company cars. [68289]

Dr. Reid: I refer to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake) today, Official Report, column 117.

Disruptive Passengers (Airlines)

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with airlines regarding problems caused by disruptive passengers. [68280]

Dr. Reid: On 25 November 1998 I held a meeting with representatives of the airline industry, and other interested organisations to discuss ways in which the problem of disruptive behaviour by airline passengers could be addressed. As a result a working group was established to consider ways of gaining reliable data about the number of incidents of disruptive behaviour and to consider the need for research into their causes. Its first meeting was on 1 February.

PPG 13

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish planning policy guidance No.13 on transport. [68286]

Mr. Raynsford: The draft consultation PPG 13 will be published in the summer.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding levels of public spending on trunk roads. [68287]

Dr. Reid: We have had, and continue to have, many representations regarding the levels of public spending on trunk roads—some arguing for more expenditure, others for less.

Integrated Transport

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the proposals in his Integrated Transport White Paper which (a) require primary legislation, (b) require secondary legislation and (c) can be implemented under current legislation. [66044]

Dr. Reid: The great majority of the proposals can be implemented under current legislation. I have today written to the right hon. Member with details of the proposals in all three categories, and have placed a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Bull Bars

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to announce his conclusions following the consultation on bull bars. [69407]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 8 February 1999, Official Report, column 8.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many meetings his Department's Ministers have had with National Air Traffic Services since May 1997 in connection with NATS' investment programme and commercial future; and what plans they have to consult United Kingdom airline representatives before any policy decision is taken. [69474]

Dr. Reid: Ministers have had 16 meetings with NATS since May 1997. These meetings covered a broad range of topics including the company's investment programme and commercial future. The Government issued a consultation paper on the future of NATS in October 1998. Airlines were invited to comment; and a number of them have done so.

Contaminated Metals

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 562, if he will make a statement on the five incidents involving interception of illegally imported radioactive contaminated metals; when and where the metals were discovered; what their origin was; and what steps have been taken to prosecute those responsible. [69628]

Mr. Meale: The five cases referred to in my answer of 21 January are:

Date	Location discovered	Origin
July 1997	Willenhall	Possibly Russia
July 1997	Sheffield	Probably Russia
September 1997	Sheffield	Probably South Africa
July 1998	Sheffield	Georgia
August 1998	Hathersage, N. Derbyshire	Probably Russia

The people discovering the above incidents in the United Kingdom are not considered to be at fault; they acted very responsibly in declaring an inadvertent importation of radioactive materials, to the Environment Agency. They could not have known about the radioactive content before receipt. Therefore no enforcement action has been taken in the UK. No information is available about what action was taken overseas.

The assistance of the metals industries in protecting the environment and the public from the potential consequences of such incidents is welcomed. The Environment Agency works with overseas enforcement authorities, by exchanging information via the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) and INTERPOL, to help them pursue regulatory investigations in the countries of origin.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) for the 50 local authorities with the highest and (b) for the 50 local authorities with the lowest dependency on council tax benefit, the proportion of actual 1998–99 council tax that was funded by council tax benefit; and if he will make the information available to local authorities in electronic form. [69364]

Ms Armstrong: The actual proportion of council tax in 1998–99 funded by council tax benefit will not be available until later this year when local authorities have finalised their financial accounts for 1998–99. However, I have placed in the Library of the House, two tables which show for the authorities requested, the proportion of council tax yield to be funded by council tax benefit which is consistent with the budgets and council taxes set by local authorities for 1998–99. The information is also consistent with data to be used in the Council Tax Benefit Subsidy Limitation Scheme for 1999–2000 and will be made available to local authorities on the Department's Internet site.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate for the most recent year for which figures are available (a) the total amount paid in business rates in South Gloucestershire and (b) the amount received by South Gloucestershire Council from central Government out of the total yield of business rates. [69475]

Ms Armstrong: The authority calculated £44.7 million to be its provisional contribution to the rating pool for 1998–99 as a result of collecting business rates from the businesses in its area, and it will receive £55.4 million back from central Government as its share of the distributable amount of non-domestic rates. In 1999–2000, the latter figure will rise to £60.9 million; estimates of the former figure are not yet available.

Biosafety Protocol

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which ministers will be attending, and what position the Government will be advocating, at the forthcoming meeting in Colombia to discuss the Biosafety Protocol. [69821]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The Government are eager to ensure that the final meeting of the Open-ended Ad hoc Working Group on Biosafety developing the Biosafety Protocol reaches a successful conclusion. I refer the hon. Member to replies given to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Stunell) on 19 January 1999, Official Report, column 446, that set out the Government's position on commodities, liability and redress and socio-economic considerations.

We believe the scope of the protocol should be broad, covering all transboundary movements of LMOs resulting from modern biotechnology which may have an adverse effect on the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity, taking also into account risks to human health, with a mechanism for granting exemptions.

The UK believes that the Protocol should refer to the precautionary principle. The EU has proposed its inclusion in the preamble to, and in the objectives of the Protocol.

On AIA procedures, our aim is to establish a predictable, science-based and transparent regime which establishes controls proportionate to the risks.

We will argue strongly for the inclusion of provisions requiring the exporter to indicate, either through labelling or accompanying documentation, whether the movement/shipment contains LMOs. This will also help to show that a movement is in conformity with the Protocol and will provide transparency and openness on LMOs.

It is clear that Parties must have or develop the capacities to be able to make informed decisions about proposed transboundary movements. We therefore believe that the protocol should reflect the need for the strengthening of human and institutional capacities.

We will, alongside our European partners, seek in negotiations to obtain an instrument that provides the necessary environmental safeguards without hampering trade. We would be against any provision that could be taken as a subordination to other international agreements. In our view agreements should be regarded as being of equal standing and treated in a complementary manner.

No UK Ministers will be present at the meeting.

Water Abstraction

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish his final proposals for reforms to the water abstraction licensing systems for England and Wales following his consultation paper of June 1998. [R] [69999]

Mr. Meale: The Government will publish their decisions on the reform of the water abstraction licensing system in England and Wales within the next few weeks.

Foreign Goods Vehicles

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals his Department has to restrict the use, in the United Kingdom, of foreign and EU trucks running 11.5 tonne axles in a 4X2 configuration. [69270]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Other than the application of local weight restrictions the Department has no proposals to restrict the use of vehicles running with 11.5 tonne axles in a 4X2 configuration. From 1 January this year vehicles operating with that configuration and at that weight, of all nationalities, are permitted in the UK.

Packaging Waste

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which businesses operating in Pudsey constituency are subject to the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997; what monitoring has taken place to assess their compliance; and what was the outcome of such monitoring. [70204]

Mr. Meale: I understand that Environment Agency records indicate that there are 10 companies within the constituency of Pudsey which are obligated under the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997. The 10 obligated companies are members of the Valpak compliance scheme. During 1998, the Environment Agency concentrated its monitoring efforts on those businesses which had failed to register and, those which were individually registered. None of the above companies fell into either of these categories.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69517]

Mr. Prescott: The headline pay settlement was 2.55 per cent. on the paybill, and together with some of the additional funds from staff turnover, staff-in-post received performance-related increases averaging 3.7 per cent. On top of this, some staff benefited from a number of restructuring changes which brought total average earnings growth to 5.3 per cent. The increases were not staged but were implemented in 2 phases, both backdated to 1 August 1998.

Planning (Streamlining)

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on proposed changes to speed up the preparation and adoption of local plans and urban development plans. [68267]

Mr. Raynsford: As part of the Government's agenda to modernise the planning system, we published a consultation paper last year outlining proposals to improve the arrangements for the delivery of local plans and UDPs. We intend to take those proposals forward. A full revision of PPG12 on development plans will be issued for public consultation shortly.

Razor Wire

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to bring the use of razor wire in non-military establishments under the jurisdiction of the planning authorities. [70243]

Mr. Raynsford: It is for local planning authorities to decide whether the use of razor wire in particular cases constitutes development requiring planning permission. In some circumstances, development involving the use of razor wire may be carried out in the exercise of permitted development rights granted by the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995. In such cases, it would be for the local planning authority to consider whether to withdraw those permitted development rights by giving a direction under article 4 of the Order. However, we advise in Circular 9/95 that permitted development rights should be withdrawn only in exceptional circumstances.

Housing (North-West)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the capital receipt initiative on the availability of housing in the North West region. [68517]

Mr. Raynsford: The forty three housing authorities in the North West received a total of £101 million under the Capital Receipts Initiative (CRI) in 1997–98 and 1998–99 (£22.4 million and £78.6 million respectively). Returns from authorities show that over the two years around 70 per cent. of the resources are being used to refurbish and improve Council housing stock. The remaining resources are supporting Registered Social Landlord activity, including provision of new units, through Local Authority Social Housing Grant (9 per cent.), renovation grants and home repair activity in the private section (15 per cent.) and other housing-related regeneration activity (6 per cent.). The North West's total CRI allocation for 1999–2000 is £78.6 million.

Public Interest Immunity

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provisions govern the use of public interest immunity certificates by his Department; and to what extent these relate to files held by local authorities. [70226]

Mr. Meale: The principles governing public interest immunity certificates for documents in my Department's possession are those mentioned in the Attorney-General's written answer to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Davies) on 11 July 1997, Official Report, column 616. It is for local authorities to decide, applying established legal principles, whether to make claims in respect of files which they hold. In all cases, a claim to public interest immunity is subject to the Court's supervision.

SSA (Oldham)

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consideration he has given to changing the sites of measurement for snow days in calculating the standard spending assessment for Oldham Metropolitan Borough Council. [68378]

Ms Armstrong: We considered the proposals put forward by Oldham Metropolitan Borough Council for changing the weather stations whose records are used in the calculation of their Standard Spending Assessment.

We concluded that, if the weather stations were to be reconsidered, it should be done on a basis that dealt with all local authorities consistently, with the benefit of meteorological advice.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations have been received by the NMEC concerning food at the Dome. [67270]

Janet Anderson: A small number of representations have been made about food and catering at the Dome, in addition to those received from potential caterers and suppliers.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the Millennium Dome will contain a display or other information on biotechnology. [67483]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 25 January 1999]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is seeking to ensure that as many aspects of science and technology as possible are reflected in the Millennium Experience at the Dome.

BBC Transmission

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the BBC on the standards of transmission quality; and if he will make a statement. [68305]

Janet Anderson: There have been no such discussions. The BBC is responsible for the transmission of its television services and for ensuring that standards of transmission quality in terms of picture and sound are maintained, as far as is reasonably practicable.

I know of particular concern about the transmission of programmes in widescreen format which results in the appearance of black bands above and below the picture on conventional television receivers. I understand the BBC minimises the size of the bands where possible, in order to strike a balance between delivering improved services offered by new technology and continuing to meet the needs of viewers using conventional systems.

Olympic Bid (London)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had in respect of a bid by London to host the 2012 Olympic Games. [68187]

Mr. Banks: I have regular contact with the British Olympic Association, who have to submit UK bids for the Olympic Games. With my support, they are currently conducting comprehensive studies on what is already in place and what needs to be in place to mount a winnable London bid. Following these studies, and taking into account recent developments within the IOC, a decision will be taken on whether to bid for the 2012 Games.

Whilst I am one of the strongest supporters of a top quality bid at the earliest opportunity, I have made it clear to the BOA that Government support will also depend on the introduction by the IOC of a bidding system which is seen to be transparent, honest and can enjoy the confidence of all bidding cities as well as the entire Olympic movement itself. I have stressed this position to Mr. Samaranch, President of the IOC.

Departmental Papers (Access for Visually Impaired)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has for departmental (a) White and (b) Green Papers to be made available on floppy disk format in a form which facilitates access for the visually impaired. [67844]

Mr. Banks: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 296.

My Department has produced White and Green Papers in both Braille and large print and would be happy to make the texts of documents available in floppy disk format on request.

Sport (Women)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the benefits to young women and girls of participating in sport. [65077]

Mr. Banks: Whilst this Department has not carried out specific research, the English Sports Council (ESC), through which central Government funding for sport is channelled, undertakes a range of activities aimed at promoting the benefits of sport and encouraging more women into sport. The ESC will be carrying out its Young People and Sport Survey later this year. The survey will focus on the participation rates of girls in sport.

The Government remain determined to increase the opportunities for women in sport at all levels. We shall continue to work closely with the Sports Councils and others to make progress on this issue and will look closely at women in sport as part of our Strategy for Sport, due to be published in the Summer.

I have had useful discussions with a number of groups to discuss women and sport, including the Womens Sports Foundation and have valued proposals about how the Government can do more for women in sport. I shall be meeting shortly with my right hon. Friend the Minister for Women to discuss this.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how many meetings have taken place with the group established to examine alternative funding to tobacco sponsorship in sport in the last 12 months; and if he will list the dates of these meetings; [68452]

(2) what progress has been made so far with the group established to examine alternative funding to tobacco sponsorship in sport. [68453]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 1 February 1999]: We have made significant progress with the Task Force. Having negotiated the necessary lead time for the sports to adjust, seven have sought our assistance to make the transition—rugby league, clay pigeon shooting, billiards and snooker, pool, darts, ice-hockey and angling. We have been in contact with the sports since the announcement in November 1997 and the expert group first met informally on 19 June 1998. Following this meeting, we sought detailed information on the sports' existing sponsorships, and what commercial benefits they can offer new sponsors, in order to assess their needs and how a Task Force could help. We completed this stage of the exercise before Christmas and the group met again on 10 December 1998. Since then members of the Task Force have held individual meetings with the sports on the following dates:

Clay Pigeon Shooting Association: 18 January 1999

Rugby Football League: 19 January 1999

English Pool Association: 21 January 1999

National Federation of Anglers: 21 January 1999

Ice Hockey Superleague Ltd.: 25 January 1999

World Professional Snooker & Billiards Association: 27 January 1999

British Darts Organisation: 29 January 1999.

I am pleased to confirm these meetings have been very positive. The sports recognise our determination to end the totally inappropriate links with smoking in a way that minimises the impact on them, and are working with us to help them establish new commercial relationships that can be sustained. The group will meet again shortly to consider the nature and timing of help needed to replace existing contracts, many of which have several years to run. We will also consider the frequency of further meetings this year. I will keep the House advised of all significant developments.

Sporting Ambassadors

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list (a) the people who have been made sporting ambassadors since May 1997, (b) the sporting ambassadors still in post, (c) how many official visits they have mad[illegible]d) where they made official visits. [69100]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The Sporting Ambassadors Scheme was successfully piloted in four English Sports Council (ESC) regions in 1997. It involved 37 schools, of which 23 were primary; 11 were secondary; two were special and one was a community college.

The pilot phase involved a total of 18 Ambassadors representing 15 different sports. The Ambassadors were as follows:

	Sport
Allison Curbishley	Athletics
Arnie Sidebottom	Cricket
Chris Leonard	Rowing
Danielle Sanderson	Athletics
Dave Rice	Athletics
Eve Miller	Athletics
Jill Atkins	Hockey
Jo Durie	Tennis
Joe Lydon	Rugby League
Kenneth Churchill	Paralympic Athlete
Kevan Baker	Paralympic Athlete
Liz Talbot	Athletics
Mick Hill	Athletics
Mike McFarlane	Athletics
Paula Blank	Athletics
Samantha Adamson	Athletics
Steve Sylvester	Cricket
Sue Rolph	Swimming

Around 2,110 pupils attended school assemblies, awards ceremonies or question and answer sessions involving a Sporting Ambassador. A total of 1,567 pupils also enjoyed first hand contact with Ambassadors through coaching or participation. Feedback from the pilot stage suggested that most benefit was gained when the Sporting Ambassadors lived locally, could be seen out training and who could identify with the school and pupils.

The Sporting Ambassadors Scheme is now being rolled out on a national basis and the English Sports Council aims to set up 10 visits in each of the 10 Sports Council regions. These visits are currently being set up and will take place during the spring and summer school terms.

A list of the sportsmen and women who have agreed to become Sporting Ambassadors as at 5 February is as follows. In addition, Rob Andrew MBE, Tanni Grey MBE and Denise Lewis MBE are the lead Ambassadors and will work with the ESC to promote the scheme and forge links with sport.

	Sport
Kendra Slawinski OBE	Netball
Katy Roberts	Hockey
Mark Palmer*	Paralympics
Isabel Newstead	Paralympics
Danielle Sanderson	Athletics
Joanne Goode	Athletics
Paula Blank	Athletics
Julian Halls	Hockey
Fleur Horner	Rounders
Sarah Price	Swimming
Karen Pickering MBE	Swimming
Donna Kellogg	Badminton
Eleanor Harvey	Rounders
Paula Radcliffe	Athletics
Jo Mould	Hockey
Emma Shepherd	Rounders
Linzi William	Rounders
Karen Frape	Rounders
Ian Harrison	Paralympics
Joanne Davies	Badminton
Colin North	Cricket
James Brindle	Cricket
Thomas Evans	Paralympics
Paul Ratcliffe	Canoeing
Tim Brabants	Canoeing
Rachel Crosbee	Canoeing
Ian Raspin	Canoeing
Heather Corrie	Canoeing
Tim Reddish	Paralympics
Clare Ryan	Rounders
Julian Golding	Athletics
Billy Waugh	Hockey
Nick Thompson	Hockey
Kelly Holmes MBE	Athletics
Debbie Bampton MBE	Football
Richard Nerurkar	Athletics
Julia Mann	Badminton
Anna Hemmings	Canoeing
Tricia Davey	Canoeing
Joanne Zinzan	Netball
Paula Woods	Swimming
Jenny Hunter	Swimming
Kathy Osher	Swimming
Donna Fraser	Athletics
Lorna Boothe	Athletics
James Clark	Canoeing
Stephen Harris	Canoeing
Rebecca Train	Canoeing
Ivan Lawler	Canoeing

	Sport
Karen Brown	Hockey
Tanya Woodward	Badminton
Deborah Keeley	Ice Skating
Ken Churchill	Paralympics
Emma Haworth	Rounders
Nicola Simms	Rounders
Martyn Smith	Gymnastics
Dominic Flood	Fencing
Mark Flores	Gymnastics
Scott Holmes	Triathlete
Graeme Storm	Golf
Gayle Adamson	Swimming
John Quinn	Badminton
Stephen Miller	Paralympics
Kirsty Wade	Athletics
Hazel Robson	Athletics
Graham Ratcliffe	Mountaineering
Alan Hinkes	Mountaineering
Allyn Condon	Athletics
Robert Crutchley	Hockey
Vicki Horner	Swimming
Colin Haughton	Badminton
Steve Shaw	Paralympics
Angela Jones	Rounders
Helen Don-Duncan	Swimming
Sara Sankey	Badminton
Rob Anderson	Paralympics
Jeanette Chippington	Paralympics
Steven Sylvester	Cricket
Paul Morris	Gymnastics
John Shaw	Hockey
Steve Redgrave CBE	Rowing
Anthony Downs	Paralympics
Sion Brinn	Swimming
Neil Willey	Swimming
Paul Palmer	Swimming
Mark Stevens	Swimming
Jo Jackson	Paralympics
Rebecca Pantaney	Badminton
Allison Curbishley	Athletics
Lucy Newcombe	Hockey
David Hempleman-Adams	Mountaineer
Katherine Merry	Athletics
Sarah Blanks	Hockey
Janet Mcmorran	Paralympics
Rachel Dunn	Rounders
Nigel Capewell	Paralympics
Alan Ash	Paralympics
Lorraine Cole	Badminton
Adam Ruckwood	Swimming
David Byas	Cricket
Daniel Cook	Rugby Union
Arnie Sidebottom	Cricket
Joe Lydon	Rugby League
Meghan Fenoughty	Rounders
Suzzana Thorpe	Rounders
Graham Nash	Hockey
Dean Thomas	Paralympics
Kevan Baker	Paralympics
Ian Wilson	Swimming
Linda Hindmarsh	Swimming
Clare Taylor	Cricket, Football, Hockey

WALES

New Deal

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what projects have been approved under the New Deal for Communities Programme in Wales. [69274]

Mr. Hain: None. New Deal for Communities is an England-only Programme run by DETR. The parallel Welsh Programme is "People in Communities" and its eight demonstration projects are:

Gurnos and Galon Uchaf—Merthyr Tydfil

Duffryn—Newport

Blaenymaes and Portmead—Swansea

Penlwys Estate—Conwy

Southsea and Brynteg—Wrexham

Rhiwgarn Estate, Trebanog—Rhondda, Cynon, Taff

Rhymney—Caerphilly

Deiniolen, Dinorwig and Clwt Y Bont—Gwynedd.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Hospitality

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department has spent on hospitality in each of the last five years. [69216]

Mr. Michael: Welsh Office expenditure on hospitality for the last five years is as follows:

	£000
1993–94	27
1994–95	29
1995–96	22
1996–97	21
1997–98	15

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Genetically Modified Foods

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the food industry relating to genetically modified foods; and if he will make a statement. [69544]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My right hon. Friend and I have had no such discussions. The Government's policy in respect of genetically modified food is based on ensuring the protection of public health and the provision of adequate labelling for consumers.

In future, the safety and labelling of genetically modified foods will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many primary care groups he plans to establish in Wales. [69547]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There will be 22 Local Health Groups in Wales, covering areas which are broadly coterminous with Local Authority boundaries.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Regeneration Programmes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on plans for the regeneration of former industrial sites in Wales; and what consultation takes place with local communities in the development of regeneration programmes. [69590]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Welsh Development Agency's highly successful Land Reclamation Programme is progressively removing the remaining scars on the Welsh landscape. Since 1976, over £300 million has been spent on reclaiming some 18,000 acres of land and the Agency plans to spend £18 million in the current financial year reclaiming a further 370 hectares of land. Sites currently being reclaimed include the former British Coal Workshops in Tredegar.

The Programme is being developed in conjunction with local authorities who consult with the local community during the planning process. The Agency also consults local communities direct on a wide range of community-based regeneration programmes such as the Slate Valley's Initiative in North Wales. More generally, I welcome the fact that working more closely with local communities is one of the priorities identified in the WDA's current Corporate Plan.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Environmental Task Force

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many New Deal places on the Environmental Task Force (a) have been taken up to date and (b) are in the process of being taken up, in Blaenau, Gwent. [69587]

Mr. Hain: Information on the number of people entering the options within the New Deal for 18–24s is not held by local authority area but is available by Employment Service District (Unit of Delivery).

In the Heads of the Valley and Caerphilly Unit of Delivery, which covers Blaenau Gwent, 122 people had taken up places on the Environment Task Force by the end of November 1998 (the latest available figures).

No information is held on the number of people in the process of entering the Environment Task Force.

National Assembly (Elections)

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the appointment of regional returning officers for the first elections to the National Assembly for Wales. [70567]

Mr. Michael: Subject to parliamentary approval to the draft National Assembly for Wales (Representation of the People) Order, which will shortly be laid before both Houses, I propose to appoint the following returning officers to the posts of regional returning officer at the first elections to the National Assembly for Wales on 6 May.

Mid and West Wales: Mr. Bryn Parry-Jones, returning officer for Pembrokeshire.

North Wales: Mr. Philip McGreevy, returning officer for Flintshire.

South Wales Central: Mr. Byron Davies, returning officer for Cardiff.

South Wales East: Mr. Lawrence Nippers, returning officer for Newport.

South Wales West: Ms Vivienne Sugar, returning officer for Swansea.

The formal designation of the regional returning officer appointments will be made once the Order has been approved and come into force.

Exports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total value of exports from Wales to (a) EU countries and (b) the rest of the world in each of the last five years. [69788]

Mr. Hain: Export data on a regional basis are not currently available. HM Customs and Excise Department are reviewing the way export data are collected to enable regional data to be available after devolution.

Although responsibility for export promotion in Wales will be a matter for the National Assembly, the provision of export data will remain the responsibility of HM Customs and Excise Department.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average [illegible]centage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69507]

Mr. Michael: Staff have received performance-related increases averaging 4.1 per cent. from 1 August 1998. The increases were not staged.

HEALTH

Medicines (Children)

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he will take to ensure that the existing licensing framework for medicines minimises the risks posed to children's health. [67187]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 2 February 1999]: The safety of medicines is monitored via the "Yellow Card" adverse reaction notification scheme by medical staff at the Medicines Control Agency (MCA). This has recently been extended on pilot basis in Trent Region to cover adverse reactions specific to use of medicines in children.

There is currently no obligation on companies to apply for a licence for use of their product in children, although it is desirable wherever possible that medicines should be used under the terms of the licence. There can be practical difficulties in conducting such clinical trials—as well as significant ethical concerns. However, because of the concern about extensive "off-label" use of medicines in children, in 1997 European guidelines were developed to encourage the conduct of clinical trials in children. This is a major step forward and requires an applicant for a marketing authorisation (licence) in the United Kingdom or elsewhere in Europe, to justify reasons for not supplying data on use of the product in children. If the industry's response to the guidelines fails to result in the timely availability of licensed medicines for children, the UK will consider what further steps can be taken to minimise the risks posed to children's health from use of such medicines.

Slimming Products (Teenage Magazines)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to dissuade the publishers of teenage magazines from promoting slimming products to young teenagers by way of articles or competitions. [68850]

Janet Anderson: I have been asked to reply.

Magazines are wholly independent of Government and subject only to the general law of the land and to the voluntary Code of Practice of the newspaper and periodical industry. My hon. Friend may wish to bring his concerns to the attention of the Periodical Publishers' Association, Imperial House, 15–19 Kingsway, London WC2B 6UN.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will make a statement on the future of the Blood Transfusion Service in Liverpool. [69315]

Mr. Hutton: We are considering a report by Professor Bellingham on the Liverpool Blood Centre. We shall be making a statement shortly.

Body Piercing

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers exist to license and regulate body piercing activities; what plans there are to empower local authorities to license and regulate body piercing activities; and if he will make a statement. [69476]

Ms Jowell: Local authorities in London have powers either to licence or to register and inspect cosmetic body piercing businesses. Local authorities outside London do not have similar powers. Following the Department of Health/Welsh Office consultation exercise in October 1996, we have concluded that legislation to give local authorities outside London powers to regulate cosmetic body piercing businesses should be introduced, if Parliamentary time allows.

Epilepsy

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of individuals diagnosed with epilepsy in the Portsmouth area. [69680]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Compulsory Treatment Orders

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce proposals for the implementation of compulsory treatment orders in advance of the enactment of a new Mental Health Act. [69696]

Mr. Hutton: We have appointed an expert group, chaired by Professor Richardson, Professor of Law at Queen Mary and Westfield College, to advise on the changes necessary to mental health legislation including how measures might be introduced which will, for a very small number of people, require compliance with agreed treatment plans whether they are detained in a hospital or live in a community setting, with appropriate safeguards. The group will submit their recommendations by 1 July 1999. Any new measures can only be introduced once the necessary legislation has been enacted.

North and East Devon Health Authority

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the implications for the duty placed on the NHS to provide nursing care of the judgment in R v. North and East Devon Health Authority ex parte Coughlan; and if he will make a statement; [70227]

(2) what plans he has to issue guidance to health authorities and local authorities on their responsibilities following the judgment in R v. North and East Devon Health Authority ex parte Coughlan. [70228]

Mr. Hutton: Following the judgment in R v. North and East Devon Health Authority ex parte Coughlan, the Health Authority submitted an application for leave to appeal against the High Court's decision. In light of the impact on policy of the High Court's view on funding of nursing care, we decided to support the Health Authority's application for leave to appeal, given the importance of clarifying the judgment and making the legal position clear. This application for leave to appeal was granted on 4 February. We will consider the need for guidance to Health and Local Authorities once the result of the appeal is known. In the interim, Health Authorities and Social Services Departments are advised to seek their own legal advice if they have any concerns. The overall implications of the case are still being assessed.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69515]

Mr. Denham: The headline pay settlement was 2.4 per cent. on the paybill and together with the additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance related pay increases averaging 4.1 per cent. The increase was not staged.

Teenage Mothers

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of children aged under two years in local authority care were born to teenage mothers. [69892]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally. Although the Department collects statistical information on the care histories of children who are looked after by local authorities in England, this does not include information about the children's parents.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will suspend consideration of the recent application to conduct a clinical trial of a xenotransplantation procedure on humans until the code of practice on the welfare of xenotransplantation source animals is in place; [69313]

(2) what legislation would govern the treatment of animals used to provide cells or tissue for any clinical trial of a xenotransplantation procedure on humans approved by the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority, before the establishment of the code of practice on the welfare of xenotransplantation source animals. [69312]

Mr. Hutton: The Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 regulates any use of living vertebrate animals plus octopus vulgaris in procedures which might cause pain, suffering, distress or lasting harm. Responsibility for the Act, including the welfare of animals which may be used as sources of xenotransplantation, lies with the Home Office in Great Britain and the Department of Health and Social Services in Northern Ireland.

The Code of Practice on the welfare of high health status pigs as xenotransplantation source animals is currently being developed by the Home Office Animal (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate. Members of the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority (UKXIRA) have met representatives of the Inspectorate to discuss specific elements of the proposed code of Practice and welfare issues concerning source animals for xenotransplantation in general.

In considering any application to undertake a xenotransplantation procedure involving humans, the UKXIRA would expect to see evidence of animal welfare standards at least equal to those discussed with the Home Office Animal (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate. The Code of Practice is expected to be published later this year.

David Lewis Centre, Cheshire

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's investigations into the David Lewis Centre, Cheshire. [69310]

Mr. Hutton: The David Lewis Organisation has carried out an internal review of the standard of care provided to a 19-year-old patient following an allegation of neglect made by her family. South Cheshire Health Authority has now received the report and has accepted its findings. The Health Authority is in the process of commissioning a comprehensive independent expert review to assess whether the services provided by the David Lewis Centre are modern, effective and appropriate in meeting the needs of the children and adults in their care. That review is now expected to be completed by the end of April.

Nurses (Probation)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the value of a probationary period for nurses; and if he will make a statement. [69791]

Mr. Denham: We have received no representations concerning the value of a probationary period for nurses.

Nursing Assistants

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of NHS trusts (a) currently have staff classified as nursing assistants or nursing auxiliaries and (b) have incorporated nursing assistants or nursing auxiliaries into a health care assistants scheme. [69792]

Mr. Denham: There were a total of 424 National Health Service Trusts in England as at 30 September 1997. Of these, 383 (90.3 per cent. of the total number of trusts) employed staff classified as nursing assistants and/or nursing auxiliaries.

Source:

Department of Health Non-medical workforce census.

It is a matter for local decision as to whether trusts incorporate nursing assistants or nursing auxiliaries into health care assistant schemes. No figures are kept centrally.

Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors (Registration)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to publish the report commissioned from J. M. Consulting on the review of legislation covering the registration of nurses, midwives and health visitors. [69790]

Mr. Denham: The Government have carefully considered the independent Review Report and have decided to publish it, together with a detailed response, later this week. Copies of the Report entitled "The Regulation of Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors" are available in the Library.

In the Lords today, my noble Friend Baroness Hayman announced a new, modernised and strengthened system of self-regulation for nurses, midwives and health visitors. The review recommends new legislation to replace the current arrangements. The criteria and principles for new legislation echo the Government's clear commitment to work with the professions and the regulatory bodies to strengthen the existing systems of professional self-regulation. The new arrangements will be designed to:

acknowledge and strengthen the accountability of practitioners;

strengthen the involvement of users and employers in the processes; put public protection explicitly, and for the first time, at the heart of regulation.

The report recommends, and the Government accept, that the current dual regulatory structure (of a Council and four National Boards) be replaced with a new United Kingdom-wide body, with ultimate responsibility for regulating the professions, but national arrangements may be made in respect of some functions previously carried out by boards.

The Government have, however, decided not to accept recommendations relating to health visitors, who will continue to be a separate profession, retaining separate registration and representation on the new Council. A further review to explore the scope for the regulation of health care support workers is recommended, and we plan to commission this work shortly.

This is a thorough and thoughtful review, based on very extensive consultation. It was undertaken in the context of rapid developments and changes in the education and roles of the professions, and against the background of Government policies on the National Health Service and on devolution. This means that in Scotland and Wales, the new Council will be expected to commission educational quality assurance work in relation to nursing and midwifery from bodies whose structure and other functions will be determined by the Scottish Parliament and the National Assembly for Wales. Within Northern Ireland it will be up to the Northern Ireland Assembly, once it is fully operational, to determine the arrangements. No separate body is envisaged for England, although it would be open to the Council to collaborate with the Quality Assurance Agency.

Many of the recommendations in the report reflect issues of good practice and are addressed to the new Council, which will be smaller and more streamlined and strategic, both in its structure and functions. Others cannot be achieved without new legislation to replace the current Act. It is widely accepted that there is a need to find a way to implement these changes and a power has been included in the Health Bill, currently subject to Parliamentary scrutiny, to effect changes to primary legislation by Order. We will be bringing forward an amendment to the Health Bill to enable us to repeal the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1997 once the new arrangements are in place.

SCOTLAND

Government Projects

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each of the projects currently operating under (1) the National Childcare Strategy, (2) the Social Inclusion Partnerships, (3) New Deals in Scotland, (4) New Housing Partnerships, (5) Alternatives to Exclusion from School, (6) Early Intervention Schemes and (7) the Community Schools Initiative, indicating for each (a) the number of people benefiting, (b) the amount of money to date provided by (i) the Government and (ii) other bodies, (c) the estimated total number of people who will benefit and (d) the estimated total financial contribution of (x) the Government and (y) other bodies. [68943]

Mrs. Liddell: Since the information requested is lengthy, I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible, placing a copy of my letter in the Library.

Scottish Parliament (Voting)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what educational publicity campaign he plans to undertake, and at what estimated cost, to inform electors of the new voting system for the Scottish Parliament. [69053]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 3 February 1999]: The Government believe that voters have a right to understand how the new electoral arrangements will work and is therefore planning a substantial publicity campaign to inform voters about the new voting system for the Scottish Parliament. I am pleased to say that we have had helpful and constructive discussions with the Opposition parties about our proposals. The campaign will feature a mix of press, television, radio and leaflets and will begin in mid-February. There will also be information about registration and absent voting. We estimate the total cost will be approximately £2.5 million.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will break down by subhead the expenditure on administration by Scottish Enterprise in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [69239]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The overall budget allocations to Scottish Enterprise for 1997–98 and 1998–99 included £59.29 million and £61.29 million for administration respectively. The allocation of the resources within the Administration Block is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and I have asked the Chairman to write to the hon. Member.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of the planned budget for Scottish Enterprise for (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [69184]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The Scottish Enterprise budget for 1999–2000 and 2000–01 was announced as part of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review and is £427 million and £435 million respectively. The detailed breakdown for 1999–2000 is at present being finalised and will be published in The Scottish Office Departmental Report.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

NHS (Administrative Expenditure)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the total administrative expenditure in the Scottish NHS for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98, (d) 1998–99 and (e) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [69240]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 4 February 1999]: Health Boards in Scotland receive an annual general revenue allocation and it is for Health Boards themselves to decide on how best to deploy funding made available to meet the health care needs of their resident population. No estimate is made centrally for administrative expenditure. Outturn figures for total administrative expenditure for Health Boards and NHS Trusts are available for 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98. These are detailed in the table.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Year	Expenditure £000
1995–96	486,963
1996–97	490,077
1997–98	488,710

Industry, Enterprise and Training

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the level of cash spending on Industry, Enterprise and Training for (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [69241]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 4 February 1999]: Planned net provision and estimated expenditure for Industry, Enterprise and Training is £544 million in 1999–2000, £545 million in 2000–01 and £595 million in 2001–02.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of expenditure on Industry, Enterprise and Training for (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [69236]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 4 February 1999]: Planned provision for 2000–01 and 2001–02 following the Comprehensive Spending Review is shown in the table. Provision for 2002–03 will be decided in the context of the next review of expenditure which will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Industry, enterprise and training programme: expenditure summary

£ million

	2000–01 plans	2001–02 plans
Scottish Enterprise	388	425
Highlands and Islands Enterprise	61	61
Investment Assistance	70	84
Innovation	5	5
Scottish Tourist Board	19	19
Other	1	1
Total	545	595

Note:

All figures are shown net of receipts which for the enterprise bodies includes business receipts.

Totals may not add due to roundings.

Industry, Enterprise and Training provision is focused on building industries and jobs for the future.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was collected in tolls on the Skye Bridge in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [69245]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The latest published accounts of Skye Bridge Ltd. show that toll income for the year to 31 December 1997 was £3,253,993. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 1999, Official Report, column 589, on the Skye Bridge, if he will place in the Library copies of the Deputy Crown Agent's letters of 6 November 1995 and 5 January 1996 to the Procurator Fiscal in Dingwall. [69886]

Mr. McLeish: As the hon. Gentleman will be aware, all communications between the Crown Office and Procurators Fiscal are strictly private and confidential. Despite that, my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate provided the information contained in the written answer of 2 February 1999, Official Report, column 589, in an attempt to be as helpful as possible.

My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate considers that it is not appropriate to go further and to place copies of the letters requested in the Library.

Scottish Parliament (Income Tax)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the (a) gross and (b) net annual (i) full year and (ii) first year, revenue yield from a decision to raise income tax by one penny by the Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [69237]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 4 February 1999]: It is currently estimated that adding 1p to the basic rate of income tax in Scotland in 2000–01, the first year in which the tax-varying power could be exercised, would yield £180 million gross (£175 million net of payments of income-related benefits) of additional tax revenue.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his policy that the Scottish consolidated fund will receive the full-year revenue from any use of the Scottish Parliament tax-varying powers in the first year for which these can be used; and if he will make a statement. [69186]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 4 February 1999]: Section 77 of the Scotland Act 1998 provides that if the Scottish Parliament uses the tax-varying power in any year to increase the basic rate of income tax in Scotland, the Board of the Inland Revenue will be required to pay into the Scottish Consolidated Fund an amount equal to an estimate by the Board of the proportion of income tax receipts for that year that is properly attributable to the tax-varying resolution of the Parliament.

School Books and Equipment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the expenditure of Scottish schools on books and equipment for the latest year for which figures are available. [69417]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Total expenditure by education authorities in Scotland on text and library books, and educational tools, equipment and materials for nursery, primary, secondary and special schools was £52.2 million in 1996–97, the latest year for which information is available. Estimates are not available for such expenditure in future years, but future expenditure should reflect additional resources for education made available in the Budgets of 1997 and 1998 and the Comprehensive Spending Review. In particular, additional resources of £2.4 million are being allocated to local authorities this financial year for books for school libraries, in support of the National Year of Reading. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Second Home Owners

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost of a rebate of 50 per cent. on the council tax of second home owners in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [69497]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Information is collected centrally only in respect of the total number of dwellings in receipt of the 50 per cent. council tax discount and we cannot identify how many of these are second homes. The percentage of all dwellings receiving a 50 per cent. discount is around 2 per cent. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the spending on education in each of the current local government areas of (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98, (d) 1998–99 and (e) 1999–2000. [69498]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The available information is given in the following table. The current local government areas were not responsible for education spending in 1995–96. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for The Scottish Parliament.

Local authority education spending

£000

Councils	1996–97 Final Outturn	1997–98 Provisional Outturn	1998–99 Budget Estimates
Aberdeen, City	87,162	86,437	88,210
Aberdeenshire	109,686	112,025	111,739
Angus	48,012	48,192	49,866
Argyll and Bute	49,507	47,188	49,095
Clackmannanshire	24,084	24,458	25,198
Dumfries & Galloway	67,532	69,214	70,643
Dundee	70,320	69,074	69,169
East Ayrshire	59,089	58,104	60,657
East Dunbartonshire	53,343	51,531	53,922
East Lothian	37,557	36,970	37,881
East Renfrewshire	42,645	41,980	44,144
Edinburgh, City	159,099	159,859	164,035
Eilean Siar	23,591	23,523	24,604
Falkirk	62,762	61,704	64,222
Fife	167,748	164,946	167,128
Glasgow City	290,555	273,361	288,201
Highland	114,011	113,125	115,812
Inverclyde	42,823	42,884	45,504
Midlothian	40,623	40,721	41,236
Moray	41,888	39,903	41,716
North Ayrshire	65,239	67,212	68,906
North Lanarkshire	161,135	159,380	165,241
Orkney	15,372	14,980	15,358
Perth and Kinross	56,188	56,677	58,795
Renfrewshire	82,644	82,199	84,651
Scottish Borders	48,314	46,928	47,702
Shetland	23,886	23,384	23,821
South Ayrshire	52,534	50,656	47,151
South Lanarkshire	145,592	143,589	140,775
Stirling	40,639	36,802	39,539
West Dunbartonshire	49,655	50,439	53,287
West Lothian	83,209	77,700	79,355
Scotland	2,416,444	2,375,145	2,437,559

Notes:

1. All figures are net current expenditure excluding loan & leasing charges as returned by the individual local authorities to The Scottish Office

2. The provisional outturn figures for 1998–99 and the budget estimates for 1999–2000 are not yet available

Departmental Theft

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the items and their estimated value stolen from (i) his Department, (ii) its agencies and (iii) associated public bodies during (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 to date; and if he will make a statement. [69266]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 8 February 1999]: A variety of items are periodically reported missing. Security procedures remain under constant review and revised procedures are introduced as necessary. The following items have been formally recorded as losses due to theft from The Scottish Office, its agencies and associated Departments in 1997–98 and 1998–99 to date.

	Scottish Office		Agencies		Associated Departments
Year	Item	Value (£)	Item	Value (£)	Item	Value (£)
1997–98
April	—	—	Scanner	300	—	—
	—	—	Computer	3,000	—	—
May	Laptop	1,727	—	—	—	—
July	Disk Drive	200	Netting	3,000	—	—
	Hard Disk	179	Computer	1,100	—	—
	—	—	Printer	500	—	—
August	Speakers	65	Bench	400	—	—
	Mobile	33	Microwave	200	—	—
	Laptop (2)	3,500	—	—	—	—
September	PC trackball	106	—	—	Dictaphone	350
	Ansaphone	60	—	—	—	—
	Modem	170	—	—	—	—
	Laptop	1,949	—	—	—	—
October	PC board	70	Trailer	1,800	—	—
	Modem	132	Laptop	1,500	—	—
	PC CD (2)	280	Netting	2,000	—	—
	Pager	80	—	—	—	—
	Car	1,275	—	—	—	—

	Scottish Office		Agencies		Associated Departments
Year	Item	Value (£)	Item	Value (£)	Item	Value (£)
November	Printer	250	Light	350	—	—
	Laptop (2)	5,500	—	—	—	—
	Modem (2)	300	—	—	—	—
December	Car	3,975	—	—	—	—
	Keyboard	41	—	—	—	—
	Carpet Tiles	100	—	—	—	—
	Stamp	60	—	—	—	—
	Soldering Iron	93	—	—	—	—
January	Dictaphone	42	Labelmaker	151	—	—
	Guillotine	30	—	—	—	—
	Stapler	25	—	—	—	—
March	—	—	Cash	66	—	—
1998–99
April	—	—	Paint	100	—	—
	—	—	VCR	200	—	—
May	Adaptor	50	—	—	Hard Drives (2)	360
	Laptop	1,500	—	—	—	—
June	Audio Kit	700	—	—	—	—
July	Ansaphones	105	—	—	—	—
	Laptop	1,329	—	—	—	—
August	—	—	Mobile	200	—	—
	—	—	Picture	200	—	—
September	DAT Drive	1,292	—	—	—	—
	Audio Kit	700	—	—	—	—
	Mobile	100	—	—	—	—
	Laptop	1,600	—	—	—	—
October	Laptops (2)	3,240	—	—	—	—
November	Laptops (2)	3,807	—	—	—	—
December	Stamps	585	—	—	—	—
January	Fax	400	Camera	400	—	—

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Health and Education

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his priorities for improving the (a) health service and (b) education system in Scotland. [69416]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The Government's strategic aims and clinical priorities for the National Health Service in Scotland are set out in "Priorities and Planning Guidance for the NHS in Scotland 1999–2002". Our plans to reform the structure of the National Health Service in Scotland to replace the internal market were detailed in "Designed to Care: Renewing the National Health Service in Scotland" (Cm 3811). I intend to publish proposals related to the broader health agenda shortly, taking account of the responses to consultation on "Working Together for a Healthier Scotland" (Cm 3584). All these documents are in the Library.

The Government's priorities for improving school education are set out in our White Paper "Targeting Excellence: Modernising Scotland's Schools" (Cm 4247) which was published on 27 January. Our priorities for post-16 education and training are set out in our Green Paper "Opportunity Scotland" (Cm 4048) published in September 1998. I sent the hon. Member copies of these documents, and copies are also available in the Library of the House. For higher education, our priorities are set out in the Government's responses to the Dearing and Garrick reports, published in February 1998. I sent the hon. Member a copy of the Garrick report, and copies of both reports are available in the Library of the House.

We expect shortly to publish our strategic framework for further education which will set out our challenge to colleges to widen participation, improve links with each other and other sectors, and to raise standards and quality.

Our priorities for health and education contribute to our overarching aims to promote social inclusion and excellence, and will be delivered within the enhanced resources allocated as a result of our Comprehensive Spending Review.

From 1 July 1999 these will be matters for the Scottish Parliament.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce dual registration for residential and nursing homes for the elderly. [70024]

Mr. Galbraith: Proposals for improving the regulation of residential care and nursing homes will be set out in the White Paper which we intend to publish next month.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69511]

Mr. Dewar: The average performance related pay increases received by staff in post are set out in the table.

	Percentage
The main Scottish Office pay bargaining unit	4.20
Historic Scotland	3.05
Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency	4.10
Scottish Prison Service	4.25

The increases were not staged.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Medical Waste Disposal

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (i) longest, (ii) average and (iii) shortest distance over which the higher risk clinical waste for incineration is transported from the (a) Hairmyres and Stonehouse Hospitals NHS Trust, (b) Law Hospital NHS Trust and (c) Monklands Hospital NHS Trust. [69208]

Mr. Galbraith: The incineration of such waste for these Lanarkshire NHS Trusts is currently carried out at a plant on the Crosshouse Hospital site. This is 35 miles from Monklands Hospital, 30 miles from law Hospital and 20 miles from the Hairmyres and Stonehouse Hospitals.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for the future disposal of healthcare waste from the (a) Hairmyres and Stonehouse Hospitals NHS Trust, (b) Law Hospital NHS Trust and (c) Monklands Hospital NHS Trust; what sites will be used for (i) the incineration and (ii) the landfill disposal of medical waste; and if he will make a statement. [69210]

Mr. Galbraith: Following a recent tendering exercise which was carried out in consultation with public health doctors, specialist engineers and environmentalists, including the Scottish Environment Protection Agency, a contract was awarded to Eurocare Environmental Services Limited which will, from 1 April 1999, service the clinical waste disposal needs of two-thirds of Scotland's NHS Trusts. All of the Lanarkshire Trusts have given a commitment to be part of the contract which across Scotland is expected to realise savings of around £6m for re-investment in patient care. Under the arrangements the bulk of the clinical waste from Lanarkshire will be treated at a disinfector/heat treatment plant in Cumbernauld. When processed, the safe, inert residue will be disposed of at a licensed landfill site near Cumbernauld. There are also low volume, higher risk clinical waste materials which will be disposed of by incineration at plants in the Midlands of England.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the regulations pertaining to the current practice for the disposal of healthcare waste by the (a) Hairmyres and Stonehouse Hospitals NHS Trust, (b) Law Hospital NHS Trust and (c) Monklands Hospital NHS Trust. [69207]

Mr. Galbraith: The following legislation applies:

Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974

Environmental Protection Act 1990

The Radioactive Substances Act 1993

Controlled Waste (Registration of Carriers and Seizure of Vehicles) Regulations 1991 (SI 1991 No 1624)

Environmental Protection (Duty of Care) Regulations 1991 (SI 1991 No 2839)

Management of Health & Safety At Work Regulations 1992 (SI 1992 No 2051)

Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994 (SI 1994 No 1056)

Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1994 (SI 1994 No 3246)

Special Waste Regulations 1996 (SI 1996 No 972)

Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road Regulations 1996 (SI 1996 No 2095)

Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road (Drivers Training) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996 No 2094).

Barnett Formula

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each project over £50,000 payments under the Barnett Formula to his Department in the two most recent years and moneys already allocated under the formula for the financial years 1999–2000 and 2000–01. [69858]

Mr. Dewar: The Barnett formula is used to calculate the Scottish share of changes to the baselines of those English or English and Welsh programmes which are comparable to Scottish programmes. It is not applied to specific projects. The Departmental Expenditure Limit figures for Scotland for the years 1999–2000 to 2000–01, which were calculated in accordance with the Barnett formula, are set out in Table 22.1 of the Comprehensive Spending Review White Paper "Modern Public Services for Britain: Investing in Reform" (Cm 4011).

Nationalised Industries (Funding)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by (a) administration costs and (b) by funded project over £50,000 the moneys given by his Department over the two most recent years for which figures are available to each of the nationalised industries in Scotland; and if he will list the sums allocated for each of these headings in (i) 1999–2000 and (ii) 2000–01. [69860]

Mr. Macdonald: The two nationalised industries sponsored by the Scottish Office are Caledonian MacBrayne Limited (CalMac) and Highlands and Islands Airports Limited (HIAL).

The Scottish Office does not specifically allocate an element of grant to meet CalMac and HIAL's administration costs. Account is taken of administrative costs when the Department considers and approves the revenue deficit grant paid to each company each year.

The following projects were funded in 1996–97 and 1997–98 at a total cost of over £50,000.

Cal/Mac

Projects over £50,000 funded by capital grant

£

Project title	Capital grant
Harbourworks
1996–97
Tiree passenger walkway	57,658
Fishnish slipway widening	100,341
1997–98
Castlebay berthing dolphin	84,022
Lochboisdale berthing dolphin	56,693

Cal/Mac
Projects over £50,000 funded by capital grant

Project title	Capital grant £
Vessels
1996–97
MV Loch Alainn	860,250
MV Clansman	600,000
1997–98
MV Clansman	9,900,000

HIAL
Projects over £50,000 funded by capital grant

Project title	Capital grant £
1996–97
Barra—3 storey VCR visual control room Phase I	241,504
Barra—Fire appliance	75,504
Barra—Fire appliance	75,504
Barra—Fire appliance	63,426
1997–98
Barra—Visual control room Phase II	122,421
Campbeltown—DME (Distance Measuring Equipment)	129,960
Inverness—Ambulift	55,900
Islay—Standby generator	63,504
Kirkwall—Control tower building	648,621
Kirkwall—Ambulift	53,900
Sumburgh—PAMOS (Partially Automated Meteorological Observation System)	151,554
Fast rescue craft	77,750
Ambulift	54,760

Allocations for 1999–2000 for Cal/Mac and HIAL have not yet been finalised. Allocations for 2000–01 will be drawn up in the course of 1999–2000.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Local Enterprise Companies (Funding)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each local enterprise company in Scotland the (a) rural development (b) research and development, (c) business start up, (d) business support and (e) other projects of value greater than £10,000, by project heading, in 1998–99; and if he will list in each case the sums allocated for (i) 1999–2000 and (ii) 2000–01. [69921]

Mr. Dewar: Contractual arrangements for individual projects are an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the local enterprise companies. I have asked the Chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Public Bodies

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) current premises, (b) staff numbers by grade and responsibility and (c) administration costs, indicating separately office costs, staff costs and other costs for each non-departmental public body for which he is responsible for (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01. [69859]

Mr. Dewar: This information is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide for the two most recent financial years a breakdown of spending by project over £20,000, or if necessary to protect commercial or other sensitivities, by regional total, on (a) research, (b) grants to, (i) individuals, (ii) organisations and businesses and (iii) public bodies, by project aim, (c) capital projects, (d) maintenance and (e) security, by each non-departmental public body for which he is responsible, listing those allocations which have already been made for (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01; and what is the total budget of each of these organisations for each year over the period. [69857]

Mr. Dewar: The budget figures for NDPBs for 1998–99 can be obtained from Appendix 7 of "Serving Scotland's Needs, The Government's Expenditure Plans 1998–99" (Cm 3914). Plan figures for 1999–2000 and 2000–01, as set in the Comprehensive Spending Review, will be published in Spring 1999 in "Serving Scotland's Needs, The Government's Expenditure Plans 1999–2000 to 2001–02". The remainder of the information requested is held locally by Non-Departmental Public Bodies and, as such could be gathered centrally only at a disproportionate cost.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Appeals (Trinidad and Tobago)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement of the Government's policy on the withdrawal of the jurisdiction of the Privy Council over appeals from Trinidad in respect of criminal matters only; and what representations he has received from the Attorney-General of Trinidad in support of such a withdrawal. [69649]

Mr. Hoon: The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is the final court of appeal of Trinidad and Tobago. It is for Trinidad and Tobago to exercise its sovereign right to decide whether or not it wishes to retain this avenue of appeal. The Government do consider, however, that if Trinidad and Tobago were to decide to withdraw from the appellate jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee, it would be appropriate first to ensure access to an appeals procedure of equivalent stature. There have been discussions to that effect between my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor and the Attorney-General of Trinidad and Tobago on several occasions.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what discussions he has had with the Attorney-General of Trinidad on the cessation of the jurisdiction of the Privy Council over appeals from Trinidad. [69648]

Mr. Hoon: I have had no such discussions. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has met the Attorney-General of Trinidad and Tobago on several occasions during which various matters, including the appellate jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, were discussed.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) if he will list for the last year, (a) the highest figure and (b) the average figure given as the gross fee income by successful applicants for Queen's Counsel; [69360]

(2) if he will list for the last year, what was (a) the highest figure and (b) the average figure given as the gross fee income by unsuccessful applicants for Queen's Counsel; [69359]

(3) if he will list for the last year, (a) the highest figure and (b) the average figure given as the gross fee income by all applicants for Queen's Counsel. [69356]

Mr. Hoon: The figures are as follows:

	£
	Highest	Average
Successful applicants	589,000	246,000
Unsuccessful applicants	665,000	165,000
All applicants	665,000	175,000

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce a limit on the number of applications an individual may make for Queen's Counsel status. [69355]

Mr. Hoon: My noble and learned Friend has no plans to introduce a limit on the number of applications an individual may make for the award of Queen's Counsel.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department in each of the last five years (a) in how many civil litigation matters the use of Queen's Counsel was authorised by the Legal Aid Board and (b) of (a) how many had authorised the use of junior as well as Queen's Counsel; what were, in civil litigation cases, in each of the last five years, (i) the highest amount for an individual civil litigation case authorised to be paid to a QC, (ii) the average amount for an individual civil litigation case authorised to be paid to a QC and (iii) the highest amount paid in total to an individual QC; and if he will list in relation to each category above, the figures for criminal litigation. [69358]

Mr. Hoon: I am unable to answer the majority of that part of the question which relates to civil legal aid as the Legal Aid Board do not record separately payments to Queen's Counsel. Therefore, the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Records of the amount paid in total to an individual Queen's Counsel in respect of civil proceedings are available for the last two years only and were as follows:

Year	£
1996–97	350,000
1997–98	394,952

For criminal legal aid in the higher criminal courts.

(a) The number of criminal cases in which a payment was made to a QC in each year from 1993–94 to 1996–97 was as follows:

Year	£
1993–94	1,472
1994–95	1,349
1995–96	1,375
1996–97	1,331

Note:

Information is not yet available for 1997–98

(b) Information on the number of cases where junior as well as Queen's Counsel were authorised is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

(i) The highest amount paid to an individual QC[1] in a criminal case in each of the last five years was as follows:

Year	£
1993–94	315,987
1994–95	463,849
1995–96	295,218
1996–97	561,415
1997–98	348,471

(ii) The average amount paid to QCs in each year from 1993–94 to 1996–97 was as follows:

Year	£
1993–94	14,883
1994–95	20,333
1995–96	19,188
1996–97	21,069

Note:

Information for 1997–98 is not yet available

(iii) The highest amounts paid in total to individual QCs[1] in each year from 1993–94 to 1996–97 was as follows:

Year	£
1993–94	over 440,000
1994–95	over 660,000
1995–96	over 500,000
1996–97	over 500,000

Note:

Information for 1997–98 is not yet available

[1] Payments made to individual barristers are in respect of closed cases only; that is where the case has been disposed of and all bills, including those of defence lawyers, have been determined. It should be clearly understood that any payment to an individual recorded in any year could well reflect payments received in earlier years. In those instances, payments have been aggregated in the year in which the final payment was made.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department in each of the last five years (a) how much was spent by the Government on fees to Queen's Counsel and (b) what was the highest amount paid in respect of an individual case to a single QC. [69363]

Mr. Hoon: No central record is kept of fees paid to Queen's Counsel by the Government. The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for each of the last five years, (a) how many (i) High Court judges and (ii) circuit judges have been appointed and (b) of (i) and (ii), how many were (A) women, (B) from ethnic minorities and (C) solicitors. [69361]

Mr. Hoon: The table shows the figures for the numbers of women, ethnic minority practitioners and solicitors appointed as High Court Judges and Circuit Judges in each of the last five years.

Year	Total	(a) Women	(b) Ethnic minority origin	(c) Solicitors
(i) High Court Judge appointments
1994	6	1	0	0
1995	12	1	0	0
1996	9	0	0	0
1997	7	0	0	0
1998	7	0	0	0
(ii) Circuit Judge appointments
1994	35	2	0	4
1995	48	4	1	16
1996	45	1	0	5
1997	27	3	1	3
1998	37	6	0	3

Court Dress

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review the rules relating to advocates' court dress; and if he will make a statement. [69362]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has no present plans to review the rules relating to advocates' court dress.

Public Trust Office

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what discussions he has had with officials from the Public Trust Office; how he monitors the performance of that office; what plans he has to review the role of the office; and if he will make a statement. [69502]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The arrangements for the Lord Chancellor's monitoring of the performance of the Public Trust Office are set out in its Framework Document. Ministerial discussions with Public Trust Office officials take place from time to time within this framework.

The Public Trust Office is a "Next Steps" Executive Agency which attained agency status in 1994. A Quinquennial Review of the Agency is due this year. The Review will be conducted by someone external to the Department, and will comprise an evaluation of the performance of the agency and a Prior Options Review which will examine all options for discharging the agency's functions. The Review will start shortly. It will be able to take account of the forthcoming report of the National Audit Office into aspects of the work of protecting the financial welfare of people with mental incapacity, and the subsequent views of the Public Accounts Committee.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Entertainment

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister how much was spent on official entertainment at 10 Downing street in 1997–98. [69162]

The Prime Minister: The cost to my office of official hospitality, including official entertainment, at 10 Downing street and Chequers in 1997–98 was £43,777.

This compares with total expenditure on entertainment at 10 Downing street during the 1996–97 financial year of £50,126.

Ministers (Public Funds)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to ensure that activities undertaken by Ministers on behalf of the Labour Party do not involve the expenditure of public funds. [69818]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The Ministerial Code makes it clear that Ministers must not use public resources for party political purposes.

Duty Free

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will estimate the consumption effects and health outcomes of the abolition of duty free imports of tobacco, alcohol and other goods with the EU. [70056]

The Prime Minister: The decision to end duty free sales within the European Union was taken by the Council of Finance Ministers in 1991, with the support of the Conservative Government. It was a fiscal measure deemed necessary for the effective operation of the Single Market and took no account of levels of consumption or health issues.

St. Malo Declaration

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions has he had with the German Government on the recent British/French St. Malo declaration; and if he will make a statement. [69924]

The Prime Minister: Since St. Malo I have had discussions with a number of European colleagues, including the German Chancellor, on European defence. French and British officials have also discussed with the German EU/WEU Presidency how best to take the issue [illegible]ward in the run up to the WEU Ministerial at Bremen (10–11 May) and the European Council at Cologne (4 June).

Monetary Policy

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 February 1999, Official

Report, column 932, if he will list those factors which he has assessed as detrimental to economic stability if monetary policy were to be transferred from the independent Bank of England to Her Majesty's Treasury. [70102]

The Prime Minister: The benefits of the Government's new monetary policy framework are clear: inflation has been at or close to its target; inflation expectations have fallen; the differential between yields on German and British long-term government debt has closed markedly; base rates are at their lowest level for over four years; and long term interest rates are at their lowest level for over 40 years and mortgage rates their lowest for over 30 years.

The UK's past experience of monetary policy, when short-term political considerations detracted from long-term stability, suggests that any move to take back control of interest rates from the Bank of England would risk jeopardising those achievements.

General Pinochet

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister at what time (a) he and (b) his Office was informed of (1) the police decision to arrest and (2) the arrest of Senator Pinochet. [70283]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 2 November 1998, Official Report, column 403.

Pensioners' Parliament

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if a Minister will be attending the Pensioners' Parliament to be held in Blackpool between 11 and 13 May. [69577]

The Prime Minister: To date no Minister has been invited to attend the Pensioners' Parliament, which I understand is organised by the National Pensioners Convention.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in her Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69513]

Clare Short: The headline pay settlement was 2 per cent. on the paybill and together with the additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance-related increases averaging 4 per cent. The increases were not staged.

EU Aid Budget

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the 10 countries which received the most EU aid in the last year for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement. [69040]

Clare Short: In 1997, the latest year for which figures are available, the 10 countries which received the most EU official development assistance are set out in order. Our proposals to seek to change this situation are set out in our EU Strategy Paper "Working in Partnership with the European Community", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

1. Bosnia and Herzegovina
2. Morocco
3. Egypt
4. Tunisia
5. Palestinian administered areas
6. Slovenia
7. India
8. Jordan
9. Bangladesh
10. Mauritania

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of the EU aid budget is currently invested in low-income countries; and if she will make a statement. [69039]

Clare Short: In 1996 45 per cent. of EC external assistance (official development assistance plus official aid) went to low income countries, compared with 71 per cent. for the Department for International Development's bilateral programme. Our strategy to increase EC spending in low income countries is set out in our EU Strategy Paper, "Working in Partnership with the European Community", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her European counterparts concerning the proportion of the EU's aid budget which is invested in low income countries. [69041]

Clare Short: I discussed the EU aid budget with all my European colleagues in the last meeting of the Development Council, on 30 November 1998. I and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State also meet our counterparts individually. We raise this issue at every possible opportunity.

Morocco

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her French counterpart concerning Morocco. [69042]

Clare Short: On 23 December 1998 I met Monsieur Charles Josselin, my French counterpart, and we discussed a range of development assistance issues including EC aid to the Mediterranean and the Middle East, but we did not specifically discuss Morocco.

Central America

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the long-term rehabilitation needs of the countries in Central America affected by Hurricane Mitch. [69038]

Clare Short: Following our initial response in the aftermath of Hurricane Mitch, (£4.2 million bilateral emergency aid and £10 million towards the World Bank's multilateral trust fund) we have been carefully considering our future assistance.

Part of the £4.2 million assistance included rebuilding secondary roads and bridges, repairing water and sanitation infrastructure, restoring primary health and education services and work on epidemiological surveillance and epidemic control. A Department for International Development mission is planning to visit Honduras and Nicaragua on 22 February to check on the progress of this work and look at possible longer-term assistance. The team will hold meetings with the relevant government ministries and non-governmental organisations.

Before Hurricane Mitch struck, we had already planned to spend £6 million in Central America over the next two years, working with some of the key multilateral organisations. We will now refocus our assistance in the light of the need for reconstruction. We have recently signed an agreement with the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) in which DFID will provide funds to strengthen the capacity of local organisations to enable them to make more effective use of loans provided by the IDB.

We are also currently looking at supporting a regional rural development and natural resources technical assistance unit (RUTA), possible co-operation with the Pan American Health Organisation (PAHO) on health projects in the region as well as long-term support alongside the emergency road-building project announced in December. A project aimed at regenerating crop production by providing appropriate seed has also recently been approved.

Palestinian Authority

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action she has taken to prevent corrupt use of EU and British aid to the Palestinian Authority. [68715]

Mr. Foulkes: The UK and the European Commission rarely provide direct financial assistance to the Palestinian Authority. In cases where assistance has been so provided, special payment and accounting mechanisms have been incorporated to ensure that funds have been properly spent. UK aid to the Palestinians is largely in the form of technical co-operation and support to non-government organisations, who are major deliverers of services in the West Bank and Gaza. EC and UK projects and programmes are regularly monitored, including site visits, to ensure that funds are used for agreed purposes.

Donors have repeatedly made it clear to the Palestinian Authority their concern about financial management and the importance of transparency.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Card

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on progress on introducing the Benefit Card. [68822]

Angela Eagle: At present, 204 post offices (89 in the North East, 115 in the South West) are operating Benefit Payment Service for Child Benefit. There are now nearly 36,000 Child Benefit customers using the Benefit Payment Card.

Mrs. Swati Pankhania

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons maternity benefit has not been paid to Mrs. Swati Pankhania of Rushey Mead, Leicester who made an application under reference PW916526C/STBFC/DN; and when he expects payment to be made. [69228]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Maternity Benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 8 February 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for what reasons maternity benefit has not been paid to Mrs Swati Pankhania of Rushey Mead, Leicester.

Maternity Benefit (MB) has not been paid because the independent Adjudication Officer (AO) decided on 2 November 1998 that Mrs Pankhania was not entitled to Maternity Allowance (MA) from 7 December 1997 to 11 April 1998 because she was entitled to Statutory Maternity Pay (SMP) from her employer in respect of the same pregnancy.

I should explain that AOs are statutory office holders. They are required to make impartial decisions based on the application of the law to the facts of the individual case. It would be improper for me, or indeed a Government Minister, to comment on, or interfere in, their decisions.

However, the AO's decision to refuse MA is not a formal decision on the employer's liability to pay SMP. A customer who wants a formal decision on this separate issue must request it from the AO within six months from the earliest day in respect of which liability for SMP is in dispute. The time limit is absolute. I understand that Mrs Pankhania recently made such a request.

Mrs Pankhania now needs to complete form SMP14 explaining fully why she thinks she is entitled to SMP and what she has done to pursue it with her employer. The information that she provides will then be sent to her employer for their comments. Once these have been received the AO will give a formal decision on SMP. If the AO decides that the employer is liable, they have three months in which either to pay SMP or appeal against the decision. If the employer does not appeal and does not pay SMP, the Benefits Agency will take over responsibility for paying it.

I understand that Mrs Pankhania is currently in India. We have sent form SMP14 to her husband who is arranging to forward it to her. Every effort will be made to resolve this issue timeously.

I hope that this is helpful.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct the Benefits Agency to investigate allegations that the holidaymakers who were recently ejected from an Airtours flight to Jamaica were fraudulently claiming income-related benefits; and if he will make a statement. [69893]

Mr. Timms: Questions on Benefit Agency operational matters are the responsibility of the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Iain Duncan Smith, dated 8 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will instruct the Benefits Agency (BA) to investigate allegations that the holidaymakers who were recently ejected from an Airtours flight to Jamaica were claiming income-related benefits; and if he will make a statement.

The information that the BA holds about its customers is confidential and there are strict rules about its disclosure. I am therefore unable to provide any details about this case.

In general terms, whether fraud is involved in the case of a benefit customer taking a holiday abroad depends on the eligibility rules of the individual benefits involved.

The BA takes benefit fraud very seriously and where proof of wrongdoing is established, a very firm line is taken against the culprits. I can assure you that the BA will fully investigate suspected fraud where there are reasonable grounds to support an enquiry.

I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money has been received by the Treasury from CSA payments to offset the cost of single parents met by public funds for each year of the CSA's existence. [69666]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Frank Field, dated February 1999:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about maintenance collected by the Child Support Agency.

Since launch in April 1993 to 31 December 1998, a total of £1,927.46 Million (M) in child maintenance has been collected and arranged by the Agency for payment from the non resident parent to the parent with care. Where maintenance has been collected by the Agency £438.72M has been retained for the Secretary of State to offset benefits that have already been paid. A yearly breakdown is provided in the table below.

Child Maintenance collected and arranged since launch

£ million

	Collected and arranged	Retained for SofS
Total	1,927.46	438.72
1993–94	12.57	5.75
1994–95	187.40	47.94
1995–96	301.50	68.12
1996–97	399.88	95.71
1997–98	547.14	121.31
1998–99 up to 31 December 1998	478.96	99.89

The problems encountered by the Agency during its first 2–3 years are a matter of public record. From a slow beginning, the amounts of maintenance collected and arranged rose to just over £301M in 1995/6, and to just under £400M in 1996/7.

The £547.14M collected and arranged in 1997/98 represented an increase of 37 per cent on the amount in 1996/97, while the amount retained by the Secretary of State in the same period grew by 27 per cent.

Our emphasis is on getting maintenance flowing, and in doing this supporting the Government's aims for keeping lone parents off benefit and the New Deal arrangements for helping those on benefit into work.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. William Gallacher

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the final resolution in the case of Mr. William Gallacher of Westgate on Sea of his benefit claim; and if he will make a statement relating to the speed with which benefit claims made by the disabled are processed. [69697]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of disablement benefits is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Roger Gale, dated 8 February 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when the Secretary of State expects the final resolution to be made in the case of Mr. William Gallacher of Westgate on Sea of his benefit claim; and if he will make a statement relating to the speed with which benefit claims made by the disabled are processed.

Mr. Gallacher's claim for Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit (IIDB) was received by the Benefits Agency on 8 May 1997. The Adjudication Officer's decision, based on the findings of the Adjudicating Medical Authority on the claim, was issued to Mr. Gallacher on 14 October 1997. This length of time was needed to arrange a medical examination, confirm details of his employment, and contribution history. This information is required in all IIDB claims to confirm if the case satisfies the conditions for entitlement. In Mr. Gallacher's case, the history since 1940 was potentially relevant and needed to be scrutinised.

Mr. Gallacher lodged an appeal, received at the BA processing office on 28 November 1997, against the findings of the Adjudicating Medical Authority. The case was referred to the Independent Tribunal Service on 28 November 1997. A hearing date has been set for 5 March 1999.

The target times for completion of the processing of all Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit claims are, 60% in 85 days and 90% in 175 days. In Mr. Gallacher's case the decision was issued to him within the second target time.

I hope you find this reply is helpful.

Benefits Agency Staff

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what surveys the Benefits Agency has carried out of the level of job satisfaction among its staff since 1992; and if he will place the results in the Library. [69667]

Angela Eagle: The Administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. I have asked him to reply to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 8 February 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what surveys the Benefits Agency has carried out of the level of job satisfaction among its staff since 1992; and if the results will be placed in the Library.

The Department of Social Security carried out a Department-wide staff attitude survey in 1994 which included Benefits Agency staff. Between 1994 and 1998 the Agency has only carried out local surveys. However, towards the end of last year the Benefits Agency commissioned a national staff survey. The report of the results is currently being prepared.

I can confirm that a full copy of the results will be placed in the House of Commons Library. I will ensure that a copy of the BA results from the DSS 1994 survey is also placed in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Family Credit

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what percentage of couples receiving Family Credit benefits one partner is not working. [69686]

Angela Eagle: As at August 1998, there were 393,000 couples receiving Family Credit of which 92.3 per cent. (363,000) were cases where the partner was not working.

Note:

Figure is based on a 5 per cent. sample of all Family Credit claimants.

Source:

Family Credit Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, August 1998.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the average duration of claim for Family Credit payment. [69937]

Angela Eagle: As at August 1998, the average duration of a claim to Family Credit was 19.9 months.

Note:

Figure is based on a 5 per cent. sample of all Family Credit claimants.

Source:

Family Credit Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, August 1998.

Disability Benefits

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those disability benefits on which there was an underspend in 1997–98 and the sums involved. [70120]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

Over this Parliament, expenditure on the four principal disability benefits—Attendance Allowance (AA), Disability Living Allowance (DLA), Incapacity Benefit (IB) and Severe Disablement Allowance (SDA)—is forecast to grow in real terms by 7.0 per cent. This is equivalent to a real increase in annual spending of over £1 billion. Within this wider trend, in 1997–98 there were small differences between forecast and outturn spending for these benefits.

£ million

(1) Benefit	(2) Published forecast for spending in 1997–98	(3) Outturn spending	(4) Difference, column (3) minus column (2)
AA	2,704	2,521	−183
DLA	4,959	4,953	−6
IB	7,617	7,412	−205
SDA	991	999	7

Note:

Forecasts in column (2) are the figures that were published in the 1997 Departmental Report, Cmd 3613.

Family Credit Childcare Disregard

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, under the rules for the family credit childcare disregard, a mother who worked for at least 16 hours a week as a registered childminder, and who entered into a contractual relationship with her husband, and who cared on a professional basis for her own children at premises other than the parental home, will be able to disregard the costs to the family of childcare for the purposes of family credit assessment. [70079]

Angela Eagle: For the purposes of the Family Credit disregard, Family Credit General Regulation 13A(2) provides a definition of eligible childcare. Childcare charges paid by a Family Credit claimant to a partner or by a partner to a Family Credit claimant in respect of any child for whom either or any of them is responsible, are not defined as eligible childcare.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69510]

Mr. Timms: The headline pay settlement for this Department, its Agencies and its Non-Departmental Public Bodies was 2.5 per cent. on the paybill and together with the additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance related increases averaging 4.6 per cent. The increases were not staged.

Disabled Children

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has held with groups representing disabled children under five years of age; and what plans he has to make finance available to help the parents of severely-disabled under-fives with the costs of transportation for hospital visits. [68801]

Mr. Bayley: The Government's proposals for people with long-term illnesses and disabilities were outlined in the recent consultation document "A New Contract for Welfare: Support for Disabled People". Consultation ended on 8 January and 342 responses were received. Many of these came from organisations representing disabled people, including three from organisations specifically representing disabled children.

Our proposals included extending the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance (currently £35.85 a week) to severely disabled 3–4 year olds with a mobility problem. This has been widely welcomed. This help would be neither means tested nor subject to a contribution condition, would be tax free and would give access to the Motability Scheme. No attempt is made to specify how families should spend Disability Living Allowance.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Education Welfare Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the work of the Training Advisory Group for the Education Welfare Service. [69623]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Training Advisory Group for the Education Welfare Service has an important role to play in co-ordinating training provided for education welfare officers and dealing with related questions of professional development. The Department is one of a number of bodies represented on TAG and we are pleased to contribute to its work.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the projects which are funded by the School Inclusion: Pupil Support grant programme which relate (a) to an enhanced role for education welfare officers and (b) to all other objects. [69624]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The grant will support multiple projects in 134 local education authorities. Many of these involve enhanced roles for education welfare officers (EWOs), particularly as part of multi-disciplinary behaviour support teams. Given the large number of projects and the overlapping, often integrated, work of EWOs and other agencies, identifying and listing individual projects in the manner requested in the question would involve disproportionate cost.

Digital Broadcasting

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from the ITC regarding the provision of digital broadcasting for educational services. [69692]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 8 February 1998]: There have been a number of contacts with the Independent Television Commission over the last year, including both a meeting and exchanges of correspondence.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many tenders his Department has received for the provision of digital broadcasting services. [69691]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Responses to tendering exercises conducted by the Department for Education and Employment are treated as commercial in confidence.

New Deal (Young People)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people on the New Deal Scheme have been employed (a) as classroom assistants in schools and (b) as childcare providers. [70010]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mrs. Theresa May, dated 9 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply direct to your question about the numbers of young people on New Deal who have been employed as classroom assistants in schools and as childcare providers. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Up to 8 January 1999, 852 young people on New Deal had been placed as childcare assistants (427 in unsubsidised jobs and 425 on the Employment option). A further 731 had been placed on Full-Time Education and Training and Voluntary Sector options in the childcare area.

Unfortunately, similar, information on classroom assistants is not readily available.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69518]

Mr. Mudie: The headline pay settlement was 2.5 per cent. on the paybill; and together with the additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance-related increases averaging 3.6 per cent. The increases were not staged.

SSA and LEA Budgets

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) his Department's recommended standard spending assessment percentage budget increase and (b) the percentage increase set by the local education authority for each English local education authority. [69576]

Ms Estelle Morris: The table sets out the underlying increase in the education SSAs for 1999–2000, after allowing for local authority changes of function and new arrangements for music and student support services. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has written to all English Local Education Authorities to urge them to match the cash increase in their education SSA with a corresponding cash increase in their education budgets. We will be monitoring the spending plans of authorities when they set their final education budgets to see whether they actually use the cash increases for education services.

Final Education SSAs for 1999–2000

LEA	Education SSA £ million	Change £ million	Change %
City of London	0.8	0.0	1.7
Camden	87.4	4.0	4.8
Greenwich	126.2	6.0	5.0
Hackney	103.6	5.0	5.0
Hammersmith and Fulham	63.2	3.4	5.7
Islington	91.7	4.2	4.7
Kensington and Chelsea	40.2	2.7	7.1
Lambeth	111.4	6.9	6.6
Lewisham	127.5	6.9	5.7
Southwark	124.2	7.8	6.7
Tower Hamlets	145.6	8.0	5.9
Wandsworth	98.2	4.9	5.3
Westminster	66.8	4.3	6.9
Barking and Dagenham	84.3	5.2	6.6
Barnet	135.9	7.4	5.8
Bexley	105.9	6.0	6.0
Brent	123.1	5.8	4.9
Bromley	125.8	7.5	6.3
Croydon	140.4	8.0	6.1
Ealing	129.4	7.0	5.7
Enfield	139.3	8.0	6.1
Haringey	110.6	7.5	7.2
Harrow	81.1	3.5	4.5
Havering	99.0	4.5	4.8
Hillingdon	107.9	5.6	5.5

Final Education SSAs for 1999–2000

LEA	Education SSA £ million	Change £ million	Change %
Hounslow	107.1	5.4	5.3
Kingston upon Thames	53.4	2.7	5.2
Merton	66.3	3.2	5.1
Newham	156.6	10.3	7.0
Redbridge	118.4	8.6	7.9
Richmond upon Thames	52.5	2.8	5.7
Sutton	78.8	4.6	6.2
Waltham Forest	111.1	7.0	6.8
Birmingham	506.0	23.3	4.8
Coventry	136.1	6.1	4.7
Dudley	120.4	6.5	5.7
Sandwell	136.0	6.4	4.9
Solihull	88.0	5.5	6.7
Walsall	124.6	6.8	5.8
Wolverhampton	111.9	5.7	5.4
Knowsley	85.2	4.0	5.0
Liverpool	238.3	9.3	4.1
St. Helens	76.5	3.0	4.1
Sefton	122.2	6.1	5.2
Wirral	148.7	6.8	4.8
Bolton	117.5	6.0	5.4
Bury	71.5	3.9	5.8
Manchester	207.7	9.6	4.9
Oldham	108.6	5.3	5.1
Rochdale	96.9	5.1	5.6
Salford	95.2	4.6	5.1
Stockport	104.4	5.5	5.5
Tameside	95.6	5.4	6.0
Trafford	91.1	6.5	7.7
Wigan	125.3	6.3	5.3
Barnsley	87.4	4.4	5.3
Doncaster	136.1	6.2	4.7
Rotherham	116.1	6.6	6.0
Sheffield	195.0	11.1	6.0
Bradford	233.8	9.5	4.2
Calderdale	88.2	5.0	6.0
Kirklees	164.3	8.3	5.3
Leeds	292.4	14.8	5.3
Wakefield	129.0	6.5	5.3
Gateshead	78.3	3.4	4.6
Newcastle upon Tyne	111.0	5.0	4.7
North Tyneside	77.6	3.4	4.6
South Tyneside	68.8	3.4	5.1
Sunderland	129.1	5.7	4.6
Isles of Scilly	1.2	0.0	0.8
Cambridgeshire	190.9	11.3	6.3
Cheshire	263.8	13.8	5.5
Cornwall	189.8	11.1	6.2
Cumbria	195.5	10.0	5.4
Devon	243.8	15.9	7.0
Essex	524.1	29.2	5.9
Gloucestershire	214.8	12.7	6.3
Herefordshire	61.1	4.1	7.3
Worcestershire	198.2	10.9	5.8
Hertfordshire	446.5	23.6	5.6
Kent	553.5	29.7	5.7
Lancashire	468.5	25.3	5.7
Lincolnshire	250.7	15.3	6.5
Norfolk	286.5	17.4	6.5
Northamptonshire	257.8	14.8	6.1
Northumberland	129.3	6.3	5.2
Nottinghamshire	296.0	16.4	5.9
Oxfordshire	217.4	10.2	4.9
Shropshire	100.8	5.7	6.0
Somerset	175.6	10.9	6.6
Suffolk	250.3	14.1	5.9
Surrey	358.3	21.1	6.3
Warwickshire	187.6	10.1	5.7
West Sussex	269.2	15.5	6.1
North Yorkshire	219.6	13.6	6.6
Bedfordshire	161.0	7.4	4.8
Buckinghamshire	193.6	10.4	5.7
Derbyshire	272.4	15.6	6.1
Dorset	135.3	9.2	7.3
Durham	203.4	9.6	4.9
East Sussex	174.3	10.1	6.2
Hampshire	446.8	24.9	5.9
Leicestershire	228.2	13.6	6.3
Staffordshire	323.1	18.2	6.0
Wiltshire	159.1	10.1	6.8
Isle of Wight	53.2	2.6	5.1
Bath & North East Somerset	62.3	3.3	5.6
Bristol	134.2	7.0	5.5
North Somerset	68.0	3.6	5.6
South Gloucestershire	93.8	6.3	7.2
Hartlepool	42.6	2.2	5.4
Middlesbrough	68.5	3.1	4.8
Redcar and Cleveland	66.2	2.9	4.6
Stockton-on-Tees	82.1	4.5	5.8
Kingston-upon-Hull	114.8	5.2	4.8
East Riding	121.3	7.4	6.5
North East Lincolnshire	73.0	3.1	4.5
North Lincolnshire	65.0	3.2	5.2
York	60.3	3.5	6.1
Luton	87.6	4.3	5.2
Milton Keynes	92.7	4.3	4.9
Derby	96.8	5.3	5.8
Poole	50.0	3.2	6.9
Bournemouth	55.8	3.3	6.3
Darlington	39.7	2.2	6.0
Brighton and Hove	82.8	4.9	6.3
Portsmouth	72.8	4.1	6.0
Southampton	87.4	5.0	6.1
Leicester	134.9	5.6	4.3
Rutland	11.6	0.4	3.8
Stoke on Trent	99.5	3.9	4.1
Bracknell Forest	41.6	2.0	5.1
Windsor and Maidenhead	51.1	2.4	4.8
West Berkshire	60.9	3.5	6.1
Reading	48.0	2.7	5.9
Slough	59.0	3.3	5.9
Wokingham	58.5	3.0	5.4
Peterborough	78.9	2.5	3.2
Halton	59.4	2.5	4.5
Warrington	78.5	4.6	6.2
Plymouth	107.7	5.9	5.8
Torbay	49.9	3.4	7.3
Southend	68.9	3.9	6.1
Thurrock	60.5	3.9	6.8
Medway Towns	118.0	6.0	5.3
Blackburn	70.7	2.7	4.0
Blackpool	52.8	3.4	6.9
Nottingham City	116.7	6.1	5.5
The Wrekin	66.2	3.9	6.2
Swindon	73.3	5.7	8.5
England	20,414.0	1,100.0	5.7

Schedule 2a Students

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for each of the last three years, how many students in further education colleges were registered as students on schedule 2a courses without having been entered for the appropriate examination. [68736]

Mr. Mudie: Information on the number of students in English further education (FE) sector colleges registered as students on schedule 2a courses without having been entered for the appropriate examination is not available. The number of students enrolled on schedule 2a courses in English FE sector colleges for each of the last three years is:

Year	Thousand
1994–95	1,226.0
1995–96	1,664.5
1996–97	2,315.2

TREASURY

Unemployment (Scotland)

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) 16 and 17-year-olds in Scotland and (b) 18 to 24-year-olds in Scotland are unemployed according to the ILO definition. [68771]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Malcolm Chisholm, dated 9 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on young people who are unemployed in Scotland.

The ONS measure of unemployment, derived from the Labour Force Survey (LFS), is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed people who are: a) without a paid job; b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

The Autumn 1998 (September-November) quarterly Labour Force Survey estimates that the number of ILO unemployed in Scotland aged (a) 16–17 year olds is 22,000 and (b) 18–14 year olds is 48,000. These estimates are not seasonally adjusted.

Standard Chartered Bank

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has (a) met the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss the activities of Standard Chartered Bank and (b) called for a report from the Governor of the Bank of England on Standard Chartered Bank's involvement in India; when he last met the Chairman of Standard Chartered Bank; and what changes to the system of banking supervision he plans following the involvement of Standard Chartered Bank in India. [69084]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor has regular meetings with the Governor of the Bank of England at which a wide range of issues is discussed. He also receives regular reports from the Bank. There is no record of him meeting the Chairman of Standard Chartered Bank since his appointment as Chancellor. On coming into office, the Government announced their proposals to reform the system of financial supervision. The first stage was the Bank of England Act 1998 which transferred banking supervision to the Financial Services Authority. A further Bill implementing the reforms in full was published, in draft, for consultation last July. The Government are considering the response and will introduce the Bill in the next Session of Parliament.

Travel Insurance

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the percentage of travel insurance which was bought from (a) travel agents and tour operators and (b) other sources in (i) 1992, (ii) 1995 and (iii) 1998. [69376]

Ms Hewitt: A report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on Foreign Package Holidays published in December 1997 (Cmnd 3813) gives the following information:

Distribution of sales of travel insurance by outlet, 1992 to 1996

Percentage

	1992	1994	1996
Travel agent	63	64	58
Tour operators	25	23	19
Sub-total	88	84	19
Direct	5	5	7
Bank/Building Society	3	4	6
Others	4	7	10

Source:

Mintel

Aviation Tax

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government will support proposals for an aviation tax in future European Union negotiations. [69472]

Ms Hewitt: There no proposals for an aviation tax as such. As was made clear in the White paper on the future of transport, the Government support international action through the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO) to remove the international tax exemption for aviation fuels.

In June 1997 we welcomed the initiative by the Dutch Presidency of the EU which led to the study on the competitive and environmental effects on the EU of a unilateral aviation fuel tax and look forward to its publication later this year. We will consider our position in the light of the conclusions of this study.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. [69912]

Ms Hewitt: One executive non-departmental body sponsored by the Chancellor's departments has a statutory base. It is the Policyholders Protection Board, created by the Policyholders Protection Act 1975.

The ambit of the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration does not extend to the conduct of the Board's business.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69982]

Ms Hewitt: There is one executive non-departmental body sponsored by the Chancellor's departments. It is the Policyholders Protection Board. The Board:

(a) does not admit members of the public to board meetings or committee meetings;

(b) does not hold public meetings;

(c) includes a representative of policyholders interests in accordance with the Policyholders Protection Act, 1975;

(d) does not operate a formal appeal or complaints procedure.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69942]

Ms Hewitt: There is one executive non-departmental body sponsored by the Chancellor's departments. It is the Policyholders Protection Board.

The Board does not publish the minutes of meetings, agendas of meetings, documents for those meetings, or a register of members' interests. It does, however, publish an annual report, and there are statutory provisions on disclosure of members' interests in matters falling to be considered by the Board.

Industrial Action

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many cases of industrial action involving random one-day strikes called over a period have taken place; and in how many cases the period of random action has exceeded eight weeks, in each year from 1993 to 1998; [69563]

(2) in how many cases industrial actions in the form of strikes have extended beyond eight weeks in each year from 1993 to 1998. [69564]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 9 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics, I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary questions on industrial action in each year from 1993 to 1998.

I am unable to provide information in the form requested. The duration of a dispute is classed as the total number of days of strike action, not the length of time the parties were in dispute. I have provided information on this basis in the attached tables.

Table 1

The following table shows the number of stoppages beginning in each year from 1993 to 1997, which involved forty days or more of strike action[1], whether or not these covered consecutive working days.

Year	Stoppages beginning in year
1993	7
1994	2
1995	8
1996	4
1997	3
1998[2]	n/a

[1] It is assumed that an eight week period includes forty working days. The duration of a dispute is classed as the total number of days of strike action, not the length of time the parties were in dispute.

[2] Provisional data for 1998 will be available mid-March 1999, final data for 1998 will be available mid-April 1999.

Table 2

The following table shows the number of stoppages in progress, in each year from 1993 to 1997, which did not exceed one day in duration.

Year	Stoppages in progress
1993	119
1994	118
1995	139
1996	118
1997	106
1998[1]	n/a

[1] Provisional data for 1998 will be available mid-March 1999, final data for 1998 will be available mid-April 1999.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maples: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to which public expenditure vote the cost of the use of RAF and charter flights by Treasury Ministers is charged. [70076]

Dawn Primarolo: Treasury Ministers' travel costs are charged to Class XVI Vote 1.

Green-field Development

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will abolish capital gains tax roll-over relief on the sale proceeds of green-field development land. [68799]

Dawn Primarolo: Capital gains roll-over relief is available when the proceeds from the disposal of assets used only for the purpose of a trade are invested in new assets which, on acquisition, are taken into use, and used only, for the purposes of a trade. There are no plans to change that.

Building Societies

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received regarding building societies during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement; [68436]

(2) what recent discussions his Department has had with building societies; and if he will make a statement; [68438]

(3) what proposals he has for legislation to protect the principle of mutuality; and if he will make a statement. [68437]

Ms Hewitt: The Treasury has regular discussions with building societies and their representatives, who have put forward a number of proposals for legislation in recent years. Many of them, however, involve reducing Boards' accountability, or otherwise limit the rights of members—especially the less well off. This seems to the Government to be incompatible with the fundamental principles of mutuality. The Government have, however, increased the turnout threshold on conversion votes from 20 to 50 per cent., to ensure that conversions can occur only with the clear endorsement of members.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Exports

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to introduce (a) reforms to the way in which veterinary surgeons are nominated to carry out pre-export inspections of farm animals and (b) new guidelines as to how such inspections should be conducted; and if he will make a statement. [67937]

Mr. Morley: We are actively working to finalise the new procedural guidelines and administrative arrangements, together with proposals on the charges livestock exporters would need to pay. Introduction of the proposed new charging arrangements would require the adoption of a statutory instrument, and the timing of this would be influenced by the devolution arrangements for Scotland and Wales.

Tobacco

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the principal (a) domestic and (b) export markets for tobacco grown in the European Union under subsidy. [69326]

Mr. Rooker: The specific information requested is not available. However, the European Commission's 1997 report on the common organisation of the market in raw tobacco says that the European Union consumes about 23 per cent. of its tobacco production. The main export markets for EU raw tobacco are the former-USSR, Central and Eastern European Countries, North Africa and the USA.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the member states of the EU which will benefit from financial support from the FEOGA budget in the current financial year for their tobacco growing industries. [69324]

Mr. Rooker: The eight producer Member States under the EU tobacco regime are: Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Portugal and Spain.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people are employed as a result of grant-assisted tobacco growing in the European Union. [69325]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission's 1997 report on the common organisation of the market in tobacco says that there are about 135,000 tobacco farmers in the Community, and that the number of people who earn their living farming tobacco exceeds this figure. In addition, the report says that some 30,000 people were employed in the first processing of tobacco in 1990 (including seasonal jobs).

There is no information to relate employment in the EU tobacco sector to availability of the Community support to tobacco production.

Dairy Farms (Closures)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy farms were closed as a result of action taken following farm inspection reports in each year since 1995–96. [69704]

Mr. Rooker: The table shows the number of production holding registrations withdrawn by financial years. Certain of these withdrawals were temporary as production holdings may be re-registered once they have made the necessary adjustments to comply with legislative requirements.

Year	Number
1994–95	62
1995–96	29
1996–97	73
1997–98	51

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to answer the question tabled by the hon. Member for Worsley on 25 January concerning ministerial flights (ref. 67363). [69627]

Mr. Nick Brown: Shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Documents (Right hon. Member for Hartlepool)

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish all his Department's internal documents relating to the loan by the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) to his predecessor, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson). [67333]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 27 January 1999]: No. All information in the DTI's possession on matters of substance relating to the loan is already in the public domain.

Arms Exports

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library details of the licensing of military contracts to Jakarta in the last five years. [68843]

Dr. Howells: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 1 January 1994 and 31 December

1998, 301 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Indonesia of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List. Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings. Where this is so, the licence is included in the Table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

SIELs issued in each calendar year covering the export to Indonesia of goods on the Military List

	Number of SIELs issued in each year covering goods with this rating
Rating	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998
ML1	4	4	1	0	2
ML2	5	2	3	3	2
ML3	3	3	1	0	1
ML4	3	1	0	2	1
ML5	6	4	1	3	1
ML6	4	13	9	4	1
ML7	1	0	2	1	0
ML8	2	0	0	0	0
ML9	4	0	1	0	1
ML10	10	8	27	17	16
ML11	22	13	15	19	9
ML13	1	1	6	4	2
ML14	4	4	3	2	2
ML15	2	6	4	1	2
ML16	0	0	0	0	0
ML17	0	0	0	0	0
ML18	0	0	1	0	0
ML21	0	0	0	0	2
ML22	0	0	0	0	1
ML24	0	1	3	1	0
PL5001	0	0	0	0	0
PL5002	0	1	0	0	0
PL5006	1	2	2	0	2
PL5017	0	0	1	0	2
PL5024	0	0	0	0	0
PL5027	2	3	0	0	0
Total number of such licences	68	60	77	55	41

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

As regards Open Individual Export Licences, I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

In addition, goods on the Military List may have been exported to Indonesia under certain Open General Export Licences; copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

Fireworks

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps, including a campaign of public information, to ensure that the code of practice on fireworks as it relates to the timing of firework sales is not breached in connection with the celebration of the new millennium. [69615]

Dr. Howells: The present voluntary code of practice relates to sales of fireworks in the run-up to Bonfire Night. Officials in the DTI will be contacting fireworks suppliers to discuss the issue of the sale of fireworks for the Millennium celebrations.

Lucas Varity

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 1999, Official Report, columns 584–85, regarding Lucas Varity, if it is his policy that his Department would not intervene in the takeover on grounds other than competition. [69699]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 8 February 1999]: If any proposed acquisition were to fall to the UK authorities under the Fair Trading Act 1973, the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) would advise my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether or not the merger should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for investigation. In formulating his advice on merger cases, the DGFT takes into account any representations he receives on competition and other public interest issues. The Secretary of State would take his decision in the light of the DGFT's advice. Each case is considered on its own merits.

If any proposed acquisition were to fall to the EC Merger Regulation the European Commission would assess the acquisition~~'s effect on~~ competition. In commenting on the acquisition we would therefore not normally give our views on grounds other than competition.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 1999, Official Report, columns 584–85, regarding Lucas Varity, if he will take steps to establish whether the takeover will fall within the jurisdictions of (a) the UK authorities and (b) the European Commission. [69698]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The European Commission would decide whether any proposed acquisition fell within the scope of the EC Merger Regulation. If it were not to fall within the scope of the EC Merger Regulation it would fall to the UK authorities under the Fair Trading Act 1973.

Dismissals (Breach of Contract)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many employees were dismissed for breach of contract on the ground that they took industrial action by going on strike, in each year from 1993 to 1998. [69594]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 8 February 1999]: These figures are not collected.

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases of unfair dismissal were brought before industrial tribunals in each year from 1993 to 1998; how many cases were proven in each year; what was the average award in each year; and what was the total of the awards made in each year. [69595]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Information for financial years commencing 1 April 1993 is shown in the table. The outcome of a case may appear in a later year than the one in which it was registered.

Year	Applications registered	Number successful at hearing (%)	Average award	Number of awards
1993–94	41,801	5,952 (44.0)	2,773	3,113
1994–95	38,363	4,829 (39.3)	3,289	2,998
1995–96	39,580	4,325 (38.0)	2,499	2,099
1996–97	39,018	[1]2,910 (34.6)	[1]2,575	[1]1,696
1997–98	37,366	4,418 (40.1)	[2]—	[2]—

[1] Information on tribunal outcomes is not available for the whole of 1996–97 as a result of procedural changes. The information given relates to cases registered before 1 September 1996 and disposed of in that year.

[2] Information is not yet available.

Petrol Industry

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the report of the Inquiry by the Director General of Fair Trading into the 1966 undertakings by petrol suppliers; and if he will publish it. [69761]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 8 February 1999]: My right hon. Friend and I expect to receive advice from the Director General of Fair Trading regarding the 1966 petrol undertakings within the next month. The Director General's advice is given in confidence. I will announce my decision on the undertakings in due course.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what studies he has (a) made and (b) commissioned into contractual arrangements introduced by petrol suppliers since 1 January 1989; and what assessment he has made as to their conformity with fair competitive practice; [69758]

(2) what assessment he has made of the terms of the partnership licence agreement currently used by Esso Petroleum; [69756]

Dr. Howells [holding answers 8 February 1999]: My Department has neither made nor commissioned such studies or assessments since 1 January 1989. The Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for keeping the operation of markets and the state of competition under review.

The Office of Fair Trading was asked by Esso in 1992 to consider its new partnership licence agreement. OFT concluded that the terms were not manifestly unfair or unreasonable and therefore not in breach of paragraph 19 of the 1966 undertakings. The Petrol Retailers Association were informed of OFT's view on 8 December 1992. The OFT's view remains unchanged.

No other new petrol licence agreements have been considered by OFT.

The Director General has examined the petrol market a number of times since the MMC last reported in 1990, and on each occasion concluded that competition in the petrol market was effective and serving consumers well.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how his Department monitors retail petrol industry gross margins and pump prices; and what assessment he has made of the monitoring's effectiveness in assuring consistency of treatment under (a) UK and (b) European competition law. [69757]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 8 February 1999]: My Department collects information about pump prices from retailers. This information is published in Energy Trends and in the Advanced Energy Statistics Press Notice.

The Office of Fair Trading is responsible for monitoring markets and considering complaints about anti-competitive practices in the UK. OFT monitors gross margins on petrol and petrol pump prices using information from published sources and my Department. Successive studies of the supply of petrol in the UK by OFT, including that published in May 1998, have led OFT to conclude that competition in the petrol market is effective and serving consumers well.

The application of EC competition law is the responsibility of Directorate General IV of the European Commission.

Employment Relations Bill

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates his Department has made of the current compliance costs of the Parental Leave Directive to the United Kingdom, in the context of the Employment Relations Bill; how many newly-entitled employees there will be; how many are expected to be (a) full-time and (b) part-time workers; and how many in each category are expected to be employed in firms with workforces (i) up to 10, (ii) up to 20, (iii) up to 50, (iv) up to 250 and (v) over 250. [69562]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Estimates are not available in the form requested. However, the Regulatory Impact Assessment for the Employment Relations Bill, which has now been published, estimates the compliance costs of our proposals to implement the Directive at £36 million per year to employers. The estimate assumes that beneficiaries will include some 61,500 parents per year who will take up the new entitlement to parental leave, and 560,000 employees who will be protected by the statutory right when they take time off to deal with a domestic emergency. Full-time and part-time employees will be entitled to the new rights on the same basis.

Welsh Stamps

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ensure that Welsh stamps are available in all Welsh post offices. [70054]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Post Office is fully committed to implementation of its Welsh Language Scheme and reports progress annually to the Welsh Language Board. Welsh definitive stamps are already widely available at post offices in Wales and The Post Office is currently reviewing its supply process to improve the availability of stock.

Internet Watch Foundation

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish the review of the Internet Watch Foundation; and if he will make a statement. [70364]

Mr. Wills: Copies of the review of the Internet Watch Foundation, conducted by KPMG and Denton hall, were placed in the Libraries of the House of Commons and the House of Lords this morning. The report is also available on the Department's website. The report commends the success of the IWF since its inception in 1996, and makes recommendations for improvement to keep pace with the rapid developments taking place in the Internet industry.

The IWF's structure, hotline operations and relationship with the Internet industry, Metropolitan Police and National Criminal Intelligence Service were all examined as part of the review. Work on developing rating systems, future activities and funding arrangements were also considered.

Findings show a steady increase in the number of reports of potentially illegal material received and processed by the IWF, mainly from outside the UK. Other key points include:

there were 453 actionable reports of illegal material on the Internet from December 1996 until end of August 1998;

the IWF has made an important contribution in tackling child pornography, which accounts for almost 90 per cent. of material that is assessed by the Foundation as illegal;

the IWF has played a leading role in developing content rating and filtering systems for Internet content that is legal, but that may be harmful or offensive; and low public and industry awareness of the IWF (particularly among non-users of the Internet).

The report puts forward a series of recommendations, including:

raising awareness of the IWF through a publicity campaign, to include: printed and electronic material for current and new users; web pages with hot links to the IWF site; mailings and promotional material with CD Roms;

further work on developing rating systems and filtering technologies and deciding how to tackle real time Internet chat services which could pose a danger to children;

drawing in UK Internet Service Providers not tied into IWF;

improving Police/IWF communication; for example, through developing working procedures and regular formal feedback;

further work on potentially illegal adult pornography;

better co-operation with watchdogs responsible for illegal material other than child pornography: for example, financial scams, copyright infringement and racism; and improved management structure and funding, including a higher representation of public bodies and charities on the Policy Board.

The report demonstrates the IWF's success to date in dealing with complaints about child pornography on-line and in developing content rating and filtering systems which will enable people to filter out legal, but offensive material from their PCs. But the Report also shows that a good deal more work needs to be done. I welcome the report's recommendations for the further development of the IWF and encourage the Internet Industry and the IWF to consider them carefully as a basis for developing the IWF's work in future.

Mobile Telecommunications Networks

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made towards issuing licences under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts for operators of third generation mobile telecommunications networks. [70363]

Mr. Wills: Good progress has been made in consultation with industry in developing detailed plans for an auction of licences for third generation (3G) mobile telecommunications. The Government have been considering further how to provide benefits to the full range of customers from increased and sustainable competition in view of the opportunities presented by the Information Age.

Key issues addressed in consultation have included:

(i) means of helping potential new entrants to the mobile market in the UK compete on a fair basis;

(ii) the opportunities provided by technical development affecting the proposed number and design of licences.

In the light of these consultations the Government remain committed to their overall aim and objectives, which are those previously described to the House by my hon. Friend the present Financial Secretary on 18 May 1998, Official Report, column 233. In particular, the Government continue to attach great importance to the further development of competition in the sector, including promotion of sustainable market entry. To this end it is minded to ensure the availability for a period of roaming onto second generation networks by any new entrants to the mobile market. It is also initiating a further brief consultation on the specific proposal that five licences be offered, a larger one being reserved for a new entrant.

The Government expect that, subject to market and other developments and to final decisions nearer the time, the auction will take place in the second part of the financial year 1999–2000.

In carrying out its further work, the Department will continue fully to consult industry, and to publish all relevant information on the Radiocommunications Agency website at "www open.gov.uk/radiocom/".

Insolvency Service Disqualification Unit

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the income and expenditure of the Insolvency Service has been in each of the last three years attributable to the disqualification of directors; and what proportion of the costs were borne by (a) the Disqualification Unit of the Insolvency Service and (b) official receivers. [69641]

Dr. Howells: The income attributable to the disqualification of directors is the recovery of costs awarded against disqualified directors and is shown in the annual published accounts of The Insolvency Service as follows:

Year	£000
1995–96	479
1996–97	671
1997–98	1,456

The expenditure of The Insolvency Service attributable to the disqualification of directors is as follows:

	£000	£000	Disqualification Unit official receivers total
1995–96	10,185	4,878	15,063
1996–97	14,885	4,218	19,103
1997–98	17,727	4,286	22,013

The Insolvency Service is funded through the DTI's Vote.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69509]

Mr. Byers: For the main DTI bargaining unit, the headline pay settlement was 2.55 per cent. This, taken together with additional funds from staff turnover, resulted in staff in post receiving performance related increases averaging 4 per cent. The increases were not staged.

Maternity Leave

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what have been the costs of maternity leave to the United Kingdom in each year since 1994; and what proportion of these costs relate to employees in firms with workforces (a) up to 10, (b) up to 20, (c) up to 50, (d) up to 250 and (e) over 250. [69596]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The information requested is not available. However, the costs of providing maternity leave will differ according to the arrangements in individual companies, many of which provide more than statutory entitlements.

We estimate that there are about 370,000 pregnant employees in any one year. The costs of meeting the statutory requirement to pay out Statutory Maternity Pay and Maternity Allowance to women who qualify for them are set out in the table. Employers are reimbursed 92 per cent. of the cost of Statutory Maternity Pay, with small employers reimbursed in full. The Department of Social Security pays out Maternity Allowance.

£ million

Tax year	Statutory Maternity Pay expenditure	Total Maternity Allowance expenditure	Maternity Allowance expenditure for employees
1994–95	480	27	10
1995–96	524	29	12
1996–97	341	33	14

Notes:

1. Expenditure on Statutory Maternity Pay for any year may take into account adjustments made by the Government Actuary in respect of recoveries made by employers for earlier years.

2. Figures are for Great Britain.

3. Expenditure on Maternity Allowance for employees is estimated from a 1 per cent. sample of awards to Maternity Allowance.

4. The latest year for which information is available for both Statutory Maternity Pay and Maternity Allowance is 1996–97.

Source:

National Insurance Fund Accounts

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69521]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The headline pay settlement (excluding Agencies) was 3 per cent. on the paybill and, together with the additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance-related increases averaging 4.5 per cent. The increases were not staged.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Private Military Companies

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will publish the guidelines which were introduced following the Legg report for his officials when dealing with representatives of private military companies. [69354]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The guidelines introduced on 24 July were intended for internal use only pending preparation of more detailed guidance in consultation with other Government Departments.

We intend to make the revised guidance available to Parliament and to companies or individuals who request it. The Foreign Affairs Committee will also receive a copy of the final version.

Ann Clwyd: To [illegible] the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the operational involvement of British private military companies in the recent hostilities in (a) Sierra Leone, (b) the Democratic Republic of Congo and (c) Angola; and if he will set out the Government's definition of a private military company. [69391]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have no confirmed reports of the involvement of British private military companies in combat operations in the recent hostilities in Sierra Leone, Angola or the Democratic Republic of Congo.

There is currently no agreed Whitehall-wide definition of a private military company. The Government are drawing up guidance on private military companies. This will be made available to Parliament and to companies or individuals who request it.

Trinidad and Tobago

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Trinidad Government about the cessation of the jurisdiction of the Privy Council over appeals from Trinidad and Tobago; and if he will make a statement. [69647]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, the Lord Chancellor's Department, Official Report, column 181.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made relating to prisoners on death row in Trinidad; and if he will make a statement. [69646]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We call on all countries to abolish the death penalty. Where the death penalty is used we urge that it should be used only in accordance with the State's international obligations and international standards. Together with our EU partners we have made a number of representations in Trinidad and Tobago on the cases of individual death row inmates.

Last year, together with our EU partners, we also urged Trinidad and Tobago to revoke their decisions to withdraw from the American Convention on Human Rights and to denounce and re-accede to the first Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights with a reservation on death penalty issues.

We have also held a number of bilateral discussions on the subject of the death penalty with members of the Trinidadian Government, including discussions at the Caribbean Forum in Nassau, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, and attended by members of the Trinidadian Government. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, Baroness Symons, also invited the Trinidad and Tobago High Commissioner to call on her in response to their individual cases where death warrants had been served. We are currently considering, with EU partners, what further representations to make to the Trinidad and Tobago Government.

Gibraltar

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 February 1999, Official Report, column 496, when the Bay of Gibraltar was first described as the Bay of Algeciras in a paper laid before Parliament. [69661]

Ms Quin [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Usage of this geographical term is as described in my answer to the hon. Member for Sevenoaks of 1 February 1999, Official Report, column 496. This has no implications for our position on sovereignty over British waters around Gibraltar. It is not practical to conduct a survey of past usage, but I understand that both terms have been used in public documents in the past.

Chechnya

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 212, for what reasons his Department received the Interfax report on the hostages in Chechnya over 24 hours after it was issued. [70239]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This media report from Chechnya was accessed in the FCO at about 0900 GMT on 7 December, when the relevant FCO officials started work.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, (1) pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 536, what action was taken by the Moscow Embassy on receipt of the Interfax report on the hostages in Chechnya; [70240]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 212, what action was taken by his Department on receipt of the Interfax report on the hostages in Chechnya. [70241]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This Interfax report was inaccurate in several important respects, as current investigations into the murders of the hostages in Chechnya confirm. Our information at the time of the report supported this assessment. We had seen nothing then, or since, to indicate that the hostages had ever been held outside Chechnya. H.M. Embassy had been in recent close contact with the Russian authorities, who had undertaken to inform us if they obtained any detailed information on the location of the hostages. It was clear then, as now, that no Russian rescue operation was planned. The media report followed a long series of similarly unreliable reports from Chechnya seen by the FCO during the previous 18 months.

As is usual in such cases, FCO officials circulated the report in Whitehall. A copy was also faxed to Granger Telecom.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 536, for what reason the Moscow Embassy received the Interfax report on the hostages in Chechnya 24 hours after it was issued. [70238]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Interfax media report was issued at 12:56 GMT on Sunday 6 December. The Embassy received the report as soon as it was open, at about 06:00 GMT on Monday 7 December.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69516]

Mr. Fatchett: The headline pay settlement was 2 per cent. on the paybill and, together with additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance-related increases averaging 4 per cent. The increases were not staged.

General Pinochet

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason the Metropolitan Police contacted his Department concerning their communications with the 5th Central Magistrate's Court in Madrid on 14 October. [70294]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Metropolitan Police informed the FCO that they had received, via Interpol, a request from the 5th Central Magistrate's Court in Madrid to interview Senator Pinochet.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the (i) nature and (ii) frequency of the contacts made by the Metropolitan Police with his Department, between the time when the police were contacted on 14 October by the 5th Central Magistrate's Court in Madrid and the issuing of an arrest warrant for General Pinochet. [70288]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This Department does not keep a comprehensive record of telephone calls made by officials. Until the inquiry concerning Senator Pinochet's entitlement to diplomatic immunity on the afternoon of 16 October, contacts between the Metropolitan Police and the FCO concerned only the request from the 5th Central Magistrate's Court in Madrid to interview Senator Pinochet, received on 14 October. All such contacts were by telephone.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the nature of his Department's investigations into the well-being or otherwise of General Pinochet following the incorrect news reports of the general's death in early October. [70286]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On 9 October, our Embassy in Santiago sought clarification from the FCO about inquiries from the press in Chile about reports that Senator Pinochet had died in hospital in London. FCO officials contacted the Chilean Embassy who confirmed that the reports were untrue and that Senator Pinochet was recovering from surgery in a London hospital.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance was provided by his Department towards the travel arrangements for Senator Pinochet's planned return to Chile in late 1998. [70293]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Windsor (Mr. Trend) on 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 149.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit in the Library those sections of the four reports from the British Embassy in Madrid to his Department which deal with the investigations by Judge Garzon. [70291]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 2 February 1999, Official Report, columns 597–98.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the diplomatic protests from the Chilean authorities following the arrest of General Pinochet made reference to promises from Her Majesty's Government to assist in the travel arrangements for Senator Pinochet's return to Chile. [70292]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: No such promises were made. Following Senator Pinochet's arrest on 16 October, the FCO received two Notes from the Government of Chile (on 17 and 23 October). Neither of these refers to promises from HMG to assist in the Senator's travel arrangements.

Malaysia (Human Rights)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Malaysia since 2 October 1998 about human rights and the application of the rule of law. [70244]

Mr. Fatchett: We take all appropriate opportunities to raise such issues with the Malaysian authorities. Most recently, we have expressed concern about a number of aspects of the trial of former Deputy Prime Minister Dato' Seri Anwar Ibrahim and related developments. Our High Commission have attended the trial regularly and fully associate themselves with the statements issued by the European Union on 2 October and 27 November.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the activities of Arab militias in Southern Sudan. [69037]

Mr. Fatchett: Military activity in Southern Sudan continues to be a cause for concern.

We have not recently received any representations on this specific issue but we continue to urge all sides to work towards a peaceful settlement to the ongoing civil war.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current status of the arms embargo on Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [69043]

Mr. Fatchett: We fully support and comply with the EU arms embargo which was implemented in 1994. The embargo was introduced as a result of the ongoing civil war in Sudan, the lack of any movement towards a peaceful settlement to the conflict and the resulting humanitarian crisis.

We expect the embargo to remain in place until the conflict has been resolved.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 10 February 1999

DEFENCE

Task Forces

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the (i) task forces, (ii) review panels and (iii) advisory groups his Department has, (b) the remit of each and (c) the members of each together with their principal employment and their level of remuneration. [62809]

Mr. Spellar: As far as bodies composed of independent members are concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) on 30 July 1998, Official Report, column 451.

While this Department has not set up any Task Forces since 1 May 1997, information on review panels and advisory groups on which external members serve and which are set up from time to time across the Department is not held centrally. Collecting this information is taking longer than expected. I will write to the hon. Member when this work is complete and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Territorial Army

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the retention of the 101 Battalion REME in Chorley since 16 December. [68157]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 28 January 1999]: Since 16 December 1998, my Department has received 22 Parliamentary Questions on this matter, all from my hon. Friend the Member for Chorley, five letters from Parish Councils and three letters from members of the public.

Trident

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work is (a) underway and (b) planned to provide a low-yield Trident warhead able to fulfil Trident's sub-strategic role. [68836]

Mr. Dog Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Member for Perth (Ms Cunningham) on 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 724.

Post-traumatic Stress Disorder

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the investigations which (a) have been commissioned and (b) have been circulated or recommended by medical officers in the past 20 years concerning the incidence of post-traumatic stress disorder among serving or former serving members of HM Armed Forces. [67428]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 2 February 1999]: My Department does not maintain central records of investigations commissioned, circulated or recommended by medical officers on the incidence of post-traumatic stress disorder among serving or former members of the Armed Forces. However, I am not aware that my Department has commissioned, or has been recommended by medical officers to commission, investigations specifically into the incidence of post-traumatic stress disorder among serving or former members of the Armed Forces over the past 20 years.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations have been received in the past 20 years from (a) former soldiers, (b) general practitioners or family doctors, (c) prison doctors or chaplains, (d) officers of the court and (e) others, concerning the incidence of post-traumatic stress disorder. [67429]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 2 February 1999]: The information requested is not available as no central records are maintained by my Department of representations received concerning post-traumatic stress disorder.

RN Base Clyde

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, columns 460–61, on RN Base Faslane, in which year the current civilian system of monitoring started at RN Naval Base Clyde; and what proportion of Navy supervisors were qualified to City and Guilds standards prior to that date. [69087]

Mr. Spellar: The use of civilian Health Physics Monitoring Supervisors was introduced at the Clyde Naval Base around November 1989.

Prior to this date, there were two categories of supervisors in the area of Health Physics, both were Royal Naval personnel. Monitoring Supervisors were in charge of the administration of the Monitors, while Radiological Protection Supervisors maintained an oversight of the Monitoring aspects. The latter were qualified to City and Guilds Stage 2 in Radiation Safety Practice.

Procurement Contracts

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria he uses in establishing the preferment to be given to (a) UK only and (b) UK/European bids for procurement contracts when the competition is with non-EU contractors. [69469]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD has a policy of open international competition whenever this is possible. A wide range of factors are considered by the MOD when making procurement decisions, including: long term value-for-money, security of supply, UK technological capabilities and the benefits to MOD of potential exports.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria he uses to assess the export potential for UK-designed and produced equipment when considering bids made by competitors for defence procurement contracts. [69468]

Mr. Spellar: MOD assessments of the export potential of British defence equipment are based on a judgment of the potential requirements in the market place, the level of competition the UK company is likely to face, and the company's own assessment of its export potential, tempered by our knowledge of their previous record of export success.

Skill Shortages

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what skill shortages he has identified within the UK defence industry; and what steps he has taken to address them. [69409]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to each of the Government's public consultations. [69774]

Mr. Spellar: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to public consultation conducted only by the Ministry of Defence. No single collation and assessment of all public consultation conducted by the Ministry of Defence exists. Our largest public consultation exercise to date was that conducted to inform the Strategic Defence Review. Where consent was given by the authors, copies of submissions made to the Ministry of Defence in the course of that exercise have been placed in the Library of the House. The assessment of those submissions formed part of the Strategic Defence Review, the recommendations of which were reported to Parliament on 8 July 1998, Official Report, columns 1073–96.

War Memorial (Service Women)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to fund a war memorial to service women. [70174]

Mr. Spellar: It has been a long-standing policy of successive Governments that the cost of memorials is usually met not from public funds, but from private donations or public subscription. However, the Government have nothing but the utmost respect and gratitude for those women who served and died in the service of their country.

We are aware of a campaign to erect a memorial to Service women. Although the Government are unable to assist financially with this project, I have announced in the House on several occasions since 20 May 1997, that if the necessary funds were raised from public subscription or private donation, my Department would be more than happy to provide representation at any dedication ceremony.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69963]

(2) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69837]

(3) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner; [69904]

(4) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69951]

(5) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69986]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

General Pinochet

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason the Defence Export Services Organisation was made aware on 6 October 1998 of the presence in the United Kingdom of General Pinochet; to which other sections in his Department and beyond this information was relayed; and if he will make a statement. [70242]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The Defence Export Services Organisation became aware of Senator Pinochet's visit in the context of other business; DESO was not involved in arrangements for the visit and there is no record of the information being relayed further. In addition, as my noble Friend Lord Hoyle explained on 11 January 1999, Official Report, House of Lords, column 5, other officials within the central staffs of the MOD had been informed of the Senator's impending visit on 16 September 1998 by officials at the FCO. However, this information was not passed to any other section, and no further action was taken.

Northern Division HQ

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his decision to close 2 Division HQ in York and create a new northern division HQ in Edinburgh was based on an investment appraisal of (a) complete divisional/district restructuring, (b) that element which involved a choice of locations or (c) other factors. [70126]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The decision took into account an investment appraisal of options for the location of the headquarters of the proposed northern division.

HEALTH

New Variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if SEAC has been asked for its opinion as to the potential efficacy of pentosan polysulphate in treating nvCJD; and if he will make a statement; [61679]

(2) what is the cost of an oral course of pentosan polysulphate as prophylaxis against nvCJD. [61680]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 2 December 1998]: It is not yet known whether an oral course of pentosan polysulphate would be effective as a prophylaxis against nvCJD, or what dose or duration of treatment would be required, or what adverse side effects there might be from its use for this purpose. Therefore it is not possible to calculate the cost of an oral course as an effective prophylaxis against nvCJD.

The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) met on 11 January and considered the potential use of pentosan polysulphate as a prophylactic. The Committee is in the process of preparing its advice to Ministers. The Committee on the Safety of Medicines is also considering this use of pentosan. The Government are awaiting the advice from these committees.

Blood and Blood Products

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of persons who have been inoculated with blood or blood products over the past three years in the United Kingdom. [61681]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 2 December 1998]: It is estimated that about one million people in the United Kingdom receive blood and blood products every year.

Epilepsy

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of people who suffer from epilepsy in the UK. [70214]

Mr. Hutton: Epilepsy is the commonest chronic neurological disorder and it is estimated to affect between 400,000 and 420,000 people in the United Kingdom.

Nurses (Pay)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the average pay levels in London for nurses in each grade. [70041]

Mr. Denham: Estimated total annual average earnings for nursing staff in London by grade, taken from the Department's August 1997 earnings survey, are shown in the table.

National Health Service Hospital and Community Health Services nursing and midwifery staff: Estimated total annual average earnings by grade

London as at December 1998

£

Clinical grade	Annual total earnings[1]
A	12,900
B	14,800
C	16,100
D	17,800
E	20,700
F	23,400
G	26,000
H	27,500
I	29,800

[1] Annual total earnings is an estimate averaged across all incremental points. It includes basic pay, elements from flat rate allowances such as London allowance, on call and stand by and elements from allowances that are salary related such as London allowance and special duty.

Note:

Data are rounded to the nearest £100.

Source:

Department of Health Earnings Survey August 1997

Medicines (Children)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to make EU guidance on medicines for children legally binding on pharmaceutical companies; [69684]

(2) what steps he is taking to assess the cost to the NHS of making guidance on medicines for children legally binding on pharmaceutical companies; [69685]

(3) what steps are being taken by EU member states to monitor the way pharmaceutical companies comply with EU guidance on the licensing of medicines for children; which companies have complied with this guidance; which products are being developed in accordance with this guidance; and when the application of the guidance will be extended to products already on the market, in other EU member states. [69683]

Ms Jowell: The European Union guidance came into operation in September 1997. As the development times for medicinal products are relatively long, there will be a delay before trials in children are submitted with all relevant applications for authorisation of medicinal products.

Where a medicinal product has an anticipated therapeutic benefit in children, the applicant is asked to provide details of a paediatric development plan if this is not already included in the dossier supporting the application for marketing authorisation. Information relevant to paediatric use, based on the availability or not of paediatric data, is included in the product particulars. The EU guidance on the investigation of medicinal products in children applies to products already on the market as well as to new products. Information on those companies which have so far complied with this guidance in other member states is not available, neither is information on those products which are being developed in accordance with this guidance in other member states.

European guidance is not legally binding on pharmaceutical companies and no steps have been taken to assess the costs to the National Health Service of making guidance on medicines for children legally binding on pharmaceutical companies. If the guidance does not have the effect of increasing the availability of appropriate medicinal products to children, there is scope for the United Kingdom and other Member States to raise with the European Commission the question of whether legislative steps should be taken to strengthen the regulatory framework.

ME

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work programme of the working group on myalgic encephalomyelitis, and its timescale. [70255]

Ms Jowell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Lepper) on 4 February 1999, Official Report, columns 524–25.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he has made in promoting awareness and understanding of chronic fatigue syndrome/ME among (a) health professionals and (b) the general public; and if he will make a statement. [70160]

Ms Jowell: The recent publicity surrounding the announcement of the establishment of the working group on chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis (CFS/ME) and the involvement of many health professionals, academics, patients and carers in its work has already raised awareness of CFS/ME. The best practice guidance that the Group has been tasked with producing will also raise understanding and awareness. In the mean time, we will continue to work with the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Alliance to promote awareness and understanding of this distressing and debilitating condition.

Under-age Alcoholics

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions are made for the treatment of under-age alcoholics; and if he will make a statement. [68648]

Ms Jowell: Health and local authorities are responsible for assessing the level of need for all alcohol services locally, and making arrangements to meet that need in accordance with local priorities and the resources available.

General Practitioners

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of practising physicians are general practitioners. [70080]

Mr. Denham: There were 27,100 general practitioners (unrestricted principals) as at 1 October 1997. This figure was 31 per cent. of the total number of doctors employed in the National Health Service.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) doctors' and (b) general practitioners' posts are unfilled in (i) England and (ii) Norfolk. [70081]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average age of retirement for general practitioners was in (a) 1980, (b) 1990 and (c) 1998; and if he will make a statement. [70083]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the average number of working days lost per (a) doctor and (b) general practitioner for psychological reasons in (i) 1980, (ii) 1990, (iii) 1997 and (iv) 1998; and if he will make a statement, [70084]

(2) what was the average number of working days lost per (a) doctor and (b) general practitioner for medical reasons in (i) 1980, (ii) 1990, (iii) 1997 and (iv) 1998; and if he will make a statement. [70085]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not collected centrally. A survey carried out in National Health Service trusts in August 1998 identified the sickness trusts in August 1998 identified the sickness absence rates for medical and dental staff at 1.6 per cent. The survey did not distinguish between medical and psychological illness.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Portcullis House

Mrs. Dean: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on monitoring the progress of the Portcullis House project. [70000]

Mr. Kirkwood: The Commission has authorised a mid-term review of progress on Portcullis House.

The objective of the review, which is part of a continuing programme of supervision of the project, will be to satisfy the Commission that the new parliamentary building can be delivered, to the desired quality, on budget and within the agreed timetable.

The hon. Lady will be aware that in approving the principle of the new building, the House itself was well aware of the important heritage implications of what will be a major parliamentary development on an internationally important site. While the Commission recognises that Portcullis House needs to be a building of the first architectural quality, it has also been concerned throughout with the need to keep costs in control.

The review, to be conducted by Northcroft, will analyse cost movements to date and include an independent risk appraisal of outturn costs. It will also provide an opportunity to examine organisational structure and procedures used during the project.

House of Commons Switchboard

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee for what reason the House of Commons switchboard does not have available the fax numbers of Committees and Departments of the House. [69467]

Mr. Allan: Action has recently been taken to ensure that the information available to the House of Commons switchboard is consistent with the contents of the internal Parliamentary Phone Directory. However, entries in that directory are determined by the wishes of Members, Departments and Committees and therefore are not necessarily comprehensive.

It has also been a long-standing policy that the switchboard will reveal telephone numbers to external callers only if expressly permitted to do so by the owner. This complements the restricted circulation of the Parliamentary Phone Directory.

If Departments and Committees wish their fax numbers to be listed and to be made available to external callers, there is no obstacle to doing so.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism Offices

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to assist local authorities with tourism offices. [68470]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 1 February 1999]: My Department is encouraging local authorities, as major deliverers of cultural services, to produce cultural strategies. These strategies will cover the broad range of cultural services offered by local authorities which relate to DCMS interest (including tourism) and aim to develop their economic and social impact through greater integration.

Association of British Travel Agents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of (a) travel agents and (b) tour operators were members of the Association of British Travel Agents in (i) 1992, (ii) 1995 and (iii) 1998. [69375]

Janet Anderson: The Association of British Travel Agents (ABTA) suggests that in 1998 around 95 per cent. of high street travel agents and 65 per cent. of tour operators were ABTA members. Information is not available for 1992 and 1995.

Campus Radio Stations

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects the Radio Authority to produce guidelines for issuing licences to campus radio stations. [69728]

Janet Anderson: The Radio Authority published its notes of guidance for low-powered AM licences, intended for use by establishments such as universities and hospitals, on 11 January 1999. Copies of the guidelines have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the German Government on negotiation of contracts for processing nuclear waste in the United Kingdom. [69158]

Mr. Battle: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with the German Government on negotiation of contracts for processing nuclear waste in the United Kingdom. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 547.

Uranium

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the production of highly enriched uranium for civil purposes is adequate to meet current demand. [69533]

Mr. Battle: This is a commercial and operational matter for suppliers of enrichment services and their customers, subject to satisfying the necessary international and regulatory requirements.

Employment Relations Bill

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates he has made of the annual increase in awards for unfair dismissal under the provisions of the Employment Relations Bill. [69593]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 8 February 1999]: While some of the proposals contained in the Employment Relations Bill are expected to increase the number of applications to Employment Tribunals, others could reduce the number of disputes that result in an application to a Tribunal. We expect the net effect on the total number of applications to be very small. We have not made an estimate specifically of the number of unfair dismissal cases, or of how many of these may be successful at a Tribunal hearing.

British Coal (Canteen Workers)

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the total cost to public funds of the British Coal canteen workers equal pay claim; and when he expects the case to be resolved. [69896]

Mr. Battle: This remains a matter for British Coal. I understand they have settled around 70 claims from UDM and a few NUM canteen workers at an average settlement cost of around £1,300 per claim. In the meantime, the Employment Tribunal has ordered that sample cases be referred to an independent expert, who has been asked to submit his report by March 1999. Subsequent progress will depend largely on the content of this report.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69943]

(2) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69973]

(3) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69829]

(4) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69980]

(5) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. [69911]

Mr. Byers: The executive and advisory non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) sponsored by the Department are actively seeking ways of operating in a more open way consistent with the recommendations of "Quangos—Opening the doors". A number of executive NDPBs already issue summary reports of meetings where practicable and these are in the public domain; these include the National Consumer Council; the Gas Consumer Council; the Post Office Users Councils; the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) and the Research Councils. All executive NDPBs with board members have a register of their members' interests and these are available to the public, for example the Coal Authority publishes its register in its Annual Report and Accounts and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission place its register on its website. There is no statutory requirement in legislation for this sort of activity; however it represents good practice and is entirely consistent with "Quangos—Opening the doors".

In the case of advisory NDPBs, the Council for Science and Technology produces summaries of meetings and issues press notices on its website, which also contains information on meetings, events, and work in progress; it is also due to publish a register of members interest shortly. The Human Genetics Advisory Commission issues summary reports of meetings which are published on its website. It has a register of members' interests as do others, for example the LINK/Teaching Company Scheme Board, the Measurement Advisory Committee, the Spectrum Management Advisory Group, the Industrial Development Advisory Board and the seven Regional Industrial Development Boards. Other advisory NDPBs are taking steps to have registers of interest in place shortly, in line with the recommendations in "Quangos—Opening the doors". As in the case of executive NDPBs, there are no statutory requirements for this.

The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has held open meetings at its Dounreay and Windscale sites and also has local liaison committees which have a formal membership drawn from the local community. The Coal Authority's annual meetings are open to the public. The Research Councils regularly hold open days, seminars, exhibitions and public consultations. Other NDPBs, including the National Consumer Council, Gas Consumer Council, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, the Post Office Users National Council and the three Post Office councils for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are considering whether they might hold open meetings.

The National Consumer Council and the Gas Consumers Council both have a complaints procedure as part of their draft code. The Post Office Users National Council and the three national councils for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are in the process of establishing their own complaints procedures. There are no statutory requirements in this area.

The Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property holds public meetings; the Human Genetics Advisory Commission has held its first open meeting and is planning a programme of consultative meetings for this year; the Council for Science and Technology has provision for holding open public meetings within its code of practice and also for the co-opting of third parties onto the sub-group of Council members for particular topics. Several other advisory NDPBs including the Energy Advisory Panel and Measurement Advisory Committee are considering whether it would be appropriate for them to hold public meetings. There is no statutory requirement for them to do this.

All appointments to the Department's executive and advisory NDPBs are made in accordance with the Commissioner for Public Appointments code of practice. The code requires that appointments are made on merit judged against criteria relevant to the responsibilities and duties of each appointment. Each of the Department's Consumer bodies requires experience of knowledge of consumer issues.

Many of the executive NDPBs have a statutory base: exceptions include the Simpler Trade Procedures Board and the National Consumer Council. The following executive NDPBs are currently under the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Ombudsman: the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service; the Research Councils, the Coal Authority, the Commissioner for Protection against Unlawful Industrial Action, and the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members. The British Hallmarking Council; Gas Consumers Council; Post Office Users Council; National Consumer Council; Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and the UKAEA are due to be brought within the Parliamentary Ombudsman's jurisdiction shortly by means of an Order in Council which goes before the Privy Council this month.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total number of claims settled for the industrial disease, vibration white finger, before the new scheme was agreed, indicating the (a) highest, (b) lowest and (c) average award. [69841]

Mr. Battle: As at 4 February the Department has settled 3,572 claims for vibration white finger. Of these 1,968 have been settled by payment, and the remaining 1,604 have been ruled out. The individual settlement payments have ranged from £3,000 to £200, with an average of £1,900. The total cost of settlements to date is £3,646,349. In addition to this the Department has paid £1,033,979 in costs to plaintiffs' solicitors.

Since November last year Plaintiffs' solicitors have been advised that higher settlement levels were likely to be agreed with the Plaintiffs' Solicitors Group, who represent 60 per cent. of the plaintiffs, and they were asked to advise their clients accordingly.

Following the agreement reached with the plaintiffs' solicitors on 22 January the average award is likely to be in the region of £6,000 for General Damages (within a range of £500 to £18,000). Additional compensation for special damages will be decided on a case by case basis.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to all the Government's public consultations. [69769]

Mr. Byers: I will arrange for a summary of responses to all public consultation exercises carried out by the Department since 1 May 1997 to be placed in the Library of the House.

EC Copyright Directive

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to the (a) European Commission and (b) European Parliament concerning the proposed EC copyright directive. [70113]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The United Kingdom has made clear to all concerned our support for the main aims of the draft copyright Directive. However, we have expressed strong reservations on the over-prescriptive approach on exceptions to rights, many of which exceptions have little or no effect on the internal market. In particular, we remain firmly opposed to a general requirement to impose levies in return for all private copying exceptions, no matter how minor. The Government wish to maintain a fair and reasonable balance between the interests of rights holders and those of users of rights and intermediaries, including network operators and service providers. We have also called for clarification of the provision on technological protection measures, while supporting its general aim, and have welcomed the fact that liability of intermediaries is being considered as a horizontal issue in the draft electronic commerce Directive.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ensure that the traditional interests of copyright holders are protected in the context of the electronic media under the proposed EC copyright directive. [70114]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The Government are firmly committed to ensuring that copyright protection across the EU is at least as good as that already in UK law; strong intellectual property rights are fundamental to an innovative economy. Digital technology allows data to be more easily disseminated and used or copied, and effective copyright protection for the electronic age is essential. Without the confidence that rights are properly protected worldwide, there would be no incentive for suppliers of information to make works available on-line and therefore no global information society. The Government believe the copyright Directive should prove to be of considerable benefit to UK rights holders in the context of Europe as whole, and we have broadly welcomed it. However, we will also continue to press for more flexibility for member states in the exceptions provisions of the Directive. Rights holders, users of rights and intermediaries are all key players in ensuring the success of the new services of the information age.

Chargeable Export Services

Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what systems are in place for measuring the effectiveness and impact of the major Government chargeable export services. [70941]

Mr. Wilson: We have received results of independent surveys conducted among a sample of over 1000 businesses who used Overseas Trade Services in 1997. I am delighted that the results show an average overall satisfaction rate of 88 per cent. compared to an average of 83 per cent. in 1995 and 1996. Furthermore, the positive trend was the same for virtually every individual scheme.

Last year we reviewed the way in which DTI and FCO monitors and evaluates customer satisfaction and perceptions of the major export promotion services we deliver. As a result, the Quality Management System (QMS) was significantly revised so as to enable us to obtain more detailed information about customer satisfaction levels on a world-wide basis.

The Quality Management System will be further enhanced in 1999 to take into account comments of the business representatives of the British Overseas Trade Board's Regional Committee, and the tendering process for a new contractor to start work in April is currently underway. The contractor will carry out work to capture data relevant to the new joint FCO/DTI export promotion objectives.

CABINET OFFICE

Drugs

10. Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to support the parents of young people who abuse drugs. [68653]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government's anti-drugs strategy includes the provision of information, advice and support to parents. Support is provided day to day through the National Drugs Helpline. Locally, Drug Action Teams were asked to consult and to consider the needs of parents and carers when drawing up plans for local action.

12. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how he intends to improve co-ordination of anti-drug measures at local level. [68655]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Drug Action Teams should take a strategic overview of anti-drugs action including resource allocation and link up with other local and regional partnerships. They have now submitted their provisional local action plans for 1999–2000. These are being assessed.

13. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the incidence of drug misuse among people under the age of 25 years. [68656]

25. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the incidence of drug misuse among people under the age of 25 years. [68669]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Drugs misuse is most common among people in their teens and early twenties. About half of young people are likely to take drugs at some time in their lives, but only about one-fifth will become regular misusers, with a smaller minority developing the most serious problems.

26. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what initiatives have been taken by the United Kingdom's anti-drugs co-ordinator to combat new trends in drugs misuse. [68670]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Government's anti-drug strategy, "Tackling Drugs to Build a Better Britain", provides a framework for co-ordinated action against the range of drugs problems over ten years. Action is overseen and monitored by Keith Hellawell, to whom the local Drug Action Teams across the country have recently reported with their action plans for 1999/2000. His first annual report and national plan will be produced in the spring.

Liberal Democrats (Discussions)

11. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many policy areas he has identified to date as suitable for detailed discussions with Liberal Democrat hon. Members using the Joint Consultative Cabinet Committee mechanisms. [68654]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The review of the work of the Joint Consultative Committee, which I am undertaking with the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) is not yet complete.

Ministerial Travel

14. Mr. Flight: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the cost of ministerial travel for each Minister in his Department since 1 May 1997. [68657]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Ministerial Code requires Ministers always to make effective and cost-efficient travel arrangements. Figures on the spend by this Government on Ministers' visits overseas were published by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today.

19. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on guidelines within his Department for ministerial travel. [68663]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Ministerial Code requires Ministers always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements.

24. Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to review ministerial travel regulations. [68668]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: None. Ministers are required under the terms of the Ministerial Code always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements. The rules on ministerial travel are the same as those that applied under the previous Administration.

Charter Marks

15. Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the charter mark awards scheme. [68658]

16. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the 1998 charter mark awards. [68659]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This has been another very successful year for the charter mark awards scheme with 508 awards being made—the highest number ever. There were a record number of applications from virtually all types of public service in the UK, and there were 128 second time winners and 18 third time winners. It was particularly pleasing to note that there were 74 winners of the award who had been unsuccessful in the previous year.

Charter mark is making a real contribution to improving public services and we will continue to develop the scheme to make it even more effective.

Better Government (Older People)

17. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the better government for older people programme. [68660]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Better Government for Older People initiative, an important part of our commitment to modernising government, has valuable lessons to teach about developing improved services that are more responsive to the needs of their users. Next month we are putting in place a Learning Network so that many more local authorities across the UK can share in this learning and experience. Well over two hundred authorities have already expressed an interest in joining the Network.

21. Ms Moran: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what measures he intends to take to encourage local authorities to become involved in the better government initiative. [68665]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Local Government is a key partner in the drive to improve public service effectiveness and responsiveness and is involved at all levels in the production of the Modernising Government White Paper. For example, Sir Jeremy Beecham, Chairman of the Local Government Association attends meetings of the Ministerial Group on Better Government. I welcome a wide debate on these matters and I recently launched the Modernising Government discussion forum on the Downing Street website, to encourage people to participate in the consultation process.

Government (Modernisation)

18. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on his Department's agenda for (a) modernising Government and (b) improving the efficiency of public services. [68661]

22. Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the progress of the modernising government strategy. [68666]

Mr. Kilfoyle: As my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office explained to the House on 21 October last year, the Government will publish a White Paper in the Spring, setting out their programme for modernising government and joining-up public services to respond better to the people that need them. Discussion on the 10 Downing Street website describes the work in hand and invites people to join in.

Quangos

20. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will announce further measures to abolish quangos; and if he will make a statement. [68664]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government remain committed to keeping the number of NDPBs to an absolute minimum. Many NDPBs have already been abolished and many more have been targeted for abolition in the near future. All NDPBs which remain are subject to a rolling programme of quinquennial reviews to ensure that the downward pressure on numbers continues.

Public Services

23. Mr. Miller: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on his Department's agenda for improving the efficiency of public services. [68667]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The White Paper on Modernising Government will describe the Government's agenda for improving the efficiency and effectiveness of public services, and is to be published in the spring. It will build on our current initiatives which focus on promoting partnerships between the public and private sector, investing in new collaborative initiatives, benchmarking, setting and measuring performance standards, and special organisation reviews.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 1999, Official Report, column 405, on civil servants' hearing impairments, if he will list the other circumstances which resulted in large numbers of civil servants not qualifying for a pension. [702[illegible]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The circumstances under which civil servants leave without qualifying for a civil service pension are as follows:

Prior to 1972

all those who left unestablished service

all those who left established service under age 50 or over age 50 with less than 10 years' service those women who resigned on marriage and received a gratuity

Since 1 June 1972

those who left before 6 April 1988 with less than 5 years' service or since that date with less than 2 years' service

those who are excluded from the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme by virtue of Rule 1.4 (mainly casual staff, and certain part-time staff before 1995) or who have chosen to opt-out of the pension scheme.

Civil Service (Fast Stream)

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement about future arrangements for recruitment to the Civil Service fast stream development programme. [70942]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Management of the Fast Stream recruitment process was contracted out to the Capita Group plc as part of the decision to privatise the former Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency in October 1996.

A review of the operation of the recruitment process took place during 1998. As a result I have decided in principle that, on the expiry of the current contracts, the selection stages of the process will return to direct Civil Service management. I expect specialist services including advertising, publicity, response handling and psychology support to continue to be supplied by the private sector following competitive tender.

Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration will be extended to cover all executive non-departmental public bodies and those advisory non-departmental public bodies which have significant dealings with members of the public. [70943]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Her Majesty in Council has today approved an Order extending the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration to an additional one hundred and eleven executive non-departmental public bodies and to forty-seven advisory non-departmental public bodies which have direct dealings with members of the public. This fulfils the commitment that the Government gave in "Quangos: Opening the Doors"—published on 29 June 1988—and will substantially increase the avenues of redress available to members of the public who wish to complain about their treatment by a non-departmental public body. It is another example of this Government's determination to ensure that all non-departmental public bodies are properly and fully accountable to both Parliament and the public for their actions.

The Order will be laid before Parliament on Monday 22 February. Subject to Parliamentary approval, the Order will come into force on Monday 15 March.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69967]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The information requested is as follows:

(a) none of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department admit members of the public to all board and committee meetings.

(b) public meetings are held by:

The Better Regulation Task Force

The Civil Service Appeal Board

The Committee on Standards in Public Life

The Women's National Commission

(c) the following bodies have lay or consumer representatives:

The Better Regulation Task Force

The Civil Service Appeal Board

The Women's National Commission.

In addition, the Advisory Committee on Advertising is comprised of senior advertising and media professionals who are independent of government and advertising agency suppliers; members are appointed to the Committee on Standards in Public Life to bring a mix of experience and expertise from different areas of public life; and membership of the Security Commission and the Security Vetting Appeals Panel is drawn from a range of people from different professions and backgrounds.

There is no statutory requirement for the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department to admit the public to meetings or to hold public meetings. However, all advisory non-departmental public bodes are encouraged to do so where practicable and appropriate. Nor is there any statutory requirement for advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department to have lay or consumer representatives. However, all members of advisory non-departmental public bodies are appointed on merit and membership will, where appropriate, include individuals from a balance of backgrounds.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69839]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: There is no statutory requirement for the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department to publish the minutes of meetings, the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings, or a register of members' interests. However, all advisory non-departmental public bodies are encouraged to do so where practicable and appropriate. Currently, minutes of meetings, agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings are published by the Women's National Commission. A record of the hearing of Security Vetting Appeals Panel is given to the appellant and the relevant organisation. Reports of Civil Service Appeal Board hearings go only to the relevant interested parties.

Registers of Interests are either in place, or are in the process of being prepared, in all advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department. These Registers are either published or are made available for public inspection on request.

Special Advisers

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what representations he has received regarding the work undertaken by special advisers; and if he will make a statement. [68671]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I receive occasional representations on the role of Special Advisers. The most recent representations from hon. Members were put to me in a debate on 13 January 1999, Official Report, columns 311–68, on Government Information.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Road User Charging

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the first road user charging schemes to be introduced. [69390]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Implementation will be subject to the necessary legislation, which we will introduce when Parliamentary time permits. The preparatory work is underway and we have offered help to local authorities outside London who wish to make early progress. Implementation in London will depend on decisions by the Major following the GLA election in May 2000.

A3 (Hindhead)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to visit Hindhead to examine the transport problems on the A3. [69731]

Dr. Reid: I have no plans currently to visit Hindhead to examine the transport problems on the A3. We already recognise that there is a serious congestion problem and in December last year announced our intention that an A3 study would form part of a group of road-based studies.

Revenue Support Grant

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the (a) RSG and (b) RSG per head in (i) Waverley and (ii) Sedgefield for (1) 1999–2000, (2) 1994–95 and (3) 1989–90. [69730]

Mr. Prescott: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million		£ per head
	Waverley	Sedgefield	Waverley	Sedgefield
Revenue Support Grant
1999–2000	0.864	3.570	8	40
1994–95	2.114	3.571	18	39
Block Grant [1]
1989–90	0	3.009	0	34

[1] Calculated under the Rate Support Grant Report 1989–90

Repossessions

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement concerning the case of Ropaighealach v. Barclays Bank (The Times, 6 January) and the right of a mortgagor to enter a property and dispossess its owner without a court order. [69693]

Mr. Raynsford: In the case of Ropaigealach v Barclays Bank plc (Times Law Report, January 6 1999) the Court of Appeal held that a mortgage lender was entitled to exercise its common law right to take possession of a mortgaged dwelling house without first obtaining a court order. The protection provided to the borrower by section 36 of the Administration of Justice Act 1970 applied only where the lender had brought an action for possession.

There are restrictions on the exercise of a mortgage lender's common law right to take possession of a mortgaged dwelling. The right must be exercised peaceably. Use of violence would be an offence under the Criminal Law Act 1977, and the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 provides protection for tenants occupying the property.

Portsmouth Rail-head

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions he has had with (a) Portsmouth City Council and (b) Portsmouth Ferry Port concerning the development of a freight rail-head in Portsmouth; [69673]

(2) what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the development of a freight rail-head in Portsmouth since 1990. [69848]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand that a feasibility study for a sea-rail link at Portsmouth is benefiting from a grant of 18,000 ecu from the European Commission under the Trans-European Network ("TENS") scheme. I met a delegation representing Portsmouth Commercial Port and Portsmouth City Council on 11 January to discuss general investment in the Port. However, the issue of rail links was not raised.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) individuals and (b) organisations that have made representations requesting that council tax Band G be split into two new bands with consequential increases in the proportion of tax due for both the new band and the current Band H in order to reflect better the differential in value between lower bands; and if he will make a statement. [69998]

Ms Armstrong: As part of our review of Local Government Finance last year, we invited views on the operation of the council tax.

Two councillors and the following organisations made representations requesting that Band G be split:

Local Authorities (121 Authorities)

Rother
Harrow
Reigate and Banstead
Sutton
Durham City
Forest of Dean
Mid Suffolk
Wychavon
Fenland
Teesdale
West Oxfordshire
Ellesmere Port and Neston
Hastings
South Shropshire
Wealden
Harrogate
Devon
East Northamptonshire
Staffordshire
Lewes
Alnwick
New Forest
Bassetlaw
Nuneaton and Bedworth
Macclesfield
Dacorum
Dudley
Castle Point
East Riding of Yorkshire
Shepway
North Norfolk
Canterbury
Eastleigh
Walsall
Oadby and Wigston
Barrow-in-Furness
Wigan
Leicestershire
East Hampshire
Broxtowe
Crawley
Peterborough
Craven
East Staffordshire
Warrington
Warwickshire
Crewe and Nantwich
Cumbria
Barnet
West Dorset
Statford-on-Avon
Sevenoaks
Telford and the Wrekin
Southend-on-Sea
Bolton
Knowsley
Fareham
Gloucestershire
Swindon
Suffolk

Ribble Valley
Bradford
Staffordshire
King's Lynn and West Norfolk
Amber Valley
Wakefield
Portsmouth
Derby
Newcastle upon Tyne
Guildford
Coventry
Camden
Calderdale
Doncaster
Birmingham
Greenwich
Hillingdon
Forest Heath
Manchester
Barnsley
Bolsover
Epping Forest
Aylesbury Vale
Luton
Rochdale
Torbay
Northampton
Wear Valley
Bristol
Barnsley Central
Wyre Forest
Exeter
Tyne and Wear
South Oxfordshire
Ipswich
Milton Keynes
Leicester
Durham County
West Berkshire
Dorset
Gateshead
Braintree
South Lakeland
North Tyneside
Allerdale
Buckinghamshire
Worcester
Watford
Lancashire
Bury
Elmbridge
Liverpool
Southwark
Merton
Sheffield
Solihull
St. Helens
Boston
Welwyn Hatfield
Maidstone
Rutland

Local Authority Representative Organisations

Society of Municipal Treasurers
Special Interest Group of Municipal Authorities outside London
Local Government Association
South Yorkshire Districts

Police Authorities

Warwickshire Police Authority
Lancashire Police Authority

Parish Councils

Broomley and Stocksfield Parish Council

Voluntary Sector Organisations

Age Concern

Political Organisations

Blackburn and Darwen Labour Group
Woodstock and District Labour Party
Warwickshire Labour Party Group
Liberal Democrats Group, Allerdale.

Three individuals and the following organisations made representation to retain the current valuation bands:

Local Authorities

Rushcliffe
Wandsworth
Hampshire
Tonbridge and Malling
Restormel
Redbridge
Cheshire
Isles of Scilly
Rugby
Lewisham
Reading

Others

Local Government Research Unit, Wolverhampton
Wolverhampton Conservative Group.

We fully considered these representations along with others that we received and set our conclusions in the White Paper, Modern Local Government—"In Touch with the People". We explained that the council tax was generally working well and that we do not plan to make any fundamental changes to the council tax, or carry out a revaluation, during the course of this Parliament.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to all the Government's public consultations. [69780]

Mr. Meale: My Department follows the Cabinet Office guidance, "How to Conduct Written Consultation Exercises". A list of respondents is placed in the Libraries of both Houses and copies of responses are placed in the Departments' libraries, except where the respondent has asked that their response remains confidential. Where possible, a summary of responses is produced and made public.

Housing Steering Group

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if there will be tenant representation on the housing steering group on best value. [69736]

Mr. Raynsford: The official level Best Value in Housing Steering Group that we established last year to examine the application of best value to housing has two tenant representatives from TAROE—the tenants' and residents' organisations of England. This is underpinned by a tenants' sounding board focus group comprised of local authority and housing association tenant representatives.

Fur Trade

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what action the Government are taking to ensure the implementation of the ban on furs entering the EU under Regulation 3254/91; [70009]

(2) what action the Government are taking to press the Commission and EU Ministers to set a deadline for ratification of the humane trapping standards for animals caught in leghold traps; [70008]

(3) if (a) Russia, (b) Canada and (c) the USA have ratified the agreement on humane trapping standards for animals caught in leghold traps; and what is the deadline for ratification of the convention. [70007]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 8 February 1999]: I understand that Canada and Russia have not yet ratified the agreement on humane trapping standards for animals caught in leghold traps agreed with the European Community in July 1997. I also understand that the USA has not ratified the agreed minute agreed with the European Community in December 1997. We will look for suitable opportunities to discuss with the Commission and EU Ministers what further progress can be made in pressing Canada, Russia and USA to ratify these agreements.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are responsible for ensuring implementation of the import ban on certain furs into the United Kingdom under Regulation 3254/91. In the case of all measures prohibiting the importation of goods, it is standard procedure for detailed written guidance to be issued to Customs officers as to the manner of regulating legitimate trade and the handling of illegal consignments. This practice was followed in the case of furs caught in leghold traps. I also understand that since the customs entry documents for virtually all commercial imports are processed electronically, and because all imported goods have a specific "commodity code" number which must be declared by importers on those documents, Customs officials are able to identify furs which may be prohibited from entering the United Kingdom under the Regulation.

Groundwater Regulations 1998

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which EU countries require individual businesses to register under the Groundwater Directive. [69782]

Mr. Meale: It is a requirement of the Groundwater Directive (80/68/EEC) that individual discharges to groundwater should be subject to prior authorisation. It is for Member States, in accordance with their treaty obligations, to transpose these requirements into national law. The Groundwater Regulations 1998 complete transposition of the Directive by requiring authorisation of the disposal of listed substances to land, as distinct from a register of businesses.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he plans to issue to farmers with regard to the necessity of registering with the Environment Agency under the groundwater regulations. [69783]

Mr. Meale: The Groundwater Regulations 1998 provide that disposals, or tipping for the purpose of disposal to land of listed substances, require prior authorisation. Transitional arrangements provide that applications which relate to an activity substantially the same as one carried out by the applicant previously, and made prior to 1 April 1999 (when the main provisions in the Regulations come into force), will be deemed approved until finally disposed of the by Agency. My officials wrote on 21 December 1998, to draw attention to these arrangements, to those consulted on the draft regulations, including the National Farmers Union, Tenant Farmers Association and the Farming Union of Wales. Draft guidance will be published for consultation as soon as possible.

Connex South East

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many complaints have been received by his Department about (a) overcrowding, (b) standards of cleanliness and (c) punctuality on Connex South East trains for each quarter in 1998; and what are the latest available figures. [70110]

Ms Glenda Jackson: So far in 1999 my department and the Franchising Director's office have received three complaints relating to overcrowding on Connex South East trains; four on the general standard of their trains including cleanliness and 21 on punctuality. The table provides the same information for each quarter in 1998.

	Overcrowding	Standard of the trains including cleanliness	Punctuality
January-March	29	12	65
April-June	7	5	20
July-September	7	9	21
October-December	14	17	101
Total for 1998	57	43	207

Planning Permission

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if, when a metropolitan borough council has stated in its UDP that a certain piece of land is designated for business use and suitable for general B1 purposes, it can subsequently grant planning permission to use this land for B1, B2 industry and B8 warehouse use without amendment to the UDP. [70057]

Mr. Raynsford: The Town and Country Planning Act 1990 requires local planning authorities to determine applications for planning permission in accordance with the development plan unless material considerations indicate otherwise. It is for local authorities to decide whether material considerations justify granting a planning permission that is not in accordance with the plan.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. [69906]

Mr. Meale: All the executive NDPBs sponsored by DETR have a statutory base except the British Board of Agrément and the National Forest Company.

All the bodies are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, with the following exceptions:

The Audit Commission, the British Board of Agrément (BBA), the five Housing Action Trusts (HATs), the London Pensions Fund Authority (LPFA), the London Regional Passengers' Committee, the National Forest Company (NFC).

The NFC will be brought within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration by means of an Order in Council due to go before the Privy Council later this month.

The HATs and LPFA are subject to investigation by the Commissioner for Local Administrations (CLA)—the Local Government Ombudsman. The Environment Agency also comes within the remit of the CLA for matters concerning flood defence and land drainage.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69961]

Mr. Meale: (a) None of the advisory non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings.

(b) The following advisory non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department hold public meetings:

Advisory Committee on Packaging, Disabled Passengers' Transport Advisory Committee, Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution, UK Round Table on Sustainable Development.

(c) The following advisory non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department have lay or consumer representatives on their boards:

Committee on Chemicals and Materials for Use in Public Water Supplies and Swimming Pools, Disabled Passengers' Transport Advisory Committee, Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution, Sustainable Development Education Panel, UK Round Table on Sustainable Development.

None of these matters is subject to a statutory requirement.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69835]

Mr. Meale: (a) The following advisory non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department publish the minutes of their meetings on the internet or make them available in paper form or do both:

Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, Committee on Chemicals and Materials for Use in Public Water Supplies and Swimming Pools, Export Action Group for Building Materials, Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution, Sustainable Development Education Panel, UK Round Table on Sustainable Development.

(b) The following advisory non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department publish the agendas of meetings and documents for their meetings:

Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment Export Action Group for Building Materials, Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution, Sustainable Development Education Panel, UK Round Table on Sustainable Development.

(c) The following advisory non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department publish a register of members' interests or have it available on request:

Advisory Committee on Hazardous Substances, Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, Advisory Committee on Packaging, Building Regulations Advisory Committee, Committee on Chemicals and Materials for Use in Public Water Supplies and Swimming Pools, Expert Panel on Air Quality Standards, Government Panel on Sustainable Development, Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council, Property Advisory Group, Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution, Sustainable Development Education Panel, UK Round Table on Sustainable Development, Water Regulations Advisory Committee. All advisory NDPBs have or should shortly have a register of interests in place.

None of these items is published under a statutory requirement.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69949]

Mr. Meale: (a) The following executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department publish the minutes of their meetings on the internet or make them available in paper form or do both:

Countryside Commission, English Nature, Environment Agency, Health and Safety Commission, Health and Safety Executive, Housing Action Trusts (Castle Vale, Liverpool, North Hull, Stonebridge, Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest), Joint Nature Conservation Committee, Local Government Commission for England, London Regional Passengers' Committee.

(b) The following executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department publish the agendas of meetings and documents for their meetings:

Countryside Commission, English Nature, Environment Agency, Health and Safety Commission, Health and Safety Executive, Housing Action Trusts (Castle Vale, Liverpool, North Hull, Stonebridge, Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest), Joint Nature Conservation Committee, London Regional Passengers' Committee.

[1] Agendas only

(c) The following executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department publish a register of members' interests:

Audit Commission, British Board of Agrément, Commission for the New Towns, Countryside Commission, Docklands Light Railway, English Nature, English Partnerships, Environment Agency, Health and Safety Commission, Housing Action Trusts (Castle Vale, Liverpool, North Hull, Stonebridge, Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest), Housing Corporation, Joint Nature Conservation Committee, Local Government Commission for England, Local Government Residuary Body (England), National Forest Company, Rural Development Commission.

All executive NDPBs have or should shortly have a register of interests in place.

None of these items is published under a statutory requirement.

No information has been supplied on Regional Development Agencies as they are not yet operational and are still in the process of making decisions on these matters.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69984]

Mr. Meale: (a) The following executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings:

Countryside Commission, Housing Action Trusts (Castle Vale, Liverpool, North Hull, Stonebridge, Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest), London Regional Passengers' Committee.

(b) The following executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department hold public meetings:

Commission for the New Towns, Countryside Commission, Docklands Light Railway, English Nature, English Partnerships, Environment Agency, Health and Safety Commission, Housing Action Trusts (Castle Vale, Liverpool, North Hull, Stonebridge, Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest), Local Government Commission for England, Local Government Residuary Body (England), Traffic Director for London.

(c) The following executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department have lay or consumer representatives on their boards:

Health and Safety Commission, Housing Action Trusts (Castle Vale, Liverpool, North Hull, Stonebridge, Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest), Housing Corporation, Joint Nature Conservation Committee, London Pensions Fund Authority, London Regional Passengers' Committee.

(d) The following executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure:

Audit Commission, Commission for the New Towns, Countryside Commission, Docklands Light Railway, English Nature, English Partnerships, Environment Agency, General Lighthouse Authorities (Northern Lighthouse Board, Trinity House) Health and Safety Commission, Health and Safety Executive, Housing Action Trusts (Castle Vale, Liverpool, North Hull, Stonebridge, Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest), Housing Corporation, Joint Nature Conservation Committee, Local Government Commission for England, London Pensions Fund Authority, London Regional Passengers' Committee, Rural Development Commission, Traffic Director for London.

None of these matters is subject to a statutory requirement.

No information has been supplied on Regional Development Agencies as they are not yet operational and are still in the process of making decisions on these matters.

Deaths at Work

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many deaths at work were recorded in the most recent available year; and if he will make a statement on recent trends. [70053]

Mr. Meale: In 1997–98 there were 261 fatalities to workers.

The fatal injury rate for all workers in 1997–98 was 1.0 per hundred thousand workers, which represents a return to the level seen in 1995–96, the lowest since the introduction of the reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations in 1986. The rate has fallen from 1.4 per hundred thousand five years ago and 1.8 per hundred thousand ten years ago.

The information for 1997–98 is provisional.

Biosafety Protocol

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the Biosafety Protocol negotiations in Colombia, with specific reference to Article 1; and if he will make it his policy to support the inclusion of the precautionary principle as regards human health. [70346]

Mr. Meale: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 9 February 1999, Official Report, columns 153–54.

Housing (Ex-service Personnel)

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many and what percentage of local authorities in England and Wales use length of service as the basis for housing allocation to ex-service personnel; and if he will make a statement. [69795]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department does not hold this information. Many local housing authorities require applicants for housing to have been resident in their area for a specified period before they will place them on their housing registers. This sort of requirement can cause difficulties for ex-service personnel and the Department's Code of Guidance on the Allocation of Housing and Homelessness advises authorities to give sympathetic consideration to applications from ex-service personnel who have close connections with their district or lived their prior to enlisting.

Voluntary Sports Clubs

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce a mandatory rate relief system for voluntary sports clubs; and if he will make a statement. [70541]

Ms Armstrong: We are currently reviewing the arrangements under which non-profit making sports clubs may receive relief from non-domestic rates at the discretion of local authorities. We intend to issue a consultation paper in the near future.

Roads (London)

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he will announce the Government's intentions as to which roads will make up the GLA road network, for which Transport for London will be the highway and traffic authority; [71002]

(2) what role Transport for London will have in relation to planning applications which affect GLA roads. [71003]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our White Paper, "A Mayor and Assembly for London", made clear that we start from the presumption that the GLA Road Network should be based on the primary route and red route networks. This base network is made up of some 220 miles of trunk roads and 105 miles of borough roads. We issued a consultation document last summer on whether roads might be added to or deleted from this base network to form the GLA Road Network. We received 93 responses to this consultation exercise. A summary of the responses has been placed in the Library. Copies of individual responses are available from the library of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

We have carefully considered the representations received and we have concluded that there should be some adjustments to the network as envisaged by the White Paper. Those are set out in the table and shown on the two maps which have today been deposited in the Library. In outer London, there are some small adjustments primarily to reflect the construction of new roads. In central London, we propose the addition of roads which act as key distributor routes for the area within the Inner Ring Road.

The resulting network gives Transport for London a clear and coherent set of roads to manage. The Mayor's Integrated Transport Strategy will set the framework within which Transport for London and boroughs will work. It is important that the Mayor, through Transport for London, should be responsible for key roads to help facilitate improved co-ordination in the movement of people and goods. In particular, direct involvement in roads in the central area will help the Mayor ensure there is a balanced approach to accessibility and traffic management not only to and from the City and West End but also for the developing south bank of the Thames.

This GLA Road Network is broadly the same size as the base network and the transfer of about 220 miles of trunk roads from the Highways Agency to Transport for London represents a significant shift of responsibility from central Government.

Subject to Parliamentary procedures, we intend that the network will be formally defined by Order to come into effect when Transport for London is brought into being. In defining the network, we are minded to include those small sections of side roads which are necessary to ensure that the main road is managed safely and efficiently.

We have looked carefully at the powers Transport for London should have as highway authority in relation to planning applications which affect GLA roads. Our conclusion is that Transport for London should be consulted by the local planning authority where the proposed development would materially affect the volume or type of traffic on a GLA road; require direct access to a GLA road or be likely to prejudice the improvement or construction of a GLA road. We do not envisage that the Mayor should have the power to direct the planning authority over highway related matters.

	Additions to base network	Deletions from base network
Adjustment for new road	New A13 (West of Heathway to Wennington) A12 (Hackney Wick—M11 link) A1203/A1261 (Limehouse Link/Aspen Way) A1020 Royal Docks Road	Old A13 (West of Heathway to Wennington) A11 (Bow interchange—Green Man Roundabout) A106 (Lea Interchange—A11 at Leytonstone) A117 Woolwich Manor Way (from A13 to A1020)
Deletions of primary routes		A307 (Kew Green—Richmond Circus) A308 (Hampton) A503 (Waterworks Corner—Tottenham Hale Gyratory)
Additions within the Inner Ring Road	A201 Kings Cross—Elephant and Castle (via Blackfriars Bridge) A200/A3200/A3036 Tooley Street, St. Thomas Street, Southwark Street, Stamford Street, York Road, Lambeth Palace Road, Albert Embankment A3211 Tower Hill, Lower and Upper Thames Street, Victoria Embankment Westminster Bridge Lambeth Bridge, Millbank (from Vauxhall Bridge to Lambeth Bridge)

WALES

National Assembly

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what leisure facilities are planned to be made available for members of the National Assembly; and if he will make a statement. [69218]

Mr. Michael: I have asked for a review of leisure facilities available to Welsh Office staff in Cardiff and elsewhere. Most of the staff to be employed by the Welsh Assembly will transfer from the Welsh Office in Cathays Park where the leisure facilities available to staff are quite limited. There is a fitness suite in Cathays Park, known as the Welsh Office Crown Building Fitness Centre, opened in May 1992, on the initiative of a number of staff. The suite is run as a private club by a committee of staff and its use is restricted to club members. The Department provides the accommodation in the mezzanine of Cathays Park but the equipment is funded by members' subscriptions and loans from the Civil Service Sports Council.

There is also a Welsh Office Sports and Social Association (WOSSA) funded by subscription from staff, for which the Welfare Department provides the secretariat. However this has not been very active in recent years and any social and sporting activity carried on within the Department is generally organised by individual staff members, sometimes with the help of grants from WOSSA. Other than the support given in the form of basic accommodation, in the case of the fitness suite, the Department does not provide staff leisure facilities in Cardiff or elsewhere.

Members and officials working in Crickhowell House will be provided with an induction pack which will list the leisure facilities in the Bay and surrounding area. There is no room at present in Crickhowell House to provide any facility similar to that at Cathays Park, but as additional space becomes available, in due course, it may be possible to provide leisure facilities. Following the review, recommendations will be prepared for consideration by the Assembly.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 549, on the National Assembly, when he expects to lay the draft of the Order relating to disqualification of persons from membership of the National Assembly before Parliament. [69690]

Mr. Michael: Section 12 of the Government of Wales Act 1998 deals with disqualification from membership of the National Assembly. It provides that certain individuals and classes of person may not be members of the Assembly:

> by applying section 1(1) of the House of Commons (Disqualification) Act 1975, judges, civil servants, members of the armed forces, members of the police forces and members of foreign legislatures;
>
> those disqualified from being a member of a local authority;
>
> the Auditor General for Wales and the Welsh Administration Ombudsman; > criminals in detention and those who have escaped; and
>
>
> Lords-Lieutenants and High Sheriffs for areas in Wales who are disqualified from representing those areas in the Assembly.

Section 12 also provides for an Order-in-Council to designate further offices and employments, the holding of which would be incompatible with membership of the Assembly. A consultation exercise invited views on the offices and employments that might be covered by the Order.

Having considered the comments received, I have set out in a draft Order-in-Council which has today been laid before both Houses of Parliament, a list of the proposed disqualifying offices and employments. The draft Order-in-Council is subject to affirmative resolution procedure in both Houses before being put to Her Majesty in Council.

The draft Order proposes the following disqualification from membership of the Assembly:

(a) Members of

National Park Authorities in Wales

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Rent Assessment Panel in Wales

Registered Inspectors Appeal Tribunal

Sianel Pedwar Cymru

Arts Council for Wales

Audit Commission for Local Authorities and National Health Service in England and Wales

Broadcasting Standards Commission

Channel Four Television Corporation

Commission for Local Administration in Wales

Competition Commission

Council of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service

Countryside Council of Wales

Environment Agency

Forestry Commissioners

General Teaching Council for Wales

Independent Television Commission

Joint Nature Conservation Committee

Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales

Mental Health Review Tribunal for Wales

Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority

Pensions Compensation Board

Radio Authority

Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments in Wales

Sports Council for Wales

Wales Tourist Board

Welsh Language Board

Council of the National Library of Wales

Council of the National Museum of Wales

(b) Members (not also being employees) of

Further Education Funding Council for Wales

Higher Education Funding Council for Wales

Qualifications, Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales

Welsh Development Agency

Certification Officer or assistant certification officer

Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting

Health Authority in Wales

NHS Trust in Wales

Special Health Authority in Wales

(c) other disqualifying offices

- Chief Adjudication Officer appointed under section 39 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992
- Chief Child Support Officer appointed under section 13 of the Child Support Act 1991
- Civil Service Commissioner
- Commissioner for Public Appointments
- Commissioner for Protection against Unlawful Industrial Action
- Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members
- Commissioner or assistant Commissioner of the Boundary Commission for Wales
- Director General of Electricity Supply
- Director General of Fair Trading
- Director General of Gas Supply
- Director General of Telecommunications
- Comptroller and Auditor General
- Governor of the British Broadcasting Corporation
- Health Service Commissioner for Wales
- Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales
- Member of a Medical Appeal Tribunal appointed under section 50 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992
- Member of a panel appointed under section 6 of the Tribunals and Inquiries Act 1992 of persons to act as chairmen of Child Support Appeal Tribunals
- Member of a panel appointed under section 6 of the Tribunal and Inquiries Act 1992 of persons to act as chairmen of Social Security Appeal Tribunals, Medical Appeal Tribunals and Disability Appeal Tribunals
- Member of a panel of persons appointed under section 6 of the Social Security Act 1998
- Member of a panel of persons who may be appointed to serve on a Vaccine Damage Tribunal
- Member of the Council of the National Library of Wales
- Member of the Council of the National Museum of Wales
- Staff of the Auditor General for Wales
- Staff of the Forestry Commissioners
- Staff of the National Audit Office
- Pensions Ombudsman
- Staff holding politically-restricted posts in local government and National Park Authorities in Wales (unless exemption is obtained under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989)
- President of appeal tribunals appointed under section 5 of the Social Security Act 1998
- President of Social Security Appeal Tribunals, Medical Appeal Tribunals and Disability Appeal Tribunals
- Regional or other full time chairman of a child support appeal tribunal established under section 21 of the Child Support Act 1991
- Regional or other full time chairman of Social Security Appeal Tribunals, Medical Appeals Tribunals or Disability Appeals Tribunals
- Rent Officers appointed under the Rent Act 1977
- Returning Officers in Assembly elections
- Social Fund Commissioner.

There will be separate arrangements outside the Order-in-Council to cover the disqualification of members of the Boards of Training and Enterprise Companies in Wales, Career Companies in Wales and the Welsh European Programme Executive Ltd.

I have decided not to take forward the suggestion contained in the consultation paper that staff of the bodies listed in the draft Order should be disqualified. However, where an employee of such a body is elected as a member of the Assembly, I would expect that person to resign their paid employment immediately following election.

Economically Active People

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of economically active people in Wales between the ages of (i) 25 to 34 and (ii) 35 to 49 years (a) currently, (b) in 1992 and (c) in 1997. [70068]

Mr. Hain: Estimates of the economically active in Wales, from the Labour Force Survey, are shown in the following table.

Economically active, Wales (not seasonally adjusted)

	Age 25–34	Age 35–49
September to November 1992	326,000	467,000
September to November 1997	331,000	478,000
September to November 1998	323,000	487,000

Source:

Labour Force Survey, Office for National Statistics

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Class Sizes

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates his Department has made of the percentage of (a) five year olds, (b) six year olds and (c) seven year olds that were in classes of 30 or less in January 1997. [70059]

Mr. Hain: As I informed the hon. Member in my reply on 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 609, information on the number of pupils in classes of 30 or more was not available prior to 1998. Until January 1998, data were collected centrally only for the number of classes, by size of class, not for the number of pupils in each class.

In January 1997, 24 per cent. of ordinary classes in primary schools had more than 30 pupils.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

Registered Housing Associations

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the procedures which his Department's officials will follow in taking formal action in relation to registered housing associations, their committee members and members of staff; when these procedures were agreed to and by whom; and what actions have been taken to date under these procedures. [69721]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The formal actions available to the Department are set out in Schedule 1 of the Housing Act 1996 and are:

- power to appoint a new committee member
- power to direct an inquiry into the affairs of an association
- power to require an extraordinary audit of accounts and balance sheet
- where an inquiry or audit establishes misconduct or mismanagement, to remove or suspend officers, employees or agents, to freeze bank accounts or to restrict transactions.

The Department has taken no action under these procedures.

In future this will become the responsibility of the National Assembly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency (Telephone Calls)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate he has made of the proportion of telephone calls made to Benefits Agency offices which are not answered within the target times; [69003]

(2) how many complaints concerning the failure of Benefits Agency offices to answer telephones promptly he has received in each of the last three years; [69004]

(3) what targets he has set the Benefits Agency concerning the answering of telephone calls. [69005]

Angela Eagle: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 9 February 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking, what estimate has been made of the proportion of telephone calls made to Benefits Agency (BA) offices which are not answered within the target times, how many complaints concerning the failure of BA offices to answer telephones promptly he has received in each of the last three years, and what targets he has set the BA concerning the answering of telephone calls.

The information is not available in the format requested. At present the Agency does not have a national target covering telephone response times, although each individual District sets and publishes its own target.

The BA introduced a series of measurement checks last year which included telephone call response times. The first year's checks will be completed by the end of March 1999 and figures reflecting this period of measurement will be available by the end of April 1999. The measurement checks will produce figures, including average telephone response times, which are statistically valid within each of the Agency's 17 Area and Benefit Directorates.

The Agency does not maintain national records of the number of complaints received in respect of telephone response times although individual Districts maintain complaints information which is analysed and used to improve services locally.

The BA is currently piloting new complaints handling procedures, designed to ensure that all offices which deal with the public, record and collate complaints in a consistent way. Once the results of the pilot exercise have been evaluated we will consider how best to introduce the most effective system.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Disability Benefits Unit

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what extent the Disability Benefits Unit has been completing review decisions during the current year in line with the targets which have been set. [69640]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Christopher Chope, dated 9 February 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking to what extent the Disability Benefits Unit has been completing review decisions during the current year in line with the targets which have been set. The Disability Benefits Directorate's published targets for 1998/1999 for clearance of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) reviews is 60% in 55 working days and 80% in 75 working days.

The actual year to date achievement of DLA review clearances is, as at 31 January 1999, 70% in 55 days and 86.05% in 75 days.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Efficiency Gains

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to express efficiency gains as a percentage of his departmental budget; and if he will make a statement. [69632]

Mr. Darling: I refer the hon. Member to the Department's interim Public Service Agreement which was published in the Government's White Paper "Public Services for the Future: Modernisation, Reform, Accountability" in December 1998.

Family Credit

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the average number of hours which a non-main earner in a couple receiving family credit benefits works per week. [69681]

Angela Eagle: As at August 1998, in those couples where both members of the couple work, it is estimated that the non-main earner works, on average, 18 hours per week.

Note:

Figure is based on a 5 per cent. sample of all Family Credit claimants.

Source:

Family Credit Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, August 1998.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average amount that the main earners in couples receiving family credit work per week. [70216]

Angela Eagle: As at August 1998, the average number of hours worked by the main earner in couples receiving Family Credit was 33.5 hours per week.

Note:

Figure is based on a 5 per cent. sample of all Family Credit claimants.

Source:

Family Credit Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, August 1998.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average family credit award in 1998. [70278]

Angela Eagle: A complete set of data for the whole of 1998 will not be available until April 1999. The latest information is for August 1998 at which time the average award of Family Credit was £59.82 per week.

Note:

Figure is based on a 5 per cent. sample of all Family Credit claimants.

Source:

Family Credit Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, August 1998.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate's report on Family Credit. [70863]

Mr. Darling: The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate was asked to study the working practices and procedures at the Family Credit Unit to see what further improvements could be made in tackling Family Credit fraud. I am now considering the Inspectorate's findings. A copy of the Inspectorate's report is being placed in the Library.

Lone Parents (Working Hours)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average amount that lone parents work per week. [70279]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director for the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 10 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the hours of work of lone parents.

The latest estimates available from the UK Labour Force Survey are that in autumn 1998 46 per cent. of lone parents with dependent children were in employment. They worked an average of 29 hours per week.

This average is defined using total usual hours, that is, hours usually worked including paid and unpaid overtime and excluding meal breaks. The estimate is based on respondents' main jobs and is not seasonally adjusted. Dependent children are defined as those aged 0–15 and 16–18 year olds in full-time education.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69978]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department sponsors two such bodies: the Legal Aid Board and the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board. However, the latter has been inactive since March 1992 when the previous Lord Chancellor announced his decision to postpone implementation of the Authorised Practitioners Scheme.

The Answers in respect of the Legal Aid Board are:

(a) no

(b) no

(c) yes

(d) yes, but not under a statutory requirement.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69945]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department sponsors two such bodies: the Legal Aid Board and the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board. However, the latter has been inactive since March 1992 when the previous Lord Chancellor announced his decision to postpone implementation of the Authorised Practitioners Scheme.

The Legal Aid Board does not publish either the minutes of, or the agendas and documents for, meetings.

It does have a register of interests, which is published.

There are no relevant statutory requirements.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69960]

Mr. Hoon: For the advisory non-departmental public bodies listed under my Department in the Cabinet Office publication 'Public Bodies 1998', the answers are as follows:

(a) none

(b) none, but the Civil Justice Council will be holding annual open meetings.

There is no statutory requirement for these bodies in these areas.

(c) the following bodies have lay or consumer representatives:

The Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct has lay members: the Lord Chancellor must by statute have regard to the desirability of appointing persons who have experience in, or knowledge of, consumer affairs.

The Civil Justice Council and the Civil Procedure Rule Committee have lay and consumer representative by Statute.

The Legal Aid Advisory Committee (NI) has both lay and consumer representation. The relevant Order indicates the attributes required for membership.

All the Advisory Committees on JPs have at least one lay member as do most of the Advisory Committees on General Commissioners of Income Tax.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. [69909]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department sponsors two such bodies: the Legal Aid Board and the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board. However, the latter has been inactive since March 1992 when the previous Lord Chancellor announced his decision to postpone implementation of the Authorised Practitioners Scheme.

The Legal Aid Board has a statutory base and is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69831]

Mr. Hoon: For the advisory non-departmental public bodies listed under my Department in the Cabinet Office publication 'Public Bodies 1998', the answers are as follows:

> (a) none, although the Advisory Council on Public Records and the Civil Justice Council publish summary reports.
>
> (b) none
>
> (c) the Advisory Council on Public Records and the Legal Aid Advisory Committee (NI) have registers of members' interests. Registers for the other bodies are at various stages of preparation, except where the body is due to be wound up soon.

There are no statutory requirements in these areas.

Worshipful Company of Scriveners

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to end the monopoly in London of the Worshipful Company of Scriveners. [70040]

Mr. Hoon: The Government have concluded that the monopoly of the Worshipful Company of Scriveners over notarial work in the central London area should be ended. An appropriate amendment will be moved to the Access to Justice Bill.

TREASURY

Public Sector Research Establishments

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his proposals for developing the commercial potential of the output of public sector research establishments. [70900]

Mrs. Roche: I am very pleased to announce that John Baker, who is Chairman of Medeva plc, has agreed to investigate the commercialisation of public sector research establishments (PSRE) outputs, with the view to making recommendations for increasing the rate of their exploitation. The study takes forward a commitment made in the Competitiveness White Paper, published last December. Mr. Baker will be working closely with HM Treasury and the Office of Science and Technology, who are collaborating on the initiative.

It is time we took a close look at how we maximise the commercial potential of the high quality research that is carried out by the PSREs, where it is possible to do so. We need to identify the barriers to commercialising research and make sure that the PSREs share the best ways of overcoming them. The results should be of great benefit to the PSREs and the Departments that sponsor them.

The intention is that the study will look in particular at the coverage of commercialisation in research contracts between PSREs and their sponsors, the organisation of the knowledge transfer process and incentives for PSRE staff.

John Baker will begin this work very soon; seeking the views of key people in the PSREs and sponsor Departments. He is expected to report later this year.

The terms of reference of this study are as follows:

> To investigate the commercialisation of research in the Government's public sector research establishments (PSREs) and make recommendations for increasing the rate at which PSRE research outputs are successfully commercialised, consistent with other Government objectives for PSREs, with reference in particular to: > > the role of sponsor departments/Research Councils in promoting the exploitation of research in the PSREs;
>
> >
> > progress in improving the culture of entrepreneurship within PSREs—particularly through the adoption of new guidance on exploiting Government assets;
> >
> > the organisational capacity and expertise for managing and exploiting Government IP effectively;
> >
> > specific institutional barriers, and possible new incentives;
> >
> > spreading best practice;
> >
> > the scope for closer co-operation with the private sector.

Electronic Capital Equipment

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will introduce fiscal incentives to encourage recycling of electronic capital equipment; and if he will make a statement; [68630]

(2) what fiscal incentives are available to industry to encourage recycling of electronic capital equipment. [68631]

Ms Hewitt: There are no special fiscal incentives to encourage recycling of electronic equipment. Businesses make a commercial judgment on whether or not to recycle any equipment. Where they do so the cost of recycling is treated for tax purposes in the same way as any other business cost. However, tax relief already exists for firms that give gifts of trading stock, or equipment they have used in their trade, to recognised educational establishments.

Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to implement in full the recommendations of the HM Customs and Excise Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review; and which of the recommendations have been implemented. [69554]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have already implemented major recommendations of the review by making available resources to enable Customs to deploy additional staff to tackle the smuggling of alcohol and tobacco. Sixty-six new staff were in post at the south-east Channel Ports by the end of November 1998, and the remainder will be in post at other ports and inland by the end of February 1999, taking the total number of new staff to over 100.

Customs are currently undertaking a wide-ranging consultation exercise with the trade to establish the cost to industry of implementing the many review recommendations which involve procedural changes to tighten up on fraud. Subject to the outcome of that consultation, a final decision will be taken on how and when the measures are to implemented during 1999.

Some of the remaining recommendations require the participation of all EU member states.

ATFR recommendations which have been implemented are shown in the following table:

Rec. number	Recommendation
2	Government to consider making available additional resources to adopt a high impact approach at the Channel ports
3	Government to consider making available additional resources inland to tackle the sale and distribution and sale of illicit excise goods
4	Government to consider making available additional resources to enable Customs Solicitors Office to progress cases arising from the deployment of additional resources
40	Government to consider making available increased Customs anti-smuggling resources to combat the risk of cigarette smuggling
44	UK to continue joint action with other member states to tackle cigarette smuggling by air
45	The participation of Customs officers in Police roadblocks
46 and 47	Customs to amend the regulations for the holding and movement of duty suspended goods
48	Customs to review its prosecution policy for excise smugglers
51	Customs should ask the courts to disqualify smugglers from driving for set periods
52	Customs should apply for curfew orders in all appropriate excise smuggling cases
53	Customs should ask the Lord Chancellor's office to advise on publishing guidance on sentencing for excise smuggling
54	Customs to seek compensation orders in addition to any other sentence imposed by courts
55	Customs to explore with the Police that targeted checks be made on hired vans and cars
57	Customs to adopt a tougher policy on seized vehicles with high restoration charges
58	Customs should continue to arrest, charge and prosecute persistent offenders where large quantities of excise goods are involved
60	Customs should seek the confiscation of assets of excise smugglers
69	Customs to take up vendor control problems with relevant fiscal authority
76	Customs should incorporate promiscuous checks on warehouses in assurance plans
79	Customs should continue blitzes of high risk traders
81	Customs should further develop a national task force approach involving closer working with other agencies

HOME DEPARTMENT

Quantum Project

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the conclusions of the Prison Service's review of the Quantum project. [70899]

Mr. Straw: The Prison Service's six-month review of the Quantum project announced on 10 August 1998 has been concluded. I have seen the review report. The Director General and the Executive Committee of the Prison Service endorses the recommendation made in the report to take the project forward by means of a framework agreement in partnership with one of the two short-listed suppliers. The contract will cover an Information Technology infrastructure service, joint development of a strategy for Information Technology-based business change and an agreed mechanism for implementing business change on a partnership basis.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for legislation on freedom of information. [68642]

Mr. Straw: Freedom of information is an essential component of the Government's programme to modernise British politics, as set out in our manifesto. This programme of constitutional reform aims to involve people more closely in the decisions which affect their lives. Giving people greater access to information is fundamental to that aim.

The effect of a Freedom of Information Act will be that for the first time, every citizen in the country will have the right of access to information held by bodies across the public sector. I believe this will radically transform the relationship between Government and citizens.

The Government published their proposals for Freedom of Information in December 1997 in a White Paper entitled, "Your Right to Know". The Home Office took over responsibility for Freedom of Information legislation from the Cabinet Office in the Summer, to enable the policy to be developed alongside other constitutional measures, such as human rights and data protection. Since then, we have devoted a great deal of effort towards translating the White Paper's proposals into a draft Bill. That process is very nearly complete, and the Government will publish a draft Bill as soon as it is ready.

There are those who feel that the Government should have produced a Bill sooner. I must emphasise, however, that any delay is not an indication of a lack of commitment on the part of the Government. It is quite the reverse. Indeed, we have devoted additional resources to work on Freedom of Information. This is a complex subject. There have been a great number of issues to resolve: for example: the need to address existing legislation which impinges on freedom of information, including that which arises from our international legal obligations; the need to consider the implications of devolution; the practicalities of the enforcement mechanism. These are just a few of the issues which have occupied us for some time, but I am convinced that we are right to take the time to get the detail right. If we are to achieve our aims then we must have an Act that is realistic and workable.

We therefore look forward to a thorough and informed debate when we publish the draft Bill. There will be a period of public consultation, during which the Bill will receive pre-legislative scrutiny by the Select Committee for Public Administration. We hope and expect that this process of scrutiny will lead to a more effective Bill. Following this period of consultation, the Government are committed to introducing the Bill to Parliament as soon as the legislative programme allows.

A Freedom of Information Act will radically change the way Government conducts its business. Government alone cannot bring about the cultural change necessary in public sector bodies for a more open approach in their relationship with the public. It will be for a wide variety of public bodies to implement the legislation, and cultural change must take place in all of those bodies if the Freedom of Information Act is to succeed. During the consultation period, I will set out my proposals for delivering this cultural change.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the expenditure on his Department's crime prevention initiatives, in cash and real terms, in each of the last three years; what is the planned cash and real terms spending in each of the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [70325]

Mr. Boateng: Over the last three years, (1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99) £12.4 million, £16.1 million and £9.4 million will have been spent in cash terms on crime prevention initiatives. In real terms at 1998–99 prices this is £13 million, £16.5 million and £9.4 million.

In July 1998 the Government announced a new £250 million crime reduction programme. Over the three years from April 1999 the planned cash expenditure for this programme and other crime prevention initiatives is £42.1 million in 1999–2000, £101.8 million in 2000–01 and £111.8 million in 2001–02. In real terms at 1998–99 prices this is £41 million, £96.8 million and £103.8 million.

These figures are in addition to public expenditure on the police service, one of whose key functions is crime prevention.

Crime (European Union)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has undertaken on the relative levels of crime in European Union countries; and if he will make a statement. [70322]

Mr. Boateng: Information is published annually in Criminal statistics, England and Wales on the levels of crime recorded by the police in most European Union countries. In addition, we have participated in all three sweeps of the International Crime Victimisation Survey, which provided comparative data on crime levels for most European Union countries. The latest results relating to victim's experience of crime in 1995 were published in Home Office Research Findings No 57.

Copies of both publications are in the Library.

General Pinochet

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total cost of (a) issuing and (b) serving the arrest warrant for General Pinochet; and what was the breakdown of costs; [70251]

(2) what out-of-hours costs were involved in the issuing and execution of the arrest warrant for General Pinochet. [70252]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The costs incurred in police operations are a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contacts his Department had with journalists concerning the incorrect reports of General Pinochet's death in October 1998 (a) before and (b) after the story was published. [70253]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 9 February 1999]: My Department has no knowledge of any contacts with the media about this matter.

Town Centres Working Party

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects that the Working Party on Town Centres will report. [70404]

Mr. Boateng: A small working group is being established by the Association of Town Centre Managers to look into the development of "Speakers Corners" in town centre areas. The Home Office and other departments will contribute to this work. I understand that the first meeting will be held around the end of February and the group hopes to report in the summer.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women prisoners have been held in prison in England and Wales and had a child or children with them in each of the last 10 years. [69175]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the average female prison population in England and Wales over the last 10 years is given in the table. This information is also published (up to 1997) in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (table 1.4 of the 1997 edition), a copy of which is in the Library.

Information on the number of women who had a child or children with them in prison in each of the last 10 years is not collected centrally. However, on 1 February 1999, there were 51 women occupying places in the four mother and baby units within the female prison estate.

Average population of females in prisons in England and Wales, 1989–1998

Year	Average population
1989	1,767
1990	1,597
1991	1,561
1992	1,577
1993	1,561
1994	1,811
1995	1,979
1996	2,262
1997	2,675
1998	3,105

English Hooligans

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on action taken against English hooligans attending the World Cup. [70264]

Mr. Boateng: The French authorities have provided the National Criminal Intelligence Service with information about all those arrested or deported from France. For those convicted of criminal offences in France, the French authorities have provided the Home Office with the court judgments in accordance with the bilateral agreement reached with France before the World Cup. We have requested further details in a number of cases with a view to determining whether there are sufficient grounds to apply to the domestic courts for the issue of a restriction order to prevent the offenders travelling to future matches abroad.

Police (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of police numbers in Hampshire. [70065]

Mr. Boateng: My right hon. Friend has made no assessment of police numbers in the Hampshire Constabulary. Under legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994, it is for the chief constable to determine the number of police officers in the force, within the resources available to him or her.

In its latest annual report on police performance, published on 28 January, the Audit Commission concluded that success in solving crime does not depend solely on numbers of police officers available.

Police (Avon and Somerset)

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) police civilian employees there were in the Avon and Somerset Constabulary on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) the most recent date for which figures are available. [70170]

Mr. Boateng: Information on police numbers is collected at the end of March and September of each year. The statistics for the period requested are set out in the table.

Avon and Somerset Constabulary

Date	Police Officers	Civilian support staff	Traffic wardens
31 March 1997	2,989	1,439	108
30 September 1998	2,966	1,435	101

Brian Parsons

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 70, on Brian Parsons, what are the salary costs of the officers on the inquiry; and if they will be charged to the Devon and Cornwall Constabulary. [70109]

Mr. Boateng: I understand that the overall cost to date of the investigation and associated work by Hampshire Constabulary on this case is £430,000, of which salary costs account for £320,000. The salary costs are not being charged to the Devon and Cornwall Constabulary.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to each of the Government's public consultations. [69776]

Mr. Mudie: The Department follows the Cabinet Office best practice guidance on consultations including publicising and making available the results of consultation exercises wherever practicable. For individual consultations this can take the form of a press notice or ministerial statement, and the detailed results are made available on request.

Medical Students

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment over the last five years, how many medical students completed their academic studies; and how many, having completed their studies, did not become practising doctors. [70087]

Mr. Mudie: The available data are shown in the following table:

First degree graduates in medicine/dentistry in the UK

Medical students	1993–94[1]	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Number of graduates	4,600	5,700	5,700	6,000	5,900
of which, those with known destinations[2]	4,400	3,900	4,400	4,300	n/a
of which, those entering full-time permanent employment in the UK	4,200	3,700	3,900	3,800	n/a
of which, those entering medical occupations[3]	n/a	3,500	3,700	3,600	n/a

[1] Figures for 1993–94 are not directly comparable to those for later years because of a change in the data collection process

[2] Destination six months after graduation.

[3] "Medical occupations" covers general practitioners and doctors, and hospital house officers.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of first-year medical students failed to become a fully qualified doctor in the five most recent years for which figures are available. [70086]

Mr. Mudie: Information on non-completion rates analysed by subject of study is not compiled centrally.

Adult and Community Learning Fund

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the second round of bidding to the Adult and Community Learning Fund. [71001]

Mr. Mudie: Nearly 500 applications were received in the second round of bidding to the Adult and Community Learning Fund which closed on 30 November 1998. Following consideration by the Department's independent Advisory Panel we are today announcing funding of £3.5 million for 96 projects covering a wide range of local activities to involve more people in learning relevant to their lives. A list of the successful projects has been placed in the Library.

New Deal

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the New Deal in (a) London and (b) other regions. [69557]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Clive Soley, dated 10 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question asking for a statement on the effectiveness of the New Deal in London and other regions. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The New Deal for young unemployed people is developing well in London. The latest Government Statistical Service figures to the end of November 1998 show that in the London area of the Employment Service London and South East Region, over 31,000 young people have joined the New Deal for 18–24 year olds. While most are still on the Gateway phase of the programme, over 5,000 have found unsubsidised jobs; 950 have been placed into subsidised jobs; over 3,000 have joined the Full-Time Education and Training option; nearly 750 the Voluntary Sector option; and some 330 the Environment Task Force. A comparison with other Employment Service Regions in England and with Scotland and Wales is set out in the table at annex A.

More generally, the effectiveness of New Deal is being assessed through a comprehensive evaluation strategy within which a number of qualitative and quantitative surveys are being carried out. The findings from these surveys, as and when they are available, form part of our continuous improvement strategy in that they help identify those aspects of our processes which are working well and those that are capable of being improved. Findings from the evaluation surveys are communicated within the ES and to our partners who form part of over 40 partnerships in London responsible for New Deal delivery. Each partnership will draw up an action plan for performance improvement over the next 12 months, based on the evidence from local management information and evaluation findings.

If you would like to discuss the progress of New Deal in the London area in more detail, Stephen Holt, the Director for the Employment Service London and South East Region, would be happy to do so. He can be contacted on 0171 211 4395.

I hope this is helpful.

Annex A: New Deal for 18–24 year olds

ES region/country	Number starting New Deal	Unsubsidised jobs	Subsidised jobs	FTET option	VS option	ETF option
East Midlands and Eastern	16,881	3,436	825	1,977	483	410
London and South East	50,024	9,214	1,866	5,200	1,312	744
Northern	15,222	2,447	1,137	2,871	616	595
North West	29,343	5,250	2,230	3,597	628	899
South West	12,021	2,539	1,007	1,525	647	412
West Midlands	19,444	3,643	861	2,328	419	492
Yorkshire and Humberside	24,720	4,296	1,603	3,557	900	963
Office for Scotland	21,438	3,889	1,680	2,294	1,033	792
Office for Wales	12,965	2,428	1,252	1,642	440	701
National Total	202,058	37,142	12,461	24,991	6,478	6,008

Notes:

1. The figures above are from the Government Statistical Service (GSS) First Release for period ending November 1998.
2. It should be noted that the Government First Release national figures also include those outcomes where a Regional Office is not known. For this reason, and also because of rounding up or down, the national total above will not necessarily equate to the figures shown in the First Release. The variations are however small.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what reports he has received from (1) Fernley Employment Service and (2) Pelcon on their delivery of the New Deal. [69234]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 10 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question asking if he has received any reports from Fernly Business Services or Pelcombe about New Deal. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Secretary of State has received Delivery Plans from both Fernly Business Services, in respect of their delivery of New Deal for 18–24 year olds in Leicestershire, and from Pelcombe in respect of the New Deal 25 Plus pilot in Leicestershire and South Humber.

Fernly took over delivery of New Deal from July 1998 and Pelcombe implemented the 25+ pilots on 30 November 1998. Under the terms of their contract for the delivery of New Deal both Fernly Business Services and Pelcombe are required to submit monthly management information reports on their performance. These are discussed on a monthly basis with the Employment Service and any issues are highlighted and addressed.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that the New Deals for (a) lone parents and (b) over 25s meet the needs of the ethnic minority community. [69233]

B

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are ensuring that the Employment Service develops effective links with local communities. In many locations lone parent advisers and community organisations work together to offer New Deal outreach services, and publicity materials are produced in ethnic minority languages. The New Deal personal advisers are trained in equal opportunities awareness, and given guidance on the problems facing people from ethnic minorities. I am monitoring the participation of ethnic minorities within all the New Deal programmes to ensure they are treated fairly.

PGCE Applicants

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what percentage of applicants for PGCE courses in (i) primary and (ii) secondary teaching obtained either a first or an upper second class honours degree for the latest period for which figures are available. [69794]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 9 February 1999]: No information is available about the degree class of PGCE applicants.

The following table gives information about the degree class of PGCE intake.

Number and percentage of first-year trainees on postgraduate initial teacher training courses with either a first or an upper second class honours degree in England, 1996–97

	First-year trainees with a first or 2:1 [1]
	Number	Percentage
Primary	2,480	49
Secondary	6,277	46
Total	8,757	47

[1] Trainees with an undivided second class degree are classified as upper second class

Source:

TTA Survey under the Framework for the Assessment of Quality and Standards in ITT

SATS (Financial Allocations)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the extra money allocated to each local education authority for the improvement of year 6 SATS results in (a) 199[illegible]–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [70119]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 9 February 1999]: A new £18 million programme will support the teaching of literacy and numeracy for year 6 pupils outside normal school hours. The programme will start in the February half-term to the end of the Easter break and into the early part of the summer term. The grant allocation to Local Authority for two financial years requested is as follows:

£000

Number	LEA	Total allocation for LEA maintained schools 1998–99	Total allocation for maintained schools 1999–2000
201	City of London	0.8	0.2
202	Camden	34.4	9.8
203	Greenwich	62.6	18.1
204	Hackney	50.9	14.7
205	Hammersmith	31.6	9.2
206	Islington	47.4	13.5
207	Kensington and Chelsea	19.5	6.1
208	Lambeth	50.9	17.2
209	Lewisham	63.4	18.4
210	Southwark	56.9	17.9
211	Tower Hamlets	65.7	18.8
212	Wandsworth	48.1	15.2
213	Westminster	31.7	9.0
301	Barking	40.3	11.5
302	Barnet	71.5	21.3
303	Bexley	58.6	17.3
304	Brent	52.2	16.5
305	Bromley	60.2	19.5
306	Croydon	75.0	22.5
307	Ealing	64.9	19.4
308	Enfield	66.4	19.2
309	Haringey	54.9	15.7
310	Harrow	45.6	13.0
311	Havering	58.5	16.7
312	Hillingdon	48.1	16.2
313	Hounslow	51.3	14.7
314	Kingston upon Thames	29.3	8.7
315	Merton	28.3	8.1
316	Newham	69.2	19.8
317	Redbridge	54.0	15.4
318	Richmond upon Thames	33.4	9.5
319	Sutton	36.6	11.1
320	Waltham Forest	51.4	15.1
330	Birmingham	294.4	85.4
331	Coventry	89.7	25.6
332	Dudley	84.7	24.6
333	Sandwell	92.3	26.4
334	Solihull	57.5	16.8
335	Walsall	78.0	23.3
336	Wolverhampton	75.4	21.5
340	Knowsley	58.8	16.8
341	Liverpool	137.1	39.5
342	St. Helens	55.7	15.9
343	Sefton	83.4	23.8
344	Wirral	95.8	27.4
350	Bolton	89.7	25.9
351	Bury	56.6	16.7
352	Manchester	132.3	38.1
353	Oldham	78.0	22.3
354	Rochdale	66.5	20.5
355	Salford	74.3	21.2
356	Stockport	84.6	24.2
357	Tameside	70.8	20.2
358	Trafford	61.3	17.5
359	Wigan	101.0	28.9
370	Barnsley	70.8	20.2
371	Doncaster	93.5	26.7
372	Rotherham	81.4	23.3
373	Sheffield	122.5	36.5
380	Bradford	116.0	34.2
381	Calderdale	61.3	19.5
382	Kirklees	110.6	31.6
383	Leeds	207.9	59.6
384	Wakefield	96.9	27.7
390	Gateshead	60.3	17.2
391	Newcastle upon Tyne	67.6	19.3
392	North Tyneside	50.1	14.7
393	South Tyneside	47.2	13.5
394	Sunderland	87.2	24.9
420	Isles of Scilly	1.1	0.3
800	Bath and NE Somerset	48.2	13.8

£000

Number	LEA	Total allocation for LEA maintained schools 1998–99	Total allocation for maintained schools 1999–2000
801	City of Bristol	97.5	27.8
802	North Somerset	49.0	14.0
803	South Gloucestershire	74.6	21.3
805	Hartlepool	30.5	8.7
806	Middlesbrough	46.6	13.3
807	Redcar and Cleveland	47.3	13.5
808	Stockton-on-Tees	58.1	16.6
810	Kingston-upon-Hull	81.2	23.2
811	East Riding of Yorkshire	98.4	28.6
812	North East Lincolnshire	48.1	13.8
813	North Lincolnshire	50.0	14.3
815	North Yorkshire	218.0	62.4
816	York	46.4	13.3
820	Bedfordshire	69.8	22.1
821	Luton	40.1	14.0
825	Buckinghamshire	113.7	35.3
826	Milton Keynes	51.5	15.4
830	Derbyshire	227.9	67.4
831	Derby	56.0	17.2
835	Dorset	85.5	25.5
836	Poole	26.3	7.7
837	Bournemouth	26.9	8.2
840	Durham	172.1	49.2
841	Darlington	28.2	8.1
845	East Sussex	127.8	36.5
846	Brighton and Hove	50.2	14.3
850	Hampshire	306.9	91.4
851	Portsmouth	37.9	11.7
852	Southampton	48.5	13.8
855	Leicestershire	167.6	50.2
856	Leicester	78.5	22.6
857	Rutland	11.3	3.5
860	Staffordshire	241.7	70.0
861	Stoke-on-Trent	74.5	21.3
865	Wiltshire	126.7	41.1
866	Swindon	49.5	15.0
867	Bracknell Forest	27.2	7.8
868	Windsor and Maidenhead	30.5	8.7
869	West Berkshire	46.4	13.5
870	Reading	34.8	9.9
871	Slough	19.5	8.0
872	Wokingham	40.5	11.6
873	Cambridgeshire	148.2	44.2
874	Peterborough	48.7	14.2
875	Cheshire	214.3	62.2
876	Halton	44.9	12.8
877	Warrington	62.8	18.0
878	Devon	228.7	65.4
879	Plymouth	70.2	20.1
880	Torbay	29.4	8.7
881	Essex	305.4	105.5
882	Southend-on-Sea	29.9	10.4
883	Thurrock	37.9	11.3
884	Herefordshire	62.5	17.9
88[illegible]	Worcestershire	120.3	35.7
886	Kent	353.0	109.9
887	Medway Towns	68.9	19.7
888	Lancashire	404.0	116.6
889	Blackburn with Darwen	49.7	14.6
890	Blackpool	34.6	9.9
891	Nottinghamshire	220.7	63.6
892	Nottingham City	79.3	22.7
393	Shropshire	94.4	27.9
894	Wrekin, The	47.0	13.7
908	Cornwall	174.1	49.9
909	Cumbria	165.5	52.5
916	Gloucestershire	165.3	52.8
919	Hertfordshire	299.4	88.9
921	Isle of Wight	26.1	7.5
925	Lincolnshire	187.1	61.4
926	Norfolk	210.3	63.9
928	Northamptonshire	167.4	52.0
929	Northumberland	68.9	19.7
931	Oxfordshire	171.9	49.3
933	Somerset	143.2	41.7
935	Suffolk	165.7	47.3
936	Surrey	199.9	62.5
937	Warwickshire	136.5	49.4
938	West Sussex	169.0	48.8
	England	13,532.1	4,000.0

Note:

GM schools have been allocated £470,000 for financial year 1998–99 which will be administered through the Funding Agency for Schools, and thereafter through the Local Education Authority.

Primary Schools

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research his Department has commissioned into the effectiveness of (a) integrated curriculum work and (b) subject specialist teaching in improving children's learning in primary schools. [69793]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The Department has not recently commissioned research on the effectiveness of integrated curriculum work. But the current guidance on Key Stage 2 curriculum planning produced by the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority (now QCA) in 1995 addresses this issue. The frameworks for teaching literacy and numeracy produced by the Department, together with model schemes of work give the flexibility to plan through integrated themes based on the programmes of study.

The Teacher Training Agency has recently published reports of research on both effective teachers of literacy and effective teachers of numeracy. These reports and evidence from primary school inspections suggests that subject knowledge is a significant factor in improving children's learning, but that this need not always be taught through subject specialist teaching or by subject specialist teachers.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will reduce the distance between primary schools which is used as the criterion for considering provision of additional accommodation; and if he will make a statement. [70192]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department will shortly be seeking views from local education authorities on the arrangements for the schools capital expenditure programme in 2000–01. One of the areas likely to be covered is Basic Need.

Grants (Devon)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what grants have been made, or are planned to be made, by his Department to Devon County Council in addition to revenue support grant in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [69365]

Ms Estelle Morris: Details of the grants, in addition to revenue support grant, made available, by the Department for Education and Employment to Devon County Council in 1997–98 and 1998–99 and planned to be made in 1999–2000 are shown in the following tables. From 1 April 1998, Torbay and Plymouth became separate unitary authorities, the figures across the first two years are therefore not directly comparable. The allocation of the grants for New Deal for Schools and the reduction of class sizes for 1999–2000 have not yet been made. For the Standards Fund the figures shown include the grant made by the Dep[illegible]ment and the contribution made by the local education authority.

Grants made available to Devon County Council in 1997–98

Grant title	Allocation £
Standards Fund
School Effectiveness	2,805,300
National Curriculum Assessment—Verification KS1	117,900
National Curriculum Assessment—Supply Cover KS1	228,400
Training for KS2 Teacher Assessment	131,300
KS3 Non-core Teacher Assessment	43,100
Primary Teachers' Subject Knowledge	354,400
Special Educational Needs	369,900
Qualifications—GNVQ Provision	270,900
Qualifications—Part One GNVQ Pilot	159,500
Truancy	137,000
Disruptive and Disaffected Pupils	246,200
Pupil Behaviour and Discipline	246,700
Bilingual Pupils	45,300
Drug Prevention and Schools	80,000
Training for Careers Teachers	15,000
Youth Service	31,600
National Professional Qualification for Headship	87,600
School Security	436,300
Child Protection	26,800
Specialist Schools	626,400
Specialist Teacher Assistants	56,900
Baseline Assessment	193,900
Private Finance Initiative	75,000
Primary Performance Tables	11,700
Books for Schools	497,589
New Deal for Schools
New Deal for Schools	965,716
Total	8,260,405

Grants made available in 1998–99 to Devon County Council

Grant title	Allocation £
Standards Fund
School Effectiveness	2,093,331
School Leadership: NPQH	125,043
School Leadership: Serving Heads	53,590
Induction for Newly-Qualified Teachers	72,938
Early Years Training and Development	199,325
Reduction of Infant Class Sizes	1,000,000
Capital Work to reduce class sizes	523,479
Baseline [illegible]ssment	147,796
Assessment: [illegible]ification KS1	41,344
Assessment: Supply Cover	160,334
Training for KS2 Teacher Assessment	89,691
Effective use of National Curriculum Results	91,155
National Literacy Strategy—Primary	741,622
Summer Literacy Schools	20,000
Family Literacy	42,000
Special Educational Needs	273,004
Qualifications: GNVQ, AS/A Level, Key Skills etc.	167,986
Qualifications: Part One GNVQ Pilot	55,000
Work Related Learning at KS4	50,000
Improving Attendance	161,650
Improving Behaviour	185,650
Improving Attendance and Behaviour	148,400
Behaviour and Discipline Projects	94,300
Drug Prevention	88,844
Youth service	24,549
School Security	291,753
Specialist Schools	646,100
Specialist Teacher Assistants	19,825
National Grid for Learning	978,576
Summer Numeracy Schools	9,975
Beacon Schools	25,000
Advanced Skills Teachers	12,000
Specialist Educational Needs Regional Coordination Pilot Projects	55,000
Books for Schools	346,045
Children's Parliament	840
Year 6 Literacy and Numeracy Booster Classes	228,748
Numeracy Consultants and Leading Maths Teachers	9,350
Removal of Outside Toilets	972,035
Energy Management	175,450
Portable CD-ROM Systems for Special Educational Needs Coordinators	44,000
New Deal for Schools
New Deal for Schools	1,287,500
Total	11,753,228

Grants made available to Devon County Council in 1999–2000

Grant title	Allocation £
Standards Fund
School Improvement	3,308,308
National Professional Qualification for Headship	276,170
School Leadership: Serving Headteachers	118,359
Local Recruitment Measures	130,540
Early Years Training and Development	202,970
National Literacy Strategy—Primary	608,061
Summer Literacy Schools and Literacy at Key Stage 3	122,500
National Numeracy Strategy—Primary	774,653
Summer Numeracy Schools	20,000
Family Literacy	42,000
Family Numeracy	20,000
Lifelong Learning Development Plans	94,081
Qualifications	187,519
Work Related Learning at Key Stage 4	37,500
Special Educational Needs	407,639
Social Inclusion: Pupil Support	420,308
Drug Prevention	98,133
Youth Service	25,945
National Grid for Learning	1,212,754
School Security	308,352
Beacon Schools	37,500
Travellers and Displaced Persons	259,208
Ethnic Minority Achievement	17,597
Access Fund for Post-16 Pupils in Schools	43,412
Year 6 Literacy and Numeracy Booster Classes	65,357
Total	8,838,866

Male Teachers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department has taken to encourage male teachers to teach in primary and junior schools; and if he will make a statement. [69807]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government recognise the problem of under-representation of men in primary teaching. The Teacher Training Agency has asked all providers of initial teacher training courses to set themselves targets to focus their efforts to recruit more men into teacher training, and to produce action plans stating how they will work towards that goal.

Class Sizes

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 14 December 1998, Official Report, columns 385–88, if he will list the values of the bids made by local education authorities before 20 November 1998 for capital expenditure to meet the Government's class size pledge. [70281]

Ms Estelle Morris: The values of applications for capital funding to meet the class sizes pledge are listed in the following table by local education authority. These figures refer to the 1999–2000 bidding round.

Applications for capital funding to reduce infant class sizes: 1999–2000

£

Local Education Authority	Grant applied for
Barking and Dagenham	1,021,950
Barnet	75,280
Barnsley	903,398
Bath and North East Somerset	699,773
Bedfordshire	1,982,910
Bexley	176,000
Birmingham	1,817,919
Blackburn	956,063
Blackpool	1,018,480
Bolton	1,650,877
Bournemouth	4,145,060
Bracknell Forest	511,985
Bradford	—
Brent	74,116
Brighton and Hove	1,343,140
Bristol, City of	17,137,900
Bromley	1,307,750
Buckinghamshire	2,379,512
Bury	187,014
Calderdale	383,040
Cambridgeshire	936,968
Camden	177,660
Cheshire	1,847,270
City of London	—
Cornwall	2,451,424
Coventry	375,237
Croydon	1,719,140
Cumbria	1,061,200
Darlington	354,468
Derby City	847,369
Derbyshire	14,646,713
Devon	838,741
Doncaster	702,320
Dorset	745,674
Dudley	1,001,566
Durham	2,131,524
Ealing	720,000
East Riding of Yorkshire	2,475,600
East Sussex	1,154,895
Enfield	1,130,631
Essex	2,074,491
Gateshead	27,000
Gloucestershire	1,536,092
Greenwich	319,641
Hackney	—
Halton	360,000
Hammersmith and Fulham	—
Hampshire	1,422,390
Haringey	—
Harrow	—
Hartlepool	213,625
Havering	305,257
Herefordshire	1,560,742
Hertfordshire	1,059,636
Hillingdon	1,140,800
Hounslow	712,247
Isle of Wight	983,156
Isles of Scilly	—
Islington	—
Kensington and Chelsea	—
Kent	2,939,900
Kingston upon Hull	488,911
Kingston upon Thames	5,172,532
Kirklees	1,778,839
Knowsley	77,784
Lambeth	1,237,999
Lancashire	4,643,666
Leeds	1,442,077
Leicester City	805,207
Leicestershire	1,022,431
Lewisham	—
Lincolnshire	947,600
Liverpool	395,115
Luton	795,000
Manchester	602,412
Medway Towns	434,769
Merton	2,225,845
Middlesbrough	—
Milton Keynes	1,655,500
Newcastle upon Tyne	820,230
Newham	987,500
Norfolk	1,298,079
North East Lincolnshire	684,275
North Lincolnshire	220,036
North Somerset	350,875
North Tyneside	454,537
North Yorkshire	5,325,000
Northamptonshire	1,297,585
Northumberland	1,404,162
Nottingham City	497,382
Nottinghamshire	4,172,246
Oldham	1,722,164
Oxfordshire	3,535,063
Peterborough	1,612,494
Plymouth	—
Poole	492,330
Portsmouth	1,163,659
Reading	424,837
Redbridge	1,576,000
Redcar and Cleveland	402,000
Richmond Upon Thames	1,690,345
Rochdale	888,260
Rotherham	2,985,060
Rutland	—
Salford	336,772
Sandwell	294,467
Sefton	918,283
Sheffield	54,000
Shropshire	265,000
Slough	918,120
Solihull	1,545,500
Somerset	2,799,840
South Gloucestershire	1,790,718
South Tyneside	—

Applications for capital funding to reduce infant class sizes: 1999–2000

£

Local Education Authority	Grant applied for
Southampton	204,333
Southend on Sea	1,293,700
Southwark	1,242,500
St. Helens	1,152,256
Staffordshire	1,255,580
Stockport	2,064,682
Stockton on Tees	258,200
Stoke on Trent	1,859,575
Suffolk	1,000,500
Sunderland	292,980
Surrey	1,316,980
Sutton	421,525
Swindon	—
Tameside	1,378,675
Telford and Wrekin	116,580
Thurrock	452,798
Torbay	1,801,628
Tower Hamlets	—
Trafford	526,663
Wakefield	1,234,946
Walsall	690,854
Waltham Forest	825,280
Wandsworth	249,375
Warrington	1,996,116
Warwickshire	478,859
West Berkshire	1,574,513
West Sussex	1,348,275
Westminster	—
Wigan	1,244,728
Wiltshire	1,439,440
Windsor and Maidenhead	519,600
Wirral	938,966
Wokingham	1,083,470
Wolverhampton	1,710,044
Worcestershire	1,304,523
York, City of	434,730
Grant Maintained Schools	4,007,398
National Totals	192,118,323

Northumberland County Council

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what grants have been made by his Department to Northumberland County Council in addition to revenue support grant in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [70217]

Ms Estelle Morris: Details of the grants, in addition to revenue support grant, made available, by the Department for Education and Employment to Northumberland County Council in 1997–98 and 1998–99 are shown in the following tables. For the Standards Fund, the figures shown include the grant made by the Department and the contribution made by the local education authority.

Grants made available to Northumberland County Council in 1997–98

£

Grant title	Allocation
Standards Fund
School Effectiveness	1,082,600
National Curriculum Assessment—Verification KS1	64,100
National Curriculum Assessment—Supply Cover KS1	78,300
Training for Key Stage 2 Teacher Assessment	41,200
Key Stage 3 No[illegible] Teacher Assessment	13,500
Special Educational Needs	103,600
Qualifications—GNVQ Provision	131,400
Qualifications—Part One GNVQ Pilot	34,000
Disruptive and Disaffected Pupils	125,800
Bilingual Pupils	7,800
Drug Prevention and Schools	20,000
National Professional Qualification for Headship	42,000
School Security	168,400
Child Protection	5,100
Specialist Schools	286,900
Specialist Teacher Assistants	27,400
Baseline Assessment	64,800
Primary Performance Tables	5,000
Books for Schools	194,081
New Deal for Schools
New Deal for Schools	496,250
Total	2,992,231

Grants made available in 1998–99 to Northumberland County Council

£

Grant Title	Allocation
Standards Fund
School Effectiveness	1,209,921
School Leadership: NPQH	76,918
School Leadership: Serving Heads	25,639
Induction for Newly-Qualified Teachers	42,158
Early Years Training and Development	47,250
Reduction of Infant Class Sizes	324,000
Capital Work to reduce class sizes	224,000
Baseline Assessment	71,674
Assessment: Verification KS1	27,648
Assessment: Supply Cover	79,989
Training for KS2 Teacher Assessment	48,010
Effective use of National Curriculum Results	52,334
National Literacy Strategy—Primary	295,894
Summer Literacy Schools	17,000
Family Literacy	13,960
Special Educational Needs	93,621
Qualifications: GNVQ, AS/A Level, Key Skills etc.	145,950
Qualifications: Part One GNVQ Pilot	12,000
Work Related Learning at KS4	50,000
Improving Attendance	43,100
Drug Prevention	42,939
Youth Service	12,961
School Security	168,630
Specialist Schools	325,100
Specialist Teacher Assistants	3,100
Travel to Study Support Centres	1,880
National Grid for Learning	489,288
Early Excellence Centres (Revenue)	48,820
Beacon Schools	64,000
Advanced Skills Teachers	60,000
Books for Schools	193,472
Children's Parliament	100
Year 6 Literacy & Numeracy Booster Classes	68,901
Numeracy Consultants & Leading Maths Teachers	3,300
Removal of Outside Toilets	237,455
Energy Management	102,500
Portable CD-ROM Systems for Special Education Needs Coordinators	24,000
New Deal for Schools
New Deal for Schools	1,881,600
Early Excellence Centres (Capital)	34,700
Total	6,663,813

Competitive Bidding

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many of his Department's initiatives relating to schools announced to date for (i) 1998–99 and (ii) 1999–2000 include opportunities for competitive bidding by (a) education action zone, (b) the Funding Agency for Schools and (c) others, excluding local education authorities; [63536]

(2) how many of his Department's initiatives relating to schools announced for the year 1997–98 included opportunities for competitive bidding by (a) education action zones, (b) the Funding Agency for Schools and (c) others, excluding local education authorities. [63657]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 14 December 1998]: In 1998–99 education action zones were able to bid for funding for work related learning and the special early years programme. From 1999–2000 these programmes will be incorporated within the education action zones budget and bid for as a separate competitive exercise. Education action zones did not come into existence until after the 1997–98 bidding round.

Since 1997–98 the Funding Agency for Schools has been able to bid for phases 1 and 2 of the Early Excellence Centre pilot programme.

Information on the number of competitive bids open to other bodies is not held centrally.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment of the initiatives in 1998–99 involving competitive bidding from local education authorities, including education action zones, and the equivalent initiatives from 1999–2000, how many bids by each of the education action zones were (a) made and (b) successful. [63311]

Ms Estelle Morris: There have been no programmes in which Education Action Forums (EAFs) have competed with local education authorities. Unlike LEAs, EAFs do not bid for Standards Fund grant, or for New Deal for Schools capital. Of course, schools within EAZs can still benefit from these programmes through LEA bids. EAZs have been able to bid for work-related learning and Early Years in a separate exercise funded from the EAZ programme budget. In future years these activities will be funded from EAZs' own budgets.

Working Time Directive (Playgroups)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with playgroup associations on the Working Time Directive; what help he intends to provide for such groups in obeying the directive; and if he will make a statement. [69504]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 8 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

Ministers at the DTI have not had discussions with playgroup associations about the Working Time Directive, although Ministers have received a number of letters from playgroups. DTI published guidance for all employers and workers on the Working Time Regulations in August 1998.

SCOTLAND

Crime Prevention

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action the Government are taking to improve the (a) co-ordination and (b) promotion of crime prevention initiatives. [69403]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Office Crime Prevention Unit has responsibility for co-ordinating crime prevention in Scotland. This is done in collaboration with Scottish police forces, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and a wide range of national agencies.

On 16 June 1998, I announced to the Scottish Grand Committee a new community safety strategy for Scotland—"Safer Communities Through Partnership—A Strategy for Action". The Strategy for Action, which was jointly agreed by The Scottish Office, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland, is designed to reduce crime and improve community safety through well co-ordinated partnerships between public, private and voluntary bodies.

I welcome the fact that a number of partnerships have already been formed. To support this, The Scottish Office will publish, in May, comprehensive guidance to assist in the development of such partnerships. It will include examples of current good practice.

The Scottish Office constantly promotes crime prevention initiatives. The latest example is a renewed campaign against domestic violence.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Police

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance his Department has issued concerning arrangements for consultation between the police and the local community in each police force area; and if he will make a statement. [69626]

Mr. McLeish: The Justice Charter for Scotland requires police forces to consult their local communities and take their views into account when setting standards of service and deciding priorities. In addition, guidance was issued to police forces in March 1998 about the way in which "User Surveys" should be designed to measure public opinion on the police service. I am satisfied that police forces in Scotland fully appreciate the value of local consultation; have the necessary arrangements in place to engage with the public; and use the consultation process to inform their decisions on policing policy and priorities.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Class Sizes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the annual cost of reducing class sizes to 30 or under for pupils in primary years (a) four, (b) five, (c) six and (d) seven; and if he will make a statement. [69415]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The table provides an estimate of the additional marginal annual primary teaching costs of reducing classes in primary schools by stage.

Education authority primary schools in Scotland
Marginal annual recurrent teaching costs associated with reducing the maximum single stage class size to 30 by each additional stage, September 1997

Additional Stage[1]	Marginal Costs (£ million)
P4	2.9
P5	3.7
P6	3.2
P7	3.8

[1] Based on the number of pupils in each school, as recorded in the September 1997 School Census.

These figures show the cost of employing an additional teacher for each new class likely to be created because of a reduction in the class size maximum. In each case, the figure assumes that all earlier stages have been reduced to a maximum of 30 pupils and that current general arrangements in place with respect to composite classes continue. These figures do not include an assessment of the additional capital costs of providing new classrooms.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Specialist Colleges

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what account he has taken of the conclusions of the Sutherland report on the funding of smaller and specialist colleges in England when deciding on the funding allocation to (i) Edinburgh College of Art, (ii) Glasgow School of Art and (iii) the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama. [69740]

Mrs. Liddell: Allocation of funding to individual Higher Education Institutions including the Edinburgh College of Art, Glasgow School of Art and the Royal Academy of Music and Drama is a matter for the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council. The Council was aware of the findings of the Sutherland Report in making decisions on funding. However, as the report related to small institutions in England, and the SHEFC unit of resource for Arts, Design & the Performing Arts is substantially higher than that for Drama, Music and Art in England, the Council decided it would not be appropriate to award a funding premium.

As from 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Modern Studies

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish secondary schools do not offer modern studies as a subject. [69734]

Mrs. Liddell: The information available is based on the actual take-up of modern studies in schools rather than the number of schools that offer modern studies. Information on the latter is not held centrally. The table shows the estimated number and proportion of publicly funded secondary schools in which modern studies was not taught in September 1997. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

	Total number of schools	Proportion[1] of schools in which modern studies was not taught (%)	Estimated[1] number of schools in which modern studies was not taught
S1	400	39	155
S2	400	33	130
S3	390	29	113
S4	390	26	100
S5/S6	380	17	63

[1] Based on response rates of 82 per cent. for S1 to S4 and 49 per cent. for S5/S6

Primary Schools (Consultants)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to phase out visiting specialist teachers in primary schools and replace them with consultants. [69735]

Mrs. Liddell: We have no such proposals. The deployment of teachers in primary schools is a matter for education authorities.

As from 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Fiscal Fines

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines are given to procurators fiscal about the use of fiscal fines. [70187]

Mr. McLeish: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate, who is responsible for the prosecution of crime in Scotland, informs me that guidelines have been issued to procurators fiscal to ensure a consistent approach to the use of fiscal fines and to encourage them to make more extensive use of this alternative to prosecution in the district court. The details of those guidelines form part of prosecution policy and are confidential.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what change in the guidance about which cases should go to the Sheriff Court and which to the district court has been issued in the last five years. [70188]

Mr. McLeish: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is responsible for the prosecution of crime in Scotland. Guidance to procurators fiscal has been issued following legislative provisions which have introduced variable and increased levels of fiscal fines; extended the jurisdiction and powers of the courts; and created new offences and penalties. Further guidance has been issued to procurators fiscal to ensure a consistent approach to the use of fiscal fines and to encourage them to make more extensive use of this alternative to prosecution in the district court. He informs me that the choice of court is determined by considerations of jurisdiction, the gravity of the offence, the offender's record and the likely penalty. The details of the guidance issued to procurators fiscal about prosecution policy are confidential.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the overall number of fiscal fines in each of the sheriffdoms in Scotland in each of the years since they were introduced. [70186]

Mr. McLeish: The number of criminal reports concluded by way of a fiscal fine in each of the sheriffdoms in Scotland are as follows:

Year	Grampian, Highland and Islands	Tayside, Central and Fife	Lothian and Borders	North Strathclyde	South Strathclyde, Dumfries and Galloway	Glasgow and Strathkelvin
1988	2,393	1,210	860	1,984	1,809	1,048
1989	2,359	2,363	1,912	3,450	3,509	1,963
1990–91	2,091	3,898	1,875	3,614	3,163	2,188
1991–92	1,908	3,048	2,191	2,955	2,918	2,038
1992–93	2,221	4,101	1,714	3,142	3,242	3,934
1993–94	1,785	3,098	1,859	2,437	3,123	3,278
1994–95	1,946	3,370	1,442	2,003	3,517	3,768
1995–96	1,863	2,367	1,538	1,570	2,862	5,854
1996–97	2,330	2,565	1,253	1,839	3,589	3,562
1997–98	2,136	3,003	1,582	2,651	4,088	5,501
1998–99	2,280	2,172	1,104	2,032	2,938	3,580

Notes:

1. The figures for 1988 and 1989 are for calendar years.
2. The figures for the first quarter of 1990 are not included.
3. Prior to April 1996 inconsistencies in the method of recording statistics for fiscal fines existed.
4. The figures for the financial year 1998–99 relate to the period to December 1998.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Eye and Dental Check-ups (Charges)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the annual cost of abolishing charges for (a) eye and (b) dental check-ups in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [70352]

Mr. Galbraith: NHS sight test are available free of charge to eligible patients. It is estimated that the re-introduction of universally free NHS sight tests in Scotland would cost a minimum of £14 million annually. Free NHS sight tests for people aged 60 and over will be introduced from April

At present, patients who are not eligible for free NHS dental services or for help with the costs of these pay 80 per cent. of the examination or treatment fee directly to the dentist. It is estimated that the re-introduction of universally free NHS dental examinations in Scotland would cost a minimum of £4.5 million

From 1 July, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

NHS Trusts (Wage Rises)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are, for each NHS trust in Scotland, (a) the amount budgeted for wage rises for the next financial year, (b) the percentage increase for staff not covered by pay review boards, by category and (c) the amount which will be required to fund the new salary levels; and what plans he has to provide additional funds to ensure trusts are able to provide salary increases and protect planned projects. [70349]

Mr. Galbraith: Information on individual trusts' pay assumptions is not held centrally. No specific sum has been provided for wage rises in the NHS in Scotland for the next financial year. However, the uplift of 4.25 per cent. in general allocations made available to health boards in 1999–2000 is sufficient to meet the costs of providing health care including pay. The cost of meeting the Review Bodies' recommendations is estimated to be £89 million. No additional funds have been made available for pay. However, an additional tranche of modernisation funding amounting to £20 million has been made available. The NHS in Scotland has been fully funded to meet the costs of the pay awards and to continue with the modernisation agenda. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate his Department's expenditure on overseas travel for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–01 and (e) 2001–02. [69252]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 4 February 1999]: Information on overseas travel in The Scottish Office is not held separately and cannot be disaggregated from total expenditure on travel without disproportionate costs in staff time. Overseas travel for future years is not estimated separately.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Tacis (Unpaid Invoices)

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received about problems caused to United Kingdom companies by unpaid invoices to the EU for work undertaken as part of the Tacis Programmes; and what initiatives she is taking to resolve these problems. [70094]

Mr. Foulkes: Late payment of Tacis invoices is a serious problem for UK companies, which the Government are working to help solve.

My department maintains a regular dialogue with the British Consultants Bureau (BCB) on this subject. I met BCB representatives at the end of last year. The Chief Executive of the Association of Consulting Engineers wrote to me about the issue two weeks ago. Individual companies have also contacted my department, the DTI and the FCO.

Ministers and senior officials raised the issue with the European Commission on numerous occasions in the latter part of last year. We have received some indications that the overall situation has since started to improve. This is a Commission management issue, and immediate improvements in efficiency should be possible. In the longer term the Government are supporting the Commission's plan to bring forward a harmonised contracting regulation simplifying procedures for all external aid programmes, and pressing for reform to the EC Financial Regulation, which sets out procedures for the payment of invoices which are unduly onerous in some cases. We will continue to monitor this situation closely.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will publish her Department's collation and assessment of responses to each of the Government's public consultations. [69766]

Clare Short: My Department held for the first time last year a series of Development Policy Forums, with wide participation from outside groups across the UK. We are about to publish a report on the process as we promised. This will include consolidated comments and recommendations from participants and a Departmental response.

We have also consulted widely in preparing all our Country and other Strategy Papers, which set out how we aim to contribute to achieving the International Development Targets through our work with partnership countries and international institutions. All these papers have been or are being published—18 have been published to date—and include a record of the individual consultation processes. Country strategy papers have not previously been published by the predecessor department.

Additionally, we have undertaken a review of our relationship with Civil Society, involving discussion with a broad range of groups in the UK and overseas. A copy of the report of the process is about to be sent to all who contributed as well as being made available more widely.

TB

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid her Department currently gives to help developing countries combat TB. [70169]

Clare Short: TB accounts for a significant proportion of the global burden of disease, particularly amongst the poorest. Its control is a crucial component of the Department for International Development's (DFID) health strategy. Over the last two years, DFID has programmed nearly £26 million directly for TB work. This has been primarily at country level to establish well functioning Directly Observed Treatment Shortcourse (DOTS) programmes and to develop the contribution of the private and voluntary sectors to TB prevention and treatment. Priority countries include India (where a commitment of £20.5 million was made in 1998), Malawi, Russia, Nepal and Uganda. DFID has contributed £1 million to the World Health Organisation Global TB programme, and funded approximately £1.5 million of UK research.

Western Sahara

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid is given by the European Union to Western Sahara; and what is the cost to the United Kingdom's European Union budget contribution. [69900]

Clare Short: The European Union plans to spend 10 million euro from July to December 1999 on humanitarian aid to Saharawi refugees. The exact UK share of EU spending is determined retrospectively but the estimated forecast UK share will be approximately 1.97 million euro, or £1.46 million.

Morocco

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the cost to the United Kingdom's European Union budget contribution of European Union aid given to Morocco in the last year. [69899]

Clare Short: In 1997, the latest year for which figures are available, the cost was £18.37 million.

PRIME MINISTER

Operation Desert Fox

Q13. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to the letter from his private secretary of 20 January, to the Religious Society of Friends in Britain, what discussions he has held with the UN on the impact of military action under Operation Desert Fox on the humanitarian situation. [68684]

The Prime Minister: As my Private Secretary said in his letter of 20 January, the UN, in a briefing to the Secretary Council on 14 January, confirmed that the impact of Operation Desert Fox on the humanitarian situation was limited.

On 30 January the Security Council agreed to the establishment of 3 Panels to discuss Iraq issues. One of these will address the humanitarian situation in Iraq. We hope that the Government of Iraq co-operates with the UN's humanitarian work.

Engagements

Mr. Breed: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 10 February. [68689]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will have further such meetings later today.

Commissioner for Public Appointments

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made in the appointment of a new Commissioner for Public Appointments. [70769]

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty in Council has today approved the appointment of Dame Rennie Fritchie as Sir Len Peach's successor as Commissioner for Public Appointments. Dame Rennie, who will also be appointed as a Civil Service Commissioner, will take up office from 1 March 1999.

Sir Len Peach will continue to serve as Commissioner for Public Appointments for Northern Ireland. I am sure that all Members of the House would wish me to express their appreciation for the manner in which Sir Len has carried out his responsibilities over the past three years. He has made a major contribution to raising standards in public appointments.

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the flights taken by (a) himself and (b) other ministers on Concorde since 2 May 1997. [67984]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The Ministerial Code requires Ministers to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements.

In line with this guidance and the practice of the previous Administration, I and 8 of my Ministers have taken scheduled Concorde flights on a total of 14 occasions. This compares with 11 Ministers on a total of 13 occasions during the last two years of the previous Administration.

In addition, as accounted for in answers to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) on 14 July 1997, Official Report, column 46, and the hon. Member for Lichfield (Mr. Fabricant) on 13 March 1998, Official Report, columns 366–67, I have also chartered Concorde, as did my predecessor.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list Government expenditure on ministerial overseas visits at current prices (a) for the financial years (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96 and (iv) 1996–97 and (b) over the period (1) 1 May 1997 to 31 March 1998 and (2) from 1 April 1998 to date. [70189]

The Prime Minister: Expenditure on Ministerial overseas visits for the periods requested is estimated as follows:

Year	£ million
1993–94	6.5
1994–95	6.6
1995–96	6.9
1996–97	7.8
1 May 1997–31 March 1998	6.1
1 April–31 December 1998	4.0

The figures for 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96 do not include some expenditure falling to the Scottish Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Welsh Office where the information is not available. Full costs are available from 1996–97 onwards. All figures are in 1997–98 prices. The figure for the period 1 April to 31 December 1998 reflects payments made so far for travel undertaken in this period.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the division of responsibilities between (a) the Minister for the Cabinet Office and (b) the Secretary to the Cabinet. [69492]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 February 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office assists me and Ministerial colleagues in the implementation and co-ordination of Government policy and its effective presentation. He is responsible for co-ordinating the Government's policies against drug misuse; for discharging, on a day-to-day basis, my responsibilities as Minister for the Civil Service, and for delivering the Modernising Government agenda. He oversees the work of the five Cabinet Office Agencies and the Central Office of Information. As Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, he is responsible to Her Majesty the Queen for the general administration of the Duchy.

As under previous Governments, the Secretary of the Cabinet is principal official adviser to the Prime Minister, and supervises official support for the collective decision-making process. He is also Head of the Home Civil Service.

Former Soviet Union (Nuclear Reactors)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what assistance the Government are giving to former Soviet Union countries to ensure that their nuclear reactors are millennium compliant. [69789]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 February 1999]: Last year, the Department of Trade and Industry commissioned a report specifically with a view to helping Central and Eastern European and former Soviet Union countries achieve millennium compliance in their civil nuclear power reactors. That report, entitled The Millennium Problem—Raising the Awareness of Nuclear Power Station Operators and Regulatory Authorities in Central and Eastern Europe, was translated into Russian and distributed to every nuclear plant and regulatory authority in the region. In addition the DTI has, so far, offered £62,000 towards the International Atomic Energy Agency's extra budgetary activities this year specifically pursuing the international effort to assist the countries concerned in their efforts to avoid Year 2000 problems and to carry out contingency planning.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Risk Material Controls

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to pass on the costs of specified risk material controls to producers. [68737]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard) on 14 January 1999, Official Report, column 291. The charges would be levied at slaughterhouses and cutting plants. The extent to which these costs are passed on to primary producers is a commercial matter for the industry. The industry already bears the cost of removal and disposal of Specified Risk Material. We see no reason why the tax payer should bear the cost of enforcing these activities.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research the Government have commissioned into genetically modified grasses to be used for animal grazing; when the research will be completed; and if the results will be made public. [68772]

Mr. Rooker: The Ministry has not commissioned any research into the production of genetically modified grasses to be used for grazing. However, the Ministry has commissioned a desk study to assess the possible implications for agriculture should genetically modified grasses and legumes be introduced. The work is due to be completed in July 1999 and we would hope to make the final report available soon afterwards.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for a levy to fund the Food Standards Agency from chain stores or stores over 10,000 sq ft. [69150]

Mr. Rooker: The proposals that we published for consultation on 27 January envisage a levy that would apply to all food retail and catering premises required to register under the Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991 (as amended), with the exception of premises dealing in wrapped confectionery, soft drinks, crisps and similar wrapped products. While chain stores and stores over 10,000 sq ft. that fall within this definition would be liable for payment, the proposals do not contain any specific provisions relating to these types of premises.

FEOGA

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the UK contribution in the current financial year to the FEOGA budget. [69323]

Mr. Rooker: The UK contributes to the EU budget as a whole and not to one particular part. For the 1999 EU Budget, the UK's gross financing share before abatement is 18.15 per cent. FEOGA accounts for around 47 per cent. of the 1999 EC Budget. Of the FEOGA budget, just over 2 per cent. is spent on tobacco regime.

Green Top Milk

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the basis for calculating the price to be charged to bed and breakfast outlets for testing green top milk; [70262]

(2) what representations he has received on the impact of the cost of testing green top milk on small bed and breakfast outlets. [70263]

Mr. Rooker: The objective is to recover the full cost of carrying out this statutory microbiological sample testing work. The charges are expected to cover the costs of obtaining representative samples, laboratory analysis, IT and administration including invoicing and any debt recovery.

I have not received any representations about the impact of charging on bed and breakfast outlets.

Farmers (Bankruptcy)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of farmers have become bankrupt in each of the past five years. [69309]

Mr. Rooker: The table sets out the number of bankruptcies in the agricultural and horticultural sectors in England and Wales between 1993 and 1998. During this period the total number of farmers, partners and directors in England and Wales has been in excess of 200,000. In each of these years therefore bankruptcies represented less than ½ per cent. of this total.

Number of bankruptcies in the agricultural and horticultural sectors: England and Wales 1993–98

Year	Bankruptcies of self-employed individuals	Company Insolvencies	Total
1993	277	157	434
1994	231	166	397
1995	218	99	317
1996	168	89	257
1997	155	51	206
1997[2] (January to June)	88	23	111
1998 (January to June)	71	30	101

Including partnerships

Last 6 months figures unavailable for 1998. For comparison purposes half yearly figures for 1997 have also been provided

Source:

Department of Trade and Industry

Honeybees

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ban the import of honeybees of the Italian sub-species, apis mellifera ligustica. [69488]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 8 February 1999]: No. Apis mellifera ligustica is one of the most successful and commonly used honey bee strains in the commercial honey producing world. Since 1955, and probably earlier, thousands of consignments of ligustica have been imported by beekeepers into the UK each year.

Abattoirs

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the impact on small abattoirs of the increased charges for specified risk material audit; and if he will make a statement. [70260]

Mr. Rooker: A number of representations have been received in response to the consultation document which was issued on 14 January. Final decisions on the proposed arrangements for recovering from industry the cost of enforcement by the Meat Hygiene Service of the controls on specified risk material will be taken once the consultation period ends on 12 February.

Copies of all the responses received will be available for public scrutiny in the main MAFF Library in Whitehall Place in due course, as is our normal practice.

Quarantine

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent public consultation on quarantine reform; what changes he proposes; and when they will be introduced. [69373]

Mr. Rooker: We are considering the results of the public consultation on the recommendations made by the Kennedy Group. There has been a large number of replies (more than 3,700).

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by how much the cost of meat inspection was increased in each 12 month period since the Meat Hygiene Service became operational; and what estimate he has made of cost to the industry for 1999. [68127]

Mr. Rooker: The total cost of the Meat Hygiene Service to the industry since the launch of the Agency in April 1995 has been:

Year	Cost (£ million)	Percentage increase/decrease
1995–96	28.9	—
1996–97	26.0	11% decrease
1997–98	29.8	15% increase
1998–99	33.1	11% increase

[1] The total cost of the MHS in 1995–96 was £31.4 million. However, £2.5 million concerned transitional relief funded by government for the set up of the new Agency.

[2] Latest forecast

From 1995–96 certain MHS enforcement costs, such as those for Specified Risk Material controls, were met by Government.

The MHS budget for 1999–2000 is currently being prepared. Figures for 1999–2000 are therefore not yet available. However, after careful consideration, my right hon. Friend the Minister announced on 14 January 1999, Official Report, column 291, that the Government can no longer defer the introduction of charges to industry to cover the costs of SRM controls. It is proposed that these costs should be transferred from the taxpayer to industry from 29 March 1999. A consultation package on this proposal was issued on 14 January.

Mink Farming

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food during what hours Ministry officials were in attendance for the transport of mink on 22 December 1998 from Ponteland to Devon; and what charges were levied for their attendance. [68145]

Mr. Morley: Officials attended the mink at Ponteland on 21 December from 9.45 am to 11.00 am and from 12.30 pm up till their departure at 1.45 pm the same day. Officials also met the mink on arrival at the premises of destination at 11.55 pm, inspecting them for about 45 minutes. A further inspection was carried out at 1 pm the following afternoon (22 December). The work is not chargeable. Under the arrangements for licensing mink farms, the premises of destination are regarded as being in Cornwall.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how long the mink transported on 22 December 1998 from the mink factory farm at Ponteland remained in the lorry which transported them. [68144]

Mr. Morley: The journey was on 21 December. The time from loading the first mink at Ponteland to unloading the last animal at the premises of destination was 19 hours. The animals had access to water in each compartment and food was also carried in case of delay.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resources have been allocated by Her Majesty's Government to opposition groups in Iraq. [68818]

Mr. Fatchett: We have given humanitarian assistance to Kurdish groups in northern Iraq and Shia groups in southern Iraq.

Indonesia

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many licences for the export of armaments to Indonesia have been agreed for each of the last five years. [68638]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 3 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) on 9 February 1999, Official Report, column 202.

Cossacks (Repatriation)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on public access to Public Record Office files relating to repatriation of Cossacks at the end of the Second World War. [69710]

Ms Quin: All FCO files more than 30 years old relating to repatriation of Cossacks are available for access at the Public Record Office.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to each of the Government's public consultations. [69778]

Mr. Fatchett: The FCO does not as a matter of course collate and assess responses to the Government's public consultations. To do so in order to reply to this question would involve disproportionate costs.

Burma

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to raise concerns about the situation of (a) the Karen and (b) other ethnic groups in Burma at the forthcoming session of the UN Human Rights Commission. [69809]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK, with EU Partners, will work for a tough resolution on Burma at the forthcoming session of the UN Commission on Human Rights, to highlight the abuse of ethnic minorities, including the Karen and press the military regime to stop violating human rights.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department is taking to encourage the Association of South East Asian nations to expel Burma from its membership. [69810]

Mr. Fatchett: ASEAN members are fully aware of our deep concern about the appalling human rights and political situation in Burma. We encourage them to use their influence on Burma.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to encourage the Thai Government (a) to permit the entry of refugees from Burma and (b) not to repatriate such refugees forcibly. [69808]

Mr. Fatchett: Our Embassy in Bangkok is in close touch with the Thai authorities, who are aware of our concerns about Burmese refugees on the Thai-Burma border. We welcome the agreement reached with the UN High Commissioner for Refugees which includes arrangements for admissions into refugee camps. The Thai authorities assure us that no refugees have been forcibly repatriated.

Customs and Excise Searches

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times his Department's premises have been searched by HM Customs and Excise officers in connection with their investigations in the last five years. [69814]

Mr. Fatchett: HM Customs and Excise have never used their statutory powers to search FCO premises. There have been occasions during the course of HMCE investigations when they have examined FCO documents with the consent of the Department. But no central record of such examinations has been maintained either by HMCE or the FCO.

Arms Embargoes

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1999, Official Report, columns 214–15, on arms embargoes, when each of (a) the listed UN resolutions and (b) the implementing Orders in Council were first circulated to the relevant British ambassadors. [69815]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The UK Mission in New York transmits the texts of United Nations Resolutions on adoption to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and relevant overseas posts.

As stated in my reply of 26 January, it was not normal practice prior to July 1998 to circulate details of the Orders in Council to the relevant High Commissions or Embassies.

Western Sahara

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions he has taken in pursuance of the implementation of the United Nation resolution relating to Morocco's annexation of Western Sahara, with particular reference to the provision for a referendum of the Saharawi people. [69897]

Mr. Fatchett: We fully support the United Nations' policy of holding a free and fair referendum in the Western Sahara. We are working to this end with our EU partners, within the Security Council and at the Friends of the Western Sahara Group in the UN. We urge the co-operation of all the parties involved with the UN Secretary-General's present initiative. We also regularly raise the Western Sahara in bilateral meetings, emphasising the need for achieving a just and lasting solution.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards, and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69972]

(2) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner; [69907]

(3) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69983]

(4) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69834]

(5) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69948]

Mr. Fatchett: The answer for advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the FCO is shown in the tables.

Executive NDPBs

	Advisory NDPBs Diplomatic Service Appeals Board	Government Hospitality Fund	Wilton Park Academic Council
(a) Admit members of the public to all Board or Committee meetings?	no	no	no
(b) Hold public meetings?	no	no	no
(c) Have lay or consumer representatives on their Boards?	no	yes	yes
(d) Under Statutory requirement?	n/a	n/a	n/a

	Advisory NDPBs Diplomatic Service Appeals Board	Government Hospitality Fund	Wilton Park Academic Council
Publish:
(a) Minutes of meetings?	yes	no	no
(b) Agendas for meetings and documents for these meetings?	yes	no	no
(c) A register of members interests?	yes	yes	no
(d) Under statutory requirements?	n/a	n/a	n/a

	British Council	Britain Russia Centre	British Association for Central and Eastern Europe	Commonwealth Institute	GB China Centre	Marshall Aid Commemoration Commission	Westminster Foundation for Democracy
(a) Admit members of the public to all Board or Committee meetings?	no	no	no	no	no	no	no
(b) Hold public meetings?	no	no	no	no	yes	no	no
(c) Have lay or consumer representatives on their Boards?	yes	no	yes	yes	yes	yes	yes
(d) Operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure?	yes	no	no	no	no	no	no
(e) and if so, is this under a statutory requirement?	n/a	n/a	n/a	no	n/a	no	n/a

Only the AGM is an open meeting

Held once a month the AGM is also open to the public

	British Council	Britain Russia Centre	British Association for Central and Eastern Europe	Commonwealth Institute	GB China Centre	Marshall Aid Commemoration Commission	Westminster Foundation for Democracy
Publish:
(a) Minutes of meetings?	no	no	no	no	no	no	no
(b) Agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings?	no	no	no	no	no	no	no
(c) A register of members interests?	no	no	no	no	yes	no	no
(d) Is it a statutory requirement?	n/a	n/a	n/a	no	n/a	no	n/a

Available for public reference in the Commonwealth Resource Centre

	British Council	Britain Russia Centre	British Association for Central and Eastern Europe	Commonwealth Institute	GB China Centre	Marshall Aid Commemoration Commission	Westminster Foundation for Democracy
(a) Which of the executive NDPBs have a statutory base?	no	no	no	yes	no	yes	no
(b) Which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner?	yes	yes	no	no[1]	no[1]	no[1]	no[1]

[1] These NDPBs are due to be brought within the Parliamentary Ombudsmans jurisdiction by means of an Order in Council to be laid in February 1999

Venezuela

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding Mr. Miles and Mr. Loseby, who are imprisoned in Venezuela, in the last three months. [70001]

Mr. Fatchett: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons, received a letter from my hon. Friend in December 1998 about his constituent James Miles. My noble Friend replied on 5 January 1999.

Officials in the Consular Division of the FCO are in regular contact by telephone and letter with James Miles' and Paul Losebys' parents.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when (a) the British Ambassador to Venezuela and (b) a representative from the British Embassy last visited Mr. Miles and Mr. Loseby. [70002]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Ambassador to Venezuela has not visited James Miles and Paul Loseby. UK based Consular staff visit James Miles and Paul Loseby at least every quarter and last did so on 2 February, when James Miles declined to see the UK-based member of staff. Other consular staff visit more frequently and have seen both on numerous occasions.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of (a) the conditions in which Mr. Miles and Mr. Loseby are being held and (b) their medical and dental situation. [70003]

Mr. Fatchett: Consular staff at our posts overseas monitor prison conditions to satisfy themselves that British prisoners are not discriminated against, that their basic human rights are met, and that illnesses are treated.

Consular staff have interceded with the Venezuelan authorities whenever James Miles or Paul Loseby have requested medical or dental treatment.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings representatives of the British Embassy in Caracas have had with Venezuelan Government officials in respect of Mr. Miles and Mr. Loseby. [70004]

Mr. Fatchett: Consular staff at the British Embassy in Caracas meet regularly with Venezuelan officials at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Department of Prisons to discuss consular aspects of their imprisonment. The most recent meeting was on 3 February 1999 between the Vice Consul and an official from the Prisons Directorate at the Ministry of Justice.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the inauguration of the new Venezuelan President on the case of Mr. Miles and Mr. Loseby. [70005]

Mr. Fatchett: The new President of Venezuela was inaugurated on 2 February. It is too early to say what, if any, policies might be introduced which will affect foreign prisoners.

Maldives

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on allegations that the Government of the Maldives imprisoned seven Christians because of their beliefs. [70213]

Mr. Fatchett: We attach importance to the right to freedom of religion and expression. We were therefore concerned to learn about the deportation from the Maldives in July 1998 of nineteen foreign nationals for alleged proselytising activity and the detention of several Maldivian citizens who had apparently converted to Christianity. We understand that all those detained have now been released. We will continue to monitor the situation closely.

General Pinochet

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at what levels the four reports despatched to his Department by the British Embassy in Madrid, relating to the investigations by Judge Garzon, were read, and when; which desks these reports were forwarded to for information within his Department and to where outside his Department; and what action was taken as a result. [70284]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The reports of 12 November 1997 and 23 January 1998 were read at desk level in the Department; the former was sent to our Embassy in Santiago; the latter to our Embassies in Santiago and Buenos Aires. The reports of 15 and 16 October were read at senior official level in the FCO, passed to the Home Office on 16 October, and drawn on in briefing the Foreign Secretary on 16 October before Senator Pinochet was detained.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the nature of the informal indication to the British Embassy in Santiago in early September 1998 that Augusto Pinochet was to visit the United Kingdom; what reports were sent to his Department as a consequence; what reference was made in internal communications to potential legal and diplomatic difficulties that might ensue; and if such reports were brought to his attention. [70285]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 9 February 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Ruislip Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) on 29 October 1998, Official Report, columns 273–74, and to the answer my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons, gave to the nobel Lord Lamont of Lerwick in another place on 11 January 1999, Official Report, House of Lords, column 3. The reports subsequently circulated with the FCO made no reference to potential legal and diplomatic difficulties. This was reported to me over the weekend 19/20 September.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the contents of the note faxed to his Department on 9 October 1998 by the British Embassy in Santiago relating to reports of General Pinochet's death; at what level in his Department this was read; and what action was taken in response. [70287]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our Embassy in Santiago telephoned the Resident Clerk late on 9 October following inquiries from the press about reports that Senator Pinochet had died that afternoon in London. The Resident Clerk obtained confirmation from the Chilean Embassy that the reports were untrue and informed our Embassy. The Embassy's subsequent note to the Department recording this exchange was received after Senator Pinochet was detained.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (i) minutes and (ii) other documents are held by his Department relating to telephone calls made by representatives of the Chilean Embassy concerning the departure from the UK of General Pinochet prior to the issuing of the arrest warrant; what was the nature of the discussions; at what time of day those discussions took place; and if he will make a statement. [70289]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 9 February]: For details of the telephone calls between the Chilean Ambassador and Foreign Office officials, I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Windsor (Mr. Trend) on 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 149, and on 1 February 1999, Official Report, columns 496–97. As I have already made clear, both conversations took place before the receipt of the request from the Spanish authorities for the provisional arrest of Senator Pinochet.

Cornish Language

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to co-ordinate Government policy on the future development and status of the Cornish language. [68662]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are discussing with colleagues in home departments the impact of the Council of Europe's Charter for Regional or Minority Languages on the Cornish language. This is, ultimately, a matter of domestic rather than foreign policy.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 11 February 1999

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998

Mr. Beith: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions he has given his consent for proceedings to take place under sections 5 to 7 of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998; on how many occasions his powers under the Act have been revoked by order of the Secretary of State for the Home Department; and if he will make a statement. [70305]

The Attorney-General: I have so far received no requests for consent to prosecution as provided for by Section 4 of the Criminal Law Act 1977 as amended by Section 5(2) of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998, or as provided for by Article 12 of the Criminal Attempts and Conspiracy (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 as amended by Section 6(2) of the 1998 Act. Section 7 of the 1998 Act relates to proceedings in Scotland and confers no powers on me.

The Secretary of State has so far made no order under Section 4(6) of the Criminal Law Act 1977 as added by Section 5(2) of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 or under Article 12(6) of the Criminal Attempts and Conspiracy (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 as added by Section 6(2) of the 1998 Act which would have the effect of disapplying the requirement of my consent in relation to cases of any description specified in the order.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the cash and running costs limits for the Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland departmental services, the grants to voluntary bodies from social security, the Social Fund, certain national agricultural schemes and discretionary rent allowance payments for 1998–99. [71121]

Marjorie Mowlam: Subject to Parliamentary Approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, it is proposed that the cash limit for Class XV Vote 1—the Northern Ireland Office—will be increased by £62,431,000 from £926,291,000 to £988,722,000. This reflects the take-up of end year flexibility on capital of £2,740,000 and departmental running costs of £5,000,000. Additional expenditure on compensation of £27,000,000 is also reflected in the increase, as is funding for the Prison Officers' redundancy scheme of £4,000,000 costs of £8,124,000 arising from the Bloody Sunday Inquiry, £4,724,000 to cover the costs of the Referendum and elections to the Northern Ireland Assembly and £5,000,000 for Victims' Support. Other minor changes to the NIO Cash Limit total £5,843,000.

The cash limit which covers most Northern Ireland departmental services will be increased by £112,005,000 from £4,243,776 to £4,355,781,000. This increase reflects a rephasing of Student Loan Book sales of £38,500,000 and reclassification of Bus Fuel Duty Rebates of £7,209,000, the take-up of end year flexibility on capital of £14,645,500, departmental running costs of £30,000,000, European Structural Funds of £8,734,000, Health programme of £29,406,000 and Welfare to Work end year flexibility of £1,643,000. The increase also reflects additional resources of £5,389,000 for the Welfare to Work programme, £6,499,000 for DHSS Winter Pressures, £6,100,000 provided for the Chancellor's Initiative, the transfer of £38,829,000 to the Northern Ireland Office cash limit on Class XV, Vote 1 and other technical changes of £2,709,000.

The cash limit for the Grants to Voluntary Bodies—Northern Ireland Department of Health and Social Services Vote 6—has been reduced by £873,000 reflecting lower than expected demands on this fund.

The cash limit for the social fund—Northern Ireland Department of Health and Social Services Vote 6—has been reduced by £50,000 reflecting lower than expected demands on this fund.

The cash limit covering national agriculture capital grant schemes and certain assistance for production, marketing and processing and the fishing industry will increase by £8,512,000 from £16,682,000 to £25,194,000 as a result of additions to the Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance of £8,497,000 and the take-up of entitlement to end year flexibility on capital of £15,000.

The cash limit for the discretionary rent allowance—Northern Ireland Department of Health and Social Services Vote 6—has been reduced by £634,000 reflecting lower than expected demands on this fund.

The combined gross running costs limit for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland departments will be increased by £40,799,000 from £749,283,000 to £790,082,000. This reflects the take up in 1998–99 of £35,000,000 of the end year flexibility entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 134–36, transfers of £4,000,000 in respect of prison officer redundancies, £750,000 for increased Inland Revenue charges, £526,000 in the Bloody Sunday Inquiry, £470,000 in respect of accommodation costs and other minor transfers in totalling £53,000. Of the revised gross running costs provision, £181,391,000 is for the NIO and £608,691,000 is for Northern Ireland Departments. The gross running costs limit for the Welfare to Work programme which is outside the Northern Ireland Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased from £6,041,000 to £8,193,000.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Short Money

Mr. Kemp: To ask the President of the Council how much Short money was awarded to Her Majesty's Opposition for the current financial year; and what steps are taken to ensure it is used for the purposes laid down by Parliament. [70356]

Mrs. Beckett: Under the formula set out in the resolution of 4 November 1993, the Official Opposition in the House of Commons are due to receive £1,112,885 in Short money in the current financial year; Cranborne money in the House of Lords amounts to £106,191 for the Official Opposition in 1998–99.

Claims are made by the parties to the Accounting Officers of each House with both a certificate that the expenses have been incurred exclusively in relation to the party's parliamentary business and a report by an independent professional auditor.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome (Charles Darwin)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will recognise the work of Charles Darwin in the Millennium Dome. [66049]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is examining ways in which aspects of Darwin's work might be incorporated within the Millennium Experience project.

Millennium Dome (Catering)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many (a) black and (b) Asian people serve on the Food Advisory Committee of the Dome. [68182]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) does not have a Food Advisory Committee. However, it has set up a consultative Catering Review Group. The membership comprises senior representatives of industry-wide bodies including British Hospitality; the Restauranters' Association of Great Britain; Hospitality Training Foundation; and Catering International Management Association. Members serve in an unpaid, advisory capacity. Their input is sought on the basis of their experience and, in case of industry bodies, their representation of all members' interest. None of those industry bodies have so far put forward a black or Asian representative.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the dimensions of the Millennium dome are; when tickets for the Millennium dome will first go on sale; what event is planned to mark the first tickets going on sale; how he will recruit people to perform in the central show in the dome; how many jobs have been created by the Millennium dome project to date; and how many people will work in the dome when it opens. [66865]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) plans to release tickets for sale to the general public from early Autumn 1999. The NMEC has no plans to hold a specific event to mark the sale of the first tickets direct to the public for the Millennium Experience. However, as part of the NMEC's planned marketing strategy there will be, during the summer and autumn of this year, a wide range of information on the Millennium Experience including ticket availability and processes; public transport routes; opportunities for travel and Dome ticket packages. This will be achieved through a wide range of media including television and national press.

The NMEC announced on 18 June 1998 that it was starting a recruitment campaign throughout the UK for 100 young people to have the chance to appear in the Millennium Show in the central area of the Dome. The first phase of auditions took place in August 1998 at which 43 young performers were recruited and they are now well into their training programme. The second phase of auditions are currently underway.

A total of 5,000 people will be employed at the Dome by the NMEC and catering companies during the year-long operation of the Millennium Experience. This includes performers, technical, operating and catering staff. The first phase of recruitment for operating staff begins in Spring 1999.

As a direct result of the Millennium Experience around 2,000 construction jobs have been created and it is estimated that a further 3,000 jobs will be created in secondary markets.

Millennium Dome (Disability Awareness)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many days training staff to be employed in the Millennium Dome will receive on disability awareness. [69702]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is finalising training programmes for operational staff. The current outline programmes provide for three hours training each for all staff in Disability Etiquette. This follows consultations with the company's Accessibility Advisory Group membership, details of which were published in the company's Annual Report and Financial Statements last year. Staff whose duties will focus on accessibility matters will undertaken more training; the nature and the scope of this will be appropriate to each role.

Millennium Dome (Induction Loop System)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if induction loop systems will be available in the Millennium Dome to assist people with hearing loss. [69703]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) will provide induction loop systems in the Dome for those visitors who suffer from hearing loss.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. [69903]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department sponsors 40 executive non-departmental public bodies, of which the following were set up by an Act of Parliament.

British Library
British Tourist Authority
Broadcasting Standards Commission
English Tourist Board
Football Licensing Authority
The Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England (English Heritage)
Millennium Commission
British Museum
Imperial War Museum
Museum of London
National Gallery
National Maritime Museum
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside
National Museum of Science and Industry
National Portrait Gallery
Natural History Museum
Tate Gallery
Victoria and Albert Museum
Wallace Collection
National Heritage Memorial Fund
National Lottery Charities Board
New Opportunities Fund
National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts
Registrar of Public Lending Right
Royal Armouries.

The Parliamentary Commissioner is currently empowered to investigate the following DCMS sponsored executive NDPBs:

Arts Council of England
British Film Institute
British Library Board
Crafts Council
English Sports Council
English Tourist Board
English Heritage
Museums and Galleries Commission
National Heritage Memorial Fund/Heritage Lottery Fund
Registrar of Public Lending Right
UK Sports Council.

An Order being taken before the Privy Council this month will extend the Parliamentary Commissioner's jurisdiction to include all the executive NDPBs sponsored by my Department.

Christian Broadcasting

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if overtly Christian companies are barred from obtaining national radio frequencies. [70345]

Janet Anderson: The Broadcasting Act 1990, disqualifies groups whose objectives are wholly or mainly of a religious nature from holding a terrestrial national radio licence issued by the Radio Authority.

World Heritage Sites

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will place in the Library a copy of the Government's consultation documents for World Heritage site nominations; and if he will list (a) the organisations consulted and (b) those which responded. [68811]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Copies of the Consultation Paper were placed in the Library of the House on 21 August 1998. The information is not presently available in the form requested. I shall therefore write to the hon. Member shortly with a list of those organisations across the United Kingdom and overseas which were consulted and those which responded, and will place copies in the Library of the House. Responses will be made available for public inspection in due course.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Interest Immunity

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received regarding the use of public interest immunity in trials arising from the bombing of (a) the Israeli Embassy and (b) Balfour House; and if he will make a statement. [70267]

Mr. Hoon: I am not aware of any representations about the use of public interest immunity certificates in the trial which arose out of these bombings.

Mediation UK

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received regarding the future funding of Mediation UK; and what action he intends to take in this respect. [70203]

Mr. Hoon: The Department received correspondence from Mediation UK in April 1998 and January 1999 requesting funding as well as correspondence from various MPs and community mediation schemes. We are currently considering the role that alternative dispute resolution, including mediation, may play in the civil justice system. It would be inappropriate to take decisions on the funding of any particular mediation organisation until policy has been formulated.

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what changes are proposed to the cash and running costs limits of the Lord Chancellor's Department votes for 1998–99. [71263]

Mr. Hoon: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limits for Class VIII Votes 1 and 2 will reduce, and for Vote 3 will increase. The running cost limits for Class VIII Votes 1 and 3 will increase. The increases will be offset by transfers and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Class VIII, Vote 1, Lord Chancellor's Department

The cash limit will reduce by £665,000 from £558,861,000 to £558,196,000. The running costs limit will increase by £65,000 from £458,061,000 to £458,126,000.

The cash limit reduction relates to: £1,000,000 to the consolidated fund, non cash limited provision, to offset salaries of the higher judiciary and stipendiary magistrates; £91,000 to the Home Office as a contribution towards the costs of the IBIS unit; £350,000 from Department of Social Security in final settlement of the transfer of civil legal aid means tested assessment; £165,000 from Department of Social Security for the costs of recruiting and re-appointing panel members for the Unified Appeals Tribunals; £11,000 from Home Office for the changes in the power of the Attorney-General relating to unduly lenient sentences; £100,000 to Department of Social Security for the salary costs of ITS chairmen currently on secondment.

The running cost limit increase relates to: £91,000 to Home Office as a contribution towards the costs of the IBIS unit; £145,000 from Department of Social Security for the costs of recruiting and re-appointing panel members for the Unified Appeals Tribunal; and £11,000 from Home Office for the changes in the power of the Attorney-General relating to unduly lenient sentences.

Class VIII, Vote 2, Northern Ireland Court Service

The cash limit will reduce by £1,000,000 from £18,151,000 to £17,151,000. There is no change in the running cost limit. The cash limit reduction relates to an increase in appropriations in aid of £1,000,000.

Class VIII, Vote 3, Public Records Office

The cash limit will increase by £200,000 from £19,138,000 to £19,338,000. The running costs limit will increase by £800,000 from £24,968,000 to £25,768,000.

The cash limit increase relates to the take up of £200,000 capital provision covered by end year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36. The running cost limit increase relates to: £600,000 lottery grant in respect of the project to microfilm WW1 soldiers documents; and £200,000 generated by additional receipts for wholesale publishing and book purchases.

Simon De Danser

Valerie Davey: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what were the total costs of the trial in connection with the 'Simon de Danser' drugs case. [70642]

Mr. Hoon: Approximately £27,300. This figure includes judicial, staff and support costs, but not the cost of accommodation. The cost to the legal aid fund is not yet known.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Plastic Recycling

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his policy is on the recycling of plastic; and what discussions he has had with local authorities in England and Wales on initiatives undertaken by them. [69067]

Mr. Meale: We believe that recycling is critical to the task of making our waste management more environmentally acceptable and are committed to seeing a substantial increase in the role that recycling plays. It makes sense to recycle waste if this is the Best Practicable Environmental Option (for example in some cases the amount of energy needed to collect, transport and process materials for recycling, and the associated air emissions, are greater than those required for virgin material production).

It is of course for individual local authorities to consider whether recycling of a particular material is a viable option, economically or on environmental grounds, within their particular district. Factors which will need to be considered in the recycling of plastic are, for example, the economic and environmental costs of transporting a large volume, lightweight material, of sorting the various polymer types and of washing the material which is very often contaminated by the food and drink it has contained.

My officials discussed recycling, including of plastics, with local authorities for a recent Good Practice Guide, and in the Market Development Group which has been set up to consider and identify the barriers to expanding the markets for recycled materials and to develop practical proposals to overcome them.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions the Minister for Local Government and Housing has declined requests from local authorities to discuss the local government grant settlement (a) in person and (b) by video link. [70069]

Ms Armstrong: Three local authorities, Gloucestershire County Council, Babergh District Council and Greater Manchester Fire and Civil Defence Authority, were refused a meeting in consultation on the Local Government Finance Settlement for 1999–2000. The Department received their requests after the deadline of 5 January for the receipt of written requests, as set in the Department's letter of 2 December covering the consultation package on the proposals for the Settlement. It is important in a consultation process that all authorities are given equal treatment. To meet local authorities when their request had been received beyond the deadline would have been to single those authorities out for more favourable treatment. Ministers in the Department for Environment, Transport and the Regions did, however, meet all seventy-two local authorities that had made a request that was received before the deadline.

Millennium Compliance

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on insurance cover for local authorities against liabilities associated with the millennium bug; and if he will make a statement. [70261]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any such representations. It is the responsibility of local authorities to ensure they take such measures as they consider necessary to deal adequately with the risks posed for them by the millennium bug.

EU Tacis Programme

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from construction industry representatives about the late payment of invoices to United Kingdom companies under the EU Tacis Programme; and what initiatives he is taking to resolve the matter. [70093]

Mr. Raynsford: Nicholas Bennett, Chief Executive of the ACE, wrote to me on 25 January enclosing a copy of his letter to my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry. This is an important issue on which we share the concerns of the industry. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department for International Development which is the lead department on the Tacis and other external EC external aid programmes on 10 February 1999, Official Report, columns 280–81.

Public Service Vehicle Operators

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many of the existing small public service vehicle operators meet the EU capital reserves criterion of £6,500 for the first vehicle and £3,500 for each additional vehicle; [70221]

(2) when the provisions of the EU directive relating to certificates of professional competence of small public service vehicle operators will be implemented; and if he will make a statement. [70220]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Council Directive 98/76/EC which sets out, among other things, the revised capital reserve and professional competence requirements for the relevant operators of passenger carrying vehicles, does not apply to those operators who use only vehicles with fewer than 9 passenger seats ("small" public service vehicles). Those operators will however, continue to have to meet the appropriate requirements for grant of an operator's licence by the Traffic Commissioner, including those in respect of finance and professional competence.

Diesel Emissions

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to encourage bus operators to reduce pollution from diesel fuel emissions; and if he will make a statement. [69670]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have introduced a wide range of measures to encourage bus operators to reduce harmful emissions from diesel powered buses. We fully support the heavy diesel Directive agreed by the Council of Ministers in December 1998, which sets far more stringent emission standards for new buses and lorries from 2001. We are also encouraging the early introduction of ultra low sulphur diesel through the use of fuel duty differentials, and the fitting of particulate traps through the new Vehicle Excise Duty concession for low emission buses and lorries. In addition, my Department is funding the Energy Saving Trust's Powershift programme which helps to cover the additional costs of converting vehicles, including buses, to use alternative fuels.

Light Rail and Tram Systems

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the light rail or tram systems which were given or are proposed to be given Government funding in the (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 financial years, stating the value of such funding and the percentage it formed of the cost of each scheme. [70193]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have provided capital funding for light rail/tram systems as follows:

	Midland Metro Line 1	Manchester Metrolink to Salford Quays/Eccles	Blackpool Tramway	Croydon Tramlink	Scheme Proposed Tyne and Wear Metro Extension to Sunderland[2]
DETR funding (£ million)
1997–98	14.54	8.2	0.1	50	0
1998–99	2.24	6.2	0	33.5	0
1999–2000	0.50	2.9	0	16.5	1
Total DETR funding (£ million)[1]	80	17.3	5.0	125	n/a
Estimated total scheme cost (£ million)	144.8	134	6.4	200	n/a
DETR funding as percentage of estimated total scheme cost	55	13	78	63	n/a

[1] Total DETR funding. This includes funding allocated by DETR in other financial years not requested.

[2] Provisional allocation subject to further assessment of project. Total scheme cost estimate is not yet available.

Tenancy Transfers

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications have been made by tenants to HOMES for a transfer of tenancy in each year since 1994; and what percentage of these applications were successful. [70095]

Mr. Raynsford: Information about the number of applicants for a transfer of tenancy through the HOMES mobility scheme is available only for the current year. Between April and December 1998 HOMES received 33,933 nominations and 5,319 people (6.4 per cent.) were housed through the scheme. For previous years information is available for the number of households successfully housed:

Year	Number
1997–98	10,304
1996–97	9,872
1995–96	10,128
1994–95	9,552

HOMES also operates an exchange scheme, HOMESWAP. The number of households registering an interest in exchanging their homes through that scheme were:

Year	Number
1998–99 April to January	29,478
1997–98	38,675
1996–97	41,675
1995–96	46,169
1994–95	44,817

Individuals arrange exchanges direct with other tenants and the landlords concerned, so no central record is available for the number of exchanges arranged through HOMESWAP.

Aviation Fuel Tax

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice his Department has given to UK airlines with regard to the tax on aviation fuel recently imposed by the Norwegian Government [69705]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has given no formal advice to UK airlines about the aviation fuel tax introduced by Norway on 1 January 1999. However, in conversations about the tax with UK airlines operating to Norway, DETR officials confirmed that the tax appeared to breach the UK/Norway Air Services Agreement, signed in Oslo on 26 January 1979, which exempts aviation fuel for international flights from tax. Officials wrote to the Norwegian authorities on 4 January drawing attention to this apparent breach and asking them to rescind the tax. I understand that the Norwegians are currently considering the position, in the light of this and other similar representations received.

In principle, the Government are in favour of an aviation fuel tax, but believe this should be agreed at international level. Action by individual states or by groups of states would infringe existing international agreements, distort airline competition and could have environmental disbenefits.

Planning Policy

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which planning policy guidance notes are currently under review by his Department. [70197]

Mr. Raynsford: The following revisions of planning policy guidance notes will shortly be issued for consultation: PPG3—Housing; PPG11—Regional Planning; and PPG12—Development Plans. Consideration is also being given to updating PPG13—Transport; PPG17—Sport and Recreation; and PPG23—Planning and Pollution Control. The Department has also consulted on proposals to strengthen protection for Sites of Special Scientific Interest, including possible changes to PPG9—Nature Conservation. A final revised version of PPG10—Planning and Waste Management, will be published in the Spring.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that regional development agencies take account of relevant strategic polices laid down in local authorities' development plans. [70196]

Mr. Meale: Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) must, like any other body, work within and alongside the framework provided by Regional Planning Guidance and local authority development plans.

Guidance will be issued to RDAs under section 7 of the RDAs Act on the development of their strategies, which will clearly set out the relationship between RDAs' strategies and regional planning guidance and local authority development plans.

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make the need for new retail and leisure developments a material consideration to be taken into account by local planning authorities in determining planning applications. [70744]

Mr. Caborn: Our policy on town centres, including retail and leisure development, is set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 6: Town Centres and Retail Development (PPG6). This aims to sustain and enhance the vitality and viability of our existing town centres by focusing new investment, particularly for retail and leisure uses within city, town and district centres. This statement is intended to add to and clarify the guidance in PPG6 in the light of a number of issues raised in recent litigation which concern the interpretation of PPG6 and Government policy.

PPG6 advises local planning authorities to adopt a positive, plan-led approach to handling planning applications involving new retail and leisure developments. It advises them, in preparing planning strategies and policies, to consider the need for new retail and leisure development in the plan area over the lifetime of the plan. Having established that such need exists, local planning authorities should then adopt a sequential approach (as explained in PPG6) to identify suitable sites. If there is no need for further developments, there will be no requirement to identify additional sites.

Proposals for new retail and leisure development which accord with an up-to-date plan strategy or are proposed on sites within an existing centre, should not be required to demonstrate that they satisfy the test of need because this should have been taken into account in the development plan.

However, proposals which would be located at an edge-of-centre or out-of-centre location and which:

> are not in accordance with an up-to-date development plan strategy; or
>
> are in accordance with the development plan but that plan is out of date, is inconsistent with national planning policy guidance, or otherwise fails to establish adequately the need for new retail and leisure development and other development to which PPG6 applies, should be required to demonstrate both the need for additional facilities and that a sequential approach has been applied in selecting the location or the site.

In the context of PPG6 and this additional guidance, the requirement to demonstrate 'need' should not be regarded as being fulfilled simply by showing that there is capacity (in physical terms) or demand (in terms of available expenditure within the proposal's catchment area) for the proposed development. Whilst the existence of capacity or demand may form part of the demonstration of need, the significance in any particular case of the factors which may show need will be a matter for the decision-maker.

In the circumstances referred to above, the need for such proposals should be considered carefully when determining planning applications. A failure to demonstrate both the need for such proposals and that a sequential approach has been applied in selecting the application site would normally justify the refusal of planning permission unless there were weighty additional material considerations.

In applying the sequential approach, the relevant centres in which to search for sites will depend on the nature and scale of the proposed development and catchment that the development seeks to serve. The scale of such proposals should also be appropriately related to the centre—whether town, district or local—the development seeks to serve.

The policy set out in PPG6, and the guidance above should be applied equally to proposals for extending existing edge-of-centre and out-of-centre development which creates additional floor space. Local planning authorities should consider the need for further retail or leisure facilities and then apply the sequential approach to identifying where any such development should take place. Where proposals for such extensions to existing developments are put forward, the Government will expect applicants to demonstrate the need for additional facilities, and that such additional facilities could not be accommodated on sites in more central locations, in accordance with the sequential approach. Need in this context, as in PPG6 generally, should be interpreted as already explained above. Local planning authorities should therefore treat extensions to existing retail and leisure facilities in edge-of-centre and out-of-centre locations as if they were new development.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many RDA board members have worked in business. [70545]

Mr. Meale: The Chairman of each of the Regional Development Agencies has a predominantly business background. In addition to the chairmen, 48 board members currently work in business. A number of the other board members have previously worked in business.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many RDA board members are trades union officials. [70543]

Mr. Meale: One member of each of the eight Regional Development Agency boards is a trade union official.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much RDA board members are to be paid per annum. [70624]

Mr. Meale: The pay for RDA members (other than the Chairmen and Deputy Chairmen) is £7,000 per year for a commitment of two days a month.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many RDA board members are members of the (a) Liberal Democrat, (b) Conservative and (c) Labour parties. [70544]

Mr. Meale: Among the local councillors who are members of the boards of the Regional Development Agencies, 6 are members of the Liberal Democrat party, 4 are members of the Conservative party, 21 are members of the Labour party and one is an Independent. Other board members are not required to declare whether they are members of any political party.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give the (a) remuneration paid to and (b) the number of days per week required of RDA chairmen. [70623]

Mr. Meale: The pay for RDA Chairmen is £44,000 per year for a commitment of two days a week. For Deputy Chairmen it is £14,000 per year for a commitment of one day a week.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what methods he used to ensure that there was appropriate party political balance in the membership of each RDA board. [70546]

Mr. Meale: All appointments to the RDA Boards were based on merit. We considered party political balance only in relation to the four local councillors appointed to each board. We had in mind the number of council seats held by each political party, and the proportion of votes cast for each political party across the whole of the region; but also sought to reflect other factors such as geographical spread and other relevant background experience.

Housing Unit Statistics

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) new housing units were built and (b) existing housing units were cleared in each calendar year from 1993 to 1998 in the local authority areas of (i) Plymouth, (ii) Teignbridge, (iii) Torbay and (iv) the South Hams. [69861]

Mr. Raynsford: The Table shows the figures as reported to the Department by the local authorities concerned. Figures about demolitions are only available on a financial year basis.

Housebuilding: Total Completions: Number of dwellings

Year	Plymouth	Teignbridge	Torbay	South Hams
1993	262	624	242	295
1994	355	634	434	373
1995	515	552	312	432
1996	551	572	297	392
1997	437	603	373	281
1998	259	502	302	280

Demolitions: Total: Number of dwellings

Year	Plymouth	Teignbridge	Torbay	South Hams
1992–93	113	0	0	0
1993–94	0	6	7	10
1994–95	17	1	5	0
1995–96	34	0	11	40
1996–97	0	0	5	0
1997–98	4	0	0	0

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits and running cost limits for 1998–99. [71120]

Mr. Prescott: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, my Department's cash limits will change as follows. All references to the take-up of end year flexibility refer to the Chief Secretary to the Treasury's announcement of 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36.

(i) the cash limit for class VI, Vote 1—Housing, construction, regeneration, countryside and wildlife, England—will be increased by £48,419,000 from £1,792,339,000 to £1,840,758,000. The principal changes are: an increase of £41,488,000 for expenditure in advance of EC receipts on European Regional Development Fund Objective 2 programmes incurred on behalf of this department (£22,395,000), the Department of Trade and Industry (£11,128,000), the Department of Culture, Media and Sports (£2,708,000) and the Department for Education and Employment (£5,177,000, including a small element for other old programmes); a transfer of £23,620,000 to the DETR/HC (Housing Corporation) cash limit mostly for Estates Renewal Challenge Fund grants to registered social landlords administered by the Housing Corporation from direct government expenditure on that programme; an increase of £16,994,000 for Single Regeneration Budget programmes, comprising the take up of £12,494,000 end-year flexibility and the transfer of £4,500,000 from the DETR/NC (New Towns) cash limit; and new provision of £17,657,000 for Coalfields Regeneration Trust expenditure. The Housing Action Trusts' external finance limit will be increased by £1,500,000 from £87,500,000 to £89,000,000 as a result of these changes. Lastly, £4,100,000 of Rent Assessment Panels provision, £1,500,000 of which is running costs, will be transferred to the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 5 (Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions: administration).

(ii) the DETR/HC (Housing Corporation) cash limit will be increased by £24,138,000 from £709,773,000 to £733,911,000, reflecting a transfer of £23,620,000 from the Class VI, Vote 1 cash limit, most of which relates to a change in the Estates Renewal Challenge Fund payment arrangements described above, and £518,000 take up of end year flexibility.

(iii) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 2—Planning, roads, local transport and vehicle safety—will be increased by £397,000 from £361,154,000 to £361,551,000. The increase reflects an inter vote transfer from Class VI, Vote 6 (Transport Industries), to bring forward the London wide implementation of the camera enforcement of bus lanes.

(iv) the DETR/LACAP (T) (Local Authority Capital—Transport) non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £23,575,000 from £319,340,000 to £295,765,000, to reflect the earlier transfer of transport ERDF credit approvals to the DETR/ERDF (European Regional Development Fund) non-voted cash limit.

(v) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 3—Environmental protection and water—will be increased by £1,181,000 from £334,774,000 to £335,955,000. The increase reflects a transfer of £951,000 from the DETR/OES (other environmental services) cash limit for remedial work on contaminated land (£912,000), funding for the local authority air pollution unit (£20,000), both to be undertaken by the Environment Agency, and pneumoconiosis compensation payments (£19,000); a transfer of £250,000 from Class VI, Vote 13 (Ordnance Survey) for pneumoconiosis compensation payments; offset by a transfer of £20,000 to Class VI, Vote 5 (Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions: administration) to allow for increased Departmental running costs following the winding up of the UK Ecolabelling Board.

(vi) the DETR/OES (other environmental services) cash limit will be reduced by £31,000 from £19,872,000 to £19,841,000. The decrease results from: the transfer of £912,000 from the contaminated land Supplementary Credit Approval programme to the Environment Agency for work on contaminated land; the transfer of £20,000 from the Isles of Scilly Supplementary Credit Approval programme to the Environment Agency towards the part-year costs of its take-over from DETR of the responsibilities of the local authority air pollution unit; the transfer of £19,000 from the Isles of Scilly SCA programme for pneumoconiosis grant payments; and the take up of £920,000 of capital end year flexibility entitlement.

(vii) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 4—Local government and regional policy, England—will be reduced by £1,650,000 from £32,296,619,000 to £32,294,969,000. This decrease is the result of savings on special grant in support of Private Finance Initiative projects and on payments of valuation tribunals' expenses. It will allow an increase of £150,000 in provision for emergency financial assistance to local authorities outside the cash limit, and an increase of £1,500,000 in the DETR/LGR (local government reorganisation) non-voted cash limit.

(viii) the DETR/LGR (local government reorganisation) non-voted cash limit will be increased by £1,500,000 from £125,800,000 to £127,300,000 to meet increased demand for Supplementary Credit Approvals in connection with the commutation of annual loan charges and grants to local authorities on 1 October 1992.

(ix) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 5—Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions: administration—will be increased by £20,907,000 from £440,492,000 to £461,399,000. The increase reflects the take up of £4,780,000 by the Health and Safety Executive and £9,892,000 by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions of running costs end year flexibility. In addition, an inter-vote transfer from Class VI, Vote 1 (Housing, construction, regeneration, countryside and wildlife, England) of £1,500,000 of running costs and £2,600,000 of other provision has been made to central administration; together with a transfer from Class VI, Vote 3 (Environment protection and water) of £20,000 in respect of the running costs associated with carrying out the residual functions of the UK Ecolabelling Board, following the decision to wind up this body; a transfer from the Department of Trade and Industry (Class V, Vote 1) in respect of the capital costs of the Government Offices for the Regions; and an increase of £2,000,000 to provision in respect of increased claims arising from the sale of PSA businesses. Increases to provision for running costs and appropriations in aid for central administration have also been made to allow for the reclassification of recoverable VAT refunds in respect of the cost of contracted out services.

(x) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 6—Transport industries—will be reduced by £3,397,000 from £75,190,000 to £71,793,000. This reduction consists of the transfer of £3,500,000 from a cash limited to a non-cash limited section of the vote; a transfer of £397,000 to Class VI, Vote 2 (Planning, roads, local transport and vehicle safety) to provide partial funding for the London wide implementation of bus lane camera enforcement, partially offset by an increase in provision of £500,000 to reflect the latest estimate of the legal costs of the National Bus Company pensions case. In addition a transfer of £1,000,000 will be made from the non-voted British Rail programme to the CTRL competition line of this vote for European Night Stock lease termination payments.

(xi) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 7—Other Executive Agencies—will be increased by £1,205,000 from £117,472,000 to £118,677,000. The increase reflects a £700,000 transfer from Class VI, Vote 8 (Highways Agency) for a voluntary early retirement scheme in the Maritime and Coastguard Agency; a £208,000 transfer from Class VI, Vote 8 and £200,000 take up of running costs end of year flexibility for the Planning Inspectorate because of responsibilities taken on by the agency from other parts of DETR; and a £97,000 transfer from Class II, Vote 1 (Foreign and Commonwealth Office: overseas representation) for costs associated with the provision of survey and certification services by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency. The running cost provision for this vote will increase by £1,205,000 from £84,063,000 to £85,268,000.

(xii) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 8—Highways Agency—will be increased by £14,869,000 from £1,420,601,000 to £1,435,470,000. This increase reflects the take up of £7,769,000 capital end year flexibility; take up of £8,000,000 from the DETR/NT (New Towns) non-voted cash limit for the Limehouse Link—East India Dock tie-in road; offset by the transfer of £900,000 running costs provision from Class VI Vote 8 to Class VI Vote 7 (Other executive agencies) in respect of the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (£700,000) and Planning Inspectorate (£200,000) to offset emerging pressures.

(xiii) the cash limit on Class VI, Vote 9—Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency—will be increased by £1,000 from £98,799,000 to £98,800,000. The increase involves the take up of £1,425,000 to reflect the introduction of the vehicles first registration fee; additional provision of £385,000 arising from the introduction of graduated vehicle excise duty, increased running costs of £2,755,000 and additional programme costs of £6,218,000. The increases are offset by the inter vote transfer of £34,000 from the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland (NIDI) and increased appropriations in aid of £13,614,000. The running cost provision on this vote is increased by £3,591,000 from £192,111,000 to £195,702,000.

(xiv) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 10—Passenger Rail Services—will be increased by £431,000 from £1,254,889,000 to £1,255,320,000. This increase reflects the take up of £431,000 running costs end year flexibility to meet increased in-year requirements in relation to preparations for the creation of the shadow Strategic Rail Authority. In addition, gross provision and appropriations-in-aid will be adjusted in respect of recoverable VAT and to reflect forecast outturn for Support for Passenger Rail Services.

(xv) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 11—Office of the Rail Regulator—will be increased by £408,000 from £8,920,000 to £9,328,000. This increase reflects the take-up of £408,000 running costs end year flexibility to meet increased in-year requirements associated with ongoing consultancy programmes and additional accommodation costs and to adjust gross provision and appropriations-in-aid in respect of recoverable VAT.

(xvi) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 13—Ordnance Survey—will be reduced by £250,000 from £12,962,000 to £12,712,000. The decrease reflects an estimated underspend in running costs provision.

(xvii) the DETR/NT (New Towns) non-voted cash limit will be reduced from minus £103,100,000 to minus £115,600,000. This decrease is a result of the achievement of £7,000,000 additional capital receipts, £4,000,000 of which will be transferred to Class VI Vote 1 (Housing, construction, regeneration, countryside and wildlife, England) for a capital project undertaken by the Castle Vale Housing Action Trust, and £3,000,000 will be added to the Commission's expenditure to help it disengage from its lease/leaseback programme. The Commission's receipts target will be increased from £157,000,000 to £164,000,000 and its approved capital expenditure will be increased from £33,000,000 to £36,000,000. £8,000,000 allocated for the East India Dock road will be transferred to the Highways Agency (Class VI, Vote 8), and £500,000 allocated for University College, Stockton will be transferred to Class VI Vote 1, reducing the Commission's Urban Development Corporation inheritance element of the cash limit from £20,900,000 to £12,400,000.

(xix) as a consequence of the changes to Class VI, Votes 1,5,7,8 and 9, the gross running cost limit for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has been increased by £10,631,000 from £603,637,000 to £614,268,000. The gross running cost limit for the Health and Safety Executive has been increased by £4,780,000 from £156,945,000 to £161,725,000.

The overall increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will announce the date when the Greater London Authority will assume its responsibilities. [71248]

Mr. Raynsford: Subject to the passage of the Greater London Authority Bill, the Greater London Authority will assume its responsibilities on Monday 3 July 2000. This will maintain momentum while allowing some eight weeks after the elections on 4 May for necessary preparations.

Rural England

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to consult on the future of rural England; and if he will make a statement. [71423]

Mr. Meacher: Together with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, I shall be publishing "Rural England—A Discussion Document", on Wednesday 17 February. This will invite responses to help in the preparation of the White Paper for rural England announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on 27 November 1998, Official Report, columns 38–40. Copies will be placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a regional breakdown of courts' progress in meeting the target of halving the number of days between arrest and sentencing of persistent young offenders. [67727]

Mr. Boateng: In the past, information on the length of time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offender cases has not been routinely collected. We have undertaken two special exercises to monitor performance nationally against the pledge on persistent young offenders and we have also put in place new arrangements to enable this information to be collected on a regular basis through the existing Time Interval Survey. The first special exercise showed the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders was 142 days in 1996. The second showed an improvement to 138 days between May and December 1997. It is not possible from these data to provide a statistically reliable measure of progress towards the pledge at regional level. A third special exercise, which should produce the 1998 figures in the spring, will, however, allow an estimate to be made on the progress of individual regions in 1997–98.

The new arrangements for the regular collection of data on the time taken from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders and all other young offenders were implemented in October 1998 after piloting. The first complete data from the new Time Interval Survey should be available by late 1999. These will allow for a breakdown of performance by area.

Under guidance issued by the Home Secretary in October 1998, a half of all cases involving persistent young offenders should be dealt with in under 71 days by April this year. The Government fully expect to fulfil its pledge during this parliament.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest available figure for the number of days between arrest and sentencing for (a) persistent young offenders and (b) all offenders dealt with in the youth courts. [67726]

Mr. Boateng: The Government are committed to halving the average time taken to deal with persistent young offenders from the 142 days it took in 1996. Figures for 1997 show that between May and December 1997 the average dropped to 138. These figures cover a considerable period when there were very few fast tracking schemes; at the time of the election there were only 8 in the whole of England and Wales. There are now around 150 covering almost half of all court areas.

Under guidance published by the Home Secretary in October 1998, a half of all cases involving persistent young offenders should be dealt with in under 71 days by April this year.

The Government fully expect to fulfil their pledge during this Parliament.

Information about the average time for arrest to sentence for all young offenders in the youth court has not been collected nationally in the past. New arrangements to do so were introduced in October last year but are unlikely to produce reliable data until the end of this year at the earliest. The magistrates' courts Time Interval Survey collects information on cases completed in one week samples each February, June and October, covering the date of charge or summons until the date of completion. The latest available results for the Youth Court come from the June 1998 survey, and reports an average of 81 days, compared with 92 days in June 1997.

Prisoners (Segregation)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the longest period of time an (a) male and (b) female prison inmate has been held in a segregation unit (i) at the inmate's own request and (ii) at the decision of the prison authorities in a prison in England and Wales in the last 10 years. [69066]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested cannot be obtained from the centrally available data.

Drugs (Northumbria)

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total number of drug seizures within the Northumbrian Police Force area was in 1998; and what percentage of these were (a) hard and (b) soft drugs. [70357]

Mr. George Howarth: Figures for 1998 are not yet available. It is hoped to publish 1997 statistics in the next few months; I will write to my hon. Friend when they are published. The table shows the number of seizures by Northumbria Police for 1996.

Number of seizures of controlled drugs by Northumbria Police by drug type in 1996

Drug type	Number of seizures
All drugs	3,134
Class A
Cocaine	30
of which "Crack"	2
Heroin	128
LSD	22
Ecstasy-type	132
Methadone	13
Other class A	7
Class A total	322
Class B
Cannabis	2,424
Amphetamines	569
Other Class B	9
Class B total	2,857
Class C
Benzodiazepines	63
Temazepam	40
Anabolic steroids	12
Other class C	6
Class C total	114
Class unknown	2

Note:

As a seizure can involve more than one drug, figures for individual drugs cannot be added together to produce totals.

Source:

Table A1.3 of Statistics of drug seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1996—Area tables, published by Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate, April 1998.

Police (Training)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police force in England and Wales the training which has been given on operation of the new police personnel procedures which come into effect on 1 April. [70579]

Mr. Boateng: The Training Support section of the National Police Training organisation has delivered half day seminars to appropriate members of all police forces (including "non-Home Office" forces) in England and Wales to inform them of the new procedures, and additionally have run two-day workshops which were attended by delegates from 41 police forces. The workshops were aimed particularly at force trainers to equip them to train members of their forces. The individual forces concerned are identified in the table. The national training was completed in January 1999 and forces are now engaged in training their personnel. Each force is responsible for its own training in terms of its nature and scope and, while all officers are understood to be receiving some information, police managers will naturally require more than police constables.

Forces/organisations represented at a seminar on the new police personnel procedures

Avon and Somerset Constabulary

Bedfordshire Police

Cambridgeshire Police

Cheshire Constabulary

City of London Police

Cleveland Constabulary

Cumbria Constabulary

Derbyshire Constabulary

Devon & Cornwall Constabulary

Dorset Police

Durham Constabulary

Dyfed-Powys Police

Essex Police

Gloucestershire Constabulary

Greater Manchester Police

Gwent Constabulary

Hampshire Constabulary

Hertfordshire Constabulary

Humberside Police

Kent County Constabulary

Leicestershire Constabulary

Lincolnshire Police

Merseyside Police

Metropolitan Police Service

Norfolk Constabulary

Northamptonshire Police

Northumbria Police

North Yorkshire Police

North Wales Police

Nottinghamshire Constabulary

South Wales Police

South Yorkshire Police

Staffordshire Police

Suffolk Constabulary

Surrey Police

Sussex Police

Thames Valley Police

Warwickshire Constabulary

West Mercia Constabulary

West Midlands Police

West Yorkshire Police

Wiltshire Constabulary

Other forces

British Transport Police

Ministry of Defence Police

Royal Parks Constabulary

UK Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary

Other interested organisations

Royal Ulster Constabulary

National Crime Squad

National Criminal Intelligence Service

[1] Expected to introduce parallel provisions in their own areas.

Forces/organisations represented at a workshop on the new police personnel procedures workshop

Avon and Somerset Constabulary

Bedfordshire Police

Cheshire Constabulary

Cleveland Constabulary

Cumbria Constabulary

Derbyshire Constabulary

Devon & Cornwall Constabulary

Dorset Police

Durham Constabulary

Dyfed-Powys Police

Essex Police

Greater Manchester Police

Gwent Constabulary

Hertfordshire Constabulary

Humberside Police

Lancashire Police

Leicestershire Constabulary

Lincolnshire Police

Merseyside Police

Metropolitan Police Service

Norfolk Constabulary

Northamptonshire Police

Nottinghamshire Constabulary

North Yorkshire Police

North Wales Police

South Wales Police

South Yorkshire Police

Staffordshire Police

Suffolk Constabulary

Surrey Police

Sussex Police

Thames Valley Police

Warwickshire Constabulary

West Mercia Constabulary

West Midlands Police

West Yorkshire Police

Wiltshire Constabulary

Other organisations/forces[1]

Ministry of Defence Police

Royal Parks Constabulary

UK Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary

Royal Ulster Constabulary

[1] Expected to introduce similar or parallel provisions in their own areas.

Police (Pensions)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to remove or reduce the pension entitlement of police officers found guilty of an offence of breach of police disciplinary rules. [R] [70571]

Mr. Boateng: This is something we are considering. However, we are concerned that any measures we do propose should be both fair and proportionate. We will not reach any firm conclusions before taking the opportunity to consider he report of the Macpherson Inquiry and any recommendations it makes.

Ministerial Visits (India)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to visit India. [70401]

Mr. Straw: I hope to be able to visit India later in the year.

Local Government Finance

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) grants and (b) other financial support by his Department to (i) Westminster City Council and (ii) the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea, other than through the RSG settlement, in (1) 1997–98, (2) 1998–99 and (3) planned for 1999–2000 given; and for what purposes the funds were allocated. [70158]

Mr. Straw: The information requested in respect of grants directly paid by the Home Office is given in the table. No other financial support is provided.

£

Purpose of grant	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Westminster City Council:
Civil Defence	35,000	35,000	35,000
Section 11 grants under the Local Government Act 1966	1,363,058	1,398,498	—
Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea:
Civil Defence	35,000	35,000	35,000
Section 11 grants under the Local Government Act 1966	739,615	758,845	—
Drugs prevention	6,000	—	—
Closed Circuit TV[2]	75,600	—	—

[1] From 1999–2000 funding will be made by the Department of Education and Employment

[2] The CCTV competition will not continue in 1999–2000

[3] Planned

Missile Incidents (Roads and Railways)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the maximum penalties for (a) throwing an object from a bridge, (b) throwing an object from a bridge causing serious or slight injuries and (c) throwing an object from a bridge causing death, on (i) motorways, (ii) other roads and (iii) railways; and what plans he has for changes in the maximum penalties. [70271]

Mr. Boateng: There is no separate offence of "throwing an object from a bridge". Where danger, injury or death results from such behaviour, it can be covered by a range of existing offences, including general offences against the person. There are also a number of offences which relate specifically to the roads and railways. Examples of these offences and their maximum penalties are set out in the table:

Offence	Legislation	Maximum penalty
Placing wood, etc. on railway with intent to obstruct any engine etc.	Section 35, Malicious Damage Act 1861	Life imprisonment
Obstructing engines or carriages on the railway.	Section 36, Malicious Damage Act 1861	2 years' imprisonment
Placing wood, etc. on railway with intent to endanger passengers	Section 32, Offences Against the Person Act 1861	Life imprisonment
Casting stone, etc. on a railway carriage with intent to endanger safety.	Section 33, Offences Against the Person Act 1861	Life imprisonment
Doing or omitting anything so as to endanger railway passengers.	Section 34, Offences Against the Person Act 1861	2 years' imprisonment
Causing danger to road users	Section 22A, Road Traffic Act 1988	7 years' imprisonment

There are currently no plans to increase these maximum penalties.

Prison Officers (Suspensions)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers who were serving in prisons in England and Wales, and who are now suspended from duty due to allegations as to their conduct, have been suspended for (a) up to three months, (b) up to six months, (c) up to nine months, (d) up to 12 months, (e) up to 15 months and (f) over 15 months. [69925]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is given in the table, as at 8 February 1999.

Suspended Prison Officers: 8 February 1999

Period	Number
Up to 3 months	42
3-6 months	15
6-9 months	18
9-12 months	22
12-15 months	2
Over 15 months	22

Prison Officers (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to increase the number of prison officers in prisons in England and Wales who come from ethnic minorities; and if he will make a statement. [69811]

Mr. George Howarth: In the last few years, the Prison Service has made considerable progress on increasing the numbers of prison officers recruited from ethnic communities. Figures for the year to 31 March 1998 indicate that 7.8 per cent. of prison officers recruited were from ethnic minorities. More than double the figure for any previous year.

The Prison Service Racial Equality Programme (RESPOND) was launched on 1 February 1999. £3 million has been committed to this programme over the next three years.

A number of key actions have been identified. Those for 1999–2000 which look in particular at increasing ethnic minority representation include:

appointing a Racial Equality Adviser;

re-establishing a Recruitment Outreach Team (to assist establishments in recruiting ethnic minority staff); and setting targets in the areas of recruitment, representation by grade and retention which will be announced later this year.

Mr. Waghela

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), plans to meet the hon. Member for Leicester, East to discuss the case of Mr. Waghela of Melrose Street, Leicester (ref. PO 16500/98 W 251588); and if he will make a statement. [70060]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am writing to my hon. Friend about this case.

Police Authority Members

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library for each police authority area in Wales the list of persons submitted to his Department for consideration as independent police authority members in each of the last five years. [70052]

Mr. Boateng: It is not our practice to publish the names of those put forward for consideration as independent members of police authorities. The selection panels which have put those names forward have treated applications in confidence. To publish those names would make known the names of unsuccessful candidates as well as those who were subsequently appointed, and I am not prepared to do this without their express consent. This could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. [69908]

Mr. Straw: The following executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department have a statutory base:

Alcohol Education and Research Council

Commission for Racial Equality

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Gaming Board for Great Britain

Horserace Betting Levy Board

Horserace Totaliser Board

Office of the Data Protection Registrar

Parole Board

Police Complaints Authority

Police Information and Technology Organisation

Youth Justice Board.

Those currently within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are:

Commission for Racial Equality

Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority

Data Protection Registrar

Horserace Betting Levy Board

Police Information Technology Organisation.

In addition, the following will be brought within his jurisdiction shortly by means of an Order in Council:

Parole Board

Community Development Foundation

Youth Justice Board for England and Wales.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69971]

Mr. Straw: None of the advisory bodies sponsored by my Department admits members of the public to board or committee meetings.

The Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England and Wales hold local public inquiries, under criteria set out in the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986, at which any member of the public may attend, and the Metropolitan Police Committee holds two public meetings a year.

The Advisory Board on Restricted Patients has two lay members on its board, and 12 out of the 20 members of the Metropolitan Police Committee are elected councillors.

None of the bodies are statutorily required to admit members of the public to their board or committee meetings, hold public meetings or have lay or consumer representatives on their boards.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69976]

Mr. Straw: The Commission for Racial Equality and the Community Development Foundation admit members of the public to their meetings except, in the case of the former, where individual cases are being discussed. They also hold public meetings and conferences. The annual general meeting of the Police Information Technology Organisation is open to the public.

There are no "consumers" of the services provided by the bodies on their boards, but where necessary appointments are made to reflect a broad spread of interest and expertise and to introduce an element of independence.

The following executive Non Departmental Public Bodies operate some form of appeal complaints procedure:

Commission for Racial Equality

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Gaming Board for Great Britain

Horserace Totaliser Board

Data Protection Registrar

Parole Board

Police Information Technology Organisation.

There are also the Horserace Betting Levy Appeals Tribunal, the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board/Appeal Panel and the Data Protection Tribunal which deal with appeals in their respective areas.

None of the bodies are statutorily required to admit members of the public to their meetings, hold public meetings, have lay or consumer representatives on their boards or operate some form of appeal/complaints procedure.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69947]

Mr. Straw: Apart from the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales which posts Summary reports of its meetings on its own website, none of the executive Non Departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department publish minutes of meetings or agendas and other Documents for meetings. However, the Commission for Racial Equality, Community Development Foundation and the Youth Justice Board would consider making them available on request.

The Horserace Totalisator Board and the Police Information Technology Organisation publish members' details in their annual reports. No other bodies publish registers of members' interests but they would be available from the organisations on request.

None of the bodies is statutorily required to publish minutes, agendas and other documents for meetings, or registers of interest.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69833]

Mr. Straw: Apart from the Metropolitan Police Committee, which publishes the minutes of its meetings on the internet, none of the advisory Non Departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department publish minutes, agendas and other documents for meetings or registers of interest. Some are in the process of setting up registers of members' interests, in line with the commitment given in "Quangos: Opening the Doors", and will shortly have them in place.

None of the bodies are statutorily required to publish minutes of meetings, agendas and documents for those meetings, or registers of members interest.

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for changes to the 1998–99 cash and running costs limits within his responsibilities. [71425]

Mr. Straw: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for Class VII, Vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) will be increased by £11,258,000 from £4,833,790,000 to £4,845,048,000, the cash limit for Class VII, Vote 2 (Prisons, England and Wales) will be increased by £119,310,000 from £1,703,670,000 to £1,822,980,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £49,311,000 from £1,887,431,000 to £1,936,742,000.

The changes in the Vote 1 cash limit are the net effect of the following transfers: £91,000 from the Lord Chancellor's Department, Class VIII, Vote 1, £66,000 from the Crown Prosecution Service, Class VIII, Vote 4 and £32,000 from the Prison Service, Class VII, Vote 2 in respect of contributions for the Integrated Business and Information Systems; £27,000 from the Prison Service, Class VII, Vote 2 in respect of the provision of internet services and contributions to the Prison/Probation Pilot Mentoring project; £25,000 to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Class II, Vote 1 in respect of contributions to the United Kingdom Special Representatives for International Drugs issues; £570,000 to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Class II, Vote 2, in respect of interdepartmental drugs prevention projects in Columbia and Pakistan; £84,000 from the Northern Ireland Office, Class XV Vote 1, in respect of the Criminal Cases Review Commission; £26,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department, Class VIII, Vote 1 and £7,000 to Treasury

Solicitors, Class VIII, Vote 6, in respect of extending the Attorney-General's powers for referring unduly lenient sentences to the Court of Appeal; £1,251,000 to the Prison Service, Class VII, Vote 2 in relation to the transfer of responsibility for Boards of Visitors; £10,000 from the Department of Trade and Industry, Class V, Vote 1 for start up costs of the Telecom and Data Protection Directive; and £647,000 from Her Majesty's Treasury Consolidated Fund Standing Service for advance training costs for implementation of the European Elections Bill. The Supplementary Estimate will also provide for increase of £6,080,000 in respect of home detention curfew, £3,800,000 in respect of compensation for miscarriages of justice and £2,300,000 in respect of the National Identification Service.

The changes in the Vote 2 cash limit are the net effect of transfers to Vote 1 of £59,000 in respect of the provision of internet services, contribution for the Integrated Business and Information Systems and contributions to the Prison/Probation Pilot Mentoring project and a transfer from Vote 1 of £1,251,000 in relation to the transfer of responsibility for Boards of Visitors. The Supplementary Estimate will also provide for increases of £111,855,000 for increases in prison capacity, repairs to the prison estate and increased funding for regime activities to keep prisoners constructively occupied; £2,000,000 for work within prisons on the implementation of home detention curfew arrangements; and £13,263,000 to adjust the accounting treatment of Value Added Tax refunds on contracted-out services offset by increased receipt of £9,000,000 due to acceleration in the programme for the sale of staff housing.

The increase in the running costs limit is the net effect of payments from the Lord Chancellor's Department of £91,000 and the Crown Prosecution Service of £66,000 for the Integrated Business and Information Systems; payment of £25,000 to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for the United Kingdom Special Representative for International Drugs issues; payments of £26,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department and £7,000 to the Treasury Solicitor in respect of extending the Attorney-General's powers for referring unduly lenient sentences to the Court of Appeal; £460,000 reclassified from capital provision; increases of £10,000 for costs of the Edwards report, £2,580,000 for home detention curfew; £31,781,000 for increasing prison capacity, repairs and increased funding for regime activities, £118,000 in connection with transitional arrangements for a private finance initiative for the provision of heat energy to prisons, and £13,263,000 to adjust the accounting treatment of Value added Tax refunds on contracted-out services.

These increases will add £118,118,000 to the planned total of public expenditure.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70411]

Mr. Straw: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally. It will be collected as soon as possible from each of the Home Office entities and executive Non Departmental Bodies listed in chapter 7 of the National Assets Register. As soon as the information becomes available, I will write to the hon. Member.

Simon de Danser

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the costs of (a) police and security, including convoys between prison and court, and (b) holding the defendants in prison, in connection with the Simon de Danser drugs case. [70648]

Mr. George Howarth: The cost to the Avon and Somerset Constabulary of escorting the prisoners to and from court was £161,124.35.

The total cost to the Prison Service of accommodating the prisoners and providing prison officers as escorts was £331,996.91. A separate figure for escorting costs cannot be provided as the cost of escort work is included in the cost per prisoner place at Bristol from which this figure has been calculated.

Regional Headquarters (South-west)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the cost to public funds at the time of the compulsory purchase of land from the Squire family in order to build the Regional Headquarters for the South-west near Malborough, South Devon; and what was the cost of constructing and equipping the Headquarters for use; [69862]

(2) when he expects to reply to the letter of 31 December 1998 from the hon. Member for Totnes about the future of the Regional Government Headquarters for the South-west near Malborough, South Devon; [69863]

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that the land on which the former Regional Government Headquarters for the South-west, Soan Mill, near Malborough, South Devon stood, is returned to the Squire family from whom it was compulsory purchased; [69864]

(4) what plans he has for the future use of the site of the former proposed Regional Government Headquarters for the South-west at Soan Mill Cove, Malborough, Kingsbridge, South Devon; and will he make a statement; [69866]

(5) what plans he has to demolish the former proposed Regional Government Headquarters at Soan Mill near Malborough, South Devon. [69867]

Mr. George Howarth: The site forms part of land that was acquired by the War Office under compulsory requisition provisions that prevailed during the last war. It was transferred to the Home Office in the 1960s. We are pursuing with the Ministry of Defence and our commercial agents in order to establish the cost of acquiring and adapting the site for use as a Regional Government Headquarters. I will cover these points when I reply to the hon. Gentleman's letter of 31 December, which I will do as soon as our inquiries are complete.

We have asked our agents to bring to an early conclusion the discussions regarding the extent of the land which can be offered back to the Squire family. We wish to be flexible as we can within the constraints on the former owner rules, which govern the sale of land acquired by compulsory purchase.

We have no plans to demolish any buildings on the site prior to disposal.

Prisoners (Early Release Scheme)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the reasons for the delay in the release of prisoner DK 5193 from HM Prison, Leeds under the early release scheme; and if he will make a statement. [70646]

Mr. George Howarth: Prisoner DK5193 has been provisionally assessed as suitable for home detention curfew and will be placed on the scheme on 15 February 1999, provided that the curfew address remains available and suitable. This decision may be reviewed should his behaviour or other new information indicate that he is no longer appropriate for home detention curfew. Where, as in this case, the period between sentence and eligibility date is very short, it is often not possible to complete the thorough risk assessment process necessary until very shortly before the prisoner is eligible for home detention curfew.

Alcohol and Tobacco (Smuggling)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vehicles impounded due to their involvement in tobacco and alcohol smuggling and bootlegging have been found to be (a) untaxed, (b) uninsured, (c) stolen and (d) driven by people with no driving licence or whose licences have been withdrawn in 1998. [70022]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that no central record is kept.

DEFENCE

REME

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the availability of married officers quarters in Queensferry; [69330]

(2) what accommodation is available for (a) NCOs and (b) other ranks in Queensferry. [69331]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There is no Service Family accommodation in Queensferry. The nearest accommodation is some five miles away at Hawarden and RAF Sealand, where there are 23 houses for officers, of which two are currently empty, and 160 houses for NCOs and other ranks, of which 62 are currently empty.

Aircraft

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of RAF aircraft will be mission capable by 31 May. [68260]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 3 February 1999]: Under current plans, 100 per cent. of RAF aircraft will be mission capable by 31 May. An average of 82 per cent. of established aircraft are forecast to be available for service on this date, with the other 18 per cent. of aircraft forecast to be undergoing routine major maintenance off-base.

Correspondence

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Gosport to the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 12 January, requesting an urgent meeting with him and the Minister for Health to discuss the future of the Royal Hospital, Haslar. [70628]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I wrote to the hon. Member earlier this week.

Staff College, Camberley

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) the plans to convert the Staff College, Camberley into luxury flats, (b) the status of the Staff College, Camberley as a war memorial and (c) its security position. [70542]

Mr. Spellar: The position remains as set out by my right hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton, North and Bellshill (Dr. Reid), the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces, on 16 July 1998, Official Report, columns 237–38. Options for the future of the former Staff College Buildings at Camberley are being studied. No proposals have yet been put to Ministers. Any decisions will clearly have to take into account both security requirements and the location of a war memorial in the Main Building.

Public Sector Pay Award

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the implications are for other elements of the defence programme of the public sector pay award; and if he will make a statement. [70406]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The additional cost of the Service pay award will be contained within the Departmental Expenditure Limit announced in July 1998 and we will continue to meet the objectives and targets set out in the MOD's Public Service Agreements. The award reflects the Government's commitment—made during the SDR—to the people who deliver our defence.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Ministers in his Department next plan to visit (a) Chorley and (b) Queensferry. [69345]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Ministerial colleagues and I have no plans at present to visit either but as I make regular visits to MOD establishments they could be included in a future visit.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70415]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Simon de Danser

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who authorised the use of HMS York and the Special Boat Squadron to monitor the motor vessel Simon de Danser in May 1997; and what their use for this purpose cost. [70630]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I understand that in response to a request for assistance from HM Customs and Excise military assistance in support of this UK counter-drugs operation was authorised at Ministerial level by the previous Administration. The additional costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence, some £127K, were recovered from HM Customs and Excise.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Class Sizes

13. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received about class sizes in primary schools in West Sussex. [68884]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Since August last year the Department has received 12 representations from West Sussex about class size policy.

17. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on class sizes in primary schools. [68889]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have passed legislation to limit the size of infant classes for 5, 6 and 7-year-olds to 30 or under by September 2001 at the latest. We are providing £620 million which should enable the limit to be met in virtually all schools by September 2000. The limits apply to pupils in infant classes only. We have concentrated on these classes as it is in the early years that the benefit of smaller classes can have greatest effect.

24. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he plans to introduce in respect of the additional funding for the reduction of class sizes to assist local education authorities and diocesan authorities. [68896]

Ms Estelle Morris: We will be providing a total of £560 million over the next three years to enable schools and local education authorities to employ additional teachers and build extra classrooms to reduce infant class sizes. That comes on top of the £67 million already allocated to reduce class sizes for over 100,000 infants from last September.

25. Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when and for what reason he took the decision to cap the amount allowed per teacher in local education authority bids to reduce infant class sizes at £23,500. [68897]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have made clear that funding allocations will ensure that all local education authorities have sufficient resources to implement their class size plans as approved. We are working closely with authorities to reach agreed solutions which meet all our policy objectives and provide good value for money. Decisions about funding will reflect these priorities and the need to ensure equity across the country.

Schools (Business Involvement)

16. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the involvement of business in schools. [68887]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There are many opportunities for businesses and schools to work together to the benefit of both partners.

The hon. Gentleman will probably be aware of the many types of partnerships which exist generally, for example in work-related learning, governor programmes and systematic mentoring. He will also be aware of the partnerships which operate in an Education Action Zone and specialist schools programmes. We value the support of business in our drive to raise educational standards.

Grant-maintained Schools

19. Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received about funding in 1999–2000 for grant-maintained schools which become foundation schools. [68891]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a number of representations since we issued draft regulations on 20 October 1998, from both GM schools and from local education authorities.

Disability Rights Commission

20. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals for the establishment of a disability rights commission. [68892]

Ms Hodge: The establishment of the Disability Rights Commission is an important step towards meeting our manifesto commitment to support comprehensive and enforceable civil rights for disabled people. It will help disabled people secure their rights and it will provide a central source of information and advice to employers, and service providers. Subject to Parliament enacting the Disability Rights Commission Bill, we would expect the Commission to be established in Spring 2000.

Grammar Schools

21. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans for the future status of grammar schools. [68893]

Ms Estelle Morris: Our Manifesto said that parents would decide the future admission arrangements of grammar schools. The Education (Grammar School Ballot) Regulations, which came into force on 3 December 1998, set out the arrangements to deliver that commitment.

Teachers (Recruitment and Retention)

22. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to make teaching a more attractive career. [68894]

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking (a) to attract graduates into and (b) to raise the status of the teaching profession; and if he will make a statement. [68890]

Mr. Charles Clarke: In October 1998 we announced a package of measures to address particular recruitment difficulties, including financial incentives and funding for local recruitment advisers. Over time the proposals in the Teachers' Green Paper, 'teachers—meeting the challenge of change' will raise the status of the teaching profession, make it a more attractive profession and attract a greater share of the able and talented into teaching.

After-school Child Care Places

23. Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress he has made on developing after-school child care places. [68895]

Ms Hodge: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cleethorpes (Shona McIsaac) today, Official Report, column 452.

Education Services (Torbay)

26. Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the effect of the 1999–2000 revenue support grant on the provision of educational services in Torbay. [68898]

Ms Estelle Morris: Education services in Torbay should benefit from the underlying increase of £3.4 million or 7.3 per cent. in Torbay's education standard spending assessment for 1999–2000. These figures illustrate the effect of allowing for local authority changes of function and taking account of new arrangements for funding music and student support.

Education Services (Sheffield)

27. Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the effect of the 1999–2000 revenue support grant on the provision of educational services in Sheffield. [68899]

Ms Estelle Morris: Education services in Sheffield should benefit from the underlying increase of £11.1 million or 6 per cent. in Sheffield's education standard spending assessment for 1999–2000. These figures illustrate the effect of allowing for local authority changes of function and taking into account of new arrangements for funding music and student support.

Learning Direct

28. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to extend and improve the services of Learning Direct. [68900]

Mr. Mudie: The Department intends to increase Learning Direct's capacity so it can handle 1.5 million calls a year by 2000–01. To do this we are in the process of extending our current call centre and have invited expressions of interest from organisations to operate additional call centres. From our ongoing evaluation, we know over 91 per cent. of all callers to the helpline think the overall quality of the service is good. However, the service is under constant review. We are currently improving the databases used by Learning Direct and are developing better management information systems. We further plan to make the Learning Direct data available on the Internet.

Pupil Mobility

29. Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to receive the findings of the research commissioned by his Department on high pupil mobility. [68901]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The research into pupil mobility, currently being undertaken by University College, London, is partly funded by this Department and partly funded by the Nuffield Foundation. The complete project is due to conclude in June 2000, but under the terms of the Department's contract, a report containing an overview of interim findings should be available by the end of June 1999.

Employment Zones

30. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the number of employment zones. [68902]

Mr. Andrew Smith: On 2 February my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I announced our future plans for Employment Zones. From April 2000, Employment Zones will target available resources more flexibly and effectively on unemployed people over 25 in at least 12 areas of the country which suffer from persistently high long-term unemployment.

Initially, Employment Zones will operate in Southwark, Nottingham City, Newham, Haringey, Doncaster, Plymouth, Tower Hamlets, Brent, Birmingham, Liverpool and Sefton, Brighton and Hove, Middlesbrough, Redcar and Cleveland.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales announced separately that zones would also operate in Glasgow and in Anglesey; Gwynedd; Conwy and Denbighshire and Blaenau Gwent; Merthyr and Caerphilly.

Schools Investment (Birmingham)

31. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received regarding the level of capital investment in Birmingham schools. [68903]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received a letter of 8 January from the Leader of Birmingham City Council asking how the Council's Annual Capital Guideline had been calculated, to which he has responded.

Education Services (Kingston)

32. Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the effect of the 1999–2000 revenue support grant on the provision of educational services in the Royal Borough of Kingston. [68904]

Ms Estelle Morris: Education services in Kingston should benefit from the underlying increase of £2.7 million or 5.2 per cent. in Kingston's education standard spending assessment for 1999–2000. These figures illustrate the effect of allowing for local authority changes of function and taking account of new arrangements for funding music and student support.

Young Unemployed

33. Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress is being made to secure employer involvement in the new deal for the young unemployed. [68905]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I am delighted that almost 40,000 employers have signalled their support for New Deal by signing Employer Agreements. These agreements are leading to real job opportunities for unemployed young people, over 57,000 of whom have found work through New Deal.

School Meals

34. Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what means education authorities which do not operate a school meals service determine for the purposes of deprivation statistics the number of children in their area who would be entitled to free school meals; and if he will make a statement. [68907]

Mr. Charles Clarke: All Local Education Authorities are required to provide a school meal service to those pupils entitled to free school meals. Information on the number of pupils known to be eligible and the number of pupils taking free school meals is derived from returns made by schools to the Department in January each year on the Annual Schools' Census (Form 7).

The number of pupils eligible and taking free school meals is published by Local Education Authority area in the "Statistics of Education, Schools in England, January 1998", published in November 1998.

Education Services (Sutton)

35. Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the effect of the 1999–2000 revenue support grant on the provision of educational services in the London borough of Sutton. [68908]

Ms Estelle Morris: Education services in Sutton should benefit from the underlying increase of £4.6 million or 6.2 per cent. in Sutton's education standard spending assessment for 1999–2000. These figures illustrate the effect of allowing for local authority changes of function and taking account of new arrangements for funding music and student support.

Lone Parents (Employment Opportunities)

36. Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his proposals to enable single women with children to take up employment opportunities. [68909]

Ms Hodge: For the first time lone parents are being given the same work opportunities as everyone else. The New Deal for Lone Parents, which became available nationwide on 26 October 1998, offers all lone parents on Income Support a personal adviser service to help them overcome the barriers to employment.

The support available includes help and advice with looking for a job, accessing training opportunities, finding child care and information about benefits.

We have committed £470 million to the National Childcare Strategy to help us realise our vision of high quality, affordable child care available in every neighbourhood, enabling parents to take up opportunities of work, education or training.

We are also committed to ensuring that the tax and benefits system takes account of the specific difficulties and extra costs some families face on account of their children. The introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit incorporating child care tax credit in October this year will provide £4.3 billion of help to around 1.4 million working families.

Tuition Fees

37. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the savings in public funding in the current financial year from the introduction of tuition fees. [68911]

Mr. Mudie: Far from leading to savings in public funding, the introduction of private contributions to tuition fees has generated additional income for higher education institutions in England in 1998–99 of an expected £130 million, which will be retained by the institutions concerned.

Health Hazards (Pupils)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research his Department has carried out or evaluated to assess the health hazards for pupils required to carry heavy bags of books to and from school, and between lessons; and if he will make a statement. [70190]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department has not carried out or evaluated any research to assess the health hazards for pupils required to carry heavy bags of books to and from school and between lessons.

New Deal

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what money was spent on producing and distributing, "The New Deal: From Policy to Practice, Ideas in Action". [70550]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Damian Green, dated 11 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply direct to your question about the money spent on producing and distributing, The New Deal: Policy to Practice, Ideas in Action. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

The document was produced as a result of requests from New Deal partnerships who were keen to learn how others have tackled New Deal issues. This document was distributed and has been well received by all Employment Service Local, District and Regional offices, Government Offices, strategic partners, local authorities, MPs and a wide variety of external partners.

The cost of the design and printing of 10,000 copies of The New Deal: From Policy to Practice, Ideas in Action was just over £15,000. The final invoicing for distribution has not yet been received, however, it is estimated to be almost £4,300.

I hope this is helpful.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his Department's policy on the introduction of five-term years in secondary schools; and if he will make a statement. [68888]

Ms Estelle Morris: Decisions about the number, length and dates of schools' terms and holidays are taken at local level, not by central Government. A five-term year can be introduced within the present legal framework.

Absenteeism and Truancy

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the responsibilities of education welfare officers in respect of absenteeism and truancy. [68910]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Education Welfare Officers have a long history of working closely with schools and families to promote regular attendance. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently issued for consultation new draft guidance, "Social Inclusion: Pupil Support", which includes a section specifically concerned with the role of Education Welfare Officers; we look forward to responses to that.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average budget allocated to continuing professional development in further education colleges (a) in cash terms and (b) as a percentage of the total budget in each of the last three years. [69044]

Mr. Mudie: Currently there are no national data available on expenditure for staff development in FE college. Inspection reports published by the Further Education Funding Council Inspectorate since 1993 have quoted the allocations made to staff development activities as ranging from 0.15 per cent. to over 2 per cent. of institutions' income.

The Government are investing £150 million in the FE Standards Fund over the next two years and one of the priorities for expenditure under this is training for principals and continuing professional development for lecturers.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many staff in further education colleges were employed on senior lecturer grades in each of the last five years; [69046]

(2) how many further education colleges have not provided a pay increase to (a) teaching and (b) support staff in each of the last three years. [69045]

Mr. Mudie: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Nursery Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the targets his Department has set for each local authority for nursery provision for three year olds. [70643]

Ms Hodge: The following table shows the proposed targets for 1999–2000 for additional, free early education places for three-year-olds in all sectors which have been set for the 50 Local Education Authority areas with greatest social need. Some £40 million is available to support these places; additional funding will be distributed across all authorities in 2000–01.

Local education authority	Target additional places	Funding available for places and training £
Barking and Dagenham	262	224,945
Barnsley	885	712,766
Birmingham	6,059	4,851,595
Blackburn with Darwen	887	707,823
Blackpool	1,058	832,995
Bolton	748	616,411
Bradford	1,220	1,022,797
Brent	1,017	820,534
Camden	831	663,410
Coventry	1,384	1,110,803
Doncaster	782	644,683
Ealing	410	358,855
Gateshead	625	508,343
Greenwich	821	668,891
Hackney	1,444	1,152,735
Halton	713	567,477
Hammersmith and Fulham	744	597,570
Haringey	704	578,683
Hartlepool	0	16,506
Islington	1,043	834,601
Kingston upon Hull	460	392,309
Knowsley	65	79,435
Lambeth	1,646	1,315,337
Leeds	1,247	1,061,853
Leicester	1,412	1,139,121
Lewisham	1,566	1,247,350
Liverpool	1,853	1,508,063
Manchester	1,386	1,147,048
Middlesbrough	7	32,055
Newcastle upon Tyne	1,210	972,403
Newham	1,618	1,296,875
Nottingham	1,016	830,671
Oldham	1,086	872,358
Redcar and Cleveland	14	36,083
Rochdale	1,042	836,897
Rotherham	1,305	1,040,590
Salford	311	274,151
Sandwell	466	408,489
Sheffield	2,565	2,047,148
South Tyneside	73	77,763
Southwark	958	782,493
St. Helens	725	582,617
Stockton-on-Tees	11	39,095
Stoke-on-Trent	614	509,289
Sunderland	850	698,369
Tower Hamlets	275	247,113
Walsall	102	121,956
Waltham Forest	1,562	1,240,493
Wandsworth	1,601	1,276,377
Wolverhampton	100	115,937

Child Care

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list by local authority from information supplied in early years development and childcare plans submitted to his Department, how many additional 0–2 years childcare places there will be overall, and, of these, how many will be (a) full-time, (b) part-time, (c) fully funded from the National Childcare Strategy and (d) dependent on other sources of funding; and if he will make a statement; [70667]

(2) if he will list by local authority, from information supplied in early years development and childcare plans submitted to his Department, how many additional before and after school places may be expected overall, and, of these, how many will be (a) fully subsidised from central Government funds, (b) partly subsidised from central Government funds and (c) unsubsidised. [70668]

Ms Hodge: This information is not yet to hand. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as information is available and will place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Rainsford School, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what applications he has received from the Governors of Rainsford School, Chelmsford, to sell part of their school playing fields. [70359]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has not received any application from the governing body of Rainsford School to sell part of its playing fields. The governing body is aware that it must obtain my right hon. Friend's consent before it can sell any land, including school playing fields.

Physics Students

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement of the number of students studying physics, indicating those studying (a) radioactivity and (b) nuclear physics. [68999]

Mr. Mudie: The number of students studying physics in UK higher education institutions in 1997–98, the latest year for which data are available, is shown in the following table:

Physics students¹ in UK higher education institutions 1997–98

Level	Full-time	Part-time	Total
Postgraduate	2,543	1,452	3,995
Undergraduate	9,731	256	9,987
Total	12,274	1,708	13,982

¹ Enrolments on HE courses as at 1 December 1997

It is not possible to separately identify those studying radioactivity or nuclear physics.

Mature Students

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of students over the age of 25 years applying for university places for the academic years (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02. [70547]

Mr. Mudie: The planned number of students underlying the funding plans for higher education are not disaggregated by age groups. However, the funding plans announced on 8 December 1998 will allow for 61,000 extra students in 2000–01 compared with planned numbers for 1998–99 and for an extra 100,000 students in 2001–02 compared with 1997–98. The planned additional 61,000 students in 2000–01 include 37,000 part-time students, of whom the majority are likely to be mature students.

Training Review

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he proposes to publish the outcome of the review of TECs and CCTEs—chambers of commerce, training and enterprise. [70552]

Mr. Mudie: We hope to announce the outcome of the TEC Review shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

Overseas Visits

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 343, on overseas visits, what were the costs of flights to New York; how many people travelled with him; and if he will make a statement. [67401]

The Prime Minister: The costs of the visit to New York in June 1997 were fully accounted for in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) on 14 July 1997, Official Report, column 46.

For the visit in September 1997, I travelled on a scheduled flight to New York by Concorde, and was accompanied by four members of my office. In order to attend the United Nations General Assembly, which began with a speech by President Clinton at 10.30a.m., this was judged the most efficient cost effective way of travelling. This is one of the 14 occasions, I and 8 of my Ministers have used scheduled flights on Concorde since May 1997 and compares with 11 Ministers on a total of 13 occasions during the last two years of the previous Administration.

For the return trip, I and five members of my office returned on a scheduled British Airways 747. The usual number of security and secure telecommunications staff accompanied me on both flights.

The cost of the flights to New York in September totalled £56,000. This is part of this Government's expenditure on visits overseas of £6.1 million for the period 1 May 1997 to 31 March 1998. By comparison, in the last year of the previous Administration, expenditure on overseas visits was £7.8 million.

Departmental Running Costs and Cash Limits

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to change the Cabinet Office security and intelligence services cash limits for 1998–99. [71262]

The Prime Minister: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVIII, Vote 2 will be increased by £1,880,000 from £707,906,000 to £709,786,000 and the gross running costs limit increased by £3,059,000 from £375,993,000 to £379,052,000.

This change is to take on board transfers of; £310,000 to the Scottish Office Class XIII, Vote 5; £3,500,000 to the Inland Revenue Class XVI, Vote 4; take up of running costs end year flexibility of £5,690,000 as announced by the Chief Secretary of the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36.

There will be an increase in Appropriation in Aid of £14,495,000 resulting from changes in accounting procedures and a net increase in other current expenditure payments of £25,878,000.

The increases will be offset by transfers, and charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

NATO (Membership)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister how he intends to mark the accession to NATO membership of (a) Poland, (b) Hungary and (c) the Czech Republic. [70423]

The Prime Minister: The three invited countries will join NATO simultaneously in early to mid-March. The precise date is not yet decided. Their accession will be marked by ceremonies at NATO Headquarters in Brussels and in Washington. The Heads of State and government of the invited countries will be welcomed by existing Allies as they take their places alongside their colleagues in the Alliance at NATO's 50th anniversary Summit in Washington on 23–25 April.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EU Aid

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which country receives most overseas development aid from the European Union; and if she will make a statement on how the priorities for aid are determined. [69898]

Clare Short: In 1997, the latest year for which figures are available, Bosnia Herzegovina received most EU official development assistance, £132.34 million in EU official development assistance, which the share attributed to the UK was 15.12 per cent.

The Government inherited from the previous Administration a situation in which EC aid spending is both skewed against the poorer countries and often of poor quality. In December we published and placed in the Library our strategy to improve that performance. We are actively seeking support for our strategy in the Commission and the European Parliament and among Member States.

North Korea

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance the British Government have provided to relieve the famine in North Korea. [70219]

Clare Short: The main causes of shortages of food and other basic needs in North Korea arise from its economic policies, though the problems were exacerbated by natural disasters in the mid-1990s.

Following the UK-led mission to North Korea last May during the UK Presidency, we are working with our European Union partners to provide, through the European Commission, a programme of food aid and related measures to enhance food security. In 1998 this assistance was worth about £21 million, of which UK's attributable share was about £3 million. We also support efforts to maintain a constructive dialogue with the North Korean authorities to ensure that aid is used effectively.

We have recently initiated a complementary bilateral programme of humanitarian assistance in North Korea. $1 million (about £625,000) will be provided through the United Nations Development Programme to support selected activities within the Agricultural Recovery and Environmental Protection (AREP) programme. We are allocating a similar amount to support humanitarian projects managed by British non-governmental organisations which are already established in the country.

Departmental Cash Limits

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what changes will be made to the cash limits for her Department for 1998–99. [71261]

Clare Short: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class III, Vote 1 will be increased by £143,758,000 from £1,633,307,000 to £1,777,065,000.

	£
Take up of end of year flexibility in respect of an underspend against the 1996 EC attributed aid	113,758,000
Claim on the Reserve in respect of the Central American Trust Fund	10,000,000
Increase in respect of a reduction in CDC's EFL to account for additional funds given to CDC at the end of last financial year	20,000,000
Increase in Vote Cash limit	143,758,000

The increases will be offset by transfers and a claim on the Reserve and therefore will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if she will give in each case the amount of money realised; if she will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if she will make a statement. [70421]

Mr. Foulkes: None of the items listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997 in respect of the Department for International Development (DFID) have been sold. DFID is not a capital intensive organisation and as such our capital baseline is relatively stable and turnover of assets relatively slow in comparison with others.

HEALTH

Physiotherapy

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many physiotherapy posts are currently vacant in (a) England and Wales, (b) the North West and (c) North Cheshire Health Authority; and in each case what percentage of the total number of posts this vacancy level represents; [66831]

(2) how many paediatric physiotherapy posts are currently unfilled in (a) England and Wales, (b) the North West region and (c) North Cheshire Health Authority. [66829]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 21 January 1999]: Information on vacancy rates for physiotherapists is not available centrally. For the information that is available on physiotherapy vacancy rates up to March 1997, I refer my hon. Friend to the 1998 annual report of the Review Body for Nursing staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine, copies of which are available in the Library.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what in each of the past five years, was the percentage of students completing physiotherapy training who took up employment in the NHS. [66833]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 21 January 1999]: The information requested is not available centrally. For the information that is available on students completing physiotherapy training, my hon. Friend may wish to contact the Chartered Society of Physiotherapy. For the information that is available on physiotherapists who take up employment in the National Health Service, I refer my hon. Friend to the Reports of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine, copies of which are available in the Library.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on agency physiotherapy staff in (a) England and Wales, (b) the North West region and (c) North Cheshire Health Authority in each of the past five years. [66830]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available in the form requested. The tables contain the total expenditure (1997–98 prices) on agency professions allied to medicine for the years 1993–94 to 1996–97 and agency scientific, therapeutic and technical staff for 1997–98 not employed directly by individual National Health Service trusts and health authorities. Expenditure on agency professions allied to medicine and scientific, therapeutic and technical staff by North Cheshire Health Authority for the years 1993 to 1998 is nil. Questions relating to Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Total expenditure on professions allied to medicine 1993–94 to 1996–97 and scientific, therapeutic and technical staff for 1997–98 not employed directly by individual NHS trusts and health authorities

(1997–98) prices

		Health authority expenditure (£)	NHS trust expenditure (£)	Total expenditure (£)
(a) England
1997–98	Scientific, therapeutic and technical staff	859,098	68,539,903	69,399,001
1996–97	Professions allied to medicine	783,852	34,452,623	35,236,475
1997–96	Professions allied to medicine	390,478	26,367,092	26,757,570
1994–95	Professions allied to medicine	2,390,596	16,773,898	19,164,494
1993–94	Professions allied to medicine	4,487,217	9,250,462	13,737,679
(b) North West Region
1997–98	Scientific, therapeutic and technical staff	736,284	4,089,925	4,826,209
1996–97	Professions allied to medicine	0	2,017,288	2,017,288
1995–96	Professions allied to medicine	3,814	934,553	938,367
1994–95	Professions allied to medicine	0	574,537	574,537
1993–94	Professions allied to medicine	186,515	418,672	605,187

Source:

Annual financial returns of health authorities

Annual financial returns of NHS trusts

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his target for investment in the modernisation of accident and emergency departments during 1999. [69586]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) on 2 February 1999, Official Report, column 573.

New Deal (Disabled People)

Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms are in place to assess the effect of geographical variations in access to, and quality of, disablement services on access by disabled people to (a) the New Deal and (b) Welfare to Work. [69584]

Mr. Hutton: All the New Deal initiatives are subject to full evaluation. As part of each evaluation we will be able to identify whether there is a geographical variation in the effectiveness of Welfare to Work for a range of groups including disabled people.

Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings he has had with colleagues in other departments to discuss the effect of geographical variations in access to, and the quality of, disablement services on access by disabled people to (a) the New Deal and (b) Welfare to Work. [69585]

Mr. Hutton: My hon. Friends the Members for Barking (Mrs. Hodge) and City of York (Mr. Bayley), the Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State for Education and Employment and for Social Security and I will be meeting shortly to discuss how local health, employment and social services can work together through the various New Deal initiatives to improve the employment prospects of disabled people. In addition, a cross Departmental group of officials from the Departments of Health, Education and Employment and Social Security meets regularly to ensure effective liaison over the welfare to work agenda.

Departmental Efficiency Gains

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to express efficiency gains as a percentage of his departmental budget; and if he will make a statement. [69629]

Mr. Denham: The planned efficiency gains are set out in the Department's Public Service Agreement at paragraph 4, chapter 4 of 'Public Services for the Future: Modernisation, Reform, Accountability' (Cm4181).

Medical Aids

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how statistics on (a) prostheses, (b) orthoses, (c) wheelchairs and (d) electronic assistive devices are used to facilitate (i) clinical governance, (ii) the dissemination of good practice, (iii) performance management and (iv) cost-effectiveness within disablement services; [69665]

(2) how many (a) prostheses, (b) orthoses, (c) wheelchairs and (d) electronic assistive devices were supplied by the NHS in each of the last three years. [69664]

Mr. Hutton: There are no statistics collected on prostheses, orthoses or electronic assistive devices. The only data collected centrally on the number of wheelchairs issued are for electrically-powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs. The total number of these issued so far to users is:

1996–97: 714

1997–98: 4,308

1998–99: 2,022.

Data are collected on the number of vouchers issued to users through the wheelchair voucher scheme and the number of these issued so far to users is:

1997–98: 811

1998–99: 1,550.

Issues of clinical governance and performance management are managed locally, and dissemination of good practice is coordinated through regional offices of the National Health Service Executive.

Local Government Finance

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) grants and (b) other financial support given by his Department to (i) Westminster City Council and (ii) the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea, other than through the RSG settlement, in (1) 1997–98, (2) 1998–99 and (3) planned for 1999–2000; and for what purposes the funds were allocated. [70157]

Mr. Hutton: The information is shown in the tables.

Westminster

£

Description	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Capital
Private Finance Initiative Credits	—	4,500,000	—
Annual Capital Guidelines	287,000	215,000	217,000
Supplementary Credit Approvals: AIDS/HIV	250,000	250,000	—
Supplementary Credit Approvals: Mental Illness	180,000	120,000
Specific and special grants
AIDS/HIV Support Grant	800,000	770,000	—
Alcohol and Drug Misusers Grant	61,744	27,421	—
Training Support Programme	215,091	206,361	126,476
Mental Health Grant (previously Mental Illness Specific Grant)	1,274,835	1,192,401	796,541
Guardian ad Litem and Reporting Officer Services Grant	28,784	—	—
Community Care Special Transitional Grant	2,304,652	2,170,586
Unaccompanied Asylum-Seeking Children's Grant	441,179	—	—
Persons from Abroad Children's Grant	2,835,433	—	—
Asylum-Seekers' Accommodation Grant	3,809,388	—	—
Promoting Independence: Partnership Grant	[4]—	[4]—	1,755,000
Promoting Independence: Prevention Grant	[4]—	[4]—	146,000
Promoting Independence: Carers' Grant	[4]—	[4]—	—
Children's Social Services (Quality Protects) Grant	[4]—	32,500	775,000

[1] Not bid for

[2] Not yet decided

[3] Programme ceases

[4] Programme did not exist

Kensington and Chelsea

£

Description	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Capital
Annual Capital Guidelines	224,000	166,000	166,000
Supplementary Credit Approvals: AIDS/HIV	200,000	20,000	—
Supplementary Credit Approvals: Mental Illness	115,000	162,000	—
Specific and special grants
AIDS/HIV Support Grant	890,000	760,000	—
Alcohol and Drug Misusers Grant	68,378	53,222	—
Training Support Programme	162,939	160,254	140,756
Mental Health Grant (previously Mental Illness Specific Grant)	929,082	895,514	692,769
Guardian ad Litem and Reporting Officer Services Grant	20,520	—	—
Community Care Special Transitional Grant	1,509,005	1,413,818	—
Unaccompanied Asylum-Seeking Children's Grant	255,613	—	—
Persons from Abroad Childrens Grant	1,276,670	—
Asylum-Seekers' Accommodation Grant	2,121,672	—	—
Promoting Independence: Partnership Grant	—	—	1,162,000
Promoting Independence: Prevention Grant	—	—	103,000
Promoting Independence: Carers' Grant	—	—	—
Children's Social Services (Quality Protects) Grant	—	32,500	560,000

[1] Not yet decided

[2] Programme ceased

[3] Programme did not exist

Alcohol and Tobacco

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has evaluated of changes in the level of consumption of alcohol and tobacco by people (a) under and (b) over 18 years of age; and what assessment he has made of the cause of those changes. [70020]

Ms Jowell: Levels of consumption of alcohol and tobacco are measured in surveys carried out by the Office for National Statistics, on behalf of the Department. The results are presented and discussed in Statistics reports "Living In Britain—results from the 1996 General Household Survey", "Smoking among secondary school children in 1996: England" and "Young teenagers and alcohol 1996". Copies of these reports are available in the Library.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have been held at meetings of EU health ministers on the implications for the health of EU residents of differences in excise duty on tobacco and alcohol; and at which meetings he has raised this issue. [70019]

Ms Jowell: In December 1996 the European Commission published its communication on the role of the Community in combating tobacco consumption, which considered a range of options for possible future action at Community level, including the level of excise duty on tobacco within Member States. I ensured that smoking reduction was discussed at the Health Council on 30 April 1998 during the United Kingdom Presidency. The Health Council has kept the issue under review since then. The Health Council has not discussed the issue of excise duty on alcohol during this period.

CFS/ME

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to increase the number of specialist chronic fatigue syndrome/ME units for (a) children and (b) adults; [70163]

(2) how many people are currently on the waiting lists for specialist chronic fatigue syndrome/ME units; [70162]

(3) if he will list the specialist units which provide services to chronic fatigue syndrome/ME patients. [70161]

Ms Jowell: The information is not available in the form requested. The organisation of health services, including services for people suffering from chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis, and the manner in which they are delivered are matters for National Health Service trusts and health authorities, taking account of the needs of the local population and the priorities set for the use of the available resources.

Contact Lenses

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the sale of non-prescription contact lenses; and if he will make a statement. [70166]

Mr. Denham: Only plano lenses may be sold without prescription. Both ophthalmologists and opticians have let us know of their concern that the fashion for wearing plano tinted contact lenses could endanger eye health unless retailers know how to fit and care for the lenses. Retailers are required to provide appropriate advice to the purchaser on the care, maintenance warnings and precautions as well as the use of the products they sell. The Department of Trade and Industry is responsible for enforcement under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 and the Department's Medical Devices Agency will provide advice as necessary.

Disabled People (Parking Spaces)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice his Department gives to hospital trusts on the provision of parking spaces for disabled people. [69669]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service Estates, an executive agency of the Department, provides building guidance to the NHS, principally through the Health Building Note (HBN), Health Technical Memoranda (HTM) and Health Facilities Note (HFN) series of documents. These represent best practice guidance, and through their adoption NHS trusts and health authorities should comply with current legislation affecting disabled people.

NHS Estates has published specific guidance in: HFN 14 "Disability Access" (1996); HFN 21 "Car Parking" (1996); and HBN 40 "Common Activity Spaces, Volume 1: Public Areas" (1995), and Appendix 1 "Checklist of access and facilities for disabled people". This guidance examines the concept of accessibility for all, including car parking, with particular emphasis on the problems that face people with a disability.

In February 1999, the NHS Executive will issue "Doubly Disabled—Equality for Disabled People in the new NHS—Access to Services". This guidance gives advice on accessibility for disabled people including "Transport, cars and parking". An access audit tool has also been developed by the NHS Executive, in partnership with NHS Estates Agency, and will be available to all NHS bodies in spring 1999.

Schoolchildren (Bags)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has carried out or evaluated to assess the health hazards for pupils required to carry heavy bags of books to and from school, and between lessons; and if he will make a statement. [70191]

Ms Jowell: This Department has not carried out nor evaluated any such research.

Anti-D Injections

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has issued on the use of anti-D injections for rhesus negative mothers; and if he will make a statement. [70152]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has commissioned evidence based guidelines for the use of anti-D from the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists which will be available shortly.

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what record his Department keeps of the number of anti-D injections administered in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [70153]

Mr. Hutton: Exact figures are not available centrally but an estimated 75,000 women in the United Kingdom are annually eligible for anti-D injections.

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in securing plasma for anti-D from non-UK sources. [70151]

Mr. Hutton: Anti-D made from non-United Kingdom plasma will be available from the National Blood Authority's Bio Products Laboratory in April/May. Two other manufacturers have Anti-D products made from non-UK plasma which are licensed in the UK. Supplies of these are being made available.

Midwives

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how long are the courses leading to (a) a diploma in midwifery and (b) a degree in midwifery; how much are the fees for such courses; and how the cost of the fees is allocated between the employer and the employee within the NHS. [70147]

Mr. Denham: Courses leading to a diploma in midwifery last 3 years. Courses leading to a degree last either 3 or 4 years. For those who already hold a registered nursing qualification there is also a 78 week programme in midwifery.

The fees for midwifery degree or diploma courses vary from university to university. Where courses are commissioned by the National Health Service, students' fees are met in full from the non-medical education and training levy.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwives have been appointed to primary care management groups. [70149]

Mr. Denham: Primary care group boards contain nurses who have a range of broad-based skills and specialities, including midwifery. Additional nurses with specialist skills have also been co-opted onto the boards.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made with regard to compensating persons infected with hepatitis C as a result of NHS treatment; and if he will make a statement. [70051]

Mr. Hutton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) on 17 November 1998, Official Report, columns 697–98.

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with haemophilia are suffering from hepatitis C through receiving infected blood products through the NHS prior to 1986; and if their condition is being monitored. [70167]

Mr. Hutton: We estimate that 4,000 people with haemophilia were infected with hepatitis C through their National Health Service treatment with blood products before the introduction of viral inactivation processes in 1985. All patients infected in this way are referred to a specialist for further assessment, observation and treatment as appropriate.

Young People (Employment)

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average number of hours worked by young people under 16 years of age in paid employment each week in each of the London boroughs; [70106]

(2) if he will list the categories of employment available to persons under 16 years old and the percentages of young people under 16 years in each category for each of the London boroughs; [70104]

(3) how many young people under 16 years of age in each of the London boroughs are in paid employment; [70107]

(4) what is the average hourly pay of young people under 16 years of age in employment in each of the London boroughs. [70105]

Mr. Hutton: Data on the employment activity of persons under 16 years of age are not collected centrally. The categories of employment available to persons under 16 are mainly contained in local authority byelaws. It is for individual authorities to decide in the light of local circumstances the categories of employment to permit, but the majority follow model byelaws issued by the Department of Health. Copies of the relevant part of that model have been placed in the Library.

Partnership Grant

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish guidance on the operation of the Partnership Grant; and if he will make a statement. [69678]

Mr. Hutton: We aim to issue guidance on the Partnership Grant within the next few weeks. The Promoting Independence: Partnership Grant was announced in the White Paper, "Modernising Social Services", which was published on 30 November 1998. The White Paper included broad indications of the aims of the grant, which includes the development of services to promote the independence of social services clients in partnership with local health authorities. Local authorities were notified of their indicative allocations in Local Authority Social Services Letter (98)18, issued on 2 December 1998.

Nurses

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the letter of 27 January from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health to the hon. Member for Christchurch, on the basis of what evidence he made his comparison between the present and previous Governments' treatment of nurses. [70111]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The evidence we have received is the many conversations and correspondence we have had with nurses leaders and ordinary nurses up and down the country ever since the new Government took office.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Government's strategy for NHS dentistry to be published. [70331]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton) on 15 December 1998, Official Report, columns 743–44.

Foot Health Care

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities that have conducted surveys of the foot healthcare needs of their residents since 1994. [70341]

Mr. Hutton: Information is not available centrally on those health authorities who have conducted foot health care surveys as part of developing a foot care strategy. We are conducting a review of the National Health Service chiropody services and in due course we intend to make recommendations on whether there is scope for improvement in their organisation and delivery.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the expenditure was on community chiropody services by each NHS trust in 1997–98. [70339]

Mr. Hutton: Expenditure figures on community chiropody services for National Health Service trusts in England for 1997–98 have been placed in the Library.

Departmental Cash Limits and Running Costs

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes will be made to the cash limits of his Department in 1998–99. [71119]

Mr. Dobson: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for Class XI, Vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) will be increased by £273,468,000 (from £31,225,592,000 to £31,499,060,000). This allows for increases of £81,876,000 in respect of the take up of the NHS Trusts' External Financing Limit (EFL) End Year Flexibility, and £208,691,000 from the Reserve for the National Health Service Winter Pressures. In addition the following transfers will take place, £3,300,000 from Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment) for student bursaries (Dearing Report); £60,000 from Class XII, Vote 1 (Department of Social Security) for the Students Grant Unit and £63,206,000 from the non-voted element of NHS Trusts' EFL. These increases are partially offset by transfers of £82,346,000 following a re-appraisal of the drugs budget requirements, £1,021,000 to Class XII, Vote 3 for start up costs for the Compensation Recovery Unit; £79,000 to Class XIII, Vote 3 (Education, industry, arts and libraries, Scotland) for student bursaries cross border flows; £211,000 to Class XIV, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health services and other health services (part) Wales) for student bursaries cross border flows and £8,000 to the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland for the National Poisons Information Service.

The cash limit for Class XI, Vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) will be increased by £68,133,000 (from £1,152,250,000 to £1,220,383,000). This increase allows for a claim on the Reserve of £61,300,000 to support services for Unaccompanied asylum seeking children, Asylum seekers' accommodation grant and Persons from abroad children's grant; and £7,713,000 in respect of the end year flexibility arrangements for health as announced by my right hon. Friend the then Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36. The increase also allows for the following transfers, £1,183,000 (running costs) from Class XII, 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) for repayment services; transfers totalling £66,000 (running costs) for the National Screening Committee made up of £52,000 from Class XIII, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland) and £14,000 from the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland; transfers totalling £26,000 for the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority made up of £14,000 from Class XIII, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland), £8,000 from Class XIV, Vote 4 (Hospital, community health, family health services and other health services (part), Wales) and £4,000 from the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland; and a transfer of £8,000 (running costs) from Class VIII, Vote 6 (HM Procurator General and Treasury Solicitor) for legal trainees. The overall increase is partially offset by a transfer of £2,163,000 to Class IV, Vote 2 (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food) towards the costs of the Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (BSE) inquiry.

The Department's gross running cost limit will be increased by £1,257,000 from £262,946,000 to £264,203,000.

Overall the NHS Trusts' External Financing Limit has decreased by £63,206,000 from £121,920,000 to £58,714,000. The Medicines Control Agency External Financing Limit has been increased by £6,800,000 from £700,000 to £7,500,000.

All increases will either be offset by savings, increased receipts, transfers to or from other Votes or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70416]

Ms Jowell: A specific exercise was undertaken during 1997 to bring together information from National Health Service trusts, health authorities, the Department itself and a number of other public bodies to produce the Department's contribution to the National Asset Register, which was published in November 1997. Information on changes to this information is not held centrally.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the comparative (a) clinical effectiveness and (b) cost effectiveness of azathioprine and betainterferon in treating (i) relapsing remitting MS and (ii) secondary progressive MS. [70644]

Mr. Denham: As part of a research proposal a group of experts has made indirect comparisons between the available evidence on clinical effectiveness of beta-interferon and azathioprine in reducing relapse rates in patients with relapsing-remitting multiple sclerosis. They conclude from their analysis that there is no difference in efficacy in these indirect comparisons. Indirect comparisons of evidence from trials using different patient groups and protocols are less reliable than direct comparisons. The safety profiles of the respective drugs must also be considered.

No such analysis is available for the treatment of secondary progressive multiple sclerosis.

New Hospital Facilities

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of the approval of major capital schemes for the provision of new hospital facilities on sites away from existing hospitals. [70645]

Mr. Denham: Final decisions to proceed with major capital developments in the National Health Service are made on the basis of approved business cases, written in line with guidance set out in the capital investment manual.

New capital schemes procured by NHS trusts require planning permission which has to be obtained from the local planning authority. Therefore the location of any scheme is also a matter for the local planning authority. Proposed locations are selected by NHS trusts in partnership with the local health authority taking account of their healthcare strategies and patient needs, coupled with analysis of existing owned sites, or where these are unsuitable, other sites which may be available.

Nursing (Disabled Students)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students on nursing and midwifery degree courses are in receipt of disabled students' allowances; and what proportion they are of the total number of students on nursing and midwifery degree courses. [70435]

Mr. Denham: Of those students sponsored by the National Health Service, 3 or 0.2 per cent. currently receive disability allowances. Information on other publicly funded students is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students on nursing and midwifery diploma courses are disabled; and what proportion they are of the total number of students on nursing and midwifery diploma courses. [70436]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to extend the powers of the Medicines Control Agency. [70637]

Ms Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for New Forest West, (Mr. Swayne) on 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 380.

Invicorp Intravenous Self-injections

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued to general practitioners about prescribing Invicorp intravenous self-injections. [69496]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The Department has not issued any guidance to general practitioners about prescribing Invicorp intracavernosal self-injections.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched a six-week public consultation on 21 January, on new policy proposals for NHS prescription of Viagra and other drug treatments for impotence. As a drug treatment for impotence, Invicorp falls within these proposals.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the (a) food and (b) retail industry over the creation of the Food Standards Agency. [69018]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

The Government consulted widely, including with representatives of the food and retail industry, on the White Paper, "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change" in 1998. Meetings have been held with these and other interested parties on a number of occasions to discuss the proposals.

On 27 January 1999 we launched a further consultation exercise on the draft Food Standards Bill and on proposals for a levy scheme. Copies of these two documents have been sent to all interested parties. The closing date for comments is 24 March.

TREASURY

Hon. Member for Coventry, North-West

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the cost to the public purse of dealing with press inquiries regarding the private business affairs of the previous Paymaster General, the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson), between 1 May 1997 and the date of his resignation; [67325]

(2) if he will review the accuracy of unofficial Treasury press briefings regarding the business affairs of the previous Paymaster General, the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson), prior to his resignation; [67326]

(3) if he will review the accuracy of Treasury press releases and press briefings regarding the business affairs of the previous Paymaster General, the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson), prior to his resignation. [67327]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 January 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 5 February 1998, Official Report, column 780.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the restrictions on departments channelling funds from capital expenditure to current expenditure listing (a) the restrictions, (b) what exceptions apply to these restrictions and (c) what margin for flexibility applies to these restrictions. [68383]

Mr. Milburn: Under the new public spending framework introduced in the Comprehensive Spending Review, Departments' capital and current expenditure are now planned and managed separately to ensure that the Government's fiscal rules are met, and to prevent capital investment being cut back to meet short-term pressures on current spending. As set out in the Economic and Fiscal Strategy, departments are able to channel funds earmarked for capital expenditure into current spending only within an agreed margin, to allow for managerial flexibility or to finance private-public partnerships. The margin agreed varies between departments depending on their circumstances but is on average around 5 per cent. of their total capital budget.

Tax Credits

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of personnel the Inland Revenue will (a) recruit, (b) transfer from other departments and (c) transfer from other duties in the Inland Revenue to administer the working families tax credit and the disabled person's tax credit. [67983]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 February 1999]: It is not expected that staff from other Government Departments or Inland Revenue will be transferred directly to the new Tax Credits Office but the recruitment programme is an open competition so anyone qualified can apply. It is not possible to establish how many of the successful candidates will be existing civil servants.

Alcohol and Tobacco Industries

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings have taken place or are scheduled to take place between Treasury Ministers and representatives of the (a) alcohol and (b) tobacco industries in advance of his Budget statement. [69530]

Mrs. Roche: I met representatives of the alcohol industry (Brewers and Licensed Retailers Association, The Wine and Spirit Association of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, The National Association of Cider Makers, The Scotch Whisky Association and The Gin and Vodka Association of Great Britain) on 3 and 4 February.

Meetings with representatives of the tobacco industry will take place shortly.

Investment Products

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the (a) tax and (b) legal definitions of his proposals for the investment products oeics and puncs. [69993]

Ms Hewitt: Open ended investment companies (oeics) are defined in the Open Ended Investment Companies (Investment Companies with Variable Capital) Regulations 1996, laid under section 2(2) of Schedule 2 to the European Communities Act 1972.

For tax purposes oeics are defined in section 468(10) of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 (as that section is inserted by Regulation 10(4) of the Open Ended Investment Companies (Tax) Regulations SI 1997 No. 1154) under which an oeic is defined as an open ended investment company within the meaning given by section 75(8) of the Financial Services Act 1986 which is incorporated in the United Kingdom.

The Financial Services and Markets Bill consultation document issued in July 1998 suggested that the Bill could give powers to provide for the incorporation of unauthorised oeics which it suggested be known as pooled unauthorised companies (puncs). The Treasury will consult in due course on the main features of puncs, including how they could be defined.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors underlay the decision to pay working families tax credit benefits through the pay packet. [69754]

Dawn Primarolo: Paying the Working Families Tax Credit and the Disabled Persons Tax Credit through the pay packet, rather than as a welfare benefit, will reduce the stigma associated with claiming in-work support. The clear link with employment should demonstrate the rewards of work over welfare and ensure that people move off welfare into work.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families in (a) Stoke-on-Trent and (b) the West Midlands will benefit from the working families tax credit. [69729]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that for the West Midlands Region there will be about 120,000 families in receipt of the Working Families Tax Credit in 2000–01, the first full year of the credit. This estimate is based on data from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey. Estimates below regional level are not available.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people who will gain from the introduction of the working families tax credit in the North West Region. [63198]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 11 January 1999]: It is estimated that for the North West Region there will be about 190,000 families in receipt of the Working Families Tax Credit in 2000–01, the first full year of the credit. This estimate is based on data from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to each of the Government's public consultations. [69779]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Smuggling (Tobacco and Alcohol)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets he set Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to assess their success rate in confiscating smuggled and bootlegged tobacco and alcohol in 1997–98; and what assessment he has made of their success in achieving those targets. [70015]

Dawn Primarolo: For 1997–98 Customs planned to make detections of smuggled excise goods worth £36.7 million in revenue. Results at the end of the year were £63.1 million.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he is making at ECOFIN in persuading the EU finance ministers to increase excise duty on tobacco and alcohol; and at which meetings he has raised this issue since May 1997. [70018]

Dawn Primarolo: Member states are free to set excise duty rates at the level they feel are appropriate to their own particular circumstances subject only to agreed minimum rates. The UK believes that there should be a levelling up of most minimum rates. The mechanism for achieving this is the Commission's biennial review of duty rates. The latest tobacco review, due in December 1996, was published in June 1998 and is progressing through Council working group. It has yet to be discussed at ECOFIN. The alcohol review which was due in December 1996 is still awaited and has not been discussed at ECOFIN.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Customs officers were dealing with smuggled and bootlegged tobacco and alcohol originating in the EU (a) at the latest date for which figures are available and (b) one year earlier. [70016]

Dawn Primarolo: The primary responsibility for dealing with tobacco and alcohol smuggled from the European Union rests with Excise Verification Officers. At 1 April 1998 there were 330 employed by Customs. As a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review, this figure will be increased to 423 by 1 April 1999. These front-line officers are supported by specialist intelligence and investigation teams.

Single Currency

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to paragraph 1.24 of the publication, "UK membership of the Single Currency: An assessment of the five economic tests", if he will list those studies which suggest that the UK economy (a) is and (b) is not more sensitive than other countries to interest rate changes. [69997]

Ms Hewitt: There have been a number of studies in recent years into the interest rate sensitivity of the UK relative to other European economies. These include a study by the Bank of England (Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin May 1997), a study by the Bank for International Settlements (Financial Structure and the Monetary Policy Transmission Mechanism, BIS, 1995) and "EMU: prospects and challenges for the euro", Blackwell, 1998. Further references can be found in the bibliographies of these studies.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a White Paper setting out the case for the UK joining the single European currency. [70225]

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the Government's assessment of the constitutional factors involved in joining the single currency. [70235]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The Chancellor of the Exchequer set out clearly the Government's position on membership of the single currency in his statement to the House of Commons on 27 October 1997, Official Report, columns 583–88.

Correspondence

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter of 26 October 1998 from the Head of the Treasury Enterprise and Growth Unit to Colin Balmer of the Ministry of Defence, entitled "Selling Services into the Wider Market". [69718]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 9 February 1999]: Our records do not show that a letter was sent from the Head of the Enterprise and Growth Unit to Colin Balmer on or around 26 October 1998. A policy and Guidance Note on "Selling Government Services into Wider Markets" was sent to Mr. Balmer and other PFOs on 31 July 1998 and placed on the Treasury's website shortly thereafter. I am placing a copy of the Guidance Note in the Library.

Simon de Danser Case

Valerie Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning the unlawful activities of senior officers of HM Customs and Excise in connection with the seizure of the Simon de Danser vessel; and what action he will take as a result. [70640]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chairman of the Commissioners of HM Customs and Excise has asked Sir Gerald Hosker KCB QC, previously the Treasury Solicitor, to conduct an independent inquiry into the actions of Customs and Excise officials in relation to the case. A summary of the report and its recommendations will be made available to the House.

Valerie Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will require HM Customs and Excise to pay compensation to the police authorities for the waste of police time in connection with the Simon de Danser case. [70641]

Dawn Primarolo: This was a joint police/Customs operation in which both parties contribute to costs.

Valerie Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who made the decision to ask for the Special Boat Squadron to be involved in the boarding and seizure of the Simon de Danser vessel in May 1997. [70639]

Dawn Primarolo: The decision was made by Customs, in conjunction with the police, to ask the Ministry of Defence for military assistance to board the vessel Simon de Danser. It is the Ministry of Defence who decide what assistance is appropriate.

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the cash and running costs limits of the Registry of Friendly Societies in 1998–99. [71257]

Ms Hewitt: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVI, Vote 9, Registry of Friendly Societies, will be increased by £1,000 from £1,522,000 to £1,523,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £505,000 from £7,203,000 to £7,708,000. The change in running costs provision arises from the transfer of support services for the Building Societies and Friendly Societies Commissions and the credit union section of the Central Office from the Registry of Friendly Societies to the Financial Services Authority. The increase will be offset by appropriating in aid additional receipts, and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the cash and running costs limits for the Inland Revenue in 1998–99. [71258]

Dawn Primarolo: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash and running costs limits for Class XVI Vote 4 will be increased by £3,493,000 from £1,730,709,000 to £1,734,202,000 and from £1,810,580,000 to £1,814,073,000 respectively.

The increase in running costs provision reflects (a) the transfer of £3,500,000 from the Cabinet Office, Class XVIII, Vote 2 for costs associated with the transfer of part of Euston Tower, (b) the transfer of £8,000 from HM Procurator General and Treasury Solicitor, Class VIII, Vote 6 to cover the costs of legal trainees being provided by the Treasury Solicitor, and (c) the transfer of £15,000 to the Department for Culture Media and Sport, Class X, Vote 1 for costs for services being provided by the Museums and Galleries Commission on pre-eminent testing.

As the increase relates to interdepartmental transfers it will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the cash and running costs limits of HM Treasury in 1998–99. [71259]

Mr. Milburn: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVI, Vote 1 will be increased by £8,205,000 from £63,065,000 to £71,270,000, and the running cost limit will be reduced by £1,364,000 from £66,330,000 to £64,966,000. The cash limit increase of £8,205,000 is a result of the partial take up of running cost end year flexibility, as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36. The changes are necessary mainly to provide for reclassification from running costs to other current expenditure on the euro information campaign and the transfer of the Insurance Directorate to the Financial Services Authority, and for additional provision required in these areas.

Additional provision is also required for the UK banking review and payments in respect of paymaster; and capital provision mainly for Debt Management Office.

The net increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed in the cash and running costs limits in 1998–99 for HM Customs and Excise. [71260]

Dawn Primarolo: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVI, Vote 3 will be increased by £25,388,000 from £835,543,000 to £860,931,000 and the running cost limit for HM Customs and Excise by £15,167,000 from £755,905,000 to £771,072,000.

The Supplementary comprises:

an increase of £9,000,000 to enable the Department to make and early start on implementing the Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review (ATFR), which was launched in July 1998. The running costs element of this increase is £7,300,000; an increase of £7,867,000 in running costs from the take up of the Department's eligibility under the end year flexibility arrangements; and an increase of £8,521,000 in other current provision (which includes legal fees and costs for the storage and disposal of seized goods), which will be met in full by foregoing the Department's remaining eligibility to running costs end year flexibility.

The Department has also made adjustments to allow for a Treasury change in the accounting treatment of VAT refunds on contracted out services. This adds £11,860,000 to expenditure subheads, offset by an equivalent increase in appropriations in aid.

The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yemen

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to ensure allegations of torture of British prisoners held in the Yemen are investigated. [69382]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 8 February 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's answer on 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 344, to the question by the hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook and Small Heath (Mr. Godsiff). My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary put out serious concerns about the torture allegations to Prime Minister Iryani. Prime Minister Iryani gave his assurance that the allegations would be investigated and, if found to be true, those responsible would be prosecuted.

We have pressed hard at all levels for an immediate medical examination in respect of these allegations. We are extremely disappointed that this has not happened. The detainees' defence lawyers have told us that they judge it would no longer serve the interests of the detainees for a medical examination of their torture allegations to be conducted at this late stage. They are pursuing this issue in court.

Iraq

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 13 January 1999, Official Report, column 225, on Iraq, if he will place copies of the messages and letters received by Her Majesty's Government relating to Operation Desert Fox in the Library. [69787]

Mr. Fatchett: Many messages from governments were in the form of public statements. They are therefore already in the public domain. Other governments made their views known during telephone conversations, meetings or in personal letters. It would not be appropriate for me to make these exchanges public.

Indonesia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between his Department and the Government of Indonesia in the past year on torture. [70425]

Mr. Fatchett: We regularly raise human rights issues with the Indonesian government.

China (Human Rights)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of the EU's human rights dialogue with China. [70553]

Mr. Fatchett: The EU/China dialogue has provided an opportunity for the EU to address many serious human rights concerns directly with the Chinese authorities. These include issues such as the death penalty, conditions of detention, Tibet and the cases of individuals, including those of recently imprisoned pro-democracy campaigners.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to review the results of the human rights dialogue between the EU and China in advance of the forthcoming session of the UN Commission on Human Rights. [70554]

Mr. Fatchett: We are reviewing the results of the EU/China Human Rights dialogue in conjunction with our EU partners. We will decide on our approach to the Commission on Human Rights before the Geneva meeting begins and in the light of that review.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the recent crackdown on dissidents in China and Tibet; and what impact this will have on the human rights dialogue between the EU and China. [70625]

Mr. Fatchett: China's recent crackdown is unacceptable. In addition to public statements, we have expressed our serious concerns directly to the Chinese government, both bilaterally and in conjunction with the EU and others, and called for the release of those detained. The EU/China dialogue provides an opportunity for the EU to address many serious human rights concerns directly with the Chinese authorities. Through the dialogue, we have urged China to abide by the principles of the international covenants, which it has signed, that guarantee the freedoms of expression and assembly.

UN Weaponry Convention

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom will formally accept Amended Protocol II and Additional Protocol IV of the UN Weaponry Convention. [71255]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I am pleased to inform the House that the United Kingdom's letter of acceptance of Amended Protocol II and Additional Protocol IV to the UN Weaponry Convention is being deposited with the UN Secretary General in New York today.

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes to make in his Department's cash limits and running costs limits for 1998–99. [71250]

Mr. Fatchett: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates the following changes will be made.

The cash limit for Class II, Vote 1 (Overseas Representation) will be decreased by £10,541,000 from £588,004,000 to £577,463,000. This reduction takes account of negative Overseas Price Movements of £10,500,000. There have also been two transfers from this vote: a transfer of £97,000 to the Department of Transport (Class VI Vote 7) for the provision of Marine survey and certification services in the Dependent Territories and a transfer of £140,000 to Class II, Vote 3 to cover a shortfall in funding for the subscription to the BBC World Service Monitoring Service. These have been partially offset by three transfers in: £45,000 from the Cabinet Office (Class XVIII Vote 2), £125,000 from the DTI (Class VI Vote 1) to fund the Invest in Britain Bureau in Hong Kong and £25,000 from the Home Office (Class VII Vote 1) to fund the UK Special Drugs Representative. A token Supplementary of £1,000 has also been taken to increase expenditure and receipts.

The gross running costs limit on Class II Vote 1 will be increased by £2,059,000 from £510,535,000 to £512,594,000. This increase has been fully offset by increased appropriations in aid.

The cash limit for Class II, Vote 2 (Other External Relations) will be increased by £29,951,000 from £235,660,000 to £265,611,000. The increase is required to cover UK contributions to certain OSCE, United Nations, and WEU Missions of £31,781,000. There are also transfers in of £100,000 from the Ministry of Defence (Class I Vote 1) in respect of their contribution to the Atlantic Council of the UK and £570,000 from the Home Office (Class VII Vote 1) towards certain overseas drug assistance programmes. These increases are partially offset by a reduction of £2,500,000 because of negative Overseas Price Movements.

The cash limit for Class II, Vote 3 has been increased by £2,140,000 from £167,836,000 to £169,976,000. This increase consists of £2,000,000 take up of capital end year flexibility as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36, and a transfer of £140,000 from Class II, Vote 1, as detailed above.

The cash limit for Class II, Vote 4 has been reduced by £349,000 from £97,448,000 to £97,099,000 because of negative Overseas Price Movements of £349,000.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Whaling

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to those countries that are seeking to increase their whaling operations. [70205]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

My Government colleagues and I take every opportunity to draw to the attention of the Japanese and Norwegian Governments our continuing opposition to their whaling activities. I made our position clear during my visit to Norway on 16–17 September 1998, as did officials at a meeting with senior Japanese officials on environmental issues on 8 February.

CABINET OFFICE

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proposals there are to change the 1998–99 cash limit for the office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and Health Service Commissioners; and for what underlying reasons. [71328]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The total cash limit for the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and Health Service Commissioners on Class XVIII Vote 4 will be reduced by £2,101,000 falling from £15,101,000 to £13,000,000.

At the time Supply Estimates for 1998–99 were submitted, the Office was planning to procure its second generation computer system and Funds were sought for this. Detailed preliminary discussions have meant that a contract is not likely to be signed before early in 1999–2000, and the bulk of the expenditure will now therefore be incurred in that and the following year. This expenditure can be funded within existing provision in both years. The unused funds will be surrendered through a reduction in the cash limit for 1998–99.

The changes will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proposals he has to change the 1998–99 cash limit or running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: Administration and Cabinet Office: Other Services Votes. [71329]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates:

> The cash limit for Cabinet Office: administration (Class XVII, Vote 1) will be decreased by £760,000 from £154,056,000 to £153,296,000 and the running costs limit has been decreased by £3,759,000 from £62,903,000 to £59,144,000.
>
> The cash limit for Cabinet Office: other services (Class XVIII, Vote 1) will be increased by £105,000 from £49,356,000 to £49,461,000 and the running cost limit has been increased by £484,000 from £48,639,000 to £49,123,000.

This is mainly to take account of the following.

Changes to the Ambit and Appropriation in Aids statement: The Cabinet Office has responsibility for the Royal Commission on the House of Lords Reform and the Public Confidence Programme work of Action 2000. Amendments have been made to the appropriations in aid description to reflect new guidance concerning the treatment of VAT refunds on contracted out services.

Machinery of Government: The Cabinet Office has taken over responsibility for the Women's Unit and Women's National Commission from the Department of Social Security (Class XII, Vote 3) (£1,900,000).

Transfer payment: A transfer payment has been made to the Privy Council (Class XVIII, Vote 3) (£87,000) and to the Department of Trade and Industry (Class V, Vote 1) (£34,000) to provide for minor occupier charges. An intra Vote transfer from Cabinet Office: administration to Cabinet Office: other services has taken place in respect of shared central services (£226,000). Provision for ownership of Pithay in Bristol has transferred from the Property Advisors to the Civil Estate to the Employment Service (Class IX, Vote 3) for ownership of the Pithay in Bristol (£77,000) and for occupation by the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner and Health Service Commissioners (Class XIII, Vote 4) of Millbank Tower in London (£457,000).

The increases will be offset by transfers. Thus, they will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Occupational Pensions

Ms Osborne: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on what basis former public sector employees are entitled to annual increases in occupational pensions. [70194]

Mr. Milburn: I have been asked to reply.

The Pensions (Increase) Act 1971 and Social Security Pensions Act 1975 provide for increases in the public service pensions of retired public service employees each year by the rate of inflation as measured by the all-items measure of the Retail Prices Index (RPI).

SCOTLAND

Waiting Lists

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients (a) had not yet been seen following GP written referral and (b) were waiting between referral to consultation, broken down (i) by specialty and (ii) by quarter from 30 March 1997. [67365]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 25 January 1999]: Information on waiting lists is collected centrally only for hospital inpatients and day cases. Data are available on first outpatient referrals and the length of time that patients waited for their first outpatient appointment. The percentage of patients who received a first outpatient appointment within 9 weeks and 18 weeks following a General Medical Practitioner/General Dental Practitioner referral, by specialty, for each quarter from 31 March 1997, is provided in the tables.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

NHS in Scotland: Percentage of patients who received a first outpatient appointment within 9 weeks and within 18 weeks of referral by a General Medical Practitioner/General Dental Practitioner, by Specialty[1]

	31 March 1997		30 June 1997		30 September 1997
	Percentage seen within		Percentage seen within		Percentage seen within
Specialty	9 weeks	18 weeks	9 weeks	18 weeks	9 weeks	18 weeks
Adolescent Psychiatry	79.2	96.8	73.5	94.4	70.6	97.1
Anaesthetics	36.2	75.0	39.0	74.0	33.0	72.1
Cardiac Surgery	—	—	100.0	100.0	38.5	100.0
Cardiology	80.9	98.1	83.2	96.7	72.1	93.8
Cardiothoracic Surgery	90.7	100.0	94.2	100.0	89.7	98.5
Child Psychiatry	71.2	88.1	70.2	85.0	65.7	80.8
Clinical Genetics	37.5	82.6	41.4	80.6	48.3	80.0
Clinical Oncology	—	—	99.2	100.0	98.3	99.5
Communicable Diseases	89.7	98.2	92.3	97.8	93.3	98.8
Dermatology	53.6	81.8	56.4	86.4	52.4	88.1
Ear, Nose and Throat (ENT)	67.5	90.0	63.9	92.2	53.1	90.1
Endocrinology and Diabetes	—	—	76.6	95.6	72.8	95.4
Gastroenterology	62.2	94.4	66.0	94.9	56.7	92.4
General Medicine	78.2	94.6	81.7	96.4	73.3	95.6
General Psychiatry	84.0	97.6	84.5	98.4	83.3	96.6
General Surgery	81.7	96.1	87.9	98.2	82.7	98.0
General Surgery (excluding Vascular)	—	—	85.1	97.1	80.8	97.3
Geriatric Medicine	96.9	99.2	97.6	99.3	97.5	99.5
GP Obstetrics	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	99.0	99.0
GP—other than Obstetrics	93.1	98.3	94.6	100.0	97.8	99.6
Gynaecology	76.4	96.9	79.3	97.8	72.6	96.5
Haematology	95.8	99.0	97.8	99.7	95.4	99.6
Homeopathy	12.2	31.0	17.7	41.2	14.5	35.6
Learning Disability	88.6	88.6	93.0	98.6	86.3	92.2
Medical Oncology	93.3	96.7	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0
Medical Paediatrics	87.1	98.5	83.0	98.6	78.3	98.3
Nephrology	83.4	97.9	85.4	98.3	81.5	98.0
Neurology	49.7	70.2	50.0	79.3	40.9	71.2
Neurosurgery	74.9	92.9	80.2	95.4	70.3	90.3
Obstetrics—Antenatal	97.7	99.6	97.8	99.6	96.9	99.1
Obstetrics—Postnatal	86.4	100.0	80.0	100.0	95.5	95.5
Ophthalmology	65.7	92.6	65.9	93.8	58.4	90.0
Oral Surgery and Oral Medicine Group[3]	70.7	94.2	65.3	94.0	57.6	91.5
Orthodontics and Paediatric Dentistry Group[4]	47.8	71.3	54.5	85.0	45.8	77.8
Orthopaedics	49.2	77.7	51.2	81.8	46.7	80.4
Plastic Surgery	58.3	85.1	60.5	89.9	59.1	90.4
Psychogeriatrics	96.1	98.8	97.9	99.2	97.2	99.4

NHS in Scotland: Percentage of patients who received a first outpatient appointment within 9 weeks and within 18 weeks of referral by a General Medical Practitioner/General Dental Practitioner, by Specialty[1]

	31 March 1997		30 June 1997		30 September 1997
	Percentage seen within		Percentage seen within		Percentage seen within
Specialty	9 weeks	18 weeks	9 weeks	18 weeks	9 weeks	18 weeks
Rehabilitation Medicine	72.1	94.4	75.8	96.4	68.4	94.9
Respiratory Medicine	92.5	98.6	91.9	98.7	89.4	98.2
Restorative Dentistry	23.7	78.1	21.9	67.4	18.4	58.0
Rheumatology	60.4	85.5	60.9	87.3	53.4	84.7
Surgical Paediatrics	54.7	95.5	54.6	91.1	51.1	82.6
Thoracic Surgery	—	—	98.3	98.3	96.1	100.0
Urology	69.0	95.0	69.8	95.7	66.3	92.7
Vascular Surgery	—	—	72.0	95.4	65.8	96.2
All Specialties	70.7	91.2	72.3	93.2	66.5	91.7

	31 December 1997		31 March 1998		30 June 1998		30 September 1998[2]
	Percentage seen within		Percentage seen within		Percentage seen within		Percentage seen within
Specialty	9 weeks	18 weeks	9 weeks	18 weeks	9 weeks	18 weeks	9 weeks	18 weeks
Adolescent Psychiatry	85.7	96.2	79.9	96.7	80.8	94.0	77.6	95.2
Anaesthetics	32.0	65.2	31.4	64.8	39.8	70.4	30.1	59.3
Cardiac Surgery	71.4	92.9	66.7	100.0	75.0	100.0	70.0	80.0
Cardiology	78.0	92.3	76.9	93.3	76.6	95.4	69.0	93.2
Cardiothoracic Surgery	91.6	99.6	96.9	99.6	95.0	98.9	91.1	99.6
Child Psychiatry	75.2	86.7	76.5	87.9	71.9	86.2	64.6	79.4
Clinical Genetics	37.4	74.8	43.6	76.4	33.6	79.0	37.3	66.3
Clinical Oncology	96.3	97.6	97.7	99.4	97.6	99.2	98.8	99.8
Communicable Diseases	90.0	98.5	88.3	97.[illegible]	89.0	98.8	78.5	96.2
Dermatology	51.3	81.8	58.0	83.8	60.3	87.9	57.4	88.2
Ear Nose and Throat (ENT)	56.0	88.3	56.8	87.7	56.5	90.6	51.6	87.6
Endocrinology and Diabetes	69.4	91.1	70.3	92.6	72.2	93.9	65.5	89.5
Gastroenterology	58.2	87.7	59.2	89.6	60.0	88.6	49.9	83.3
General Medicine	75.9	96.0	76.7	96.2	77.0	97.1	70.7	95.3
General Psychiatry	84.2	97.3	83.9	97.0	85.8	97.4	84.6	97.2
General Surgery	79.9	97.4	80.5	97.2	83.0	98.2	79.9	97.9
General Surgery (excluding Vascular)	82.6	96.7	82.8	96.3	82.6	97.4	77.1	96.6
Geriatric Medicine	97.8	99.5	97.6	99.6	97.0	99.6	95.3	99.5
GP Obstetrics	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0
GP—other than Obstetrics	97.8	98.9	97.1	100.0	92.9	96.9	96.9	99.6
Gynaecology	75.2	95.9	77.1	96.3	77.1	96.8	72.0	96.2
Haematology	96.5	99.5	95.3	98.9	97.7	99.8	96.5	99.5
Homeopathy	34.7	60.1	34.4	60.2	26.6	57.5	25.4	46.0
Learning Disability	91.5	94.9	97.7	100.0	96.2	98.1	96.8	100.0
Medical Oncology	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	98.7	100.0	99.1	100.0
Medical Paediatrics	84.1	97.4	82.6	97.9	75.7	96.8	72.2	96.3
Nephrology	86.1	97.8	84.4	97.7	90.2	99.0	88.0	97.0
Neurology	47.9	72.8	45.5	72.9	44.0	71.6	38.6	68.2
Neurosurgery	64.9	89.7	67.1	91.9	67.1	93.6	70.3	94.5
Obstetrics—Antenatal	96.8	99.4	97.3	99.6	97.6	99.7	97.8	99.6
Obstetrics—Postnatal	95.2	100.0	89.3	100.0	100.0	100.0	94.1	100.0
Ophthalmology	57.7	89.0	55.3	88.6	53.5	87.0	51.0	85.5
Oral Surgery and Oral Medicine Group[3]	66.6	92.0	64.6	92.2	58.5	92.7	53.7	88.9
Orthodontics and Paediatric Dentistry Group[4]	42.0	74.4	42.7	76.3	51.6	83.3	49.4	80.7
Orthopaedics	45.7	74.3	45.8	74.9	48.5	78.3	43.0	73.6
Plastic Surgery	50.8	83.3	51.4	77.8	57.1	82.5	53.2	81.4
Psychogeriatrics	97.7	99.8	96.4	99.2	96.6	99.2	96.9	99.3
Rehabilitation Medicine	72.5	92.6	78.3	96.7	89.2	98.0	80.4	96.6
Respiratory Medicine	91.3	97.7	92.3	97.7	91.9	98.3	89.3	97.7
Restorative Dentistry	19.2	57.6	17.1	67.8	23.0	62.8	36.4	58.1
Rheumatology	54.8	80.8	55.8	83.6	58.7	85.9	53.8	83.3
Surgical Paediatrics	57.5	85.2	91.6	98.8	90.7	99.5	92.9	99.7
Thoracic Surgery	97.7	97.7	91.6	98.1	93.3	100.0	93.4	99.3
Urology	71.5	92.8	73.5	94.5	72.7	94.5	63.8	93.8
Vascular Surgery	65.8	96.5	70.8	94.1	73.1	92.6	68.0	91.8
All Specialities	67.1	89.7	68.3	90.2	68.9	91.5	64.6	89.8

[1] No entry for a specialty on 31 March 1997 indicates new specialty codes introduced on 1 April 1997.

[2] Provisional

[3] Oral Surgery and Medicine Group incorporates the oral surgery and oral medicine specialties.

[4] Orthodontics and Paediatric Dentistry Group incorporates the orthodontics and paediatric specialties.

Source:

Form SMR0/SMR01, ISD Scotland

New Deal

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in each local enterprise company area have started on the New Deal programme and then left it without going into employment, education and training or working with the voluntary sector or the environment task force. [66633]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 26 January 1999]: The information, which relates to the position at the end of October 1998 is as follows:

Immediate destinations of those leaving New Deal[1]

Unit of delivery[2]	Other benefits	Other known destinations[3]	Not known[4]	Total leavers[1]	Numbers joining programme	Total leavers as percentage of those joining programme
Argyll and the Islands	10	6	19	35	236	15
Ayrshire	60	105	103	268	1,881	14
Borders	5	8	15	28	301	9
Caithness and Sutherland	1	3	5	9	85	11
Dumfries and Galloway	18	14	26	58	487	12
Dunbarton	31	41	58	130	934	14
Edinburgh, East and Midlothian	70	49	129	248	1,478	17
Fife	52	49	104	205	1,534	13
Forth Valley	38	41	67	146	983	15
Glasgow	198	143	264	605	3,530	17
Grampian	57	38	92	187	682	27
Inverness and Nairn	6	8	18	32	196	16
Lochaber	1	1	13	15	46	33
Lanarkshire	127	136	167	430	2,800	15
Moray, Strathspey and Badenoch	7	14	11	32	224	14
Orkney	0	0	0	0	31	0
Renfrewshire	67	64	99	230	1,255	18
Ross and Cromarty	4	2	14	20	150	13
Shetland	0	4	5	9	32	28
Skye and Lochalsh	0	2	5	7	36	19
Tayside	118	92	200	410	2,315	18
West Lothian	22	14	48	84	497	17
Western Isles	1	8	9	18	97	19
Scotland	893	842	1,471	3,206	19,810	16

[1] Excluding those who gained employment or had taken up education or training or had worked with the voluntary sector or Environment Task Force.

[2] LEC areas correspond to New Deal units of delivery except for the area covered by Lothian and Edinburgh Enterprise Limited which is split into 2 New Deal delivery units: Edinburgh, East and Mid Lothian, and West Lothian.

[3] Other known destinations include: starting on training programme outwith the New Deal; moving into full-time education; moving abroad; and entering prison.

[4] Some young people who find a job will not, for whatever reason, record this as the reason for termination of their JSA claim these will be counted as 'Not Known'. Past research shows that the destinations of those who do not give a reason for termination follows a similar pattern to those who do give a reason more than half of whom move to unsubsidised jobs. As more data are added the numbers in this category may be revised downwards for recent months.

Forestry Commission Land

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the Scottish Office guidelines are for commercial non-timber activities on Forestry Commission land. [69071]

Mr. Macdonald: The Forestry Commission's estate provides many opportunities for generating income from sources other than the production of timber. Ministers expect the Commission to maximise the return from its assets as long as this does not compromise its environmental and social objectives.

Smoking

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action the Government are taking to reduce cigarette smoking among young people; and if he will make a statement. [69405]

Mr. Galbraith: The Government's recently published Tobacco Control White Paper "Smoking Kills", identified young people as a key target group, and the Government will be devoting £5 million over the next 3 years to health education activity aimed at reducing smoking levels. The Scottish Office will also be working with key groups to draw up a new enforcement protocol for local authorities to deal with underage tobacco sales. The forthcoming Public Health White Paper will set out new targets for reducing smoking among children. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in reducing the incidence of coronary heart disease in Scotland in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [69404]

Mr. Galbraith: The incidence of CHD is estimated using new hospital admissions and deaths which did not involve hospital admission. On that basis, the incidence rate for men has fallen from 689.3 per 100,000 population in 1987 to 585.6 in 1996 and for women from 502.3 per 100,000 population in 1987 to 480.2 in 1996.

Since the mid-1980s, significant progress has been made in reducing premature deaths from CHD. The mortality rate has reduced by 42 per cent. from the original baseline of 1986. The current target is to achieve a 40 per cent. reduction in deaths among the under-65s between 1990 and 2000. The latest figures show continued improvement, making it highly likely that the target will be met.

CHD continues to be one of the clinical priorities of the NHS in Scotland, as is shown by the establishment last autumn of the CHD Task Force, which is looking at all aspects of the disease. One of its priorities is the creation of a national CHD database, which will make the monitoring of CHD incidence much more comprehensive.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Tele-medicine

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to promote tele-medicine in the National Health Service. [69406]

Mr. Galbraith: The Government's White Paper "Designed to Care" stated that the co-ordination of care could be improved through tele-medicine by enabling, for example, consultation with hospital specialists to take place in the GP's surgery. The Government's objective is to use technology to promote a seamless pattern of care. A Strategic Programme for Modernising Information Management and Technology in the NHS in Scotland has been published which requires all Health Boards and NHS Trusts to develop their own local comprehensive strategies which will include the use of tele-medicine. The government are also:

Establishing a national tele-medicine advice centre

Supporting proposals for development of tele-medicine applications in emergency medicine in Grampian and heart disease in Paisley

Joining with other home countries (England, Wales, Northern Ireland) to consider: common technical standards, confidentiality and ethics as they relate to tele-medicine and the evaluation of tele-medicine.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Departmental Fraud and Theft

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost of fraud and thefts relating to (i) his Department, (ii) its agencies and (iii) other public bodies, in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [69265]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The table details the cost of fraud and thefts relating to the Scottish Office, its agencies and Associated Departments. The figures for other public bodies are not held centrally. No estimates for the cost of fraud and thefts have been made for 1999–2000.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

£

	Scottish Office	Agencies	Associated Departments
1996–97	22,190	8,745	0
1997–98	21,858	24,329	350
1998–99 (year-to-date)	22,442	1,718	360

Departmental Absenteeism

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest absenteeism rates for each of his Departments, agencies and related public bodies; and what is his estimate of the total cost of this level of absenteeism to public funds in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [69202]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The published sickness absence rates for the Scottish Office and my other departments/agencies, for the latest available year (1997), are shown in the table. These figures are extracted from a published report on sickness absence patterns across the Civil Service. The report for 1997 has recently been released. Information on absence rates for Non-Departmental Public Bodies is not held centrally.

Working days absence per staff year in The Scottish Office 1997

	Total
The Scottish Office (including its executive agencies other than SPS)	8.4
Scottish Prison Service Agency	10.9

Working days absence per staff year in other departments/agencies of the Secretary of State for Scotland 1997

	Total
Scottish Record Office	9.9
General Register Office for Scotland	7.2
Scottish Courts Administration	7.8
Scottish Courts Service	15.5
Registers of Scotland	12.0

The published report does not estimate the staff costs of sickness at a departmental level—the estimated total cost in 1997 across the Civil Service was £404 million. Estimates for each department above could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

The Scottish Office is developing proposals in response to the 1998 Cabinet Office Report "Working Well Together—Managing Attendance in the Public Sector" to introduce best practice. Targets for reductions in absence rates will be set in line with the recommendations in the report.

Sports Funding

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total revenue financial support which Scottish councils will provide to sport in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02. [69714]

Mr. Galbraith: Estimates for future years are not available as this information is collected on an annual basis and councils do not submit their budget estimates for each financial year until the Spring. As from the 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Teachers

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to collect information on (a) the numbers of visiting specialist teachers in primary schools, (b) the numbers of class and specialist teachers in primary and secondary schools on short-term contracts and (c) shortages of teachers for particular types of post, or subject or as supply teachers. [69733]

Mrs. Liddell: Information on the number and characteristics of teachers in schools has been collected via a regular census of all teachers working in schools on a particular date. The last such census took place in September 1998 and did not categorise visiting specialists directly. Information on the number of class and specialist teachers in primary and secondary schools on short-term contracts was collected in the 1998 census and teachers were asked explicitly whether they were on a permanent or temporary contracts and whether they were on a supply list at the time. Provisional results from the 1998 census are expected to be available in Summer 1999.

The Scottish Office and other main partners in the education system have also been working together to enable schools to supply data electronically through the National Management Information Systems (NMIS) Project. A number of schools already provide data in this way and it has been agreed that by 2002, all schools will do so. The data specification for the NMIS Project does allow visiting specialists to be identified. The Scottish Office will consult with its partners as to whether a further census of data from teachers is needed before 2002.

While there can always be supply difficulties in particular subjects or areas, we are not aware that vacancies remain unfilled in any quantity because of shortages of teachers. The Scottish Office is aware that some authorities are having difficulty in maintaining adequate numbers of supply teachers to provide cover and will shortly be undertaking work to obtain better information from education authorities on the demand for the deployment of supply teachers. From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Council Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the future of the 50 per cent. discount on council tax on second homes; and if he will make a statement. [69854]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The Council Tax system is working well and we do not propose any changes at this time. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Dr. Lynda Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he intends to make to the cash limits and running costs provision for 1998–99 within his responsibility. [71122]

Mr. Dewar: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, I intend to make changes to 9 voted cash limits, 1 non-voted cash block and 2 running cost limits:

The cash limit for Class XIII, Vote 1, Agriculture, fisheries and environmental services, Scotland has been increased by £28,503,000 from £253,899,000 to £282,402,000. This Supplementary Estimate is required to take up end year flexibility for capital of £4,000,000 and for agency running costs of £328,000, within the overall Scottish Office running cost limit. It also reflects an additional increase in running costs provision of £162,000 for infectious Salmon Anaemia outbreak, an increase of £21,513,000 for the Scottish share of the increased spending on the 1999 Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance Scheme, an increase of £3,221,000 for increased expenditure on Agri-environment schemes, and a transfer to MAFF (Class III, Vote 2) of £721,000 being the Scottish contribution towards the costs of the UK BSE Inquiry.

The cash limit for Class XIII, Vote 2, Local Government, Housing, Transport, Other Environmental Services and European Funds, Scotland will be increased by a net total of £40,642,000 from £5,590,865,000 to £5,631,507,000. The change reflects a net increase in Housing of £1,357,000; a net increase of £2,345,000 for Other Environmental Services (which includes £2,049,000 in respect of the Coalfields Regeneration Trust); a net decrease of £8,573,000 for Roads and Transport (which includes a net decrease in provision of £2,900,000 for Motorways and Trunk Roads, a net decrease of £1,773,000 for Transport and a decrease in the grant required by Strathclyde Passenger Transport Authority of £3,900,000); an increase of £202,000 for Historic Scotland (which includes an increase of £44,000 in running costs); an increase of £17,281,000 for Revenue Support Grant (including £13,671,000 for the Spend to Save Scheme); and increase of £612,000 for final claims in respect of the District Equalisation Scheme; and an increase of £27,418,000 in Agency payments on behalf of the European Community to accommodate revised accounting arrangements for European Structural Fund Grants.

The cash limit for Class XIII, Vote 3, Education, industry, arts and libraries, Scotland will be increased by a net total of £7,926,000 from £1,696,507,000 to £1,704,433,000. The net increase takes account of a transfer of £2,606,000 to Class XIII, Vote 4 in respect of the University of Edinburgh Medical School, a transfer of £600,000 to SO/LA1 in respect of advanced factory provision, a transfer of £35,000 from Class XIII, Vote 2 in respect of Livingston Development Corporation, a transfer of £11,026,000 from reductions in Water Authorities EFLs and a transfer of £71,000 from Class XIII, Vote 6 in respect of additional administration costs for the Scottish Office Pensions Agency. There will also be a number of intra-vote transfers to take account of presentational requirements.

The cash limit for Class XIII, Vote 4, Hospital, community health, family health, other health services and welfare food, Scotland, will be increased by a net total of £33,876,000 from £3,997,607,000 to £4,031,483,000. The increase includes the cash limit increase of £22,246,000 announced on 3 November in respect of additional expenditure to reduce the effect of winter pressures on the NHS; a transfer of £109,000 to Class XII, Vote 3 to meet the systems and operational set-up costs in preparation of the new arrangements to be provided for in the Road Traffic Accident Bill; a transfer of £2,606,000 from Class XIII, Vote 3 in respect of the unused element of the capital costs of providing teaching facilities resulting from the relocation of Edinburgh University Medical School; a transfer of £60,000 to Class XIII, Vote 6 for increased expenditure by the Mental Welfare Commission; a transfer of £14,000 to Class XI, Vote 2 for Scotland's contribution to the funding for the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority; a transfer of £52,000 to Class XI, Vote 2 for Scotland's contribution towards the National Screening Committee; a transfer of £12,000 to Class XIII, Vote 5 for part funding for the appointment of the COSLA Drugs Co-ordinator; and some adjustments to reflect increased receipts from National Insurance Contributions and increased refunds from of Value Added Tax. The NHS Trusts' External Financing Limit has also been decreased by £14,175,000 from -£13,343,000 to -£27,518,000.

The overall increase for Class XIII, Vote 5, Law, order and protective services, police grant and social work services, Scotland, is £1,000. The cash limit has been increased by £5,538,000 from £671,549,000 to £677,087,000 and the gross running costs provision has been increased by £2,380,000 from £149,319,000 to £151,699,000. The cash limit increase takes account of a £1,500,000 increase for grants for asylum seekers and a £2,000,000 increase for publicity costs relating to the Scottish Parliamentary Elections. The changes also include transfers amounting to £800,000 to the Class VIII, Vote 7, The Crown Office, Scotland for ECHR cases, postal citations and for Lockerbie trial costs. There was also a transfer of £100,000 to Class XIII, Vote 9, Administration of Justice, Scotland and an increase in Section N both for Lockerbie trial costs. The Chief Secretary to the Treasury has agreed that access will be provided to the Reserve to assist in meeting the costs of the Lockerbie trial. A further transfer of £816,000 was received from SO/LA1 for additional funding on section G, police, section I fire and section M, social work services. There will also be a number of minor inter and intra Vote transfers.

The cash limit for Class XIII, Vote 6, Scottish Office Administration, will be increased by £1,247,000 from £163,310,000 to £164,557,000. Within this total the gross running cost provision for Scottish Office Administration is being increased by £4,771,000 from £136,057,000 to £140,828,000. This increase includes end year flexibility of £982,000, a transfer to £140,828,000. This increase includes end year flexibility of £982,000, a transfer of £405,000 from Class IV, Vote 2, Ministry of Agriculture, Fishers and Food, to fund work carried out on the cattle tracing scheme, alterations to the treatment of receipts from recoverable VAT, virement from the capital subhead of £2,260,000 and a transfer of £71,000 to Class XIII, Vote 3 in respect of additional administration costs for the Scottish Office Pensions Agency. The additional running costs provision is required primarily to meet running costs pressures associated with the establishment of the Scottish Parliament. Provision for capital expenditure is reduced by £2,065,000 from £31,030,000 to £28,965,000. Provision for other current expenditure is being increased by £60,000 from £4,961,000 to £5,021,000 to finance ongoing IT purchases by the Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland. The change in treatment of VAT and European Fast Stream receipts has resulted in an increase of appropriations-in-aid of £1,519,000 from £8,738,000 to £10,257,000.

The cash limit for Class XIII, Vote 7, General Register Office for Scotland, will be increased by a token amount of £1,000 from £5,477,000 to £5,478,000. Within this total the running cost provision has been increased by £150,000 from £7,503,000 to £7,653,000 and a corresponding increase in appropriations-in-aid from £2,402,000 to £2,552,000. This supplementary is required to accommodate the change in treatment of recoverable VAT receipts.

The cash limit for Class XIII, Vote 8; Scottish Record Office has been increased by a token amount of £1,000 from £4,072,000 to £4,073,000. This supplementary is required to give the authority to incur expenditure and receive income associated with the Scottish and European Archive Network.

The overall increase for Class XIII, Vote 9 is £2,900,000, which is for expenditure associated with the Lockerbie trial. The Chief Secretary to the Treasury has agreed that access will be provided to the Reserve to assist in meeting these costs.

The Scottish Office running cost limit will increase by £4,165,000 from £336,491,000 to £340,656,000.

The Water Programme has been reduced by a net £12.6m arising from the postponement of the Hyundai Project. The External Finance Limit for each of the Scottish Water Authorities has been adjusted as follows:

£ million

Authority	Existing EFL	New EFL
North of Scotland Water	55.582	55.514
East of Scotland Water	58.985	55.345
West of Scotland Water	71.389	71.401

SO/LA1

The non-voted cash limit SO/LA1 which covers non-housing capital expenditure by local authorities will be reduced by a net total of £13,539,000 from £367,677,000 to £354,138,000. The reduction reflects transfers out of £12,471,000 to Class XIII, Vote 2 for Revenue Support Grant, £168,000 to Class XIII, Vote 2 for the Central Government Challenge Fund, £626,000 to non-voted Election Expenditure, £58,000 to Class XIII, Vote 1 and £816,000 to Class XIII, Vote 5 to cover pressures and a transfer in of £600,000 from Class XIII, Vote 3 in respect of assistance for Borders Council.

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate proposes any changes to the Crown Office cash and running cost limits. [71123]

Mr. Dewar: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 7 will be increased by £1,500,000 from £49,193,000 to £50,693,000. Within this total the running cost limit will be increased from £47,455,000 to £49,005,000. The Supplementary is required to meet the Department's ongoing commitment to the Law and Order programme in Scotland and additional costs of preparatory work in holding criminal justice proceedings in a third country (Lockerbie trial), additional costs relating to the Department's commitment to the European Convention on Human Rights initiatives. These additional costs will be met in the main from the Scottish Block though £400,000 is in respect of end year flexibility arrangements for capital and running costs as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36.

Class Sizes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the annual cost of reducing primary school class sizes to a maximum of 30 pupils for all children in primary schools; and if he will make a statement. [70354]

Mrs. Liddell: Based on the number of pupils in each school, as recorded in the September 1997 School Census, the estimated annual recurrent cost would be £26.1 million. This is the total cost of employing an additional teacher for each new class likely to be created. The figure assumes that the current general arrangements in place with respect to composite classes continue, but does not include an assessment of the additional capital costs of new classrooms. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Schools (Capital Investment)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of total capital investment in Scotland's schools for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–01 and (e) 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [70355]

Mrs. Liddell: From returns made by local authorities to The Scottish Office, the estimated capital expenditure on schools in 1997–98 was £120.799 million and the forecast figure for 1998–99 is £166.881 million. Estimates for the later years are not collected centrally. However, following the Comprehensive Spending Review, the Government expect further additional expenditure by authorities on school buildings amounting to £185 million over the three years from April 1999. School Public/Private Partnership projects with a capital value of almost £400 million are being supported in nine authorities. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Superquarry (Lingerbay)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the conclusions of the Reporter to the public inquiry into the proposals for a superquarry at Lingerbay on the Isle of Harris; when he will make a decision; what assessment he has made of the costs of retaining the reporter since her retirement; and if he will make a statement. [70353]

Mr. Macdonald: The Reporter expects to complete her report and recommendation for submission to my right hon. Friend by the end of March. Once the report has been received, every effort will be made to announce an early decision.

The Reporter has, since her retirement in December 1996, received fees and expenses of some £51,000 in respect of her continuing work on the Lingerbay report.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

World Heritage Sites

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answers of 7 December 1998, Official Report, columns 31–32, on World Heritage sites, (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Government's consultation documents; [68839]

(2) if he will list the organisations in Scotland which (a) were consulted and (b) responded; and if he will list whom at Scottish Natural Heritage was consulted. [68838]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

Copies of the Consultation Paper were placed in the Library of the House on 21 August 1998. The information is not presently available in the form requested. I shall therefore write to the hon. Member shortly with a list of those organisations across the United Kingdom and overseas which were consulted and those which responded, and will place copies in the Library of the House. Responses will be made available for public inspection in due course.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate the public expenditure costs for each of the next five decades of (a) SERPS and (b) the state second pension; [65014]

(2) if he will list the projected public expenditure costs of (a) SERPS and (b) the state second pension over each of the next five decades. [65169]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 11 January 1999]: The information is in the table.

The estimated gross public expenditure costs

£ billion 1998–99 prices

Year	SERPS	SSP	Difference, net of income related benefit effects
2010	9.4	9.0	–0.4
2020	12.0	11.9	–0.3
2030	14.0	15.6	0.5
2040	14.0	18.8	2.5
2050	14.6	25.1	6.2

Notes:

1. This shows the net public expenditure effects of the difference between the costs of SERPS and Second State Pension (SSP), taking into account the effects of income related benefits.
2. The SSP figures include all expenditure on State second-tier pensions, including SERPS pensions already in payment and pre-2002–03 SERPS accruals yet to come into payment.
3. These figures exclude the effect of the introduction of stakeholder pensions, which is expected to lead to higher levels of contracting out.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of carers in each of the next five decades who will be credited in to the new state second pension. [64852]

Mr. Timms: It is not possible to make a precise forecast of the numbers of carers who will qualify for credits into the new State Second Pension in each of the next five decades. For costing purposes, it has been assumed that around 2½ million carers each year will qualify for State Second Pension credits over the period concerned. This includes 2 million cases where Child Benefit is in payment for a child aged 5 and under.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number and proportion of workers who will qualify on grounds of low income for the new state second pension (a) at its inception and (b) at each 10 year interval for five decades after the scheme's introduction. [64940]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 11 January 1999]: At the scheme's inception, it has been assumed that around 20 per cent. of contributing employees (some 4 million) will be contracted in to the State Second Pension and have earnings below £9,000 a year in today's terms. This percentage may grow slightly over subsequent decades as real earnings increases bring proportionately more employees above the Lower Earnings Limit for National Insurance contributions.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many disabled people will qualify for credits for the second state pension in each of the next five decades. [64851]

Mr. Timms: It is not possible to make a precise forecast of the numbers of disabled people who will qualify for credits into the new State Second Pension in each of the next five decades. For costing purposes, it has been assumed that around 2 million disabled people each year will qualify for State Second Pension credits over the period concerned (with variations of up to 200 thousand in any single year).

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list over the next five decades the net impact on the employee National Insurance contribution rates following the introduction of State Second Pensions. [65170]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 11 January 1999]: The information is as follows:

The estimated percentage employee National Insurance contribution rates for each of the next five decades following the introduction of the State Second Pension

Year	Current policy (SERPS)	State Second Pension
2010	8.5	8.5
2020	8.1	8.3
2030	8.3	8.7
2040	7.7	8.3
2050	6.8	7.9

Notes:

1. These figures exclude the effect of the introduction of stakeholder pensions, which is expected to lead to higher levels of contracting out.

2. The current employee National Insurance contribution rate (not contracted out) is 8.95 per cent. (after excluding the NHS Allocation).

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what principles will govern the annual indexation arrangements for the proposed State Second Pension once it has been implemented. [70597]

Mr. Timms: As explained in the Green Paper on pensions "Partnership in Pensions" the new thresholds of £9,000 and £18,500 for the State Second Pension, on which we are consulting, will be uprated in line with average earnings.

Payments of the State Second Pension will be uprated in line with prices, as the Additional Pension earned from the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme is currently.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the value of the total income from basic state pension and stakeholder pensions relative to the value of the minimum pension guarantee of someone earning £10,000 per annum through their working life assuming (i) price indexation of the minimum pension guarantee and (ii) earnings indexation of the minimum pension guarantees, and, in each case, that the only sums paid into the stakeholder pension were National Insurance rebates. [70626]

Mr. Timms: The State Second Pension is designed to ensure that any person earning above the National Insurance Lower Earnings Limit, or caring, for a 49 year working life will have an income in excess of the Minimum Income Guarantee level.

A person who earns £10,000 per annum in 1998 earnings terms throughout their working life would, on the basis of having paid only their National Insurance rebates into a stakeholder pension scheme, receive a total income from the basic State Pension and stakeholder pension of £83 per week (in 1998 earnings terms). This represents 110 per cent. of the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) level where the MIG is raised in line with earnings. If the MIG were raised in line with prices, this sum would be 240 per cent. of the MIG level. As explained in the Green Paper "Partnership in Pensions", the structure of contracting out rebates will be reviewed in light of stakeholder pension schemes.

Notes:

1. It has been assumed, in line with normal Government Actuary's Department (GAD) assumptions for calculating the contracted out rebates, that the amount received from a rebate-only stakeholder pension would be equal to the amount received from the State Second Pension. If the rate of return was higher than that normally assumed by GAD (ie, 4 per cent. above price inflation), the amount received would increase.

2. The hypothetical individual in this example is assumed to begin work at 16 years old in 2002 and work for 49 years until retirement.

3. Only National Insurance rebates are paid into the stakeholder pension scheme.

4. Real earnings growth is assumed to be 1.5 per cent.

5. Figures are rounded to the nearest pound.

6. Percentages are rounded to the nearest 5 per cent.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what definition of average earnings will be used with respect to the commitment to uprate the minimum income guarantee in line with average earnings. [67759]

Mr. Timms: The Minimum Income Guarantee will be increased year by year as resources allow. Our aim is that over the longer term, it should rise in line with earnings so that all pensioners can share in the rising prosperity of the nation. To do this we intend to monitor the movement on average earnings across the whole economy.

Pensioners (Age Addition)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much it would have been possible to increase the age addition for pensioners aged over 80 years, taking account of savings in means-tested benefits and higher income tax revenues, if the £2.5 billion allocated to the pensioner income guarantee had instead all been allocated to this purpose. [68861]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 2 February 1999]: The £2.5 billion package of measures to tackle pensioner poverty over the next three years includes provision for the Minimum Income Guarantee and Winter Fuel Payments as well as free eye tests for the over 60s and concessionary travel. We have assumed expenditure of about £0.8 billion a year.

A net increase in expenditure of £0.8 billion on the age addition in 1999–2000 would result in an estimated weekly increase of about £11.90.

Work Profiles

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of people have worked for (a) 0 to five years, (b) six to 10 years, (c) 11 to 15 years, (d) 16 to 20 years, (e) 21 to 25 years, (f) 26 to 30 years and (g) 30 years or more of their working life; and if these data can be presented for (i) (1) men and (2) women and (ii) those in each income quintile. [68635]

Mr. Timms: [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Men aged 54 at 5 April 1996

Percentage

Number of years worked	All employed or self-employed	Self-employed at any time	Employed earners only
0–5	10	—	10
6–10	4	—	4
11–15	4	1	3
16–20	4	1	3
21–25	5	1	3
26–30	6	2	4
30 or more	66	20	48
Total	100	26	74

Men aged 54 at 5 April 1996

Percentage

	Employed earners only
	Reckonable earnings from class 1 NICs during 1995–96
Number of years worked	Nil	£1-£4,575	£4,576 £9,151	£9,152-£13,727	£13,728 £18,303	£18,304 and over
0–5	10	—	—	—	—	—
6–10	4	—	—	—	—	—
11–15	3	—	—	—	—	—
16–20	2	—	—	—	—	—
21–25	3	—	—	—	—	—
26–30	3	—	—	—	—	—
30 or more	10	2	3	8	9	15
Total	34	3	4	8	9	16

Women aged 54 at 5 April 1996

Percentage

Number of years worked	All employed or self-employed	Self-employed at any time	Employed earners only
0–5	14	—	14
6–10	11	—	11
11–15	10	1	9
16–20	12	1	11
21–25	14	1	13
26–30	17	1	16
30 or more	22	1	20
Total	100	5	95

Women aged 54 at 5 April 1996

Percentage

	Employed earners only
	Reckonable earnings from class 1 NICs during 1995–96
Number of years worked	Nil	£1-£4,575	£4,576-£9,151	£9,152-£13,727	£13,728-£18,303	£18,304 and over
0–5	14	—	—	—	—	—
6–10	11	—	—	—	—	—
11–15	7	1	—	—	—	—
16–20	7	2	1	1	—	—

Women aged 54 at 5 April 1996

Percentage

Number of years worked	Nil	Employed earners only Reckonable earnings from class 1 NICs during 1995–96 £1-£4,575	£4,576-£9,151	£9,152-£13,727	£13,728-£18,303	£18,304 and over
21–25	6	2	2	1	—	—
26–30	6	3	4	2	1	1
30 or more	6	3	4	4	2	2
Total	57	10	13	8	4	3

Notes:

1. The answer is based on those aged 54 years old at 5 April 1996. This is the only age group at present on which full annual details of their National Insurance (NI) record is known, since the commencement of their working life i.e. aged 16 during the 1957/58 tax year.
2. Those shown in the tables are those who have had earnings from employment or self-employment and paid National Insurance Contributions (NICs) during a tax year. It does not therefore contain details of anyone who may have had earnings below the weekly lower earnings limit for NICs in any one tax year or other source of income.
3. If self-employed NICs have been paid in any tax year then details of the number of years worked, self-employed or employed, have been shown in the self-employed at any one time column.
4. Those who have had employed earnings and paid NICs during their working life to date have been shown in each earnings quintile by the amount of earnings on which NI has been paid during the tax year 1995–96. The upper earnings limit for 1995–6 was £22,880.
5. Percentages have been calculated as percentages of all 54 year olds which are held on the LLMDB. This may include some people who do not now reside in Great Britain although at some point in their working life have paid into the National Insurance system.
6. Percentages have been rounded to the nearest whole number.
7. "—" denotes less than 0.5 per cent.

Source:

Lifetime Labour Market Database (LLMDB) which contains a 1 per cent. sample of the National Insurance Recording System (NIRS) taken at February 1997.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the groups of disabled people which will automatically be exempted from the new system of periodically reviewing awards of disability living allowance; [69224]

(2) if the proposed system of periodically reviewing awards of disability living allowance announced on 28 January will include the safeguards announced on 9 February 1998 in respect of the Benefit Integrity Project. [69220]

Mr. Bayley: From April 1999 a new system of periodically reviewing entitlement to Disability Living Allowance (DLA) will be introduced. We intend to incorporate the lessons already learned and to evaluate and refine the process as it develops. At the outset not only will DLA recipients whose cases were examined by the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) be excluded from the process but also people in any one of the specific categories previously excluded from the action of the BIP which are listed below.

Groups to be excluded at the outset:

1. People receiving the higher rate of the DLA mobility component and either the highest or the middle rate of the DLA care component who are:

Paraplegic

Tetraplegic

Quadriplegic

Both deaf and blind

Double amputees

Severely Mentally Impaired[1]

Over the age of 65, or

With an award made prior to April 1992

2. People receiving the higher rate of the DLA mobility component and the highest rate of the DLA care component with:

Cystic Fibrosis

Dementia

Haemodialysis

Hyperkinetic Syndrome

Learning difficulty

Multiple Allergy Syndrome

Multiple Sclerosis

Motor Neurone Disease

Neurological Disease (including Muscular Dystrophy)

Parkinson's Disease

Total Parenteral Nutrition, or

Who are terminally ill

3. People with a fixed period award due to end within the next three years will also be excluded. Safeguards developed and introduced during the lifetime of the BIP will be carried forward into the new process. This will include the changes in evidence gathering introduced on 9 February 1998; which ensured that no decision to reduce or remove entitlement to DLA is based solely on the information provided by the claimant.

[1] This category applies only to certain people within these broad definitions.

Minimum Wage

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the effect of the introduction of the minimum wage on the average gross weekly earnings of disability working allowance claimants. [69751]

Mr. Bayley: The average gross weekly earnings of Disability Working Allowance recipients will increase from £99 to £106.60 in 1999–2000 prices.

Notes:

1. Around 1.25 per cent. of DWA recipients will float off the benefit on payment of the minimum wage, and have been excluded in deriving the second figure.
2. Unsuccessful claimants will remain as such on payment of a minimum wage.
3. Analysis allows that partner's earnings may also increase on payment of minimum wage.
4. Analysis based on 100 per cent. count of DWA recipients.

Source:

Disability Working Allowance Statistics Quarterly Inquiry, July 1998.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the effect of the introduction of the minimum wage on the average gross weekly earnings of the main earners in families in receipt of family credit. [69749]

Angela Eagle: Average gross weekly earnings of main earners in families in receipt of Family Credit are estimated to increase from £121 to £129 at 1999–2000 prices.

Notes:

Around 3 per cent. of Family Credit (FC) recipients are estimated to float off benefit after the introduction of the minimum wage. These have been excluded in deriving the second figure.

Estimates based on a 5 per cent. sample of FC recipients and the 1995–6 Family Resources Survey uprated to 1999–2000 prices.

Estimates assume no restoration of earnings differentials above the minimum wage and no employment effects.

Analysis shows that partners earnings may also increase on introduction of the minimum wage.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the effect of the introduction of the minimum wage on the number of disability working allowance claimants with gross weekly earnings of (a) under £40, (b) £40 to £79.99, (c) £80 to £119.99, (d) £120 to £159.99, (e) £160 to £199.99, (f) £200 to £249.99, (g) £250 to £300 and (h) £300 and over. [69752]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

Status of disability working allowance (DWA) recipients after payment of minimum wage for 1999–2000

			Earnings
Group	All	Under £40	£40 to £79.99	£80 to £119.99	£120 to £159.99
All	19,300	530	6,070	5,130	4,370
Earnings above Minimum Wage	10,840	500	2,190	2,990	2,350
Gain from Minimum Wage, Same DWA	2,170	10	2,130	20	*
Gain from Minimum Wage, Less DWA	6,050	30	1,720	2,070	1,940
Gain from Minimum Wage, Float off DWA	240	*	30	50	70

		Earnings
Group	£160 to £199.99	£200 to £249.99	£250 to £299.99	£300 and over
All	1,900	890	300	90
Earnings above Minimum Wage	1,660	80	260	90
Gain from Minimum Wage, Same DWA	*	*	*	*
Gain from Minimum Wage, less DWA	200	60	20	*
Gain from Minimum Wage, Float off DWA	40	30	10	*

Notes:

1. Figures may not add up due to rounding, and will not be accurate to nearest 10
2. "*" represents a figure less than 5
3. No benefit unit with a Disability Working Allowance (DWA) recipient will be worse off after the introduction of the minimum wage and those with higher earnings will have higher total income
4. This is the first time the aggregate population figure has been used in the public domain, and is consistent with the Pre-Budget Report
5. Unsuccessful claimants will remain as such on payment of minimum wage
6. Analysis allows that partner's earnings may also increase on payment of minimum wage
7. Some self-employed DWA recipients report no earnings, and it is assumed this practice will be unaffected by the introduction of the minimum wage
8. Analysis based on a 100 per cent. count of DWA recipients

Source:

Disability Working Allowance Statistics Quarterly Inquiry, July 1998

Family Credit

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research his Department has commissioned on the financial effect on families of the additional family credit benefits paid to those who work 30 hours or more. [69850]

Angela Eagle: There has been no research commissioned specifically to examine the financial impact of the 30 hour credit on couple family finances. However, starting in 1991 the Department has carried out a series of surveys as part of the Programme of Research into Low Income Families (PRILIF).

The first survey, in 1991, included couple and lone parent families. Since that time the focus has been on lone parents. One of the key objectives of this research has been to explore the impact of Family Credit on lone parent family finances in relation to work. The report "Lone Parents on the Margins of Work", published in the Department's Research Series in 1998, used data from the 1994 survey of lone parents[1] to make a preliminary estimate of the likely impact of the 30 hour credit on incentives to work among lone parents.

[1] These data were collected prior to the introduction of the 30 hour credit in Family Credit.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average family credit award in 1997–98 in the Portsmouth area. [69687]

Angela Eagle: A complete set of data for the whole of 1997–1998 will not be available until April 1999. The latest information is for August 1998 at which time the average award of Family Credit in the Portsmouth Local Authority District was £59.80 per week.

Note:

Figure is based on a 5 per cent. sample of all Family Credit awards and as such is subject to a degree of sampling error.

Source:

Family Credit Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, August 1998.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to each of the Government's public consultations. [69770]

Mr. Timms: Lists of those organisations and academics who responded to our consultation papers, excluding those who requested confidentiality, have been placed in the House Libraries. Copies of their responses are available on request from the Department.

Responses are assessed as individual policy areas are developed and announcements made.

Minimum Pension Guarantee

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost to public funds of increasing the basic state pension to the level of the minimum pension guarantee. [70256]

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer my hon. Friend the then Minister of State, Department of Social Security gave my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 18 November 1998, Official Report, columns 624–25.

Widows' Pensions

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes there will be to widows' pensions after 2000 resulting from legislation enacted prior to 1 May 1997. [70326]

Mr. Timms: As a result of legislation enacted prior to 1 May 1997, the amount of SERPS which a widow can inherit from her late husband is being reduced from 100 per cent. to 50 per cent. for a woman widowed on or after 6 April 2000. Widows already receiving inherited SERPS will not be affected.

This change was part of a package of SERPS reforms introduced by the Social Security Act 1986. Other changes included a phased reduction in the rate at which SERPS pensions build up, from 25 per cent. of reckonable earnings to 20 per cent., and the ending of the "best 20 years" provision.

Housing Benefit

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about allegations concerning the claiming of UK housing benefit by non-EU citizens residing in EU member states; and if he will make a statement. [70426]

Angela Eagle: We have received no representations. Housing Benefit is available to help people living in Great Britain meet the rent liability on the dwelling they occupy as their home, provided they satisfy the other conditions of entitlement for that benefit.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of people in families with someone in full-time work receiving amounts of housing benefit of less than (a) £10 per week, (b) £15 per week, and (c) £20 per week. [70627]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

The number of people in families in Great Britain in receipt of housing benefit but not Income Support nor income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, and where either the claimant or partner has earnings

Housing Benefit (per week)	Number[1]
Less than £10	89,000
Less than £15	165,000
Less than £20	242,000

[1] Number rounded to the nearest thousand.

Notes:

1. It has been assumed that families means lone parents or couples with dependant children.

2. Information on the number of hours worked is not collected, so it is not possible to distinguish between full-time and part-time work.

Source:

Housing Benefit Management Information System, annual 1 per cent. sample inquiry without Income Support, taken at the end of May 1997.

National Insurance

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the additional income to public funds if (a) class 2 contributions and (b) class 4 contributions were levied at the same rate as class 1 contributions. [70427]

Mr. Timms: If the self-employed contributed at the combined employee and employer Class 1 rate, the estimated additional contribution revenue would be £5.1 billion for the year 1999–2000.

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons made national insurance (a) class 2 contributions and (b) class 4 contributions in each of the last five fiscal years. [70429]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Million

Fiscal year	Class 2 contributors[1, 3]	Class 4 contributors[2, 3]
1991–92	2.4	2.1
1992–93	2.3	2.0
1993–94	2.4	2.0
1994–95	2.4	2.0
1995–96	2.3	2.0
1996–97	—	1.9

[1] Figures for the number of people paying Class 2 contributions are taken from the Lifetime Labour Market database which contains a 1 per cent. sample of the National Insurance Recording System taken at February 1997. Information about the total number of Class 2 contributors is not yet available for 1996–97.

[2] The figures for Class 4 contributors are based on estimates derived from an analysis of income reported to the Inland Revenue. The information is based on samples of around 25,000 self-employed individuals for each year.

[3] Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred thousand.

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of allowing national insurance class 4 contributors to be entitled to (a) Incapacity Benefit and (b) retirement pension. [70433]

Mr. Timms: Class 4 National Insurance contributions are payable in addition to Class 2 contributions on profits from self-employment above a certain level. The self-employed can already qualify for Incapacity Benefit and basic State Retirement Pension through payment of Class 2 contributions.

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the total receipts from (a) class 2 contributions and (b) class 4 contributions in each of the last five fiscal years expressed (i) in cash terms and (ii) at September 1998 prices. [70428]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Total receipts of class 2 and class 4 national insurance contributions

GB £ million

	Cash terms		September 1998 prices
Year	Class 2	Class 4	Class 2	Class 4
1993–94	652	749	757	870
1994–95	663	764	749	863
1995–96	681	803	746	879
1996–97	711	900	761	962
1997–98	720	977	745	1,011

Self-employed Persons

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many self-employed persons had earnings of (a) less than £9,000, (b) £9,000 to £12,000, (c) £12,000 to £15,000, (d) £15,000 to £18,000 and (e) over £18,000, in the last year for which figures are available. [70431]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Earnings (£)	Number of self-employed persons
Less than 9,000	1,490,000
9,000 to 12,000	390,000
12,000 to 15,000	310,000
15,000 to 18,000	290,000
Over 18,000	730,000

Notes:

1. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non response.
2. The earnings of a person who was self employed in a job/business were calculated from respondents' answers to questions on either their monthly withdrawals from bank/building society accounts for non-business purposes, or their own estimate of monthly income from their job/business.
3. Total earnings are based on the earnings of people who were self-employed in their main job, plus earnings that they might have had from any second or third jobs in which they could have been either self-employed or employees.
4. Data on the number of self-employed persons are rounded to the nearest ten thousand.

Source:

1996–97 Family Resources Survey (GB), which is the latest year for which data are available.

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on changes in the (a) cash limits and (b) running costs of his Department for 1998–99. [71249]

Mr. Timms: Subject to the Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for Class XII Vote 3 will be increased by £71,694,000 from £1,972,331,000 to £2,044,025,000.

The Estimate takes account of increased requirements of £12,700,000 (running costs) for the administration costs associated with the Winter Fuel payments, £12,000,000 (running costs) towards the cost of the new payment card system, £175,000,000 (running costs) under the end year flexibility scheme as announced by my right hon. Friend, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36 and an increase of £4,078,000 (capital) under the capital end year flexibility scheme.

Other changes result from a reduction of £6,798,000 (running costs) arising from the recalculation of JSA implementation costs offset by a corresponding increase on Class IX, Vote 3 (Education and Employment), a reduction of £102,000 (running costs) towards the cost of the National Childcare Strategy, offset by a corresponding increase on Class IX, Vote 1 (Education and Employment), a reduction of £415,000 (running costs) which represents an aggregate of a number of small transfers offset by a corresponding increase on Class VII, Vote 1 (Lord Chancellor's and Law Officers' Departments), an increase of £1,191,000 (running costs) offset by a corresponding reduction on Class XI, Vote 1, Class XIII, Vote 4 and Class XIV, Vote 4, a reduction of £310,000 (running costs) for costs relating to Decision Making and Appeals offset by a corresponding increase on Class IX Vote 3 (Education and Employment), an increase of £1,455,000 (running costs) in connection with the cost implication for DSS of the Scotland Bill offset by a corresponding reduction on Class XIII, Vote 6 (Scottish Office Administration), a reduction of £60,000 (running costs) for the expenses of the Student Grant Unit offset by a corresponding increase on Class XI, Vote 1 (Department of Health) and an increase of £334,000 (capital) as a result of a transfer from Class V, Vote 1 (Trade and Industry and Export Credit Guarantee Department). Further transfers arise from an increase in running cost cover of £196,000 for services provided to Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland), £200,000 for expenses associated with the provision of legal services provided to Department of Health and £179,000 for services provided to other Government Departments. There is also a reduction of £1,900,000 (running costs) arising from the Machinery of Government change to transfer responsibility for the Women's Unit to Cabinet Office (Class XVII, Vote 1).

There is an increase of £60,765,000 in running costs to take account of the reclassification of VAT refunds on contracted out services and an increase of £451,000 in the running cost limit due to a shortfall in running cost related receipts. Also an increase of £11,168,000 resulting from the virement from capital expenditure to running costs. Cash Limit changes of £190,195,000 arise from an increase in appropriations in aid and a change to the net running cost controlled area of the Vote.

Changes in the Welfare to Work running cost provision arise from a reduction of £70,000 for costs associated with the Lone Parent project team costs offset by a corresponding increase on Class IX, Vote 1 (Education and Employment), an increase of £1,133,000 in the administrative costs associated with measures to help people with a disability or long term illness move into or remain in work and a requirement of £413,000 for the costs relating to the programme for partners of the unemployed.

As a result of these changes the running cost limit of this Department (within the Control Total) will be increased by £204,955,000 from £2,975,679,000 to £3,180,634,000 and the running cost limit for the Welfare to Work programme (outside the Control Total) will be increased by £1,476,000 from £27,620,000 to £29,096,000.

The cash limit on Class XII, Vote 1 has been reduced by £10,350,000 from £22,200,000 to £11,850,000 as a result of a transfer of resources to Class IX, Vote 3 (Education and Employment) for costs associated with the Welfare to Work initiative for Lone Parents.

Increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of Public Expenditure.

WALES

Broadcasting

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what parts of the Representation of the People Acts will apply to the Welsh Assembly elections for the purpose of broadcasting in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [66181]

Mr. Michael: We propose to apply in the Assembly Elections Procedure Order provisions equivalent to those in section 92 of the Representation of the People Act 1983 which regulates broadcasting from outside the United Kingdom designed to influence voters in an election campaign.

We have consulted the political parties and broadcasters about including in the Order provisions equivalent to those in section 93 of the 1983 Act and have concluded that it is impracticable in the context of party list elections to apply that section. Broadcasters will therefore simply be bound to fulfil the normal requirements of fair and balanced coverage in reporting particular constituency or regional contests. The broadcasters have been working on new guidelines to cover the circumstances of the coming elections and all have agreed to respect those guidelines. The Government intend to review the situation after the elections in the light of experience during the campaign.

Section 93 of the Representation of the People Act 1983 lays down restrictions on broadcasting items about constituency campaigns during parliamentary elections; a broadcast focusing on a constituency may be vetoed by any candidate contesting that constituency. The original purpose of section 93 was to try to ensure equal treatment to candidates in the same electoral area. The broadcasters believe that section 93 is outdated (from a time when there were usually no more than 2 or 3 candidates per constituency) and inhibits their ability to provide meaningful coverage at election times. In an Assembly election, the section 93 provisions would enable any one of the list candidates in an electoral region to veto a broadcast about the campaign in that region.

Section 93 was not applied for the elections to the Northern Ireland Assembly. When we consulted on the draft Elections Procedure Order in October, we drew specific attention to the fact that we were proposing not to apply section 93 and invited comments. Only one political party responded, expressing mild concern but not outright opposition. The only other respondents were the broadcasters who were wholeheartedly in favour of non-application.

Caesarean Section Live Birth

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, for each of the last 10 years, the percentage of live births delivered by caesarean section within each health authority in Wales. [67672]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones [holding answer 28 January 1999]: The following table shows, for each Health Authority and for Wales as a whole, the percentages of caesarean sections performed for those hospitals within the Health Authority which perform caesareans. Home births, births to Welsh residents outside Wales and births at other hospitals where caesareans are not undertaken are not included in the denominator. An additional Welsh total is given which shows caesarean sections performed in hospitals in Wales as a percentage of all live births to residents of Wales. Reliable data are not available for years prior to 1993.

Per cent. of births delivered by caesarean section

Health authority	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Gwent[1]	14.9	16.8	17.7	18.2	20.5
Bro Taf[1]	17.5	16.4	17.6	19.1	20.0
Dyfed Powys[1]	14.9	15.1	15.1	16.2	17.1
North Wales[1]	17.9	19.7	18.5	18.7	17.7
Morgannwg[1]	13.6	14.3	15.5	17.3	18.1
Wales[1]	16.0	16.6	17.1	18.1	18.9
Wales[2]	15.1	15.8	16.2	17.4	18.1

[1] Caesarean sections performed in hospitals which perform caesarean sections as a percentage of births that took place within those hospitals

[2] Caesarean sections performed in hospitals in Wales as a percentage of live births to residents of Wales

Sources:

All Wales Perinatal Survey and Confidential Enquiry into Stillbirths and Deaths in Infancy

Office for National Statistics (live births to residents of Wales)

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hip replacement operations were performed in Wales in 1998; and if he will make a statement. [69536]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Data for 1998 are not yet complete. There were 1,925 primary hip replacements performed in Wales in 1997.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Supernurses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on supernurses. [69546]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Prime Minister has asked the Secretary of State for Health to consider, in conjunction with the nursing profession, the introduction of nurse consultants. The Welsh Office are involved with the Department of Health and the profession in developing detailed proposals.

Following the transfer of power, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to fund by levy the Food Standards Agency from chain stores or stores of over 10,000 square feet; and if he will make a statement. [69535]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Government's proposals for a levy scheme to fund the costs of the Food Standards Agency, including details of which premises would be required to pay, were published for consultation on 27 January. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the proportion of his Department's current budget which will be transferred to the Food Standards Agency under the proposed Food Standards Bill. [69591]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Current expenditure by the Welsh Office in relation to food safety (excluding that included in the local government revenue settlement) amounts to around £0.5 million per annum.

Following the transfer of powers, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Cataract Operations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cataract operations were carried out in 1998 in north-east Wales; and if he will make a statement. [69541]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Data for 1998 are not yet complete. There were 2,833 cataract operations performed in hospitals situated in north-east Wales (Conwy, Denbighshire, Flintshire and Wrexham Unitary Authorities) during 1997.

Following the transfer of powers this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Trainee Nurses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many trainee nurses there are in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [69548]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There were 2,346 people training as nurses in Wales at 30 November 1998 of which 663 are due to qualify in 1999. In addition a further 999 students will begin nurse training in 1999.

Student nurse numbers currently meet NHS Trusts' requirements for newly qualified recruits as identified in the Annual Workforce Plans. There are no recruitment problems to nurse training courses in Wales.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Radioactive Discharges (Sellafield)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the potential risks to the Welsh coast from (a) radioactive discharges from Sellafield and (b) the transport of nuclear materials to and from Sellafield through the Irish Sea. [69602]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food monitors a range of food, sediment and biota samples, on behalf of my right hon. Friend, to assess radiation levels and the radiological dose to those sections of the population most exposed on account of their diet or lifestyle. The Environment Agency also carries out monitoring of the radiation levels to assess public exposure from non-food pathways. MAFF and the Agency both publish annual reports on these monitoring programmes.

Government-funded research projects, during the past eight years, have assessed the effects of sea-spray aerosol in North Wales and of exposure to artificial radionuclides on marshland in the Dee Estuary. In addition, my right hon. Friend is currently funding the development of a mobile gamma radiation monitor in North Wales.

The International Maritime Organisation's "Code for the Safe Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-Level Radioactive Wastes in Flasks on board Ships" requires that vessels used to transport nuclear material have high standards of safety. This serves to protect any coastal areas past which they might sail. While on board ship, nuclear material is contained in packages which have been approved by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions as meeting relevant national and international regulations.

Monitoring results confirm that radiation levels on the Welsh coast are a very small fraction of the exposure limits recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection.

In future, the monitoring of radiation and assessment of dose levels will be matters for the National Assembly. The regulation of movements by sea will not be transferred to the Assembly.

Welsh Assembly (Food Standards Legislation)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if under the proposed food standards legislation, the Welsh Assembly will have the powers to ban (a) irradiated foodstuffs and (b) food using genetically modified organisms from sale in Wales. [69592]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Welsh Assembly will have powers over food safety in Wales and will therefore have powers to make and amend secondary legislation relating to irradiated and genetically modified food. The Assembly's actions in respect of food safety will be subject to any obligations imposed upon the UK by EC legislation.

Acheson Report

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to implement the recommendations of the report of the independent inquiry under Sir Donald Acheson into inequalities in health. [69589]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The recommendations are being considered as part of the Government's health strategy for England, on which a White Paper will be published soon. Although the report focused on inequalities in England, I am also considering the relevance of the recommendations to the public health strategy for Wales.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the working conditions of the Ambulance Service in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [69534]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The working conditions for the ambulance services in Wales are a matter for the Welsh Ambulance Services NHS Trust. The Trust has recently completed a review of its estate and is consulting trade unions on a package to standardise the pay and conditions of service for staff across Wales. In addition, the Trust is developing a programme for replacing uniforms for all operational staff and has a vehicle replacement programme in place.

Following the transfer of powers, overall responsibility for the Health Service will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Special Advisers

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the names of the special advisers in his Department and (b) the issues in which they specialise; and if he will set out the level to which they have been security cleared. [70045]

Mr. Michael: The two Special Advisers within my Department are Gareth Williams and Julie Crowley. They advise me on the full range of issues for which I am responsible. They have been subject to the usual security clearance arrangements.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to each of the Government's public consultations. [69771]

Mr. Michael: My Department routinely publishes its collation and assessment of responses to public consultations where it is appropriate to do so across a wide range of responsibilities.

ME

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the specialist units which provide services to chronic fatigue syndrome/ME patients in Wales. [70165]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: All district general hospitals will provide specialist secondary care assessment of such cases as recommended by the Report of the Joint Working Group of the Royal Colleges of Physicians, Psychiatrists and General Practitioners in October 1996. Wales also has one tertiary clinic in the University of Wales which will accept referrals for specific cases.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

General Practitioners

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioners were registered in Wales on 1 October 1998. [70058]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The latest available data relate to 1 October 1997 at which time there were 1,874 general medical practitioners in Wales, of which 1,753 were unrestricted principals. Data relating to 1 October 1998 will be available in the spring of this year and will be published by the NHS Executive in 'General Medical Services Statistics', a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Private Patients

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many private patients received non-urgent treatment in NHS hospitals in Wales in (a) the last six weeks, (b) the last three months and (c) the last six months. [69677]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on the number of private patients who were admitted, as in-patients or day cases, for non-urgent treatment in NHS hospitals in Wales is given in the following table:

	Number
6 weeks to 31 December 1998	380
3 months to 31 December 1998	919
6 months to 31 December 1998	1,720

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69939]

Mr. Michael: (a) The Local Government Boundary Commission (LGBC) publishes the minutes of its AGM. The Environment Agency Advisory Committee for Wales (EAACW) produces a summary of main issues in its Annual Report. The Welsh Committee for Professional Development of Pharmacy (WCPDP); the Welsh Dental Committee (WDC); the Welsh Medical Committee (WMC); the Welsh Nursing and Midwifery Committee (WNMC); the Welsh Optical Committee (WOC); the Welsh Pharmaceutical Committee (WPC); and the Welsh

Scientific Advisory Committee (WSAC) provide extracts from any minutes on request, plan to publish minutes in a newsletter and are investigating the use of a website. In addition the Social Services Inspectorate for Wales: Inspection Advisory Group (SSIW:AIG) is currently considering how best to make its minutes publicly available. This is not a statutory requirement;

(b) LGBC and the Library and Information Services Council (Wales) (LISC(W)) both publish the agendas of their AGMs. This is not a statutory requirement;

(c) all have, or are in the process of introducing, a Code of Practice for Board members, which requires the NDPB to maintain a register of members' interests which is open to the public. This is not a statutory requirement.

Following the transfer of powers, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. [69915]

Mr. Michael: Cardiff Bay Development Corporation (CBDC); the Countryside Council for Wales (CCW); the Qualifications, Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales (ACCAC); the Further Education Funding Council for Wales (FEFCW); the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales (HEFCW); the Wales Tourist Board (WTB); the Welsh Development Agency (WDA); the Welsh Language Board (WLB); the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (WNB): and the agricultural wages committees all have a statutory base. All other executive NDPBs have been established by Royal Charter or Royal Warrant.

The Arts Council of Wales; CBDC; CCW; the Sports Council for Wales; WTB; WLB; and the agricultural wages committees are all open to the scrutiny of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration (PCA). The Government of Wales Act establishes a new office of Welsh Administration Ombudsman whose jurisdiction will include all the bodies listed above other than the agricultural wages committees who will continue to be subject to the PCA's jurisdiction unless and until the Assembly decides otherwise and a transfer is effected by order. The Act also allows for the National Assembly to add more bodies to the list of those who will be within the Welsh Ombudsman's jurisdiction.

Following the transfer of powers, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69988]

Mr. Michael: (a) The Countryside Council for Wales (CCW); Welsh Language Board (WLB); the Sports Council for Wales (SCW); the Welsh Development Agency (WDA); and the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (WNB) admit the public to all Board meetings. This is not a statutory requirement.

(b) All except the agricultural wages committees hold, or are making arrangements to hold, meetings with the public, press and customers. This is not a statutory requirement.

(c) The Qualifications, Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales (ACCAC); ACW; Cardiff Bay Development Corporation (CBDC); the Further Education Funding Council for Wales (FEFCW); the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales (HEFCW); the National Museums and Galleries of Wales (NMGW); SCW; WDA; and WNB. This is a statutory requirement for ACCAC, FEFCW, HEFCW, and the WDA; for the NMGW it is a requirement of its Royal Charter.

(d) All except the agricultural wages committees have an appeal or complaints procedure in place. It is not a statutory requirement.

It is now policy to encourage such bodies in Wales to be as open as possible in their work and to bear in mind that following the transfer of powers, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69957]

Mr. Michael: (a) The Arts Council of Wales (ACW); Cardiff Bay Development Corporation (CBDC); the Countryside Council for Wales (CCW); the Further Education Funding Council for Wales (FEFCW); the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales (HEFCW); the National Museums and Galleries of Wales (NMGW); the Sports Council for Wales (SCW); the Wales Tourist Board (WTB); the Welsh Language Board (WLB); and the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (WNB) all publish minutes or summary reports which are made available in a number of ways, for example, through newsletters, websites or press releases. The Qualifications, Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales (ACCAC) and the Welsh Development Agency (WDA) have plans to issue summary reports in the near future. The publication of minutes is not a statutory requirement.

(b) ACW; CCW; National Library of Wales (NLW); SCW; WLB; and WNB. Publication of the agendas and documents is not a statutory requirement.

(c) All executive NDPBs have a Code of Practice for Board members, which includes the requirement to maintain a register of members' interests which is open to the public. This is not a statutory requirement.

Following the transfer of powers, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Welsh Office (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69970]

Mr. Michael: (a) There is no statutory requirement for any of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Welsh Office to admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and I am advised that none of them do so.

(b) The Library and Information Services Council (Wales) (LISC(W)) and the Local Government Boundary Commission (LGBC) already hold public meetings. The Welsh Committee for Professional Development of Pharmacy (WCPDP); the Welsh Dental Committee (WDC); the Welsh Medical Committee (WMC); the Welsh Nursing and Midwifery Committee (WNMC); the Welsh Optical Committee (WOC): the Welsh Pharmaceutical Committee (WPC); and the Welsh Scientific Advisory Committee (WSAC) plan to hold an AGM from 1999 onwards. This is not a statutory requirement.

(c) The Environment Agency Advisory Committee for Wales (EAACW) and the Social Services Inspectorate for Wales: Inspection Advisory Group (SSIW:IAG). This is not a statutory requirement.

Following the transfer of powers, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Welsh Police Forces (Funding)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent consultations there have been with the Welsh Local Government Association with regard to the funding of Welsh police forces for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [70607]

Mr. Michael: The Welsh Local Government Association does not represent police authorities in Wales, consultation on the funding of police forces in England and Wales is a matter between the Home Office and the Association of Police Authorities, but I have recently responded positively to points raised by Welsh Police Authorities about technical calculations on the Welsh Office contribution to their financing.

Standard Spending Assessment

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what agreement was reached with the Welsh Local Government Association via the Consultative Council on the standard spending assessment formula for 1998–99 and 1999–2000; [70606]

(2) when he agreed with the Welsh Local Government Association not to update the standard spending assessment formula for 1999–2000; what consultations were entered into prior to such agreement; and if he will make a statement. [70605]

Mr. Michael: At a meeting of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 27 October 1997 the Association agreed the SSA formula for 1998–99 and agreed that it would be rolled forward for 1999–2000 other than to reflect data changes. Accordingly the formula for 1999–2000, which was agreed at the Consultative Council on 13 November 1998, has remained unchanged other than to take account of data changes. I have commissioned an independent review of the formula in conjunction with the WLGA and following the transfer of powers, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent consultations there have been with the Welsh Local Government Association with regard to standard spending assessment. [70608]

Mr. Michael: There is regular contract between my officials and the WLGA on issues regarding local government finance in Wales. I met the Association's representatives in the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 15 December 1998, as part of the statutory consultation on the provisional local government revenue settlement.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes are proposed in the allocation of the capital charges element of standard spending assessment between local government and the police authorities in Wales for 1999–2000. [70609]

Mr. Michael: I have revised the methodology for calculating capital charges following representations made by Police Authorities in Wales when it became clear that the application of a common formula had resulted in a disproportionate and unintended impact on the Welsh Office share of police finances. As a result of the changes:

the formula now ignores interest receipts in the capital charges model for both police authorities and local authorities in Wales; for the police, the allowance for Capital Expenditure from the Revenue Account (CERA) has been removed. CERA was removed for councils in 1998–99, and this change means that both tiers are being treated equally; for the police, the assumption about repayment of loan debt principle has been reduced from 7 per cent. to 4 per cent. for 1999–2000. Again this means that both tiers are being treated equally.

Local Government Finance Settlement 1999–2000

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received from the leader of the Welsh Local government Association on the question of the local government finance settlement 1999–2000. [70610]

Mr. Michael: I received a letter from the leader of the Welsh Local Government Association, Councillor Harry Jones CBE, on 4 February 1999. The letter covered the changes between the provisional and final local government revenue settlement in particular the changes to the way capital charges are treated in the formula. I have replied explaining my decision to Councillor Jones and to the WLGA.

Social Housing (Heating)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to accelerate the provision of central heating in older social housing in Wales. [70919]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: It is for individual local authorities to decide on the priority they give to providing central heating from their housing capital programmes.

Following the transfer of powers, responsibilities in relation to Housing will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he is proposing to make to (a) voted and (b) non-voted cash limits for his Department and the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales for the current financial year. [71256]

Mr. Michael: Subject to Parliament's approval of the related Supplementary Estimates, I propose the following changes.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 1 will be increased by £14,737,000 from £42,735,000 to £57,472,000 as result of an increase in the Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance Scheme announced as part of the Farmers Package on 16 November 1998.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 2 will be increased by £12,148,000 from £839,776,000 to £851,924,000. This increase results mainly from (a) an increase in the grant in aid of the Welsh Development Agency of £5,161,000 to compensate for receipts which will now be realised during 1999–2000 (b) an increase in the provision for Regional Selective Assistance of £8,775,000 to provide for the latest forecast of claims to be paid this year; (c) the take up of £1,962,000 to fund the Coalfields Regeneration Trust; and (d) a reduction in the Training budgets of £4,000,000 due to lower than expected demand for training courses funded out of Welsh Office budgets.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 3 will be increased by £55,494,000 from £414,195,000 to £469,689,000. This increase results mainly from (a) an increase in the Central Government Roads programme of £10,000,000 to fund essential maintenance work (b) a transfer of provision for Housing of £51,943,000 from non-cash limited budgets to cash limited provision to effect the merger of Tai Cymru with the Welsh Office from 1 November 1998 (this is offset by a reduction in the non-voted cash limit for Tai Cymru); (c) an increase of £2,100,000 for the North Wales Child Abuse Inquiry; (d) an additional £1,800,000 for the Mental Handicap Strategy (e) £1,000,000 for the Looked After Children Development Fund (f) an increase of £300,000 in the grant in aid for the Wales Tourist Board for additional marketing (f) a reduction of £7,500,000 in the grant in aid for Cardiff Bay Development Corporation because of slippage on the Cardiff Bay Barrage project (g) a reduction of £3,500,000 in the provision for Transport Grant because of slippage on approved projects and (h) a reduction of £1,400,000 in this year's provision for the costs associated with Devolution.

The running costs limit on class XIV, vote 3 will be increased by £2,507,000 from £79,784,000 to £82,291,100 as a result of the merger of Tai Cymru and costs associated with the dissolution of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 4 will be increased by £12,705,000 from £2,116,930,000 to £2,129,635,000 mainly as a result of the Winter Emergencies money for the National Health Service announced in November and a transfer of £211,000 from class XI, vote 1 in respect of Professions Allied to Medicine. The external financing limit for NHS Trusts will be reduced by £3,006,000 from £52,676,000 to £49,670,000.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 6 will be increased by £1,125,000 from £7,768,000 to £8,893,000 as a result of payments due this year for VAT.

There will be an increase in the non-voted local authority capital cash limit (WO/LACAP) of £4,200,000 from £373,444,000 to £377,644,000 to allow for an increase in the provision for Housing Renovation Grants.

The non-voted housing cash limit WO/TC has been wound-up as a result of the merger of Tai Cymru with the Welsh Office on 1 November 1998. The remaining provision has been transferred to the cash limit on class XIV, vote 3.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charges to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the overall level of planned public expenditure.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70407]

Mr. Michael: The items sold during 1997–98 by the Welsh Office and Cadw, its sole Executive Agency, from those listed in the National Asset Register were:

	£000
Welsh Office
Land Rover (Plant and Machinery)	2
Cadw
Cottage (Land and Buildings)	39
Miscellaneous mowers and dumpers (Plant and Machinery)	5
Total cash raised (Welsh Office and Cadw)	46

The Welsh Office has responsibility for over 50 associated public bodies included in the National Asset Register. The detailed information sought is not held centrally by the Department and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nursery Provision

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the annual cost of providing nursery provision in Wales for all three year olds whose parents want it, over and above the cost of the Government meeting its own target in this respect. [70246]

Mr. Hain: Over half of three year olds in Wales receive free, at least part-time, education in the maintained sector. This provision is at the discretion of individual local authorities and is funded from their available resources, essentially the annual local government revenue settlement.

The question of provision for all three year olds will be a matter for the National Assembly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BSkyB/Manchester United

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which papers relating to BSkyB's takeover of Manchester United that were brought to his predecessor's attention and details of the meetings he attended with either BSkyB or Manchester United management will be published. [65643]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1999]: My predecessor saw relevant papers. The policy of successive Secretaries of State has been not to hold meetings with interested parties on merger cases while matters are under consideration by the Director General of Fair Trading or the Secretary of State. My predecessor did not attend any meetings with either BSkyB or Manchester United management.

Export Licences

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the export licences granted to Alvis Vehicles Limited or Alvis subsidiary companies for the export of Saracen and Saladin armoured vehicles to Indonesia; [68327]

(2) if he will list the export licences granted to Alvis for the transfer of ammunition, machine guns and larger calibre guns to Indonesia since 1988. [68328]

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list the (a) open individual export licences which have been given to Alvis for the export of armoured vehicles to (i) Indonesia, (ii) Kenya, (iii) Belarus, (iv) Colombia, (v) Turkey, (vi) Sri Lanka, (vii) Malaysia, (viii) Singapore and (ix) Nigeria and (b) equipment that has been exported under such licences, since 1988; [68779]

(2) if he will list the export licences granted to (a) Alvis and (b) GKL Group for the transfer of (i) ammunition, (ii) machine guns and (iii) larger calibre guns to Indonesia since 1988; [68782]

(3) if he will list the licences granted for (a) Alvis and (b) GKL Group for the export of (i) armoured vehicles, (ii) components and (iii) weapons to Singapore since 1988; [68781]

(4) if he will list the licences granted to Alvis Vehicles Ltd. or Alvis's subsidiary companies for (a) the export of Saracen and Saladin armoured vehicles and (b) the supply of upgrade packages for Saracen and Saladin armoured vehicles to Indonesia since 1988. [68792]

Dr. Howells: Inquiries are being made under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Where confidential information is involved, the parties concerned may be asked if they consent to its disclosure, and this can take some time. I will write to my hon. Friends as soon as possible, and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Intellectual Property Rights

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed EC copyright directive on rights of intellectual property in this country. [70112]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The draft copyright Directive seeks to harmonise basic rights and exceptions to rights, and to implement a number of international obligations resulting from two new treaties in the copyright field (World Intellectual Property Organisation). United Kingdom copyright law, the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, already meets most of the requirements of the draft Directive and the new treaties, but some amendments will be needed. In particular, changes to UK law would be necessary to comply with the regime of compulsory and permitted exceptions in Article 5 of the Directive. Amendments would also be needed to give performers exclusive rights to control "on-demand" transmissions of recordings of their performances, to cater for the fact that protection of technical systems in Article 6 extends beyond what is currently provided in UK law, and to provide for the protection of electronic rights management information as set out in Article 7 of the draft Directive.

Electricity and Gas Industries

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to protect consumers from unduly-aggressive doorstep sales techniques on behalf of utilities companies following deregulation of the domestic electricity and gas markets. [69676]

Dr. Howells: Misleading and over-aggressive doorstep selling practices are unacceptable. In relation to the gas and electricity markets, I have made my concerns clear to the Regulators and the industry on numerous occasions. In both sectors licence conditions have been put in place to help regulate the doorstep selling and marketing activities of gas and electricity suppliers. Also, the Association of Energy Suppliers have modified their code of practice so that members' sales representatives calling on the doorstep provide to consumers, on request, clear written information in relation to prices.

In addition, I have recently strengthened the Regulations governing doorstep selling, to improve the protection for vulnerable consumers. The amended Regulations came into force on 31 December 1998.

These give consumers greater protection because consumers who agree to a trader visiting following an unsolicited doorstep selling approach retain the right to cancel the contract within seven days. In addition, it is now a criminal offence for a trader not to give the consumer written notice of their right to cancel, (subject to exceptions, including where the agreement is cancellable under the Consumer Credit Act 1974).

I will shortly launch an information campaign informing consumers of their rights and warning them about the practices of unscrupulous doorstep sellers.

Arms Export Licences

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the value of the order for arms exports is recorded at the time when licences are applied for; and if the value is shown on the licences. [70146]

Dr. Howells: Applicants for standard individual export licences are required to record on the application form the value of the goods for which a licence is sought; this information is recorded on ECO's computer databases.

However, where a licence is issued, the value of the goods covered by that licence may be less than the value of the goods covered by the original application. Exporters sometimes mistakenly apply for a licence to export goods for which no licence is required. In addition, goods are sometimes withdrawn from the coverage of an application during the licensing process, for example at the exporter's request or the value may change during the time taken to process the application because of changes in exchange rates. However, as it would in any case be misleading (because some licences are used only in part or not at all), the value of the goods licensed for export by each individual licence is not recorded on ECO's computer databases, although it is shown on the licence itself. HMC&E is responsible for the compilation of statistics on UK trade in goods.

Open licences allow the exporters concerned to make multiple shipments of the specified goods to the specified destinations in accordance with the licence conditions. While such licences do not normally impose any limit on the volume of exports that may be made under the licence, exporters are required as a condition of the licence to maintain records of all controlled exports for a minimum of three or four years depending on the goods. While these records may be examined by compliance officers in the course of routine compliance visits, the Export Control Organisation does not compile any central record.

Exports (Republic of Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (a) the 10 companies which exported most, by volume, from Great Britain to the Republic of Ireland and (b) the 10 companies which exported most, by volume, from the Republic of Ireland to Great Britain, in the last financial year for which figures are available. [69709]

Mr. Wilson: The information requested is not available from any official sources. It is unlikely to be available from any other source.

Currency and Interest Rate Revaluation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the impact on industrial costs resulting from (a) a 1 per cent. revaluation of the pound and (b) a 1 per cent. increase in interest rates. [69812]

Mr. Byers: The tough and decisive action taken by the Government on macroeconomic policy, including giving the Bank of England independence, will bring benefits to industry through long-term stability, in sharp contrast to the damaging cycle of boom and bust that cost industry so dear under the last Government.

Export Licence Applications

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the average times taken by other EU countries to process export licence applications to (a) Iran and (b) other countries. [70061]

Dr. Howells: The time taken by other member states to process export licence applications is a matter for them. The Government are committed to providing an efficient service to all applicants for export licences, irrespective of the destination.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the (a) average time taken and (b) target time in which to determine export licence applications for (1) Iran and (2) other countries in the last year for which figures are available. [70064]

Dr. Howells: Licences to export arms and other goods controlled for strategic reasons are issued by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, acting through the DTI's Export Control Organisation. All relevant individual licence applications are circulated by DTI to other Government Departments with an interest, as determined by them in line with their policy responsibilities. These include the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department for International Development.

While the average length of time taken to process export licence applications is not recorded, performance is measured against two aims:

> to provide a substantive response to an application for a standard individual export licence (SIEL) within 20 working days of receipt for applications circulated to other Government Departments according to their policy requirements; and.
>
> for non-circulated cases, to provide such a response within 10 working days.

In each case, full documentation in support of the application must be provided by the applicant at the outset for these targets to apply. The performance measures also apply to written rating inquiries, but they do not apply to applications for Open Individual Export Licences (due to wide variations between goods and country coverage of such licences). The performance measures apply to all SIEL applications, irrespective of the destination, other than those concerning Iran or exports which are subject to control solely because of United Nations Sanctions.

Iran (Exports)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what goods UK firms require an export licence for exports to Iran. [70066]

Dr. Howells: The export controls administered by my Department are set out in The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended, The Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Regulations 1996, as amended and Council Regulation (EC) 3381–94 and related Council Decision 94/942/CFSP, as amended.

All the goods covered by these controls require a licence for export to Iran except aircraft simulators and related software and technology, where the control is limited to Libya (see entries 9A993, 9D993 and 9E993 in Schedule 2 to the 1996 Regulations).

The Government's current policy with respect to Iran was set out in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd) to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. King) on 28 January 1998, Official Report, columns 273–74.

Export Licence Inquiry Forms

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many export licence inquiry forms his Department has received in each of the last three years for (a) Iran and (b) other countries. [70062]

Dr. Howells: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. Exporters' written rating inquiries do not always specify the intended destination nor is this necessary as advice is given with respect to all relevant destinations and controls. The total numbers of such inquiries received in each of the last three years and the numbers that specified Iran as the only destination are as follows:

Year	Iran	Total
1996	216	1,712
1997	278	2,292
1998	311	2,427

Secondment of Officials

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (a) the names of officials in his Department who are currently on secondment from private companies, (b) the companies by which they are employed and (c) their current responsibilities. [70044]

Dr. Howells: There are at present 135 individuals on secondment from private companies into the DTI. This figure includes Headquarters and Agencies Interchange but not Government Office Interchange as responsibility has been delegated.

Details of precise responsibilities are not held centrally but the following list shows the Directorates within which the secondees work.

DTI directorate	Title	Name	Seconding company
British National Space Centre	Mr.	Parker	Matra Marconi Space
Chemicals and Biotechnology	Mr.	Bartholomew	Unilever
Chemicals and Biotechnology	Dr.	Patel	Engineering & Physical Sciences Research Council
Communications and Information Industries	Mr.	Marshall	British Telecom
Communications and Information Industries	Mr.	Reid	ICL
Communications and Information Industries	Mr.	Baker	Ericsson Ltd.
Communications and Information Industries	Mr.	Baxter	BT plc
Company Law and Investigations	Mr.	Steadman	Lee & Allen Consulting Plc
Company Law and Investigations	Miss	Gibbins	Pricewaterhouse Coopers
Company Law and Investigations	Mr.	Marks	Silver Altman
Engineering Industries	Mr.	Jordan	Rover Group Ltd.
Engineering Industries	Mr.	Hyatt	Lockstair Ltd.
Engineering Industries	Mr.	Armitage	GKN Westland Helicopters
Export Promotion	Mr.	Wilson	Cable & Wireless plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Marsh	Ove Arup & Partners
Export Promotion	Mr.	Taylor	Malcolm Hoyle Carpets Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Pape	Pirelli Cables Limited
Export Promotion	Mr.	Cohen	The British-Israel Chamber of Commerce
Export Promotion	Mr.	Simmons	Rover Group Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Burton	Jones Cranes Limited
Export Promotion	Mr.	Fuga	The Export Association
Export Promotion	Mr.	Banfield	Crosrol Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Burnham	North Cape (Scotland) Limited
Export Promotion	Mr.	Webber	Boxhome Limited
Export Promotion	Mr.	Blackwood	John Laing International Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Rathwell	Lancashire Enterprises plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Jordan	Bank of Ireland
Export Promotion	Mr.	Khosla	Ove Arup & Partners
Export Promotion	Ms	Fitzgerald	Russo-British Chamber of Commerce
Export Promotion	Mr.	Bayne	John Laing International Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Lincoln	East European Trade Council
Export Promotion	Mr.	Evans	The Institute of Export
Export Promotion	Mr.	Scott	Prince Associates
Export Promotion	Mr.	Hall	Drinks Marketing Consortium
Export Promotion	Mr.	Brennan	British Aerospace plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Suleiman MBE	General Traffic Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	McClafferty	European Gas Turbines (GEC Alstrom)
Export Promotion	Mr.	Pearson	Morris Singer Limited
Export Promotion	Mr.	Johnson	NHS Supplies
Export Promotion	Mr.	Rosser	Hyder plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Smeaton	Greenwich NatWest Employment Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	d'Aronville	Toyoboshi UK Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Slawson	British Nuclear Fuels
Export Promotion	Mr.	Watford	Barclays Bank plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Roberts	Frank Roberts & Sons Ltd.
Export Promotion	Ms	Fairbanks	The Export Association
Export Promotion	Mr.	Chislett	Thomas Chislett
Export Promotion	Mr.	Turley	Moody Cashmere Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Sproston	LG Mouchel & Partners
Export Promotion	Mr.	Salmon	Guiness Brewing Worldwide Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Steer	Etrl Europe Ltd.
Export Promotion	Miss	Forbes	General Accident
Export Promotion	Mr.	Williams	Beaumont Colson Ltd.
Export Promotion	Dr.	Sabberwal	G K Communications Group Ltd.

DTI directorate	Title	Name	Seconding company
Export Promotion	Miss	Dorothy	PWR (Electrical Services) Limited
Export Promotion	Mr.	Fry	British American Tobacco Company (Holdings) Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Cooke	Hong Kong & Shanghai Banking Corporation Holdings
Export Promotion	Mr.	Kershaw	ACO Technologies plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Lidderdale	Crown Agents for Oversea Governments & Administrat
Export Promotion	Ms	Lynch	ICI Chemicals & Polymers Ltd.
Export Promotion	Miss	Moore	Natural Animal Feeds Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Eadie	Masters International (UK) Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Gazeley	Epinet Communications plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Sharp	GEC Marconi Avionics Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Parke	Cookstown Enterprise Centre Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Bunting	Sonic Communications (International) Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Thorning	Unipart International
Export Promotion	Mr.	Jones	Eschmann Bros & Walsh Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Simpson	Russo-British Chamber of Commerce
Export Promotion	Mrs.	Ritchie	The Hosiery Manufacturing Co Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Haymes	The British Petroleum Company plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Rodwell	British Marine Equipment Council Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Layden	The Hosiery Manufacturing Co Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Reid	Matheson & Co Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Wood	The British Petroleum Company plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Gorin	Ferryfast Produce Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Holstein	E A Technology Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Malpass	Knight Piesold Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mr.	Hooper	East European Trade Council
Export Promotion	Mr.	Robinski	Polish Social and Cultural Association Ltd.
Export Promotion	Mrs.	Brett	Abercairn of Scotland
Export Promotion	Mr.	Speirs	Barclays Bank plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Smith	Aspen Waite Chartered Accountants
Export Promotion	Mr.	Moore	East European Trade Council
Export Promotion	Mr.	MacKeown	World Trade Development Ltd
Export Promotion	Mr.	Hutchinson	Gardenex
Export Promotion	Ms	Laker	Independent Power Corporation plc
Export Promotion	Mr.	Woods	Rover Group
Infrastructure And Energy Projects	Mr.	McFadzean	Enterprise Ayrshire
Infrastructure And Energy Projects	Mr.	Smith	British Aerospace Aviation
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Aitken	ICL
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Bahu	Oxis Partnership/Humana
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Beacham	John Beacham Ltd.
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Brown	Nuclear Electric
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Cameron	Cameron and Cameron Best Practice
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Capewell	Northern Quest Ltd.
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Crouch	NCL Ltd.
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Dawson	D A Dawson & Associates
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Duggan	Duggan Creative
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Duncan	Shawnee Associates Ltd.
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Green	Queue Management Systems Ltd.
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Hoad	Nat West Bank plc
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Lever	Zeneca
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Maude	Reginald Maude Ltd.
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Mocroft	QuestBest Ltd.
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Mucci	University of Southampton
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Orme	Countrywide Porter Novelli
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Pratt	Sunalex
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Price	Bede
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Print	Balfour Beatty
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Revitt	Anglian Water
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Telling	Artel Rubber Company
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Tubbs	Innovamantex
Innovation Unit	Mr.	Ward	Digby Associates
Innovation Unit	Ms	Wedgwood	University of Sheffield
Invest In Britain Bureau	Ms	Blundell	BT International Business
Invest In Britain Bureau	Miss	Bartlett	Arthur Andersen
Invest In Britain Bureau	Mr.	O'Sullivan	British Telecom plc
Invest In Britain Bureau	Ms.	Matsuoka	British Consulate—General Osaka
Low Pay Commission Secretariat	Mr.	White	University of Greenwich Business Faculty
Nuclear Industries	Mrs.	Macdonald	AWE Plc
Nuclear Industries	Mr.	Foyle	British Nuclear Fuels plc
Office Of Science and Technology	Dr.	Cooksley	Glaxo Wellcome Research & Development
Office Of Science and Technology	Mr.	Rogers	AEA Technology plc
Office Of Science and Technology	Miss	Murphy	ICI Group
Office Of Science and Technology	Dr.	Taylor	Hewlett-Packard Ltd.
Oil and Gas	Mr.	Morgan	FINA plc
Regional Assistance	Mrs.	Culshaw	Pricewaterhouse Coopers

DTI directorate	Title	Name	Seconding company
Regional Assistance	Mr.	Sharman	Deloitte & Touche
Regional Assistance	Mr.	Robins	Hambros Bank Ltd.
SITPRO	Mr.	Doran	CERN
Small and Medium Enterprise Policy	Mr.	Dunn	Grant Thornton
The Insolvency Service	Mr.	Wright	Kidsons Impey
The Insolvency Service	Miss	Quinney	Ernst & Young Services Ltd.
Utilities Review Team	Mr.	Briggs	Herbert Smith

Sellafield

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 15 December 1998, Official Report, column 453, on Sellafield, if the relevant emergency planning officers were informed of the two shipments of mixed oxide fuel. [69765]

Mr. Battle: The relevant Home Office Chief Constables, rather than relevant Local Authority emergency planning officers, are given advance notification of such shipments. This is because it is for the police to initiate and take charge of the implementation of well rehearsed emergency plans in the unlikely event of any safety incident involving nuclear material.

Consequently, only key nuclear operations personnel, the police and appropriate security authorities need to be or are informed of such movements in advance.

Tacis Programme

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking in response to the recent representations from the Association of Consulting Engineers on the payment of invoices from United Kingdom companies under the EU Tacis Programme. [70092]

Mr. Wills: We share the concerns over the late payment of invoices from United Kingdom companies under the EU Tacis programme. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development on 10 February 1999, Official Report, columns 280–81.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on minimum levels of redundancy payments. [68906]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Under the Employment Rights Act 1996, an employer is obliged to pay only the statutory minimum redundancy payment to employees. This is based on age, length of service and rate of pay and is subject to a maximum (currently £220 per week).

The amount of any redundancy payment over and above the statutory minimum is a matter between the employer and the employees, or their representatives. However, the Government hope that employees would adopt a consistent approach when determining redundancy payments regardless of where the employees are situated.

Environmental Standards

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose the establishment of common environmental standards among the G8 nations in respect of these countries' export credit agencies. [69525]

Mr. Wilson: At their meeting in May 1998, G8 Foreign Ministers concluded, inter alia, that

> "building on efforts in the OECD on taking environmental factors into account when providing official export credits, we encourage further work by the OECD to this end and ask for a report back next year".

The UK will continue to support the OECD initiative, including through the 1999 G8 process.

Export Credits Guarantees

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the export credits guarantees and insurance agreements reached with British firms in each year since 1995–96. [69578]

Mr. Wilson: The Export Credits Guarantee Department has issued 653 guarantees in support of exports of capital goods and services since 1995–96 as follows:-

Date	Number
1995–96	171
1996–97	162
1997–98	199
1998–99[1]	121

[1] to 31 December

Details of many of these guarantees can be found in ECGD's Annual Report and Trading Accounts for each of the years in question, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

ECGD does not report individual guarantees without consent of the firms concerned and, in view of the number of guarantees involved, disproportionate cost would be involved in obtaining this.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what environmental and sustainable development safeguards are employed in granting export credit guarantees and insurance to British exporters; if he will place the relevant documents in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [69523]

Mr. Wilson: Consistent with the Government's policy on the environment, the Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) is supporting multilateral moves in the OECD to establish common principles, to be adopted by Export Credit Agencies, to take account of environmental factors in export credits.

ECGD takes account of environmental factors, particularly in its assessment of large project finance cases, and is undertaking further work, in consultation with environmental consultants and its customers, to determine the best means of further enhancing its policy and procedures, and of raising the awareness of UK exporters, investors and overseas buyers on its approach to environmental issues. Relevant documents will be placed in the Library of the House when this process is complete.

It would be premature for me to make a statement at this point in time.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what environmental and social impact studies have been required by the Export Credit Guarantee Department in respect of the granting of export credit insurance to Balfour Beatty arising from that company's involvement in the Ilisu Dam project in Turkey. [69524]

Mr. Wilson: ECGD is working with a number of other Export Credit agencies (ECAs) on this project.

The Swiss ECA (ERG) supporting the Swiss led contracting consortium for the Ilisu Hydro Electric project, commissioned an expert review of the full Environmental Impact Assessment study produced by Hydro Concepts Engineering, Switzerland in March 1998. This review was made available to the other participating ECAs, including ECGD, in July 1998. ECAs have held a number of discussions on the environmental aspects, including the social impact, of the project as well as the monitoring arrangements during construction.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action the Government are proposing to help those bodies which are having to wait for payment of European Union structural funds grants due to delays in receiving some of the funds from Europe. [71251]

Mr. Wills: The reform that I can announce is good news, particularly for charities, small businesses, local authorities and other bodies implementing projects vital to local communities. They have previously had to wait months or even longer to receive the final instalment of funding, even though their projects have been completed.

From now on the Government will pay all Structural Funds claims that have been properly prepared once they have undergone appropriate checks and processing, even where the Funds have not yet been received from the European Commission.

The Government have been well aware of the difficulties these delays are causing and their impact on local partners implementing Structural Funds projects. That is why we are taking action to protect them.

Science Enterprise Challenge

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made on the launch of the Science Enterprise Challenge. [71252]

Mr. Byers: I am launching the Science Enterprise Challenge today. This meets one of our key commitments in the recent White Paper to further strengthen exploitation of the science base. This £25 million Challenge is open to UK universities, to compete for funds to endow up to eight new Science Enterprise Centres. Centres will bring the teaching of entrepreneurship and business skills into the science curriculum and be centres of excellence for the knowledge transfer process.

The Challenge is in two stages; applicants are invited to submit an outline business plan for Stage 1 by 14 April. Those who succeed in Stage 1 will be invited to submit a more detailed business plan in Stage 2. I hope to announce winners in the summer. The lead applicant must be a university. However collaborative bids can include, for example, other higher educational institutions. Copies of the Guidelines for Stage 1 have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the external financing limit of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. for 1998–99. [71253]

Mr. Byers: BNFL's External Financing Limit has been tightened by £115.5 million from £178.91 million to £63.41 million. This reflects adjustments in the profile of payments from the UKAEA to BNFL for decommissioning and waste management of UKAEA liabilities at BNFL sites, and correction of historical imbalances between the relative shares the parties pay to Nirex. Provision for UKAEA expenditure has been increased accordingly in the Spring Supplementary Estimate for Class V Vote 1. The adjustments do not require any increase in public expenditure.

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes will be made to the cash and running costs limits for his Department, the Office of Telecommunications, and the Office of Gas Supply, and to the external financing limit of the British Coal Corporation. [71254]

Mr. Byers: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates:

(i) the cash limit for class V vote 1—Department of Trade and Industry: programmes and administration—will be increased by £136,634,000 from £1,286,873,000 to £1,423,507,000. This net increase results from:

- (a) an increase of £135,200,000 in the provision for Nuclear Liabilities;
- (b) a transfer of £1,851,000 from the Department of Trade and Industry's Science Vote (Class V Vote 2) in respect of the Teaching Company Scheme;
- (c) a transfer of £34,000 in running costs from the Cabinet Office (Class XVIII Vote 1).

(d) a transfer of £8,000 from the Department of the Procurator General and Treasury Solicitor (Class VIII Vote 6).offset by:

(e) a transfer of £334,000 to the Department of Social Security (Class XII Vote 3) to cover the costs of a new service in respect of the setting up of a helpline for the National Minimum Wage;

(f) a transfer of £115,000 to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Class VI Vote 5) to cover the capital requirements of the Government Offices;

(g) a transfer of £10,000 to the Home Office (Class VII Vote 1) in respect of the enforcement costs of the Telecommunications Data Protection Directive.

In addition, the Department will be increasing its gross expenditure provision for Sections A, B, C, D, G and L by £35,216,000, which will be offset by a corresponding increase in appropriations in aid, following the ruling that VAT receipts for contracted out services should not be carried on a net sub-head.

Within this total, the gross running costs limit for the Department of Trade and Industry will be increased by £34,000 from £360,241,000 to £360,275,000.

The increase of £135,200,000 in the provision for Nuclear Liabilities will be offset by reductions of £52,200,000 in the provision for Coal Liabilities in Section B of the Vote and £83,000,000 in the External Financing Limit of BNFL. It will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure;

(ii) the cash limit for Class V Vote 2—Department of Trade and Industry: science—will be reduced by £1,038,000 from £1,368,497,000 to £1,367,459,000. This net reductions results from:

(a) a transfer of £1,851,000 to the Department of Trade and Industry's Programmes and Administration Vote (Class V Vote 1) in respect of the Teaching Company Scheme;offset by:

(b) a transfer of £813,000 from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Class IV Vote 2) to the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council (BBSRC) in respect of redundancy costs at BBSRC Institutes;

In addition, the Department will be increasing its gross expenditure provision for Section K by £20,000, which will be offset by a corresponding increase in appropriations in aid, following the ruling that VAT receipts for contracted out services should not be carried on a net sub-head.

(iii) the cash limit for Class V Vote 8—Office of Telecommunications—will be increased by £1,000 from £2,000 to £3,000 in order to implement the ruling that VAT receipts for contracted out services should not be carried on a net sub-head. In addition, the running costs limit will be increased by £17,000 from £10,949,000 to £10,966,000 which will be offset by a reduction of £17,000 in the capital expenditure provision. The token £1,000 increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure;

(iv) the cash limit for Class V Vote 9—the Office of Gas Supply—will be increased by £1,000 from £1,000 to £2,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £1,582,000 from £11,124,000 to £12,706,000. This is in order to meet the costs of handling an increase in calls to the Consumer Helpline service; to undertake a review of internal organisation; to meet increased legal costs; and to implement the ruling that VAT receipts for contracted out services should not be carried on a net sub-head. There will be an offsetting increase of £2,349,000 in appropriations in aid to cover the costs of funding these additional items. The token £1,000 increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure;

In addition to these changes, the External Financing Limit of the British Coal Corporation has been reduced from £19,000,000 to £12,300,000 to reflect the transfer of responsibility for most of its property liabilities to the Coal Authority.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Parliamentary Questions have been tabled to his Department for answer on a named day in (a) the current and (b) the last session of Parliament; and what proportion received a substantive answer on that day in each case. [70629]

Mr. Byers: In the current session, 317 named day questions have been answered, 23 per cent. of which have received a substantive answer on the due date. This compares with a total of 1,973 named day questions in the 97–98 session, 32 per cent. being given a substantive answer on the due date.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Exports

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to (a) the French Government and (b) the European Commission in order to prevent UK sheep being slaughtered in France at this year's Aid-el-Kabir festival in breach of Council Directive 93/119 on the protection of animals at the time of slaughter or killing; and if he will make a statement. [67941]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the then Minister wrote to the French Minister and to the Agriculture Commissioner in March 1998 to express concern about poor slaughter practices during the festival and to support the measures being taken to improve matters. I am sure that the French authorities remain well aware of our concern on this subject and that they will continue to take steps to contain and reduce the problem. We will keep checking the matter with them in our ongoing contacts.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to contact (a) the National Farmers Union and (b) the National Sheep Association to urge them to try to persuade their members not to export live sheep to France for outdoor religious slaughter during the Aid-el-Kabir festival in March; and if he will make a statement; [67939]

(2) what steps he plans to take to discourage UK farmers and exporters from sending live sheep to France for outdoor religious slaughter during the Aid-el-Kabir festival in March; and if he will make a statement; [67938]

(3) what plans he has to contact Farmers Ferry Ltd. to urge them not to carry live sheep which are destined for outdoor religious slaughter in France during this year's Aid-el-Kabir festival in March; and if he will make a statement. [67940]

Mr. Morley: The Government look to all those who produce, market, transport or export sheep to avoid trading them on in a way which will lead to their being slaughtered inhumanely or in breach of the law in other ways. We attach importance to this and will take suitable opportunities, between now and the festival, to emphasise to those concerned that this is our very firm view.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria he will adopt relating to the professional qualifications and experience of prospective candidates for the chairmanship of the Food Standards Agency. [69824]

Mr. Rooker: Responsibility for appointing the chairman of the Food Standards Agency will rest with the Secretary of State for Health, and his equivalents in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. The appointment will be made in accordance with guidance issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. The Government will be looking to appoint a person of high standing with relevant experience and qualifications who will command the confidence of the public.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has obtained which raises concerns about adverse human or environmental health implications from the introduction of genetically modified organisms into the food chain. [70047]

Mr. Rooker: Genetically modified organisms (GMOs) are only approve[illegible]r food use after a rigorous safety assessment. Consequently I am not aware of any such evidence for GMOs that have been approved for use in the food chain.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the link between bovine TB and birds; and what plans he has to commission research on this. [69706]

Mr. Rooker: Birds do not give bovine TB and there is no significant evidence of them being a carrier of this infection. However, birds infected with avian TB can pass infection to cattle. This rarely produces clinical disease in cattle but can cause cross reactions to the tuberculin skin test. To overcome this we conduct a comparative skin test so that if cattle react to the avian tuberculin test as well as the bovine tuberculin test the interpretation of the results can be adjusted. This reduces the number of false positive cattle which are slaughtered unnecessarily.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what data his Department has collated on change in the incidence of tuberculosis in cattle over the last two years; if he will list the areas severely affected; and what action he is taking to overcome the problem. [70350]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 February 1999]: The figures for new confirmed incidents of TB in cattle herds in Great Britain indicate a 9 per cent. increase between 1996 and 1997. Figures for 1998 are not yet available, but provisional estimates indicate an increase in the region of at least 46 per cent. over 1997. The areas most severely affected by TB are in the South West of England and parts of the West Midlands and South Wales, the counties of Cornwall, Devon, Gloucestershire and Herefordshire having the highest number of new confirmed incidents in both 1997 and 1998.

We need to know why TB is increasing. Last August I announced a new strategy. MAFF and DH are taking action to ensure public health is not put in jeopardy. We test cattle regularly for TB, and slaughter those at risk. We are spending over £10 million on work to underpin a science based policy which can be sustained in the long-term, and control TB in the interests of cattle, badgers and people. There are three elements:

work to develop a vaccine: although this will take 10–15 years and success is not guaranteed, many see it as the best long-term prospect;

research to improve our understanding of the disease and how it spreads;

a trial designed to show the most effective means of culling.

It will be some time before we have results from the whole programme. But as results become available we can design policies around them.

Meanwhile we have increased compensation for slaughtered animals from 75 per cent. to 100 per cent. of market value. We have a working group reviewing the frequency and effectiveness of testing, and have asked it to report by Easter. There is a lot more farmers can do themselves to reduce their TB risk and we are working with interested organisations to agreed new guidance on practical measures which can be taken.

We shall continue to review other suggestions which might help in dealing with this exceptionally difficult problem.

Women (Agriculture)

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what funding is available from the European Union for schemes to help women into agriculture. [70258]

Mr. Rooker: I am not aware of any EU Schemes which provide funding specifically to help women into agriculture. However, EU funding for measures designed to promote employment in special occupational areas is available under Objective 3.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for the United Kingdom to take part in the European Union scheme to help women enter into agriculture. [70259]

Mr. Rooker: I have no plans to take part in any schemes designed to help women enter agriculture.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to all the Government's public consultations. [69768]

Mr. Morley: It is my Department's practice to make responses to consultations available on request. For some consultations summaries of the responses are produced, and may also be put in the Library of the House or on the MAFF website. Key issues of concern raised during consultations are included in the Regulatory Impact Assessments which accompany any new legislation which either imposes a cost on, or reduces costs to, business. The next Departmental Report will contain a summary of the better regulation aspects arising from consultations during 1998.

Pigs

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with European Union farm ministers about (a) the treatment of pigs during farming and (b) the production methods of pig farming; and if he will make a statement. [69506]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 February 1999]: No negotiations have taken place on these matters in the Council of Ministers, because the European Commission has not yet brought forward its overdue proposals to update EU welfare standards for pigs. We will continue to press for proposals, which must at least meet the standards currently applying to the UK, to come forward as soon as possible.

Poultry Imports

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests are carried out by port health authorities on poultry imports from countries outside the E.U. [69486]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Live poultry may be imported into the EU only from approved third countries from flocks which are subject to regular disease monitoring. Member States are notified about all such imports and documentary, identity and physical checks are carried out at the point of entry. Similarly, poultry meat may only be imported from third countries, and from establishments in those third countries, which are approved by the European Commission. On arrival at a Border Inspection Post in the Community the documents and identity of every consignment of poultry meat must be checked. At least 50 per cent. of consignments must also be subject to physical checks to ensure that they are fit for their intended purpose.

BSE

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the evidence to date of maternal transmission of BSE. [70177]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 9 February 1999]: SEAC's conclusions on maternal transmission were given in its statement of 16 April 1997. This information was published in MAFF News Release 108/97 on 18 April 1997, which can be accessed on the MAFF website at—http://www.maff.gov.uk/maffhome.htm. The News Release is also available to all Members in the Library of the House.

There is no new evidence which calls these conclusions into question.

Derelict Land (Tree Planting)

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of urban land he intends to be covered by his Department's scheme for woodland and tree planting on derelict land. [70229]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The Government's Forestry Strategy for England, published last December, identifies the opportunity to increase significantly the level of planting of woodland on derelict land, and puts forward a series of actions to achieve this. However, we have not set specific targets.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69522]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 9 February 1999]: Since 1996 MAFF has had delegated authority for negotiating pay settlements. For the last pay round the core MAFF settlement included Pesticides Safety Division and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate.

The headline pay settlement was 2.7 per cent. on the paybill. Together with the additional funds from staff turnover this settlement allowed performance related increases with an overall cost of 4.2 per cent. and one-off structural changes worth 0.5 per cent. of the paybill.

Pay awards were not staged.

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and food is also responsible for other Executive Agencies with their own negotiating remits. I have asked their Chief Executives to respond direct with information on their pay settlements.

Letter from Peter Stanley to Dr. David Clark, dated 11 February 1999:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Central Science Laboratory (CSL), to your question concerning the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants and to what extent the pay awards were staged.

Since 1996 CSL has had delegated authority for negotiating pay settlements.

CSL operates a performance related pay system which links pay awards to job performance. It is therefore not possible to provide a single average figure which is meaningful. For 1998/99, pay increases for satisfactory performers ranged from 3.5% to 5.4% with a few exceptional performers receiving an additional accelerated pay progression of 6%. For some unsatisfactory performers, no pay increase was received.

Pay awards were not staged, being paid in full with effect from 1 August 1998.

Letter from P. W. Greig-Smith to Mr. David Clark, dated 11 February 1999:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial Civil Servants, excluding members of the Senior Civil Service, in his Department for 1998–99 and to what extent the pay awards were staged. I am replying on behalf of the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS).

CEFAS operates a performance-related pay system which links pay awards to job performance. It is therefore not possible to provide a single average figure that is meaningful. For 1998/99 the performance pay increases of satisfactory performers ranged from 2.39% to 7.21% with an underpinning minimum increase of 3.00% or £400, whichever was greater. Unsatisfactory performers received no increase.

The average 1998/99 pay increase for non-industrials at CEFAS was 4.08%. Payments were not staged, being paid in full with December salaries.

Letter from Sarah Nason to Dr. David Clark, dated 8 February 1999:

Mr. Elliot Morley has asked me to reply, in respect of the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA), to your question about the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service in 1998/99, and to what extent the pay awards were staged.

FRCA has had delegated authority for negotiating pay settlements since the Agency's launch in April 1997. Payment date within the Agency is 1 August each year. The headline pay settlement for 1998/99 was 2.0% on the paybill and together with the additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance related increases averaging 4.0%. The increases were not staged.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Dr. David Clark, dated 11 February 1999:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99 and to what extent the pay awards were staged.

Since 1996 the VLA has had delegated authority for negotiating pay settlements.

The Agency operates a performance related pay system which links pay awards to job performance.

For 1998/99 the pay increases for satisfactory performers ranged from 3.5% to 5.5% with a guaranteed cash increase of £400 per annum. Unsatisfactory performers received no pay increase.

The average value of the pay increases, including some other improvements to terms and conditions for VLA staff, was 4%.

The pay increases were not staged, being paid in full with August 1998 salaries.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Dr. David Clark, dated 11 February 1999:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food enquiring what the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial Civil Servants, excluding members of the Senior Civil Service for 1998/99, and to what extent the pay awards were staged, has been passe to me to reply as regards this Executive Agency.

The MHS is continuing to discuss its 1998/99 pay deal with UNISON, the trade union which represents meat inspection staff. If the proposed pay deal tabled by the MHS were to be agreed, awards in the MHS would range from 3.65% to 8.4%. The average award would slightly above 3.65%.

The pay award would not be staged.

Calf Processing Aid Scheme

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had on the future of the calf processing aid scheme; and if he will make a statement. [71389]

Mr. Nick Brown: Farmers' organisations have pressed for continuation of the Scheme in view of the uncertain situation facing the beef market. When I announced on 16 November 1998, Official Report, columns 624–40, a package of aid for the livestock sector, I extended the life of the scheme until 31 March 1999. I undertook then to keep the scheme under review. I have now concluded with my colleagues that, in view of market circumstances, we should further extend the scheme to 31 July 1999.

In view of the need to give certainty about the final end-date of the scheme there will be no further extension. It will end on 31 July.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the monthly cost of the revised calf processing aid scheme and the proportion paid by (a) the Treasury and (b) the EU. [70634]

Mr. Rooker: At the current exchange rate, and assuming throughput at average 1998 levels, the monthly cost of the Calf Processing Aid Scheme is a little over £3 million. The Scheme is in principle 100 per cent. financed by the EU, but due to the operation of the Fontainebleau rebate mechanism the Exchequer effectively pays about 71 per cent. of the costs.

Over-30-months Scheme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost over the last year of the over thirty months scheme; and what proportions are funded by (a) the Treasury and (b) the EU. [70635]

Mr. Rooker: The cost of the Over Thirty Months Scheme in 1998–99 is estimated to be around £364 million, made up of payments to producers (£247 million) and slaughter and disposal costs (£117 million). Payments to producers are in principle reimbursed by the EU at a rate of around 70 per cent., although the effective rate of reimbursement is close to 20 per cent. after the operation of the Fontainebleau rebate mechanism. The costs of slaughter and disposal are fully funded by the Exchequer.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate he has made of the annual cost of increasing the maximum weight limit under the over thirty months scheme by (a) 100 kg and (b) 200 kg; [70638]

(2) what would be the annual cost of removing the weight limit under the over thirty months scheme. [70636]

Mr. Rooker: First, changes to this scheme are not within the gift of the UK Government; its rules are set by the European Commission.

It is difficult to estimate precisely the likely extra costs of the three options that the hon. Member mentions, as each of the options may cause both slaughter weights and throughput to change. Nevertheless I estimate that increasing the weight limit by 100 kg would increase costs by around £15.5m; increasing the limit by 200 kg would do so by around £16.75m; and removing the limit altogether would increase costs by around £17m.

Beef Export Ban

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the European Commission's criteria for the lifting of the export ban on British beef require dedicated abattoirs or dedicated slaughter and cutting lines within larger abattoirs. [70632]

Mr. Rooker: The Date Based Export Scheme requires that eligible animals are slaughtered, and their meat and products handled subsequent to slaughter, in plants which handle only export eligible cattle and beef, or other species and their meat. Abattoirs will be able to slaughter pigs or sheep but will not be able to slaughter cattle which are not eligible for export.

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed to his Department's cash and running costs limits for Class IV Vote 2, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, for 1998–99.

Mr. Nick Brown: Subject to the Ministry's Spring Supplementary Estimate being agreed be Parliament, the Cash limit for Class IV Vote 2 for 1998–99 will be increased by £35,523,000 from £711,300,000 to £746,823,000 and the Gross Running Cost Control limit will be increased by £6,637,000 from £355,230,000 to £361,867,000.

The changes are accounted for by transfers of £813,000 to the Department of Trade and Industry (Class V, Vote 2) for payments to the Biotechnology and Biological Science Research Council and £440,000 to the Scottish Office (Class XIII, Vote 6) and £200,000 to the Welsh Office (Class XIV, Vote 3) for the costs of the Cattle Traceability System; transfers of £2,163,000 from the Department of Health (Class XI, Vote 2), £721,000 from the Scottish Office (Class XIII, Vote 1), £349,000 from the Welsh Office (Class XIV, Vote 3), and 360,000 from the Northern Ireland Office, as their contributions towards the cost of the BSE Inquiry and, £4,000 from the Treasury Solicitors (Class VIII, Vote 6); calls on the reserve of £15,268,000 to cover the Ministry's share of increases to Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances, £19,720,000, with a corresponding increase in EC receipts, to cover the Ministry's share of increases to the Suckler Cow Premium Scheme, £6,451,000 to cover the cost of the Offspring Cull and Date-Based Export System and £11,660,000 for the take-up of End-Year Flexibility.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 15 February 1999

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Staff Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [70961]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Commissioners follow Civil Service guidelines for mileage rates. A pedal cycle allowance of 6.6 pence per mile is also payable.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Commons Kitchens (Closure)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what facilities will be available for hon. Members and their staff during the period of closure of the Commons kitchens; and for how long the kitchens will be closed. [70382]

Mr. Dennis Turner: The final phase (Phase F) of the House of Commons Refreshment Department Modernisation Programme, which was approved by the House in July 1994, will necessitate closure of the Department's main kitchens, (which service the Members' and the Strangers' Dining Rooms, the private dining rooms and the banqueting facilities), from the end of July 1999 until the end of February 2000.

During this period, normal services will be maintained throughout the Refreshment Department's cafeterias and in the Members' Tea Room. The Members' Dining Room will continue to offer a Strangers' lunch service and a Members' evening service, although the menu will have to be considerably reduced to enable catering staff to transfer food from temporary kitchens which will be sited in Peers' Court. The Churchill Room will also remain available to Members and their guests for both lunch and dinner. It is hoped that the Pugin Room will continue to operate a normal service, although a final decision on this has yet to be made. All other bar services, including the Smoking Room will operate as normal.

I do have to advice my hon. Friend that, unfortunately, the following services will not be available from the end of July until the new kitchens are operational in March 2000: the Strangers' Dining Rooms A, B, C and D. The Chess Room will also be closed. The Terrace Pavilion will not be available for any functions requiring food service, but its possible use for "drinks only" receptions remains under consideration.

Once the exact range of facilities that will be available has been finalised, I will write to all hon. Members to advise them of the services that it will be possible to provide.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70475]

The Attorney-General: For the details regarding my Departments (The Crown Prosecution Service, Treasury Solicitor's Department, including the Government Property Lawyers Agency, the Serious Fraud Office and the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers) my hon. Friend is referred to the "Civil Service Statistics 1998", a copy of which is placed in the Library.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70461]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service acts as the prosecuting authority for England and Wales. At present, its staff are based at CPS Headquarters, with premises in London and York, and at 13 Area Headquarters with 90 Branches throughout England and Wales. From 1 April 1999, following the recommendations in the Glidewell Report, the CPS is to be restructured into 42 Areas, aligned with police force areas. The 90 branches will remain in their present locations, subject to review in due course. There are no plans at present to relocate the Headquarters offices in London and York. Location of individual CPS offices is determined by reference to operational needs, including proximity to the courts and police served by that office.

The Treasury Solicitor's Department has no current plans to relocate or decentralise staff.

The Serious Fraud Office has no current plans to decentralise or relocate. It is considered that its strategic objectives are best served by working close by the other major organisations in the Criminal Justice System and the major financial institutions in the City of London.

The small Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers operates as my private office and as such is required to be based in London.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Defence and Overseas Policy Committee

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many meetings of the Ministerial Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy she has attended since May 1997. [71053]

Clare Short: I have attended four meetings of the Committee since May 1997.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if the Ministerial Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy discussed the issue of arms export licensing during those meetings that she attended. [71070]

Clare Short: The agenda for meetings of the Ministerial Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy cannot be revealed since this information falls within the exemption for internal discussion and advice under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the subjects discussed at the meetings of the Ministerial Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy which she attended. [71072]

Clare Short: The agenda for meetings of the Ministerial Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy falls within the exemption for internal discussion and advice under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and therefore cannot be revealed.

Security Sector Reform

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when proposals for her Department's involvement in security sector reform will be published. [71046]

Clare Short: My Department's policy approach to security sector reform is to be published on 9 March 1999, in conjunction with a speech I shall be giving on the subject at King's College, London. A copy of our policy paper will be placed in the Library.

Biosafety Protocol

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what impact her Department has had in determining the Government's objectives in the forthcoming negotiations on the Biosafety Protocol in Colombia. [70937]

Clare Short: We are participating with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions in the current negotiations on the Biosafety Protocol. The Government's overall objective in the negotiations is to protect the environment and human health worldwide.

We are working to ensure that the Protocol includes appropriate capacity building and financial assistance through the Global Environment Facility so that developing countries can protect their interests.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with developing countries regarding their interests in the forthcoming negotiations on the Biosafety Protocol in Colombia. [70938]

Clare Short: I have had no discussions with developing countries regarding their interests in the current negotiations on the Biosafety Protocol in Colombia.

Genetic Patenting

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the revenues which would flow from developing to developed countries as a result of genetic patenting. [70932]

Clare Short: Given the large number of uncertainties in any such exercise, I can make no estimate of the revenues which would flow from developing to developed countries as a result of genetic patenting.

Genetically Modified Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will estimate the number of genetically modified crops available worldwide which could be substituted immediately for those crops currently grown by farmers in developing countries. [71171]

Clare Short: Subject to the approval of developing country Governments, genetically modified soybean, cotton, oilseed rape, maize, potato, tomato and tobacco could immediately replace existing crops. We have commissioned research on the potential impact on farmers in developing countries of the increased use of genetically modified crops. We will publish the results as they become available.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the genetically modified crops available worldwide which can be grown in developing countries. [70934]

Clare Short: Genetically modified crops which have been approved for commercial production in one or more countries and which could be grown in developing countries include soybean, cotton, oilseed rape, maize, potato, tomato and tobacco. However, my Department has commissioned research on the potential impact on farmers in developing countries of the increased use of genetically modified crops. We will publish the results as they become available.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the proportion of genetically modified crops available worldwide which can be grown in developing countries. [70933]

Clare Short: All those genetically modified crops approved for commercial production in one or more countries could be grown in developing countries. We have commissioned research on the potential impact on farmers in developing countries of the increased use of genetically modified crops. We will publish the results as they become available.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what research her Department has undertaken into the possible social, economic and environmental consequences of the introduction of genetically modified crops into developing countries. [70935]

Clare Short: My Department is providing funding to the International Crop Research Institute for the Semi-Arid Tropics (ICRISAT) to support research into the potential risks of introducing transgenic plants into traditional cropping systems. The project will examine environmental and social risk in the case of pigeon peas grown by smallholder farmers in India. The outcome of this research will be made public.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 343, if she will list the expenditure not included in her answer incurred by (a) her agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for her Department. [71005]

Clare Short: The answers are as follows:

(a) Since May 1997 the Commonwealth Scholarship Commission has spent around £1,000 advertising overseas awards tenable for British students. In 1997 and 1998, the Commonwealth Development Corporation spent around £340,000 on corporate advertising and staff recruitment.

(b) None.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the expenditure incurred by her Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if she will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70969]

Clare Short: DFID has a website which was set up at a cost of £10,000; maintenance of the site costs £10,000 per annum and development costs in the first year of operation—1998/99—are £3,500. The site covers:

"Who we are", including basic data on the departmental structure, aims and personalities, links with other development related websites.

"Working with us", including recruitment, projects in the pipeline, development awareness information, research programmes and details of funding schemes.

"A closer look", including strategy papers, publications, project evaluation reports.

"News Centre", including briefings; press releases, speeches, statements, public opinion research, and new items on the website.

The average number of page hits each month is 124,000.

Maintenance and development costs over the next 3 years are not planned to increase substantially over current levels. Costs so far have been within budget provision.

The only other relevant body with its own website is the Commonwealth Development Corporation (CDC).

The cost of setting up the CDC website was £11,500.

The topics covered are:

Expertise: a summary of CDC's functions and methods

Investment terms: summary of investment terms together with instructions on how to make an investment proposal.

CDC Worldwide: summary of worldwide operations and world map.

Press Releases: access to all the press releases issued in the last twelve months.

Links: links to various sites, including the DFID web page, international financial institutions and various other organisations.

Annual Report: the full contents of the 1997 Annual Report.

The CDC does not maintain an accurate register of hits. Due to planned overhaul, estimated expenditure for the next three years is:

1999: £30,000

2000: £10,000

2001: £10,000.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 343, if she will list the expenditure not included in her answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if she will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71006]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development has no formal (a) task forces and review bodies or (b) focus groups, and since May 1997 has incurred no expenditure on (c) market research beyond the research included in my answer of 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 343.

Since May 1997, the Department for International Development has (d) spent around £1 million on publications and publicity.

Papua New Guinea

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement regarding (a) British and (b) EU aid to Papua New Guinea. [71484]

Clare Short: The UK has a small programme of development assistance focusing on education in the Pacific region. But the majority of UK development assistance to Papua New Guinea is provided through support for regional initiatives, such as the Pacific Community and the South Pacific Forum, and through the EU. Britain also contributed £140,000 in response to the July 1998 tidal wave disaster.

During the period 1990–1995 Papua New Guinea received over 220 mecu under the first phase of the EC's Lome IV Convention. This is equivalent to about £180 million, of which the UK share was some £30 million. Under the second phase (1995–2000) the UK will have committed about £5 million to a programme worth 50 mecu (about £40 million) aimed at human resource and rural environment development.

Staff Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [70957]

Clare Short: For official travel by private car the rates are:

37p a mile at standard rate and

23.8p a mile at public transport rate (where suitable officially provided transport or public transport is readily available).

The use of private cars for official journeys by staff in my Department is minimal. A Departmental Green Transport Plan is currently being prepared which will detail what action will be taken by the Department to promote and support the Government's objective of reducing the impact of travel on the environment.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the British advisers supported by the British Government currently working for (a) the Government of Zimbabwe and (b) state-owned companies in Zimbabwe. [70578]

Clare Short: The British Government currently fund the following British advisers in:

Department	Advisers
(a) the Zimbabwe Government
Central Statistical Office	Economic Statistics Adviser
Forestry Commission	Project Co-ordinator
Ministry of Land and Agriculture	Epidemiologist, Research Adviser (x2)
Ministry of Defence	Civil Adviser, Military Advisers (x9)
Ministry of Justice, Legal and Parliamentary Affairs	Legal Training Adviser
Ministry of Industry and Commerce	Private sector development consultant
Ministry of Local Government and National Housing	Project Support Officer (x2)
	Development in Practice (consultancy team)
Ministry of Rural Resources and Water Development	Water Quality Adviser
	Hydrologist
	Hydrological Systems Analyst
Ministry of Public Service, Labour and Social Welfare	Adviser to Public Service Commission
Ministry of Transport and Energy	Transport Research Adviser
(b) State-owned companies
None

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the parliamentary constituencies which she has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71346]

Clare Short: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and I have undertaken a number of visits to regions around the UK in the past 12 months as part of the Department for International Development's strategy of engaging the public in development. Records of official visits are not held on constituency basis as many will have taken in more than one constituency at a time. Since March 1998, the following cities or regions were visited:

Bath;
Belfast;
Birmingham;
Blackpool;
Bradford;
Carlisle;
Cardiff;
Chester;
Durham;
Edinburgh;
Leeds;
Manchester;
Milton Keynes;
Northampton;
Oxford;
Western Isles;
York.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Staff Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [70959]

Mrs. Beckett: No staff of the Privy Council Office currently claim car mileage allowances. Any such claims would be payable at a flat rate of 40 pence per mile for the first 4,000 miles in any year and 22.5 pence per mile thereafter. The policy of the department is not to provide higher differential rates for larger capacity engines.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Trunk Roads

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the trunk roads in England and Wales which have junctions less than two km apart where there is a 70 mph speed limit. [66846]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 21 January 1999]: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Local Government Finance (Westminster and Kensington)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) grants and (b) other financial support given by his Department to (i) Westminster City Council and (ii) the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea, other than through the RSG settlement, in (1) 1997–98, (2) 1998–99 and (3) planned for 1999–2000; and for what purposes the funds were allocated. [70155]

Ms Armstrong: The information requested is given in the following table.

Grants and other financial support to Westminster City Council and the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea

£000

	1997–98		1998–99		1999–2000
	Westminster	Kensington and Chelsea	Westminster	Kensington and Chelsea	Westminster	Kensington and Chelsea
Grants
PFI special grant[1]	0	0	0	0	482	0
Single Regeneration Budget[2]	417	472	1,468	1,412	1,249	1,161
Estate Action[3]	9,000	0	5,860	0	2,301	0
City Challenge[4]	0	6,584	0	65	0	0
Home Improvement Agency Grant[5]	0	47	0	47	0	[19]—
Private Sector Renewal[6]	632	768	564	780	675	780
Disabled Facilities Grant[7]	28	71	66	60	90	60
Other Financial Support
Basic Credit Approvals (BCAs)[8]	2,789	5,757	3,256	4,181	4,479	5,447
Capital Challenge BCAs[9]	0	0	1,220	0	1,792	0
Capital Challenge Supplementary Credit Approval[10]	150	0	400	0	448	0
Cash Incentive Scheme[11]	1,029	600	950	233	0	0
NDR Cost of collection allowance[12]	2,330	564	2,316	548	2,412	573
Capital Receipts Initiative[13]	2,039	1,095	6,618	3,959	7,176	4,319
Housing Revenue Account Subsidy[14]	38,273	22,489	36,300	22,126	[19]—	[19]—
Air Quality Supplementary Credit Approvals[15]	0	21	0	36	[19]—	[19]—
Transport Policies and Programme[16, 17]	5,270	2,218	3,094	2,142	[18]18,477	1,685

[1] Revenue support in respect of contracts let under the Private Finance Initiative.

[2] Grant to support regeneration initiatives carried out by local partnerships.

[3] Aims to transform estates by providing additional resources for local authorities to implement regeneration schemes.

[4] Grant to local authority-led partnerships to regenerate disadvantaged urban areas.

[5] Grant paid to local authorities towards the costs of home improvement agencies.

[6] Includes house renovation grants, group repairs and slum clearance.

[7] Grant towards the cost of adaptations to the dwellings of disabled people living in private dwellings.

[8] The amount of capital expenditure which an authority can finance by borrowing (or other forms of credit) is effectively limited by the credit approvals issued to it. Basic Credit Approvals (BCAs) can be used for any capital purpose.

[9, 10] Basic Credit Approvals and Supplementary Credit Approvals (used for specific capital projects) awarded under the Capital Challenge pilot scheme in a cross-cutting government initiative where local authorities were invited to identify and bid for their own local priorities across the full range of services.

[11] Supplementary Credit Approvals to support Cash Incentive Scheme grants to enable tenants to leave their Council home and buy in the private sector.

[12] The cost of collection allowance is in respect of the cost to local authorities of collecting the national business rate.

[13] Supplementary Credit Approvals allocated in respect of specific housing or housing related regeneration works.

[14] A specific subsidy regime to help local authorities meet council housing expenditure, including the cost of housing benefit for council tenants (rent rebates).

[15] To assist capital expenditure on statutory duties for air quality management under Part IV of the Environment Act 1995.

[16] To provide support towards expenditure on the construction and improvement of local roads, structural maintenance of bridges and carriageways, local safety schemes, London-wide bus and cycle priority networks and other schemes.

[17] Major schemes and principal carriageway works are supported by 50 per cent. grant and 50 per cent. credit approval. Remainder are entirely supported by credit approvals.

[18] Westminster is the lead authority for bridge projects in London. The 1999–2000 figure for Westminster includes £16.7 million for bridge strengthening, most of which will be redistributed to other London authorities during the coming financial year.

[19] Not yet agreed.

Missile Incidents (Roads and Railways)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) incidents have been reported of missiles being thrown from bridge parapets onto (i) motorways, (ii) other roads and (iii) railways and (b) how many such incidents have resulted in (1) death, (2) serious injury and (3) slight injury, in each of the last five years. [70270]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Records of the incidents of missiles being thrown from bridges on to motorways and trunk roads are not recorded specifically on the traffic accident forms completed by the police. Therefore a statistical database is not available to provide the information requested. The rate at which incidents involving serious injury occur on the roads for which the Highways Agency is responsible is thought to be up to three per annum in recent years according to the historic evidence of such incidents. None of these is believed to have resulted in fatalities. In some years there have been no reported injury accidents.

Other roads are the responsibility of individual highway authorities.

Records of the number of incidents where missiles have been specifically thrown from bridges on to the railway are not kept. However, since 1996–97 statistics of all incidents where the drivers' cab windows have been damaged due to missiles being thrown (not specifically from bridges) have been reportable under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 (RIDDOR). During 1996–97 the total number of incidents was 468, of which 408 were malicious; during 1997–98 the totals were 619 and 512 respectively. Figures for previous years were not kept.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what engineering measures he proposes to protect the travelling public from missiles being thrown from parapets of bridges over (a) motorways, (b) other roads and (c) railways. [70272]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Departmental standard for the design of highway bridge parapets requires that they are 1.2 m high on road bridges over other roads and 1.5 m high on road bridges over railways. Parapets on bridges over railways are normally clad with a close mesh or steel panelling. Missiles thrown from bridges are usually isolated incidences that it is impossible to prevent completely.

Where there is a repeated problem at a particular location then local measures such as raising the parapet height and using a solid infill to the parapet may help. The provision of CCTV cameras and police patrols may also be used in addition to these engineering measures.

The Health and Safety Executive has published "Railway Safety Principles and Guidance" for the promoters of new railways of bridges which gives specific guidance on the height of bridge parapets. The guidance also states:

> "Where vandalism may be a problem, Parapets at least 1.8 m high or a totally enclosed structure may be necessary".

With regard existing bridges, many may not meet these guidelines. In such cases, the Health and Safety Executive would expect railway infrastructure owners to assess each bridge on its own merits, and, where a problem with vandalism may exist, take reasonable practicable measures to help prevent such incidents from occurring.

Road bridges not on the trunk road system are the responsibility of the appropriate highway authority.

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70029]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 8 February 1999]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the government in their important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom departments are expected to use for the rest of the government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not on one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example, where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

Water Provision Agreements

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has further to regulate water authorities in relation to the renegotiation of historic water provision agreements; and if he will make a statement. [70332]

Mr. Meale: The Government have no proposals affecting the provision of water and sewerage services under historic agreements. The Water Industry Bill, currently before Parliament, does not affect such agreements.

The terms, enforcement and renegotiation of any existing agreements entered into between undertakers and customers are matters between the parties.

Trains (Bicycles)

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers he has to require train operating companies to make provision for the carriage of bicycles. [70536]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Existing franchises include a clause requiring Train Operators to provide, where practical, for the transport of bicycles on trains at reasonable charges (if any). The Objectives, Instructions and Guidance we issued to the Franchising Director in November 1997 (a copy is in the House Library) require him to discuss the provision of facilities for bicycles when operators are planning to order new rolling stock.

Trains (Eastern Timetables)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has held with the train operating companies on their preparation of the Easter timetables; and when he expects the full Easter timetable for each of the rail companies to be available. [70384]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Accurate and timely timetable information is essential to encouraging greater use of the rail network. I look to Railtrack and train operators to ensure that information about Easter 1999 services is made available to the public accordingly in a timely and accurate manner. The Rail Regulator has recently published proposals to amend train operators' and Railtrack's licences to place an enforceable obligation on them to ensure passengers receive timely and accurate timetable information. Failure to comply could then result in enforcement action.

Millennium Contingency Measures

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency measures his Department is planning for the first week of 2000 to meet any technical problems caused by the millennium bug in terms of (a) specialist advice and (b) staff overtime. [70595]

Mr. Meale: The Department and its Agencies have prepared outline Business Continuity Plans for the period up to and beyond the century date change. Detailed consideration of specific issues will be undertaken over the next few months.

Council Tax Benefit Subsidy

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 716, on council tax benefit subsidy, if he will calculate the information requested using information on an authority 1998–99 taxbase and summarised by class of authority and by grouping with authorities with similar levels of benefit dependency. [70540]

Ms Armstrong: I do not expect authorities to spend above their guideline, but I have today placed in the Library of the House tables showing the reduction in council tax benefit subsidy on the assumptions specified, expressed both in cash and as a proportion of the authority's yield from council tax for standard spending. The tables also give the budgeted proportion of council tax yield accounted for by council tax benefit in 1998–99, and the data are provided in electronic form to enable any desired grouping of authorities.

School Transport (Staffordshire)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what evidence the School Travel Advisory Group has received from Staffordshire County Council concerning its provision of school bus transport and the impact on school transport safety for children. [70538]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am not aware that the School Travel Advisory Group has received evidence from Staffordshire County Council. The group's work will involve the collection of information and advice from a wide range of sources and I am sure that it would welcome evidence from Staffordshire County Council.

Cars (Crash Testing)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress in (a) developing offset crash testing of cars and (b) agreeing the appropriate height for side crash testing. [70929]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Both an offset frontal crash test and a side crash test with an appropriate barrier height have been agreed as part of the new EC Directives on frontal and side impact (96/79/EC and 96/27/EC), which took effect on 1 October 1998. These Directives represent a useful improvement over the original Commission proposals. Various aspects of the Directives are to be reviewed by 1 October 2000. We have commissioned new research to identify possible future development so that the UK can make an effective contribution to the review.

Homelessness

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the current number of people sleeping on the streets in (a) London, (b) the south east of England and (c) other major cities in England. [70724]

Mr. Raynsford: The most reliable method of establishing the number of people sleeping rough is by undertaking a night time head count. In 1996 my Department published guidance to local authorities on how to conduct head counts of people sleeping rough using a standard methodology developed in partnership with experts from the voluntary sector and local authorities. DETR officials have worked in conjunction with the voluntary sector to encourage areas which consider they have a rough sleeping problem to conduct counts. Since 1996 local authorities have provided details of street counts which have been undertaken in their area within the Housing Investment Programme (HIP) returns.

(a) London—Street counts in central London are co-ordinated by Homeless Network, the umbrella group representing homeless organisations in London, and have been undertaken on a regular basis since 1992. The most recent count in June 1998 found 373 people sleeping rough. Several other London boroughs have also undertaken counts, finding a total of 132 rough sleepers.

(b) South east of England—The following table provides details of rough sleeper counts undertaken in local authorities in south east England.

Local Authority District	County	Street count
		Date	Number
Slough	Berkshire	December 1997	12
Reading	Berkshire	November 1998	13
Windsor and Maidenhead	Berkshire	November 1997	3
Wycombe	Buckinghamshire	November 1997	2
Brighton and Hove	East Sussex	June 1996	44
Portsmouth	Hampshire	October 1997	21
Southampton	Hampshire	June 1998	22
Basingstoke and Deane	Hampshire	February 1998	5
Fareham	Hampshire	February 1998	13
Shepway	Kent	July 1996	3
Canterbury	Kent	June 1996	11
Oxford	Oxfordshire	July 1996	39
Guildford	Surrey	November 1997	8
Woking	Surrey	October 1997	7
Reigate and Banstead	Surrey	September 1995	0
Worthing	West Sussex	October 1997	5

Source:

DETR 1998 HIP Operational Information Form Section 1F (c) Other areas in England—The table provides details of rough sleeper counts undertaken in other local authorities in England.

Local Authority District	County	Street count Date	Number
Derby	Derbyshire	October 1997	2
Leicester	Leicestershire	June 1996	20
Northampton	Northamptonshire	September 1997	13
Nottingham	Nottinghamshire	July 1996	14
Luton	Bedfordshire	December 1997	5
Mid Bedfordshire	Bedfordshire	December 1997	1
Cambridge	Cambridgeshire	July 1997	30
Peterborough	Cambridgeshire	June 1997	2
Southend-on-Sea	Essex	1996	0
Colchester	Essex	December 1997	0
St. Albans	Hertfordshire	June 1998	3
East Hertfordshire	Hertfordshire	March 1998	6
Great Yarmouth	Norfolk	November 1997	13
Norwich	Norfolk	October 1997	19
Ipswich	Suffolk	December 1997	7
Liverpool	Merseyside	March 1998	17
South Tyneside	Tyne and Wear	June 1998	1
Newcastle upon Tyne	Tyne and Wear	March 1998	2
Sunderland	Tyne and Wear	February 1998	0
Manchester	Greater Manchester	July 1996	31
Oldham	Greater Manchester	July 1995	3
Tameside	Greater Manchester	February 1998	1
Bury	Greater Manchester	January 1998	12
Burnley	Lancashire	October 1997	0
Wyre	Lancashire	September 1997	6
Blackpool	Lancashire	July 1997	15
North Somerset	Avon	December 1997	1
Bath & North East Somerset	Avon	July 1996	12
Bristol	Avon	June 1998	42
Caradon	Cornwall	April 1998	3
Carrick	Cornwall	April 1998	3
Penwith	Cornwall	April 1998	17
Kerrier	Cornwall	March 1998	3
North Cornwall	Cornwall	March 1998	0
Restormel	Cornwall	March 1998	10
Mid Devon	Devon	October 1997	9
Plymouth	Devon	October 1997	13
Exeter	Devon	July 1997	27
Poole	Dorset	October 1997	4
Bournemouth	Dorset	August 1997	44
Weymouth and Portland	Dorset	May 1997	3
Cheltenham	Gloucestershire	December 1997	1
Gloucester	Gloucestershire	November 1997	16
Taunton Deane	Somerset	May 1997	1
Swindon	Wiltshire	December 1997	17
Worcester	Hereford and Worcester	1995	20
Redditch	Hereford and Worcester	March 1998	0
Newcastle-under-Lyme	Staffordshire	November 1997	0
Stoke-on-Trent	Staffordshire	November 1997	20
Warwick	Warwickshire	September 1997	3
Birmingham	West Midlands	November 1997	56
Kingston upon Hull	Humberside	November 1997	0
Hambleton	North Yorkshire	June 1997	0
Harrogate	North Yorkshire	March 1998	1
York	North Yorkshire	March 1998	12
Doncaster	South Yorkshire	September 1998	8
Barnsley	South Yorkshire	May 1998	0
Sheffield	South Yorkshire	April 1997	15
Leeds	West Yorkshire	October 1997	8
Bradford	West Yorkshire	September 1997	2
Wakefield	West Yorkshire	February 1996	8

Source:

DETR 1998 HIP Operational Information Form-Section 1F

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the current number of young persons aged (a) 16 to 18 years and (b) 18 to 25 years in hostel accommodation in London. [70725]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held centrally. The London Hostels Directory produced by Resource Information Services (RIS) provides details of over 26,000 bed spaces in a wide variety of hostels, shared houses and flats and other accommodation schemes. Some of these hostel schemes have a maximum age limit of 30 or under. Many other hostels in London will accept single homeless people from 18 to 65 years of age.

Aviculture

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will amend the guidelines on avicultural purposes in the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to ensure that birds bred or reared in captivity cannot be (a) sold for profit or personal gain, (b) used for medical experimentation and (c) used for any other purpose except the propagation of the species under English Nature approved conditions. [70906]

Mr. Meale: Licences to take birds for Avicultural purposes are issued only after consultation with English Nature. Conditions are imposed on these licences to ensure that the birds cannot be used for any other purpose. Birds can be sold only with the approval of the Department. There are no plans to amend the current procedure.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding the issuing of a licence to take 60 redwings from the wild for avicultural purposes; and if he will make a statement regarding their treatment and potential release. [70905]

Mr. Meale: My Department has received four representations concerning the licence to take sixty redwings. The licence issued was granted subject to the condition that the birds were taken solely for the purpose of aviculture.

Road Speed Limits

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the advantages of introducing a national road speed limit of 30 mph through rural villages with the option of 20 mph speed limit in specific villages; and if he will make a statement. [70946]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are currently engaged in a fundamental review of speed policy to take account of safety, the economy and the environment. The general issue of speed limits and, particularly, the effective management of speed on rural roads and through villages will be considered within the review.

Flying Regulations

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change the regulations governing the flying of civil aircraft while under the influence of drink or drugs; and if he will make a statement. [71050]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Yes. It is currently an offence for any person to act as a member of an aircraft's crew while under the influence of drink or drugs. However, there is no power for the police to require samples from someone suspected of committing an offence. While there is no evidence to suggest that alcohol or drug abuse by aircraft crew is a problem, it is our long-term intention to introduce legislation to set an alcohol limit for aircraft crew and to give the Police the power to require suspected offenders to provide samples for testing.

Groundwater Regulations 1998

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the guidance to the Groundwater Regulations 1998. [70422]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 11 February 1999]: Draft guidance on the Groundwater Regulations 1998 will be published for consultation as soon as possible, and I will inform the House when it is available. Subject to resolving points which arise in consultation, a final version of the guidance is expected to be published in July. Later this month the Environment Agency will issue interim guidance dealing with making applications for authorisations under the Regulations. This will cover transitional arrangements which allow applications to be made prior to 1 April (when the main provisions come into force) and, in the case of activities conducted by the same person which are substantially the same as those previously undertaken, deemed approved until otherwise disposed of by the Agency.

Seatbelts (Exemption)

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people have been granted exemption certificates from the wearing of seatbelts in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [70881]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is not collected. Certificates of Exemption From Compulsory Seat Belt Wearing are issued by medical practitioners to those patients who, in the opinion of the medical practitioner, should be exempt on medical grounds. There is no general requirement for this information to be sent to the Department.

EC Directive 96/59/EC

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the public consultation Regulations on the implementation of EC Directive 96/59/EC on the disposal of polychlorinated biphenyls and polychlorinated triphenyls. [71424]

Mr. Meacher: I am publishing the draft Regulations today. The public consultation will last for a period of six weeks.

A copy of the consultation documents have been placed in the Library of the House.

London Underground

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what safety advice was received from station staff at Swiss Cottage about the advisability of continuing services on the Metropolitan and Jubilee lines of the London Underground on 7 February; and if this advice was followed. [71083]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Advice from the Jubilee line was that, by implementing passenger flow control (in essence restricting the numbers of people entering the station) in accordance with the Swiss Cottage Station Emergency Plans, it was considered both safe and feasible to keep stations open and the train service operating. Trains were held at Finchley Road southbound to ensure that trains were not delayed in tunnels, and train operators were accompanied by managers to enable a quicker response should problems arise.

The Line Emergency Plan was put into operation by the Duty Operations Manager.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions between what hours on Sunday 7 February water penetrated the Jubilee and Metropolitan tube line tunnels between Finchley Road and Swiss Cottage on the London Underground; and to what depth. [71081]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The full facts of the incident have yet to be totally established. As is usual, a formal London Underground Incident Investigation Report is to be carried out.

However, London Underground Limited (LUL) believe that a 150 mm diameter Thames Water water main burst above the LUL network. It is believed this burst occurred around 1600 hrs on 7 February 1999.

Water entered over time into both the Jubilee and Metropolitan Lines. The major water ingress was on to the Metropolitan Line Southbound in the Finchley Road area. A maximum depth of approximately 1.2 m was evident along a length of tunnel of some 5 m. This depth of flooding lasted some 13 hours in total during Sunday 7 February and Monday 8 February 1999.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what safety procedures are in place in the event of water penetration into London Underground tunnels. [71082]

Ms Glenda Jackson: LUL has significant procedures in place to deal with water penetration. Permanent pumping arrangements consist of in situ sumps, pumps and drains for clearing normal day to day ingress with sufficient additional design capacity to cover additional storm flows. In addition, research is ongoing to improve the technical knowledge required to deal with rising groundwater under London and various courses of action are being taken to deal with this.

As regards flooding from burst water mains etc., remote sensing from permanent pump locations give automatic warnings to local control rooms and in many cases this is also linked direct to the specialist internal pumps contractor located with key emergency resource at Griffith House in the Edgware Road area. As these alarms are raised, together with any visual reports from operational staff, the incident becomes identified and logged at Line Control Centre. The Line Controller will alert the line's engineering services help desk (or line service centre) who will initiate the necessary emergency call-outs. Depending on the severity, additional engineering experience remains available on a 24 hour Duty roster.

In addition, special London Underground Safety Procedures are set out in the Incident Organisation Manual. This manual ensures provision for the safety of customers and employees and provides a fast and effective response to all types of incident with the objectives of containing the incident and minimising harm, loss of property and business and the potential loss of life.

Waste Plants (Energy Generation)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to encourage energy from waste plants to increase energy efficiency; [70766]

(2) if he will make a statement on the definition used by his Department of an energy from waste plant. [70765]

Mr. Meale: Although there is no statutory definition of an energy from waste plant, the term can be applied to any technology which makes use of waste to supply useful heat and/or power. The waste can include municipal, industrial, commercial and agricultural waste, or sewage. Energy can be recovered through a number of different technologies, including incineration, pyrolysis, gasification, and anaerobic digestion.

Energy from waste must be considered in the context of an integrated approach to waste management, and the Government support its use where economic and environmentally beneficial. Energy from waste schemes should be developed to the highest practicable levels of environmental protection and energy efficiency, as the Government will reflect in their forthcoming Waste Strategy, Climate Change Programme, and promotion of Combined Heat and Power.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to treat energy from waste plants on the same basis as other electricity and power generating bodies for rating purposes; [70764]

(2) what plans he has to issue regulations with regard to the rating of energy from waste plants prior to the Coventry appeal case being heard by the House of Lords. [70763]

Ms Armstrong: The next revaluation of property for non-domestic rates will take effect on 1 April 2000. We are currently reviewing the way in which waste to energy plants are treated under non-domestic rates and we will introduce any changes on 1 April 2000.

Signing Routes (M25)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many signs, and at what cost, are currently being installed by the Highways Agency to complete signing routes to the M25. [71075]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 15 February 1999:

The Minister for Transport in London, Glenda Jackson, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the cost of the London Primary Route Network Signing project, and the number of direction signs which will be replaced.

The estimated cost of the project, which involves the design and erection of some 5000 direction signs in the primary road network within the M25, is £27.4m (excluding VAT).

You might be interested to know that the project is being carried out in three phases. The first two phases, which are both currently underway, cover east-London and south-west London. Work on the third phase covering north-west London is expected to start later this year. The whole project is expected to be completed by early 2001.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70466]

Mr. Meale: 78 per cent. of my Department's staff, including agencies, are employed outside London following a number of relocation exercises over the years. The scope to decentralise more work will be kept under review.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70480]

Mr. Meale: Figures showing the number of staff for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, together with a regional breakdown of all Departmental staff, are given in the "Civil Service Statistics 1998", which has been placed in the Library.

Community Transport Services

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to support the development of community transport services for the (a) elderly and (b) disabled. [70453]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department gives funding support for the Community Transport Association's Advice and Information Service which provides a valuable source of guidance to operators of community transport services. In addition, we have commissioned a national review of the role of community and voluntary transport operators to help our understanding of the changing role that they play in meeting the needs of elderly and disabled people as well as other groups. The report is due to be received by the Department later this month and we will be studying the findings and recommendations carefully.

Fuel Duty Rebate

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning the extension of eligibility for fuel duty rebate to door-to-door services for disabled and elderly people. [70452]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have received a considerable number of representations about this matter, on which the review of voluntary transport commissioned by the Department makes recommendations. The review's report will be published shortly and we will consider all its recommendations carefully.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 536, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71007]

Mr. Meale: The expenditure on publications incurred by DETR and not included in my previous answer is some £3,759,000 since 1 May 1997.

The expenditure on research among focus groups was some £128,000. This figure was subsumed within the figure for public opinion research, contained in my answer of 16 December 1998.

It is not possible to give a breakdown on expenditure incurred by task forces and review bodies without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 536, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71004]

Mr. Meale: The expenditure on research and advertising incurred by my Department's executive agencies is:

£

Agency	Research	Advertising	Direct mail
DVLA	[1]124,000	5,000,000	[2]408,000
DSA	71,000	15,000	149,000
MCA	15,463	87,403	2,355
Vehicle Inspectorate	nil	9,850	nil
VCA	nil	nil	nil
QE11	nil	23,863	5,840
Planning Inspectorate	7,000	nil	nil
Highways Agency	60,000	74,000	nil

[1] Includes expenditure on public acceptance research on Statutory Off Road Notifications (SORN)

[2] Includes expenditure on mailings to support SORN

The expenditure on research and advertising incurred by DETR sponsored NDPBs is not available centrally and cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

The majority of the Department's research and advertising is placed through the Central Office of Information and therefore the expenditure for relevant work (other than mailings) carried out for the Department by the Central Office of Information is as provided in my answer of 16 December 1998.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70973]

Mr. Meale: DETR's Website was launched in November 1997 at a cost of some £5,000. DETR's core Website includes the Air Accidents Investigation Branch, Marine Accidents Investigation Branch, the Maritime and Coastguard Agency and the Vehicle Certification Agency, as well as two related sites, one providing air quality information and one with information aimed at local government. It also hosts several NDPBs—the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, the Expert Panel on Air Quality Standards and the Disabled Person's Transport Advisory Committee. The cost of running these sites in the financial year 1998–99 is some £320,000. This is within budget.

(i) The core Website publishes information covering the full [illegible] of the Department's responsibilities—aviation, construction, drinking water, environmental protection, housing, local government, London, local transport, mobility, planning, railways, regeneration, roads, road safety, shipping, wildlife and the countryside.

(ii) Average monthly hits are 1.65 million.

(iii) Estimated expenditure over the next three years: 1999–2000 £450,000; 2000–2001 £550,000; 2001–2002 £650,000.

The Department also runs a Website for one NDPB, The British Government Panel on Sustainable Development. Its set-up costs were some £2,000 and annual running cost is estimated at £2,500.

(i) This Website publishes its annual reports to the Prime Minister.

(ii) Average monthly hits are 1,000.

(iii) estimated expenditure over the next three years: 1999–2000 £3,000; 2000–2001 £3,500; 2001–2002 £4,000.

Management of other DETR agency and NDPB Websites is devolved to these bodies. The following information is available.

DETR Executive Agencies

Highways Agency Website—set-up costs of some £32,000; annual running cost estimate at £15,000.

(i) Publishes details of organisational structure and contact points, agency documentation, such as annual reports, information relating to individual road schemes, planned road improvements information, contractors information and a children's interactive section.

(ii) Average monthly hits: 47,000.

(iii) Estimated expenditure over the next three years: currently not finalised.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency Website—set-up costs of some £1,600; annual running cost estimated at £1,000.

(i) Publishes information on vehicle registration, driving licence information, answers to frequently asked questions, contact points, annual report and current consultation papers.

(ii) Average monthly hits 93,500

(iii) Estimated expenditure over the next three years: 1999–2000 £2,000; 2000–2001 £5,500; 2001–2002 £5,000.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency Sales of Marks Website—set-up costs of some £15,000; annual running cost estimated at £17,000.

(i) Established to advertise and promote DVLA's sale of Marks scheme. The buying of selected registrations.

(ii) Average monthly hits 690,000.

(iii) Estimated expenditure over the next three years: 1999–2000 £60,000; 2000–2001 £60,000; 2001–2002 £60,000.

Vehicle Inspectorate Website. Its set-up costs were some £200 and annual running cost is estimated at £1,200.

(i) This Website publishes Who we are, What we do, MOT test, HGV and PSV tests information, Single Vehicle Approval, information on other types of testing, enforcement, accidents, defects and recalls.

(ii) Average monthly hits are 1,000.

(iii) Estimated expenditure over the next three years: 1999–2000 £1,200; 2000–2001 £1,200; 2001–2002 £1,200.

Driving Standards Agency has no Website.

Vehicle Certification Agency part of the DETR core site.

Maritime and Coastguard Agency part of the DETR core site.

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre has no Website.

Planning Inspectorate Website—set-up costs of some £1,300; annual running cost estimated at £1,500.

(i) Publishes information concerning the work of the organisation and its objectives, subscription information for the Planning Inspectorate Journal; and information about the work of a Planning Inspector.

(ii) Average monthly hits 500

(iii) Estimated expenditure over the next three years: 1999–2000 £2,000; 2000–2001 £2,000; 2001–2002 £2,000.

Information for all DETRs, NDPBs and Government Offices can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information on the following major NDPB Websites is given:

Environment Agency Website—set-up costs of some £2000.00; annual running cost estimated at £105,000.

(i) Publishes state of the environment reports including Waste, radioactive substances, air quality and river quality. Guidance and information including flood defence, flood warning, waste information, water conservation, corporate information, board minutes, research and development programmes and summaries.

(ii) Average monthly hits 850,000.

(iii) Estimated expenditure over the next three years: 1999–2000 £350,000; 2000–2001 £1,000,000; 2001–2002 £1,000,000.

Audit Commission Website—set-up costs of some £30,000; annual running cost estimated at £15,000.

(i) Publishes a range of corporate information, publications catalogue, paid for subscription service for technical reviews, on-line local authorities performance indicators and directory of Audit appointments.

(ii) Average monthly visitors 2,100.

(iii) Estimated expenditure over the next three years: 1999–2000 £40,000; 2000–2001 £20,000; 2001–2002 £20,000.

Health and Safety Executive Website. Its set-up costs were nil and annual running cost is estimated at £6,000.

(i) This Website publishes information relating to health and safety at work and general information on HSE's business, how to obtain publications and standards of performance.

(ii) Average monthly hits are 190,000.

(iii) Estimated expenditure over the next three years: 1999–2000 £6,000; 2000–2001 £6,000; 2001–2002 £6,000.

Health and Safety Executive Commercial Website. Its set-up costs were £10,000 and annual running cost is estimated at £20,000.

(i) This Commercial Website sells two HSE Books on the Year 2000 and is developing as an e-commerce site.

(ii) Average monthly hits are 30,000.

(iii) Estimated expenditure over the next three years: 1999–2000 £20,000; 2000–2001 £20,000, 2001–2002 £20,000.

Annual Vehicle Emissions Test

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the introduction of an annual emissions test for all cars. [71078]

Ms Glenda Jackson: All cars have their exhaust emissions performance checked in the MOT test. Cars are tested annually from their third year of registration and we have no plans to change this arrangement.

Hereford Bypass

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what planning guidance has been sought from his Department in respect of a planning application for a development on the route of the proposed Hereford bypass; and if he will make a statement. [71182]

Mr. Caborn: The A49 Hereford North-South Relief Road (the Hereford bypass) has been withdrawn from the national trunk road programme. However, the Secretary of State is aware that the Herefordshire Council wishes to continue to protect the bypass line for possible future Herefordshire Council road schemes. He currently has before him a planning appeal in respect of proposed development on the line of the route and the hon. Member will therefore understand that I cannot prejudice his consideration of that appeal by commenting further on the issue.

Westfields Football Club

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultation he had with (a) Herefordshire Council and (b) other parties concerning planning application SS 980 800 P.F., Westfields Football Club, Hereford; and if he will make a statement. [R] [71183]

Mr. Caborn: The Secretary of State was not consulted on the planning merits of this case. Only certain planning applications are referred to the Secretary of State, for example departures from the development plan for the area, for him to decide whether or not to exercise his powers of call in for his own decision. Applicants would, however, be referred to him only where the local planning authority was minded to approve the proposal. In this case I understand the application was refused. The Highways Agency was consulted and raised no objection but directed that, if the application were approved, certain conditions aimed at protecting the interests of road safety on the A465 trunk road, should be included.

The applicant has a right to appeal against the decision of the Herefordshire Council, which would come before the Secretary of State, and the hon. Member will understand, therefore, that it would not be appropriate for me to comment on this case.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy that local authorities should set each head of their budgets at the figure published by central Government as a standard spending assessment. [70930]

Ms Armstrong: No. It is for each authority to decide its spending priorities. Standard Spending Assessments are a means of distributing grant.

Permanent Housing (Homeless)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to restore the duty on local authorities to find permanent housing for the homeless; and if he will make a statement. [70890]

Mr. Raynsford: Shortly after taking office, the Government made regulations which require local housing authorities to give reasonable preference in the allocation of permanent social tenancies to people who are owed a main homelessness duty, that is, those who have been found to be unintentionally homeless and in priority need. We have also made an order which requires that, where authorities discharge this duty by assisting applicants to secure alternative accommodation for themselves, the authority must be satisfied that the accommodation will be available for at least 2 years. These measures have strengthened the position of homeless people and the Government are presently considering what other steps should be taken to ensure that they get the assistance and protection that they need.

Vehicle Ownership

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) privately owned motor vehicles, (b) company cars and (c) commercial vans and lorries there were in the United Kingdom at the latest date for which figures are available. [70696]

Dr. Reid: According to Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency files, at the end of September 1998 there were 23.43 million motorcars with a current licence in Great Britain, of which 2.43 million had a company address as the registered keeper.

At the end of September 1998, there were 2.69 million licensed vehicles with some form of goods body type, the majority of which were light goods vehicles taxed within the private and light goods taxation group, but including 417,000 goods vehicles in tax classes 1 and 2, with revenue weight over 3.5 tonnes gross.

While vehicles pay excise duty according to their taxation class, determined on the basis of their construction and use, DVLA records, in general, contain no further information on the purpose for which vehicles are used. The degree to which the above goods vehicles are wholly or partially involved in commercial activity is not known.

Comparable statistics for Northern Ireland are prepared by the Department of Environment (Northern Ireland). Figures taken from the Northern Ireland Transport Statistics report for the end of 1997, showed 583,000 licensed cars, and 68,000 vehicles with all form of goods body type, including 18,000 goods vehicles in tax classes 1 and 2, with revenue weight over 3.5 tonnes gross.

Registered Social Landlords

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend the permissible additional purposes or objects of registered social landlords so that they can play a full part in regeneration activities; and if he will make a statement. [71642]

Ms Armstrong: We wish to ensure that Registered Social Landlords (RSLs) can fully engage in the government's wider social regeneration agenda. My Department is therefore consulting interested bodies on a draft of an Order which would extend the permissible additional purposes or objects of RSLs in England and Wales.

The Order's broad purpose is to enable an RSL to provide services and amenities to people who are not resident in the RSL's property, so long as some of its own tenants benefit; and in certain circumstances to engage in regeneration activities such as the New Deal for Communities.

Section 2 of the Housing Act 1996 specifies the bodies that are eligible for registration as non charitable social landlords. For two categories of body (a society registered under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act 1965 and a company registered under the Companies Act 1985) the section sets out conditions that must be satisfied for registration. In addition to the core purposes or objects, there are permissible additional purposes or objects.

The draft Order proposes further permissible additional purposes or objects that such a body may have, namely:

> carrying out certain activities, including the provision of land, amenities or services, for persons who are not residents of the body, where any such activity is also being carried out for the body's own residents;
>
> where the body is managing certain accommodation, providing amenities or services for residents both of that accommodation and of other accommodation;
>
> where persons are benefiting from activities already referred to in or specified under Section 2, carrying out regeneration activities for the benefit of those persons, or for the benefit both of those persons and others.

The proposed Order would substantially increase the range of activities that certain RSLs may undertake. RSLs will need to consider carefully the appropriate sources of funding for activities outside conventional housing management and the extent to which these activities could cause risks. Activities that support an RSL's core business by helping to maintain sustainable communities may help lower costs and exposure to risk. But certain types of diversification may increase the sector's risk exposure and this raises difficult regulatory issues. To address this concern the Housing Corporation is today issuing a discussion paper on how it might develop its regulatory framework.

Bus Fuel Rebate Scheme

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate expenditure on the bus fuel rebate scheme in each year from 1999–2000 to 2003–04. [71435]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Expenditure on fuel duty rebate for Great Britain as a whole is expected to be £270 million in the current financial year. Expenditure in future years will depend on the total of fuel consumed in operating eligible routes for which bus operators make claims for rebate, and on decisions still to be taken on the proportion of duty paid to be rebated in each year.

Emissions (Pollutants)

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to improve the availability of information on emissions of polluting substances in England and Wales. [71707]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency currently compiles an inventory of polluting substances emitted from processes subject to Integrated Pollution Control in England and Wales, the Chemical Release Inventory. Following an extended period of consultation, the Agency announced on 27 November 1998 that it was varying the authorisations of all IPC processes to require the provision of data on a more consistent basis. The Agency, in consultation with stakeholders, has developed a standard list of pollutants and reporting thresholds. All operations with processes subject to IPC will now have to report on their emissions of these substances where they exceed the thresholds. The Agency is also planning at a future date to extend the inventory to require other processes it regulates, such as landfill sites and sewage treatment works, to report on their emissions in the same way.

The Agency has varied IPC authorisations to require information about emissions during 1998 to be provided in the new format. Where measured data are not available operators will be able to calculate or estimate their emissions. The Agency hopes to make the new emission database available in a searchable form on the Internet during the first half of 1999. The Agency has also announced that it is forming an advisory committee to advise on the development of the new database and keep the pollutants reported and thresholds under review.

I welcome the improvements the Agency is making to the Chemical Release Inventory. The timely provision of comprehensive emissions data in a readily accessible format is necessary to secure the public's right to know about environmental pollution. I particularly welcome the fact that emissions data will be collected on a consistent basis from all 2,000 IPC processes and that the Agency has made an early start by collecting this data for 1998.

Older Drivers

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons drivers approaching the age of 70 years are asked for the country of their birth; what purpose such a question serves in determining a person's fitness to drive; and if he will make a statement. [71137]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The second EC Directive on the driving licence requires the holder's place of birth to be shown on the driving licence.

Road Works (Central London)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions who is responsible for co-ordinating road works in Central London. [70812]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 each London borough is responsible for co-ordination of its own works and statutory undertakers' street works in its area. We have issued a Code of Practice for the Co-ordination of Street Works which requires the street authority to co-ordinate the execution of works of all kinds in the streets for which it is responsible.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make an assessment of the effectiveness of the Town and Country Planning (Playing Fields) (England) Direction 1998 in maintaining the number of school playing fields; and if he will estimate the number of school playing fields (a) which remain in use and (b) which were closed in each of the last five years. [70979]

Mr. Raynsford: The Town and Country Planning (Playing Fields) (England) Direction 1998 came into effect on 23 December last year. No planning applications have been determined by the Secretary of State as a result of referral under the Direction.

The remaining questions are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, although I understand that his Department does not collect this information.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Export Licences (Indonesia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 1 February 1999, Official Report, column 502, on export licences, if he will list the number of licences granted to Indonesia, by category, for the period from May 1997 to 10 May 1998. [69395]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the then Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett), on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 124–26, to the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Baker); and the replies given by the then Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), of 8 April 1998, Official Report, columns 345–46, and 3 June 1998 Official Report, column 227, to my hon. Friend.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to publish the findings of the Renewable Energy Review; and if he will make a statement on targets for renewable energy generation beyond 2010. [66197]

Mr. Battle: I intend to issue a review document shortly. It will examine the status and prospects for renewables, and will suggest possible options for a future programme and invite comments in order to assist us in finalising our future policy.

I am concerned to look up to and beyond 2010 for continued growth in renewables. A growing contribution from new and renewable energy is likely to be required for any future greenhouse gas reduction commitments, provide additional competition and diversity in the generation market, and a UK industry to supply home and export markets. It is not the case that any target represents an end in itself. It is a step along the way to achieving a sustainable energy supply.

Former Secretary of State

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what procedures were put in place to ensure there was (a) no conflict of interest and (b) no appearance of conflict of interest when the former Secretary of State, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), met BAe during his period as Secretary of State. [66601]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 19 January 1999]: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandleson) gave to the hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie) on 7 December 1998, Official Report, column 65.

Research Establishments (Privatisation)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the previously publicly owned research establishments that have been privatised in the last 10 years, indicating their current owners. [69662]

Mr. Battle: Government owned research establishments transferred to the private sector in the last ten years are listed as follows:

Establishment	Current owners	Date privatised
Agricultural Development Advisory Service (ADAS)	ADAS Consulting Ltd.	April 1997
Atomic Energy Authority (AEA)	AEA Technology plc	September 1996
Laboratory of the Government Chemist (LGC)	LGC (Teddington) Ltd.	April 1996
National Engineering Laboratory (NEL)	TUV Product Service (UK) Ltd. and Siemens Holdings Ltd.	November 1995
Warren Spring Laboratory (WSL)	AEA Technology plc	September 1996
Building Research Establishment (BRE)	Foundation for Building Environment—consortium of management buyout and other bodies	March 1997
Transport Research Laboratory (TRL)	Transport Research Foundation consortium of management buyout and other bodies	March 1996

Space Research Programmes

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the extent of current UK involvement in US and EU space research and programmes. [70199]

Mr. Battle: The UK pursues its space programme primarily in collaboration with the member states of the European Space Agency (ESA). In addition, researchers collaborate extensively, both directly and through ESA, with the United States and the EU.

Collaboration with the European Union focuses on the Framework research programme into which Member States contribute. The four year Framework IV concluded in 1998. UK firms won some 16–17 per cent. of the available funding with a major part played by our strong academic community; small and medium-sized enterprises have been particularly successful. The UK space sector has especially benefited from the Centre for Earth Observation (CEO) and environment and climate programmes. For example, British firms took part in a project to determine how satellite technology can be used to complement Earth Observation and other sources of information on agriculture and forestry. There will be considerable opportunities under the Framework V programme and my officials are working to ensure that British companies are fully involved.

Collaboration with the United States takes place in fields such as environmental science, space-based astronomy and planetary science.

The UK also collaborates with the US through ESA programmes and through EUMETSAT, which provides operational weather systems. There is also strong collaboration between British and American scientists in the global change programme and participation in major NASA field experiments. The UK has provided instruments for several missions carried out as a partnership between ESA and NASA. Missions active at the moment are Ulysses, Cassini-Huygens and SOHO. The UK is also a strong contributor to the future missions FIRST, Planck Surveyor and the Next Generation Space Telescope, which will involve ESA partnership with NASA. The UK is the leading European user of the Hubble Space Telescope.

Petrol Suppliers (Four Star Petrol)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has held with major petrol suppliers on their plans and timetable for withdrawal of four star petrol from sale at filling stations and for the reprovision of facilities for essential supplies; and if he will make a statement. [69759]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 8 February 1999]: My Officials have had several meetings with the major petrol suppliers on this issue to ensure that suitable alternatives will be available to motorists.

Plutonium Shipments (Japan)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many naval vessels are planned to provide protection for each shipment of plutonium fuel to Japan. [70661]

Mr. Battle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) on 18 January 1999, Official Report, columns 364–65.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effects of the decline of the euro against sterling on payments of regional and other aid from the EU. [70618]

Mr. Wills: Allocations of funding by the Commission to Structural Funds programmes are made in Euro. Offers of grant from the programmes are made in sterling and budgets are managed to minimise the exchange rate risks to the Exchequer. The Government will meet all legitimate claims for Structural Funds grant payments.

Engineering

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives his Department has taken since 1 May 1997 to support the engineering profession in the United Kingdom. [70703]

Mr. Battle: My Department has today agreed to provide funding of up to £175,000 p.a. for three years, with the possibility of support for a further two years thereafter subject to satisfactory progress, towards support for the promotion of engineering. This includes up to £425,000 p.a. specifically for the work being planned by Quinco, subject to individual projects satisfying my Department's approval procedures. The largest single item in the Quinco allocation is a sum of £250,000 p.a. towards the Engineering Image Campaign on which the Engineering Council has been working in partnership with EEF and EMTA. £75,000 p.a. is being set aside for existing projects established under the Action for Engineering initiative, of which the most notable of these is the Science, Engineering, Technology and Mathematics Network (SETNET).

I have also agreed today to provide £34,000 to the Engineering Council towards the costs of producing an updated version of their Environmental Guidelines for Engineers, which highlight the importance of sustainable development.

Since 1 May 1997, the Department has also provided funding for the Women Into Science and Engineering (WISE) Outlook Initiative Programme (£35,000).

Minimum Wage

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what evidence he has obtained that employers offering low-paid work are cutting the hours of employees in advance of the introduction of the minimum wage. [70884]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have received two letters giving details of employers who are cutting their workers' hours of work in advance of the introduction of the national minimum wage.

Cigarette Lighters

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the report of the findings of the recent European Commission investigation into imported cigarette lighters which purport to be refillable in order to circumvent the anti-dumping duty to be published. [70805]

Mr. Wilson: The Council Regulation resulting from the Commission's investigation was published as Council Regulation (EC) No 192–1999 of 25 January 1999 in the "Official Journal of the European Communities", No. L22 of 29 January 1999. The Regulation entered into force on 30 January 1999 and, broadly, extends the application of the anti-dumping duty on disposable, non-refillable lighters originating in China to such lighters originating in, or consigned from, Taiwan and to refillable lighters (of less than a certain value) originating in both China and Taiwan.

Longbridge

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with BMW on the future of their investment in the United Kingdom. [70913]

Mr. Battle: Both my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and DTI officials have been maintaining close contact with BMW over the situation at Longbridge. Following last week's Board changes we understand that BMW's investment review of their medium car strategy is still underway and the company continues to look closely at Longbridge as a possible location. No immediate decision is expected.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the importance of Rover's Longbridge plant to manufacturing industry in the Midlands. [70912]

Mr. Battle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recognises that the plant plays a major role, though no specific estimate of its direct importance has been made. Longbridge currently employs around 14,000 people and a considerably larger number of jobs in the UK's component supply industry are likely to be reliant on the plant.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has had from the Birmingham Economic Development Partnership concerning the future of Rover's Longbridge plant. [70911]

Mr. Battle: During my right hon. Friend's visit to Longbridge on 8 February, he had the opportunity to discuss some of the issues surrounding the future of the plant with members of the Birmingham Economic Development Partnership.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of Rover's Longbridge plant. [70910]

Mr. Battle: I welcome the confirmation given by BMW last year that the new Mini will be produced at Longbridge.

BMW's review of future medium vehicle production at Longbridge is still underway and no decision is expected immediately. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the DTI are maintaining close links with BMW and will take every opportunity to represent the interests of Rover in an effort to secure the right investment outcome for the plant.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has had from the trade unions representing employees at Rover. [70914]

Mr. Battle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and his predecessor have both maintained close contact with unions at Rover over Longbridge. Most recently, my right hon. Friend took the opportunity to talk to both unions and management when he visited the plant on Monday 8 February. He was grateful to both groups for giving him their views on the present situation.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on British Sugar plc's application to build a new combined heat and power gas-fired power station. [71524]

Mr. Battle: I have today granted consent under Section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 for a 70 MW gas-fired Combined Heat and Power station at the British Sugar factory in York. The station has also today been given planning permission and clearance (as a gas-fired station) under Section 14 of the Energy Act 1976. The decisions have been taken in accordance with the policy set out in the White Paper entitled "Conclusions of the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation and Government response to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee" (Cm 4071).

The Government's recent White Paper set out a stricter consents policy towards applications for new gas-fired power stations but indicated that the Government's concerns might be outweighed by the environmental and other benefits of CHP. The Government are of the view that this project falls within the description of CHP identified in the White Paper and the granting of Section 36 consent is consistent with the policy set out in it.

German Nuclear Waste

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what discussions he has had with the German Government concerning the possibility of converting contracts for the reprocessing of German spent nuclear fuel into contracts for the conditioning, temporary storage, transport cask construction, transport to Germany and building of storage facilities in Germany of German spent nuclear fuel, German nuclear waste and German separated plutonium now at Sellafield; and if he will make a statement; [70487]

(2) if his Department has undertaken a study of how contracts for the reprocessing of German spent nuclear fuel at Sellafield could be converted into contracts for dealing with German spent nuclear fuel, nuclear waste and separated plutonium now at Sellafield; and if he will make a statement. [70488]

Mr. Battle: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I have recently held discussions with members of the German government at which we reminded them that the United Kingdom government regard BNFL's contracts with the German utilities to be legally binding and we would expect them to be honoured.

Since 1976 all new contracts for reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for return of wastes. The government intend that such options should be exercised and that wastes arising from reprocessing be returned to the country of origin.

The construction of storage facilities for German spent nuclear fuel and nuclear waste in Germany is a matter for the German government.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those nations which have (a) already signed and (b) declared an intent to sign, legally binding contracts with British Nuclear Fuels to purchase MOX fuel. [70489]

Mr. Battle: Contracts and contracted terms between BNFL and its customers for the supply of goods and services are normally matters for the parties concerned. BNFL have already supplied MOX fuel to customers in Switzerland, Germany and Japan from its MOX Demonstration Facility at Sellafield.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the technical feasibility of returning spent nuclear fuel, nuclear waste and separated plutonium currently at Sellafield to Germany; and if he will make a statement on the technical studies undertaken. [70486]

Mr. Battle: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I have made it clear in our recent meetings with members of the German government that all waste arising from reprocessing, and all unreprocessed German spent fuel at Sellafield will be returned.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what studies his Department has undertaken of the availability of containers to transport German spent nuclear fuel, German nuclear waste and German separated plutonium now at Sellafield; and if he will make a statement of the results of them. [70485]

Mr. Battle: My Department has not undertaken a study of the availability of containers to transport German spent nuclear fuel, German nuclear waste and German separated plutonium now at Sellafield. All flasks for the transport of spent nuclear fuel are required to conform fully with the safety and security recommendations of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reason the Government have decided to oppose attempts by (a) India and (b) other developing countries to ban the import of genetically modified organisms. [70997]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no intention of blocking attempts by India or any other country to ban the import of genetically modified organisms. Negotiations are under way to develop an international instrument (the Biosafety Protocol to the convention on Biological Diversity) which will cover transboundary movement of living modified organisms. It has been the Government's position throughout these negotiations that the protocol should contain clear provision allowing countries to withhold agreement to the importing, into their country, of genetically modified organisms where they consider such a measure is necessary. This must be based on sound scientific grounds, assessing the risk to the environment or to human health of environmental release.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on his policy on the amalgamation of magistrates' courts committee areas. [70590]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor and I have made it clear on a number of occasions that we see many benefits accruing from the greater alignment of magistrates' courts committees with criminal justice agency boundaries. I refer the hon. and learned Member to my statement to this House of 29 October 1997, Official Report, columns 901–05.

In particular, alignment will lead to an increased familiarity with each other's policies; improved co-ordination in the implementation of national and regional policies; improved relations between the chief officers of each agency; and the removal of duplication of effort and the speeding up of decision making at a strategic level. This is in addition to financial benefits which can be realised by the magistrates' courts committees concerned, all of which are likely to lead to a more effective, and more efficient, service.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the rate of case through-put in magistrates' courts in (a) urban and (b) rural areas. [70589]

Mr. Hoon: The data held on magistrates' courts are not available broken down by urban and rural areas. While an urban/rural breakdown is not available, magistrates' courts committees can alternatively be grouped into English metropolitan areas, English non-metropolitan areas, London and Wales.

The Lord Chancellor's Department magistrates' courts Management Information System collects information on magistrates' courts activity. One of the indicators produced by the Management Information System is the number of completed weighted cases per sitting hour.

In 1997, for magistrates' courts committees in English metropolitan areas the completed weighted caseload dealt with per sitting hour was 10.4, for those in English non-metropolitan areas and also those in the London area the figure was 9.9 per hour, and for those in Wales the figure was 10.4 per hour. For comparison, the completed weighted caseload dealt with per sitting hour in all magistrates' courts in England and Wales was 10.1 per hour.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the savings or additional costs to public funds caused by (a) the public, (b) lawyers, (c) the police, (d) witnesses, (e) defendants and (f) magistrates' through the closure of magistrates' courts. [70591]

Mr. Hoon: Magistrates' courts are locally managed by magistrates' courts committees under the provisions of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. Decisions concerning the location and number of magistrates' courts in their area are for the relevant MCC to determine. A local authority that contributes financially may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure. In the event of an appeal, costs are only one factor to be considered. Other common themes are accessibility and facilities for all court users, workload, and the extra time and distance users may have to travel. In the absence of an appeal, however, the Lord Chancellor plays no part in the process.

Court Buildings

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the new court buildings whose construction and refurbishment are being financed through the PFI; if, he will list in each case, the annual cost to his Department; and if he will estimate in each case the cost of the same works on a wholly publicly funded basis. [70592]

Mr. Hoon: No contracts have yet been let for new courthouses under the PFI. Schemes under procurement include:

(a) for the Court Service: Sheffield Family Court; Crown Court centres at Ipswich and Cambridge; and the Probate Records Centre; and

(b) for magistrates' courts (procured by local authorities): courts at Hereford and Worcester (Worcester, Hereford, Kidderminster and Redditch); Humberside (Hull, Beverley and Bridlington); Derbyshire (Derby, Chesterfield and New Mills); and Manchester.

As contracts are under negotiation it is not yet possible to provide details of annual charges, or estimates which will be used in assessing the value for money of bids.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70474]

Mr. Hoon: The following table provides the required information on staffing numbers. The location of the Department's staff throughout England and Wales is detailed on a map, copies of which I have placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Staffing figures for the Lord Chancellor's Department and its Agencies as at 12 February 1999

	Lord Chancellor's Department[1]	Court Service	Public Trust Office
London and South East England[2]	5,553	4,163	544
Wales	425	424	0
Scotland	2	2	0
Northern England	411	400	0
North-West England	1,228	1,210	0
Yorkshire and North Lincolnshire	860	859	0
East Midlands	594	594	0
West Midlands	783	781	0
East Anglia	242	242	0
South West England	580	580	0
Total	10,678	9,255	544

[1] Including HQ, Agencies and Associated Offices.

[2] The standard report on staffing numbers does not differentiate between staff in London and the South East and the provision of this breakdown would, therefore, have incurred a disproportionate cost. However, it should be noted that all of the Public Trust Office staff are located in central London.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70460]

Mr. Hoon: None. This Department is already a national employer with staff located all over England and Wales, including many areas with higher levels of unemployment.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71335]

Mr. Hoon: Paragraph 79 of the Ministerial Code makes it clear that Ministers should inform hon. Members in advance of planned visits to their constituencies. Ministers in the Department undertake visits to all parts of the country, but records of official visits are not held on a constituency basis.

Staff Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [70958]

Mr. Hoon: The current staff mileage rates for the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Court Service and the Public Trust Office are:

	Standard rate of motor mileage allowance per mile
	Up to 4,000 miles	Over 4,000 miles
Up to 1000cc	28p	17p
1001 to 1500cc	35p	20p
1501 to 2000cc	45p	25p
Over 2000cc	63p	36p

Public transport rate of motor mileage allowance: 25.5p per mile.

Cycle mileage allowance rate: 6.7p per mile.

The current staff mileage rates for HM Land Registry are:

	Standard rate of motor mileage allowance per mile
	Up to 4,000 miles	Over 4,000 miles
All cc	40p	22.5p

Public transport rate of motor mileage allowance: 25.7p per mile

Cycle mileage allowance rate: 6.2p per mile

The current staff mileage rates for the Public Record Office are:

Standard rate of motor mileage allowance: 40 per mile

Public transport rate of motor mileage allowance: 23.8 per mile

Cycle mileage allowance rate: 6.2p per mile

The current passenger supplement rates per mile for the Lord Chancellor's Department and its executive agencies are:

First passenger: 2p

Further additional passenger(s): 1p per passenger

These rates are currently being reconsidered in the light of the Government's environmental policies, with a view to encouraging greater use of public transport.

The Government have set targets to have green transport plans in place for all headquarters buildings and main agency and government office buildings by March 1999, and for all other key buildings by March 2000. The aim of these plans will be to identify practical measures, tailored to the circumstances of individual sites, aimed at promoting greener travel.

SCOTLAND

Dr. Arpad Pusztai

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the terms of Dr. Arpad Pusztai's retirement from the Rowett Institute preclude him from (a) discussing his recent research work and (b) pursuing similar research elsewhere. [70050]

Mr. Macdonald: The terms of Dr. Pusztai's employment required that disclosure of any information or data collected in the course of his employment required the approval of the Director of the Rowett Research Institute. The same restrictions apply after employment has ceased. The Institute is encouraging Dr. Pusztai to prepare his results for publication through the standard channels of peer reviewed scientific journals.

Dr. Pusztai is free to pursue similar research elsewhere.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. [69916]

Mr. Dewar: The information is as follows:

Executive NDPBs with a statutory base

Accounts Commission for Scotland
Crofters Commission
Deer Commission for Scotland
Highlands and Islands Enterprise
National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland
National Galleries of Scotland
National Library of Scotland
National Museums of Scotland
Parole Board for Scotland
Royal Botanic Garden
Scottish Agricultural Wages Board
Scottish Children's Reporter Administration
Scottish Conveyancing and Executry Services Board
Scottish Council for Educational Technology
Scottish Enterprise
Scottish Environment Protection Agency
Scottish Further Education Funding Council
Scottish Higher Education Funding Council
Scottish Homes
Scottish Hospital Endowments Research trust
Scottish Legal Aid Board
Scottish Medical Practices Committee
Scottish Natural Heritage
Scottish Qualifications Authority
Scottish Tourist Board
Scottish Water and Sewerage Customers Council

Executive NDPBs subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner

Crofters Commission
Deer Commission for Scotland
Scottish Arts Council
Scottish Environment Protection Agency
Scottish Homes
Scottish Legal Aid Board
Scottish Medical Practices Committee
Scottish Natural Heritage
Scottish Sports Council
Scottish Tourist Board

In addition, the following executive NDPBs will shortly be brought within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner:

Accounts Commission for Scotland
National Galleries of Scotland
National Library of Scotland
National Museums of Scotland
Parole Board for Scotland
Royal Botanic Garden
Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland
Scottish Agricultural Wages Board
Scottish Children's Reporter Administration
Scottish Community Education Council
Scottish Council for Educational Technology
Scottish Further Education Funding Council
Scottish Further Education Unit
Scottish Higher Education Funding Council
Scottish Qualifications Authority
Scottish Screen
Scottish Water and Sewerage Customers Council

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what totals at constant prices have been expended or are planned in the Comprehensive Spending Review for Scottish local authority revenue expenditure in the years from 1995–96 to 2001–02 for (a) education, (b) social work, (c) police, (d) fire, (e) housing, (f) environmental services and (g) recreation and leisure services. [69717]

Mr. McLeish: The table shows local authority outturn figures and estimates for 1995–96 to 1998–99 for current expenditure on the various services (excluding loan and leasing charges). Local authority plans for the period covered by the CSR are not known yet and the table shows Government estimates of Grant Aided Expenditure for these years; all figures are at constant prices.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Service expenditure: expended/planned 1995–96 to 2001–02

£ million

Service	Final Outturn 1995–96	Provisional Outturn 1996–97	Provisional Outturn 1997–98	Budget Estimate 1998–99	GAE[1] 1999–2000	GAE[1] 2000–01	GAE[1] 2001–02
Education	2,621	2,474	2,440	2,438	2,528	2,573	2,609
Social Work	1,112	1,102	1,105	1,108	1,074	1,089	1,096
Police	650	657	688	680	698	706	709
Fire	164	164	167	171	174	178	180
Leisure and Recreation	338	320	303	286	225	—[3]	—[3]
Environmental Services	64	58	53	53	56	—[3]	—[3]
Housing[2]	23.9	20.4	18.7	15.7	15.3	14.9	14.6

[1] GAE: Grant Aided Expenditure

[2] Housing: The figures above are final outturn figures up until 1998–99 which are estimates. The figures covering the final 3 years in the table show planned expenditure

[3] Not available

Edinburgh College of Art

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will delay a decision about possible major changes in the status of Edinburgh College of Art until the Scottish Parliament has time to consider it. [69738]

Mrs. Liddell: There is no submission at present before the Secretary of State seeking approval for a change in the status of Edinburgh College of Art.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Specialist Colleges

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future status of the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama, the Glasgow School of Art and the Edinburgh College of Art. [69739]

Mrs. Liddell: The Secretary of State has not received any proposals for a change in the status of these institutions.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Teachers

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which councils have been unable to provide supply teachers to schools on occasions when they were needed to provide cover because of sickness or absence of teachers on in-service training in the (a) last and (b) current session. [69732]

Mrs. Liddell: The Scottish Office does not at present have the information requested. However, we are aware that some local authorities are having difficulty in maintaining adequate numbers of supply teachers to provide cover and will shortly be undertaking work to obtain information from authorities on the demand for and deployment of supply teachers. The Planning Group on Teacher Supply, which is chaired by the Scottish Office and includes representatives from the education authorities, teacher education institutions, General Teaching Council and the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council, will be considering how this information can best be taken into account in teacher work force planning.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to each of the Government's public consultations. [69775]

Mr. Dewar: Where it is appropriate to do so, my Department publishes an assessment of responses received to public consultations. A recent example is contained in Annex D to the Report of the Consultative Steering Group (CSG) on the Scottish Parliament.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Roads Budget

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the increase in the Roads Department budget in Scotland in the current financial year over the previous financial year in (a) cash and (b) percentage terms. [70265]

Mr. Macdonald: The motorway and trunk road budget for the year from 1 April 1999 is £162.8 million (net), an increase of £10.1 million (6.6%) over this year.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Roads Review

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the results of the Roads Review in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [70266]

Mr. Macdonald: The consultation period on the Government's proposed framework for the appraisal of trunk road investment in Scotland ended on 16 October 1998. The responses have now been analysed and some useful suggestions from respondents incorporated into the appraisal framework. We are now considering the best way forward and the outcome of the review will be announced as soon as is practicable.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the specialist units which provide services to chronic fatigue syndrome/ME patients in Scotland. [70164]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is not available in the form requested. The detailed planning and provision of health services, including those for patients diagnosed with chronic syndrome or ME, is a matter for Health Boards and NHS Trusts.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Scottish Parliament Building

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the projected capital cost for the Scottish Parliament Building of (a) furniture, (b) catering facilities, (c) exterior decoration and (d) interior decoration; what is the total estimated cost of the building; and how many (i) MSPs, (ii) Parliamentary staff and (iii) ancillary staff will be accommodated in the new building. [69102]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The budget for the construction of the new Parliament building at Holyrood continues to be estimated at £50 million excluding fees and VAT. The cost of interior and exterior decoration is included in this figure, as is the provision of catering facilities and kitchen accommodation. The cost of furniture cannot be calculated until the final designs are completed. The building will accommodate 129 MSPs and around 300 Parliamentary staff. The number of ancillary staff will depend on the terms of any contracts which are in place when the Parliament moves to Holyrood.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals have been put forward by (a) his Department and (b) the City of Edinburgh Council to cope with the additional traffic which will be generated by the new Scottish Parliament building and large developments nearby. [69712]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Office and the City of Edinburgh Council, together with LEEL, Historic Scotland and the Palace of Holyroodhouse, are currently considering traffic management issues in the Holyrood area. In the light of a study by Halcrow Fox Associates, possible options for roads in the area include closing the bottom of Holyrood Road and traffic calming Horse Wynd. A further study is presently under way which will help inform proposals relating to improving access to the area by means other than by car.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what finance was provided for the increase of nurses' pay in Scotland in 1999–2000 in the Comprehensive Spending Review; and what the cost of the actual increase approved is estimated to be. [69715]

Mr. Galbraith: While no specific funds were provided for nurses' pay in the Comprehensive Spending Review, the outcome provided sufficient funds to meet the full costs of the nurses pay award. The cost of the actual increase approved for nurses' pay is estimated to be £49 million.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers the Scottish Parliament will have to amend the Vaccine Damage Payments Acts 1979. [69737]

Mr. Galbraith: The subject matter of the Vaccine Damage Payments Scheme is a reserved matter under the Scotland Act 1998. The scheme for payments under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 is being reviewed by the Department of Social Security, and when this is concluded consideration will be given to the appropriateness of devolving the legislation as it affects Scotland.

Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions proceedings have taken place under section 7 of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998; and if he will make a statement. [70304]

Mr. McLeish: There are currently no records in the centrally held database of court proceedings of any proceedings in Scottish courts under section 7 of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998. Any such proceedings that do arise will be included in the annual statistics on court proceedings. The 1998 figures are expected to be published later on this year.

Healthcare Waste Disposal

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list designated sites in Scotland licensed for the landfill disposal of healthcare waste. [69206]

Mr. Macdonald: Information on sites in Scotland licensed for the landfill disposal of healthcare waste is not held centrally. Information about all waste management licences is available on public registers held by the Scottish Environment Protection Agency.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the forecast costs to the Lanarkshire health trusts of the disposal of waste by category of disposal (a) in the current financial year and (b) in each of the projected financial years for which figures are available. [69209]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 9 February 1999]: In formulating their forecast costs, the Lanarkshire NHS Trusts have properly anticipated the increasing cost of compliance with more stringent EU legislation governing the disposal of clinical waste. However, the increases in operational efficiency through the use of new technologies should see these costs falling. The forecast costs to the Lanarkshire NHS Trusts are as follows:

	£000
1998–99	411
1999–2000	425
2000–09	434

per annum

Gaelic

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the progress of the European Language Initiative in compiling its Gaelic-English dictionary for the public sector; what organisations are involved in the process of compilation; to what extent the project will contribute to the development of Gaelic terminology for the Scottish Parliament; when he expects the project to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [69720]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 10 February 1999]: The Scottish Office gave a grant of £10,000 in March 1998 to The European Language Initiative for the initial phase of development work on their Gaelic-English dictionary. The initial phase is now complete. Funding for the rest of the project is currently being sought. The project will be carried out in co-operation with a number of Gaelic organisations. It will be for the Scottish Parliament itself to decide the place of Gaelic in the proceedings of the Parliament.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Student Support

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on changes in the student support and tuition fee arrangements for Scottish domiciled students in academic year 1999–2000. [71876]

Mrs. Liddell: I am today publishing the main rates of loans and grants which will be available to students in full-time higher education in 1999–2000; and the level of tuition fees. I am also publishing the rates for those postgraduate courses which do not attract student loans, together with the rates for the various supplementary grants payable to eligible undergraduate and vocational postgraduate students.

The total support available to undergraduate students in 1999–2000 will be 2.5 per cent. higher than in 1998–99, thus maintaining its value in real terms. Postgraduate maintenance grants and supplementary grants will also be increased by a similar amount.

These changes are consistent with those for England and Wales announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. Details have been placed in the Library.

Student Nurses

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many student nurses there are in (a) the Argyll and Clyde Board and (b) Scotland as a whole; and if he will make a statement. [69798]

Mr. Galbraith: As at 31 march 1998, there were a total of 7,059 student nurses training in Scotland. Of this number, 898 students receive their training at the University of Paisley.

The training of nurses is no longer directly linked to individual Health Board areas, but through contracts let by the Scottish Office with 7 providers in the tertiary education sector. The contract with the University of Paisley covers training formerly provided within the Argyll and Clyde and Ayrshire and Arran Health Boards.

The supply of and demand for nurses in Scotland are assessed annually, taking account of employers' expectations over a 5 year horizon. This year the intakes to nurse training courses will be increased in accordance with the findings of last year's assessment. A new assessment for 1999 is about to be launched.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Cataract Operations

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cataract operations were carried out in 1998 in (a) the Argyll and Clyde Health Board area and (b) Scotland as a whole. [69800]

Mr. Galbraith: Information on the number of cataract operations carried out in NHS hospitals in Scotland during 1998 is not yet available. Provisional figures for the period 1 January to 30 September 1998 show that the number of cataract operations performed in Scotland was 13,936, of which 1,179 were undertaken in the Argyll and Clyde Health Board area.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

After-school Care Clubs

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce arrangements to monitor the management of after school care clubs for secondary school pupils. [71361]

Mr. Galbraith: We intend to issue shortly a consultation paper on the regulation of child care (including after school care clubs) and of early education. From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament: it will be for Scottish Ministers to consider how best to take forward any administrative consequences in the light of consultation responses and for the Scottish Parliament to consider any legislative consequences.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

English National Stadium Development Company

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the gender balance on the Board of the English National Stadium Development Company. [69350]

Mr. Banks: The current Members of the Board are all male. Members are not appointed by Government; nevertheless we are keen to promote the role of women at all levels within sport, and for the Football Association and the English National Stadium Trust to take this into account in considering future appointments.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who appointed the Chairman and members of the Board of the English National Stadium Development Company; and on what dates. [69347]

Mr. Banks: The members of the Board of the English National Stadium Development Company are appointed by The Football Association (FA) and the English National Stadium Trust. The FA appoints seven members; the Trust appoints five members. The Chairman is elected by the Board members. Members were formally appointed on 12 January 1999 when the Development Company was constituted as an FA subsidiary.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what remuneration is paid to the members of the Board of the English National Stadium Development Company; and from what sources. [69348]

Mr. Banks: Members received no remuneration.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which sports individual members of the Board of the English National Stadium Development Company represent. [69349]

Mr. Banks: Board Members do not represent individual sports. Their primary responsibility is to the English National Stadium Development Company, in accordance with their duties as Director of the Company. The FA nominations have a football background and interest. The Trust nominations have a variety of interests, including in golf, tennis, rugby league and football.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the auditing arrangements for the expenditure of the Board of the English National Stadium Development Company. [69351]

Mr. Banks: The English National Stadium Development Company is currently appointing professional auditors. In addition, the conditions of Lottery grant include provisions for independent monitoring by consultants appointed by the English Sports Council, a requirement for the Development Company to provide full details of the way it spends its money, the right for the English Sports Council to audit the Development Company at any time and the right for the National Audit Office to review Development Company accounts and records.

World Athletics Championship (2003)

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 64, if he will list the organisations which make up the London 2003 Consortium. [70154]

Mr. Banks: The 2003 Bid Consortium is a committee of individuals set up under the auspices of UK Athletics. The Consortium is chaired by Len Hatton, Chair of Sport Z, and its membership comprises Bill Glad, ex-international athlete, ex-IAAF Executive Officer; Adrian Metcalfe, ex-international athlete, Chair of API Television, UK Sports Council Member; and John Boulter, ex-international athlete. David Moorcroft, Chief Executive Officer of UK Athletics is also closely involved.

Musicworks

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the future of Musicworks. [69633]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 8 February 1999]: While this is primarily a matter for the London Arts Board and Musicworks other core funders, I am aware that Musicworks has experienced a range of difficulties, including the accumulation of debt, which have resulted in the closure of the project. I understand also that the potential for another arts organisation with similar charitable objectives to acquire Musicworks facilities continues to be explored, with the intention of securing the building, and donor investment in its refurbishment, to the benefit of the local community.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69975]

Mr. Chris Smith: The following table gives the information required:

NDPD	Admit the public to all meetings	Hold public meetings	Have lay or consumer board members[1]	Operate a form of appeal or complaints procedure	Statutory requirements
Arts Council of England	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
British Library	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
British Museum	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
British Film Institute	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
British Tourist Authority	No	No	No	Yes	No
Broadcasting Standards Commission	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
Crafts Council	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
English Heritage	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
English Sports Council	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
English Tourist Board	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
Football Licensing Authority	No	No	No	Yes	No
Geffrye Museum	No	No	Yes	No	No
Historic Royal Palaces	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Horniman Museum	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
Imperial War Museum	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
Library and Information Commission	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Millennium Commission	No	No	No	Yes	No
National Film and Television School	No	No	No	No	No
National Lottery Charity Board	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
New Millennium Experience Co. Ltd.	No	Yes	No	Yes	Yes
Museum of London	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Museum of Science and Industry in Manchester	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
Museums and Galleries Commission	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
National Gallery	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
National Heritage Memorial Fund	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
National Maritime Museum	No	No	No	Yes	No
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside	No	No	No	Yes	No
National Museum of Science and Industry	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
National Portrait Gallery	No	No	No	Yes	No
Natural History Museum	No	No	No	Yes	No
NESTA	No	No	No	No	No
NOF	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
Public Lending Right	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Royal Armouries	No	No	No	No	No
Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Royal Commission on Historical Monuments (England)	No	No	No	Yes	No
Sir John Soane's Museum	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Tate Gallery	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
UK Sports Council	No	No	No	No	No
Victoria and Albert Museum	No	No	No	Yes	No
Wallace Collection	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No

Notes:

[1] The British Museum say that all their Board Members are visitors and users. Those Trustees that sit on the External Relations and Public Services Committee have particular responsibility for consumer interests including disability issues.

[2] The Imperial War Museum say that none of its Board is a museum professional: all are "lay" and may ask questions as consumers.

[3] The NMGM have agreed in principle to hold one open meeting a year beginning in 1999.

[4] The National Portrait Gallery do not allow non-Trustees to attend Board meetings.

[5] English Heritage advise that one Commissioner has been a recipient of a grant and can be described as a "consumer". As not all Commissioners are experts in the fields they represent they can be described as lay members.

[6] The Museum of London say that its Board is made up of people from a wide number of backgrounds who include people with lay or consumer representation.

[7] The National Museum of Science and Industry say that the Board is composed of individuals appointed by Government selected from those with interests and expertise which will assist and advise the Museum both with regard to visitors and care of the collections. These unpaid individuals provide a wide range of scientific, visitor, management and educational experience.

[8] The English Tourist Board holds three public meetings with Regional Tourist Boards annually which are also open to the industry and public.

[9] Members of the public who are complainants on fairness in broadcasting are invited to attend Commission hearings in which their complaint is being considered. However, meetings of Commission members are not usually open to the general public.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69965]

Mr. Chris Smith: The following table gives the information required:

NDPB	Admit the public to meetings	Hold public meetings	Lay or consumer board members	Statutory requirement
Advisory Committee for the Public Lending Right	No	No	Yes	No
Advisory Committee on Historic Wreck Sites	No	No	No	No
Advisory Committee on the Government Art Collection	No	No	No	No
Advisory Council on Libraries	No	No	No	No
Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art	No[3]	No	Yes[4]	No
Royal Fine Art Commission	No	No	No	No
Theatres Trust	No	Yes	Yes	No
Treasure Valuation Committee	No	No	Yes	No
Football Taskforce	No	Yes	Yes	No

[1] The ACHWS holds annual meeting with licensees of designated wreck sites.

[2] The ACHWS' membership is balanced to reflect the wider range of interests involved in the area of underwater archaeology, including sport divers.

[3] An annual meeting of the Advisory Council on the Export of Works of Art is held, at which all interested bodies are represented (public institutions and the trade).

[4] The Committee includes representatives with consumer expertise.

Sports Venues (Disabled Access)

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has made to the Football Trust requesting additional resources to be made available to football clubs to make provision for disabled people; and if he will make a statement. [70223]

Mr. Banks: I welcomed the Football Task Force's report on Improving Facilities for Disabled Supporters, and wrote to the Football Trust about the recommendations in the report relating to improving access to football grounds for disabled people.

At the Trust's meeting of 25 January, the Trustees agreed to amend Trust grant aid policy to include further specific requirements for clubs to provide access and facilities for disabled people, as recommended in the Task Force report. I welcome this development.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to make provision for (a) increasing the capacity of sports venues in order to increase their ability to accommodate disabled people and (b) improving parking and other transport facilities for disabled people at sports grounds; and if he will make a statement. [70222]

Mr. Banks: Disabled people's access to services—including sports venues—will be improved by implementation of the later rights in Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. The first stage will come into force from October when service providers will have to take reasonable steps to change any practice, policy or procedure which makes it impossible or unreasonably difficult for disabled people to use a service; provide an auxiliary aid or service which would enable disabled people to use a service; and overcome physical barriers which make it impossible or unreasonably difficult for disabled people to use a service by providing the service by a reasonable alternative method. From 2004, service providers will also have to consider tackling physical barriers by taking reasonable steps to remove them; alter them, or provide a reasonable means of avoiding them.

In addition, I have taken steps to implement the practical recommendations made in the Football Task Force's Report on Improving Facilities for Disabled Supporters, published last July, which fall to Government. These relate to amending the Approved document (AD) for Part M of the Building Regulations to require all new stadia, new stands and extensions to existing facilities to provide wheelchair spaces in accordance with the Guide to Safety at Sports Grounds; to drawing up a sliding scale for the numbers of designated seats for people who are ambulant disabled or visually/hearing impaired within new stands and stadia, and amending Part M accordingly; and to extending the future role of the Football Trust to improve disabled facilities at grounds.

Any changes to the Building Regulations require statutory consultation and will be based on the advice of the Building Regulations Advisory Committee. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions intends to use the comprehensive review of British Standard BS 5810 Code of Practice for access for the disabled to buildings and its supporting research, once it has been completed, as a basis for developing proposals through the Building Regulations Advisory Committee to revise the AD for Part M. In the interim, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has taken the immediate step of including references to the Guide to Safety at Sports Grounds in the current revision to the AD to extend Part M to new housing. This will draw the guidance to the attention of interested parties. The review of BS 5810 includes access for the ambulant disabled and when the Green Guide is next updated the standard will be taken on board.

I fully support all the practical recommendations made in the Task Force's report. These include proposals concerning seating arrangement, parking and access at football grounds. In November, I wrote to the bodies identified in the report as having a role to play in implementing the recommendations. I have been encouraged by the positive responses I have received.

The Task Force's recommendations provide an excellent assessment of what has been achieved in the provision of facilities for disabled supporters at football grounds, and where improvement can still be made. They are equally applicable to other sports stadia and I commend them to all those involved in sports stadia management in this country.

Local Government Finance

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the (a) grants and (b) other financial support to (i) Westminster City Council and (ii) the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea, other than through the RSG settlement in (1) 1997–98, (2) 1998–99 and (3) planned for 1999–2000 given by his Department; and for what purposes the funds were allocated. [70156]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department has not provided, and I have no plans to make, any direct grants or financial support to Westminster City Council or the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69520]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The average percentage increases in salaries of non industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, for 1998–99 was 4 per cent. within the Department for Culture, Media and Sport and approximately 3.7 per cent. within the Royal Parks Agency.

The pay awards were not staged.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what efforts he is making to assist arts organisations affected by the proposed ban on tobacco sponsorship to find replacement funding. [70351]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 10 February 1999]: Through negotiation, the Government have ensured that the EC Tobacco Advertising Directive provides a reasonable time for arts and sports organisations to adapt to its provisions. The Government's White Paper "Smoking Kills", published last December, was accompanied by a consultation document which invites comments on the possible impact of legislation. The Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts has been invited to make representations on behalf of its members, and arts organisations may also do so on an individual basis.

Views expressed in the consultation exercise, which ends on 28 February, will inform decisions taken on the extent to which specific assistance should be offered to arts organisations.

Millennium Contingency Measures

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what contingency measures his Department is planning for the first week of 2000 to meet any technical problems caused by the millennium bug in terms of (a) specialist advice and (b) staff overtime. [70593]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department is in the process of preparing a contingency plan for the millennium bug problem. However, no decision has yet been made on the need for specialist advice or the level, if any, of staff overtime, for the first week.

St. Dunstan's

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the Government will provide funding for St. Dunstan's charity for blind ex-servicemen and women. [70537]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for West Dorset, (Mr. Letwin) on 9 November 1998, Official Report, columns 77–78.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Paramilitary Organisations (Assaults)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what advice she has received from the Chief Constable of the RUC on (a) UVF, (b) IRA and (c) UDA involvement in serious assaults carried out since 1 May 1998. [63168]

Mr. Ingram: In the period 1 May 1998 to 31 January 1999 there have been 74 Loyalist and 52 Republican assaults. The Chief Constable of the RUC is on record as stating that he has no doubt that members of all these paramilitary organisations have been involved in attacks. We do not, however, have records attributing attacks to individual organisations.

Note:

Figures are subject to minor adjustment (due to further information coming to light) and refer to "assaults" as distinct from "shootings".

Andrew Kearney

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the RUC has evidence to indicate IRA involvement in the killing of Andrew Kearney in Belfast in July 1998. [63167]

Mr. Ingram: There is no firm evidence to indicate the involvement of a specific group with the killing of Andrew Kearney.

Intimidation

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been forced by intimidation to leave their homes in Northern Ireland since 1 May 1998; and if she will make a statement. [63172]

Mr. Ingram: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive holds responsibility for housing those people who claim to be homeless as a result of intimidation, and assesses entitlement to housing under the homelessness legislation. Its Chief Executive has advised me that, from 1 May 1998 to 31 December 1998, a total of 1,358 applicants have been awarded A1 (I) priority status by the Housing Executive as a result of intimidation.

Prisoner Releases

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners applied to the Prison Sentence Review Commission for an accelerated release date by 31 December 1998; in how many cases the Commission made a determination; and for unsuccessful applications, what reasons were given. [69617]

Mr. Ingram: Statutory responsibility for these matters lies with the Sentence Review Commissioners. I have asked the joint Chairmen, Sir John Blelloch and Mr. Brian Currin, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Sir John Blelloch to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 11 February 1999:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for information concerning applications made under the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998. In her answer the Secretary of State advised that, as statutory responsibility for this matter lay with the Sentence Review Commissioners, I would reply.

I can advise that, up until 31 December 1998, 544 prisoners have applied to the Sentence Review Commissioners for a declaration that they are eligible for release in accordance with the provisions of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998. Of these, 372 prisoners have received substantive determinations advising that their applications had been successful. There have been no substantive determinations advising that the applicant had been unsuccessful.

A copy of this letter will be placed in the library of the House of Commons.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will (a) list the profile of the politically motivated prison population in Northern Ireland by location, status and perceived affiliation and (b) estimate the number of prisoner releases for each perceived affiliation projected for each quarter up to 30 September 2000. [69618]

Mr. Ingram: Table A shows the perceived paramilitary affiliations of prisoners at HMP Maze.

Table A

	Number
Loyalists
UVF	47
LVF	16
UDA	53
Total	116
Republican
PIRA	77
INLA	26
Total	103

Information is held in relation to the perceived paramilitary association of prisoners, where applicable, for management purposes. With the exception of HMP Maze where links are more clearly defined, this information is based on a combination of factors including the offence, sympathies and associates. No information is held on the political affiliations of any prisoner.

Table B shows a total of 79 prisoners whose cases have been deemed to meet the requirements of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 by the Sentence Review Commission and who have been given Substantive Determinations with release dates up to end September 2000. It includes only those prisoners whose perceived affiliation is to organisations which have not been specified under Section 3 of the 1998 Act. This is drawn from information received by the Secretary of State as at 5 February 1999 from the Sentence Review Commissioners, to whom prisoners apply for early release. The 1998 Act also provides that, if circumstances permit, prisoners with release dates falling after the second anniversary of the coming into force of that Act (on 28 July 1998) who have served two years or more in prison will be released on that anniversary. Those prisoners are not shown in Table B.

Table B

	1999 Quarter				2000 Quarter
	1	2	3	4	1	2	3	Total
Loyalist	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	1
LVF	0	1	1	0	2	0	0	4
PIRA	4	8	2	9	7	1	6	37
Rep Sym	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	1
Republican	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
RHC	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	1
UDA	3	4	7	2	1	2	0	19
UFF	0	0	2	0	1	0	0	3
UVF	1	4	1	3	0	3	0	12
Grant Total	9	19	14	14	11	6	6	79

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how many persons given early release from prison under the Belfast Agreement have been charged with an offence since their release. [68867]

Mr. Ingram [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1999, c. 556]: One person released under the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 was charged with an offence on 2 February 1999.

Police Complaints

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the number of investigations which will be conducted by the office of the Police Complaints Ombudsman over its first three years of operation. [69606]

Mr. Ingram: A working group which comprises my officials and representatives of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints, Royal Ulster Constabulary, Police Authority of Northern Ireland and police representatives is currently considering a wide range of issues including this one.

In examining the number of cases the working group will take into consideration factors such as current complaint rates, the impact of the preliminary investigation in sifting cases out at an earlier stage, the relaxation of the restriction on resolving complaints by informal resolution and the extent to which the Police Ombudsman should refer cases to the RUC to investigate. The working group will also have to consider to what extent enhanced public confidence in the new system will encourage more complaints. The Ombudsman designate, when appointed, will also be asked for his or her views.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the main stages in an investigation conducted by the Independent Commission for Police Complaints; what is the average time taken to complete each stage; and how many complaints have been processed and completed over each of the last three years. [69604]

Mr. Ingram: The Independent Commission for Police Complaints does not conduct investigations of complaints; rather, its role is to provide oversight of police investigations, as set out in the Police (Northern Ireland) Order 1987.

During 1996, the Commission processed and completed two thousand six hundred and ninety nine (2,699) complaint cases. The figures for 1997 and 1998 were two thousand three hundred and thirty five (2,335) and two thousand three hundred and eighty three (2,383) complaint cases respectively.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will provide a breakdown of the forecast of the annual budget of the office of the Police Complaints Ombudsman; and how many staff will be employed at what salary grades for the first three years of its operation. [69605]

Mr. Ingram: The Government's initial estimate produced for the purpose of advertising the post of Police Ombudsman is a staff of about 60 and a budget of around £3 million. There are a number of variables which affect both the budget and staffing which are still to be settled. These are being considered in working groups which include my officials and representatives of the RUC and the Independent Commission for Police Complaints. In addition, we will be consulting the Police Ombudsman when appointed.

Until this work has been completed I will not be able to produce a budget forecast or more precise details on staffing.

The Government are, however, committed to making the necessary resources available for the office of Police Ombudsman.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the main stages in an investigation conducted by the Complaints and Discipline Department of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; what is the average time taken to complete each stage; and how many complaints were processed and completed in each of the last three years. [69622]

Mr. Ingram: Appendix II of the 1997 Annual Report of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints, copies of which were laid before the House, contains a detailed chart showing the main stages in an investigation (HMSO, ISBN 0–10–250698–1).

The number of complaints cleared in each of the last three years is:

Year	Number
1996	4,835
1997	5,433
1998	5,127

Complaints relating to the same incident can be made by a number of complainants, or complainants may make a number of complaints. These are all recorded as separate complaints.

The 1998 figure is provisional.

Average timescales for stages of investigation of complaints are not kept as the time taken very much depends on individual cases. The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The time is dependent on a number of factors, such as the complexity of the case, the number of witnesses and police involved. Also, if there are related criminal proceedings against the complainant, the investigation cannot be regarded as complete until such charges are disposed of at court and disciplinary aspects then considered and, if appropriate, dealt with. The following table gives such information as is available and indicates the length of time taken for the 5,127 complaints cleared in 1998:

Time	Number	Percentage
0–3 months	1,662	32
3–6 months	1,048	20
6–12 months	1,278	25
12–24 months	965	19
24–36 months	135	3
over 36 months	39	1
Total	5,127

The issue of timescales is something raised by Dr. Hayes in his report (HMSO ISBN 0-337-03077-4) and is being considered by the working groups dealing with the implementation of the new Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland.

HMP Maze

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response the Northern Ireland Prison Service made to Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons report on HMP Maze; and if she will place a copy of the response in the Library. [69621]

Mr. Ingram: Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons Report on HMP Maze has been fully considered, and those recommendations whose implementation were appropriate in the changed circumstances, have now been implemented, or are in the process of implementation.

Both I and the Director General of the Northern Ireland Prison Service responded publicly in statements to the press, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Press Releases

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many press releases were issued by the Northern Ireland Police Authority between 10 February 1998 and 31 December 1998; and how many of these notices were posted on the Police Authority Internet web site. [69619]

Mr. Ingram: The Police Authority has issued 45 press releases between 10 February 1998 and 31 December 1998. None of these releases has been placed on the Police Authority's Internet web site.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many press releases were issued by the Northern Ireland Prison Service between 31 May 1997 to 31 December 1998; and how many of these notices were posted on the Prison Service internet web site. [69620]

Mr. Ingram: 26 press releases on prisons matters were issued between 31 May 1997 and 31 December 1998. All were posted on the Prison Service website which is accessed through nio.gov.uk.

Terrorist Suspects (Arrest Warrants)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many warrants for the arrest of terrorist suspects issued by the RUC have been outstanding (a) for more than 10 years, (b) for five to 10 years, (c) for one to five years and (d) since 10 April 1998. [69880]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The information requested is not maintained in a manner which permits its retrieval without incurring disproportionate cost.

Drumcree

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Orange parades, marches or disturbances have occurred in the vicinity of Drumcree in each month since June 1998; how many of these were legal parades; how many deaths or injuries can be associated with these disturbances; what was the additional financial cost of policing during the six months from July to December 1998; how many properties and vehicles have been damaged in the area; how many arrests have been made; in how many cases charges have been brought; and how many convictions have been secured. [69882]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 8 February 1999]: There have been 75 Orange Order parades or marches since June 1998. Of these, 38 were legal. The table shows the breakdown by month:

	Number
1998
July	18
August	33
September	6
October	4
November	6
December	6
1999
January	2
Total	75

It is not possible to assess the total number of injuries accurately. However, 72 police officers have been injured, including 1 fatality, Constable O'Reilly. 47 criminal injury claims have been submitted, including 2 by military personnel.During the period July to December 1998, the additional costs incurred in respect of the police presence have been approximately £0.4m per month.

There have been 27 recorded incidents of damage to property and 11 to vehicles.

There have been 132 arrests, 58 people charged and 33 convicted. 80 prosecutions are pending, including 28 being reported for illegal marches.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the expenditure incurred by her Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if she will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70967]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information is as follows.

(a) Expenditure incurred setting up the NICS Web Service.

The initial set up costs for the current NICS Web Service amounted to £8,500 capital expenditure in 1997. Staff costs associated with the set up are not available.

(b) Expenditure incurred in the operation of the web site.

The expenditure incurred in 1998-99 will be £226,700 broken down as follows:

Maintenance £7,300;
Connection to the Internet Service Provider (ISP) £26,900;
Ongoing development £137,500; and
Capital £55,000.

(i) The topics covered by the NICS Web service are as follows:

Schedule of organisations/topics hosted by NICS Web Service

Agri-Food Development Service
The New Northern Ireland Assembly
Business Development Service (BDS)
Central Adjudication Services (CAS)
Child Support Agency (CSA)
Community Information Network Northern Ireland (CINNI)
Construction Service
Citizen's Charter for Northern Ireland
Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment
Northern Ireland Economic Council
CREST
DANI—Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland
DED—Department of Economic Development
DENI—Department of Education for Northern Ireland
DFP—Department of Finance and Personnel
DHSS—Department of Health and Social Services
DOE—Department of the Environment
DOE—Central Statistics and Research Branch
Directory of Business Information for Northern Ireland
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland (DVLNI)
Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency (DVTA)
Environment and Heritage Service
Economic Council, Northern Ireland
European Division—Department of Finance and Personnel
Economics Division—Department of Finance and Personnel
Fair Employment Commission for Northern Ireland
Forensic Science Unit of Northern Ireland
Northern Ireland Forum for Political Dialogue
General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland
Glens of Antrim Rural Community Development Association
Government DIRECT—for business Northern Ireland
Government Purchasing Agency
Greenmount College of Agriculture and Horticulture
Health and Personal Social Services (HPSS)
Health and Safety Division
Housing Executive
Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland (IDB)
Industrial and Research Technology Unit (IRTU)
Information Systems (IS) Services
Innovation Relay Centre for Northern Ireland
Land Registers of Northern Ireland
Local Enterprise Development Unit (LEDU)
Local Government Audit Office—Local Authority Performance Indicators
Local Government Staff Commission for Northern Ireland
(Northern Ireland) Millennium Company
North Antrim Community Network
Northern Ireland Statistics & Research Agency (NISRA)
Northern Ireland Housing Executive
Northern Ireland Court Service
Northern Ireland Office (NIO)
Northern Ireland Railways (NIR)
NICVA—Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action
NICO—N.I. Public Sector Enterprises
NIEC—Northern Ireland Economic Council
Office For The Regulation of Electricity and Gas (OFREG)
Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland
The Northern Ireland Ombudsman
Peatland Park, DOE Environment Service
Police Authority for Northern Ireland (PANI)
Police Insignia Collectors Association (PICA)
Planning Service
Probation Board for Northern Ireland
Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI)
Public Sector Enterprises (NICO)
Rate Collection Agency (RCA)
Regional Information Branch
Roads Service
Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC)
Social Security Agency (SSA)
Sports Council for Northern Ireland
Springvale Training
Statistics for the Northern Ireland Public Service Web
Strabane District Council
The New Northern Ireland Assembly
Telecommunications Branch—BDS
Trading Standards
Training and Employment Agency (TEA)
Training Services
Northern Ireland Tourist Board
Urban Traffic Control Centre
Valuation and Lands Agency (VLA)
Water Service
Training and Employment Agency "What Next?"

(ii) The current average number of hits per month for all NICS sites is 1.72 million.

(iii) The estimated expenditure on the NICS web service for the next 3 years is as follows:

Year	£
2000	247,000
2001	247,000
2002	247,000

Individual Departmental/NDPB expenditure is not available.

Bloody Sunday Inquiry

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has received concerning the working practices of the Bloody Sunday Inquiry; and if she will make a statement. [69796]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have received some letters about the Inquiry in general which have raised issues of concern by members of the public. However, as the Inquiry is independent, its working practices are a matter for it to decide for itself; therefore, it would not be appropriate for the Government to comment.

DEFENCE

Young Recruits

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the compliance of the practice of recruiting men and women aged under 18 years to the armed forces with the United Kingdom's responsibilities under the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. [67215]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The UK is playing a full and active role in negotiations to agree an Optional Protocol to the UNCRC, which seeks to raise the minimum age of recruitment and for participation in hostilities. We consider that our current recruitment and deployment policies are in line with the principles that are being sought internationally.

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70028]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 8 February 1999]: My Department does not hold its records in a way that makes retrieval of this information in the format requested possible without incurring disproportionate cost.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the government in its important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom departments are expected to use for the rest of the Government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not on one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

Armed Forces (Combat)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many individuals under the age of 18 years in the British Armed Forces have been in combat in the past five years. [69755]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sir Charles Masefield

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions were placed by his Department on the former Head of Defence Export Services, Sir Charles Masefield, in respect of his subsequent professional involvement in defence-related industries. [70601]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Sir Charles Masefield's appointment with GEC was approved without restriction, under the Government's Business Appointment Rules. He continues to be bound by these rules for two years from his last day in Crown service.

Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which days the Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition will be open to (a) overseas customers, (b) the Press and (c) the public. [70386]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I understand from the organisers that they are planning a press afternoon on 13 September 1999. The exhibition will be open to overseas customers and the press from 14 September, when it formally opens, until its closing date on 17 September 1999. The exhibition will not be open to the public.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries from which buyers will be invited to the Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition being held in Chertsey and London Docklands from 14 to 17 September. [70385]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are still considering the list of countries to be invited. We expect to invite delegations from about 50 countries.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if hon. Members will be invited to attend the forthcoming Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition. [70390]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Other than official invitations to foreign delegations, the issue of invitations is a matter for the exhibition organisers, Spearhead Exhibitions Ltd. However, MOD officials intend to discuss with them plans for inviting hon. Members to the exhibition.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who will be opening the Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition. [70389]

Mr. Doug Henderson: On current plans, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will open the exhibition.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many visitors are expected at the Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition. [70388]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Defence Systems and Equipment Exhibition is the first in a new series of international exhibitions to be run in the UK. It will be organised by a private company, Spearhead Exhibitions Ltd. Spearhead estimate attendance at this year's exhibition will be in the order of 20,000 visitors.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which ships from (a) the Royal Navy and (b) overseas navies will be participating in the Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition. [70391]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Subject to operational constraints, we hope to have two Royal Navy ships, a Type 23 Frigate and a Sandown Class Mine Countermeasures Vessel, at the exhibition. I understand that the exhibition organisers have extended invitations to a number of navies around the world to send vessels.

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on changes to Class I cash limits and the defence operating costs limit for 1998–99. [71326]

Mr. George Robertson: The Government have decided that, subject to Parliamentary approval of the Spring Supplementary Estimates, an addition of £310,104,000 should be made to the Defence budget in the current year. This will cover increased costs in 1998–99 due to slippage out of 1997–98 and costs of unprogrammed overseas operations, including those in the Former Yugoslavia, including the United Kingdom's contribution to the OSCE-led Verification Mission in Kosovo (KVM), the supporting KVM Extraction Force based in Macedonia, and on-going air operations over Iraq, including the United Kingdom's contribution to Operation Desert Fox. The figure includes full take up of the Ministry of Defence's entitlement to End Year Flexibility of £225,104,000 in respect of the Defence budget underspend in 1997–98. This figure is £56,617,000 lower than the figure announced by the Chief Secretary on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 132–36, under the Operating Costs and Capital equipment schemes which had been assessed on the provisional outturn for the Defence budget at the time. In the event, the final outturn for 1997–98 was higher than forecast.

The Supplementary Estimate will also provide for changes in the general pattern of expenditure, including adjustments between the PE equipment and Defence Operating Costs programmes; for the transfer of provision to the Home Office and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in respect of MOD's contribution to jointly funded programmes; and the withdrawal of net accounting arrangements for the recovery of VAT on Contracted Out services.

Because of the adjustment between the equipment and operating costs programmes and the incidence of costs in respect of ongoing military operations in the Former Yugoslavia and Iraq, the additional funding will be drawn onto Class 1, Vote 1 and Class 1, Vote 2, with only a token Estimate being taken on Class 1, Vote 3 to reflect a realignment of Estimates provision within the Vote. The Class 1, Vote 3 cash limit will be reduced to reflect the realignment of funding to the operating costs programme. The cash limit changes will be as follows:

£000

Class I	Current cash limit	Change	Revised cash limit
1	10,713,809	171,983	10,885,792
2	4,669,236	357,975	5,027,211
3	6,856,925	-219,854	6,637,071
Defence budget	22,239,970	310,104	22,550,074

The impact of these changes on the Defence Operating Costs Limit (DOC) is as follows:

£000

Class I	Current cash limit	Change	Revised cash limit
1	10,713,809	171,983	10,885,792
2	4,669,236	357,975	5,027,211
3	715,769	17,569	698,200
Defence budget	16,098,814	512,389	16,611,203

As the increase in the Defence budget cash limit will be met from the Reserve, which is part of the Government Control Total, it will not add to the planned total of public expenditure in the current year.

Decorations

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of the Territorial Decoration. [R] [70752]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Medals for the Reserve Forces are currently under review and an announcement will be made when the Review is complete.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to have a medal struck for British military personnel who served in Egypt protecting the Canal Zone between 1951 and 1954. [70925]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Government have no plans to consider the retrospective institution of an award for service in the Suez Canal Zone during the period 1951–54.

The Under-Secretary of State carried out a comprehensive review of all extant historical documents on the subject in 1998 and concluded that he could find no grounds for reopening the case to award a medal for service in the Canal Zone between 1951 and 1954. Ministers have seen no new evidence that would enable them to recommend to the Honours and Decorations Committee that they overturn their policy of non-retrospection or any of the decisions made at the time and in subsequent reviews, several of which have taken place since 1990.

Trident (Millennium Compliance)

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of reports that the US

Defense Department hopes to have resolved millennium bug problems in relation to the Trident missile system by 15 December. [70647]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 11 February 1999]: Like us, the US Defense Department is managing a vigorous programme to eliminate any effects of the Y2k problem from its systems. Specifically, the mission critical sub-systems of the Trident II (D5) Strategic Weapon System, as operated by the Royal Navy, have already been certified as Y2k compliant; the UK was notified of this in December 1998.

Defence Establishments (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the defence establishments in Wales, indicating the number of people employed at each; and if he will make a statement. [70915]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Bay of Gibraltar

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his Department's (a) official papers, (b) documents and (c) maps and charts which refer to the Bay of Gibraltar as the Bay of Algeciras. [71371]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence holds many thousands of official papers, documents, maps and charts concerning Gibraltar. A review to determine whether they refer to the Bay of Gibraltar or the Bay of Algeciras could be carried out only at disproportionate cost. I understand that both terms have been used in official papers, documents, maps and charts from my Department.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71341]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Paragraph 79 of the Ministerial Code makes it clear that Ministers should inform hon. Members in advance of planned visits to their constituencies. Ministers in this Department undertake visits to all parts of the country but records of official visits are not held on a constituency basis.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70482]

Mr. Doug Henderson: At 1 July 1998, the latest date for which comprehensive data are available, the number of UK regular forces and UK based permanent civilian personnel was as follows:

UK based permanent civilian personnel

Government office regions	All Great Britain	London	Wales	Scotland	North East	North West	Merseyside
MoD Total	96,406	9,655	5,092	9,686	591	1,577	942
MoD Non-Agency	38,144	5,604	879	2,769	521	654	160
Agencies
UK Hydrographic Office	776	1	—	4	—	—	—
Meteorological Office	2,016	68	34	166	21	35	—
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency	10,972	1,453	370	301	—	60	—
Military Survey	733	647	—	—	—	—	—
RAF Maintenance Group Defence Agency	4,390	3	3,317	3	—	1	—
Service Children's Education	10	—	—	—	—	—	—
Duke of York's Royal Military School	103	—	—	—	—	—	—
Queen Victoria School	70	—	—	70	—	—	—
Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation	1,489	—	1	360	—	—	—
Defence Analytical Services Agency	118	43	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Postal and Courier Service	328	246	9	6	—	—	—
Army Base Repair Organisation	2,598	3	17	147	—	5	—
Defence Animal Centre	62	3	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Secondary Care Agency	717	117	—	—	—	—	—
Ministry of Defence Police	3,570	252	33	866	—	98	8
Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre	158	—		—	—	—	—
Naval Recruiting and Training Agency	1,226	112	8	13	11	4	11
RAF Training Group Defence Agency	2,124	20	180	41	5	19	14
Army Training and Recruitment Agency	4,488	40	135	120	6	12	3
Logistic Information Systems Agency	187	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Communications Service Agency	520	178	5	20	1	3	—
Defence Estates Organisation	1,073	19	16	72	8	—	—
Naval Bases and Supplies Agency	7,554	—	41	3,222	2	15	12
RAF Logistics Support Services	368	1	—	—	—	1	—
RAF Signals Engineering Establishment	580	—	—	59	—	—	—
Disposal Sales Agency	64	60	—	3	—	—	—
Defence Clothing and Textile Agency	508	2	—	2	—	1	—
Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency	3,326	3	17	35	1	281	—
Defence Transport and Movements Executive	101	—	—	—	—	—	—
Army Technical Support Authority	805	460	1	—	—	—	—

UK based permanent civilian personnel

Government office regions	All Great Britain	London	Wales	Scotland	North East	North West	Merseyside
Defence Dental Agency	147	8	4	7	1	4	—
Medical Supply Agency	236	1	—	7	—	—	—
Pay and Personnel Agency	853	—	—	—	—	257	—
Defence Bills Agency	706	—	—	—	—	—	705
Defence Codification Agency	111	—	—	110	—	—	—
Naval Manning Agency	99	2	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Intelligence and Security Centre	130	4	—	—	—	—	—
Army Personnel Centre	1,062	8	—	1,049	—	—	—
Ships Support Agency	2,305	1	25	156	—	—	—
RAF Personnel Management Agency	237	3	—	—	—	—	—
Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency	108	1	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Vetting Agency	335	175	—	7	1	2	2
Medical Training Organisation	101	7	—	—	—	—	—
Specialist Procurement Services	798	110	—	71	13	125	27

UK based permanent civilian personnel

Government office regions	Yorks & Humberside	East Midlands	West Midlands	Eastern	South East	South West
MoD Total	3,154	2,815	8,522	6,683	24,102	23,587
MoD Non-Agency	1,472	1,448	1,874	3,916	7,309	11,538
Agencies
UK Hydrographic Office	—	—	—	—	5	766
Meteorological Office	45	42	29	66	1,446	64
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency	—	19	1,826	371	4,358	2,244
Military Survey	—	—	—	—	85	1
RAF Maintenance Group Defence Agency	—	9	1,013	41	—	3
Service Children's Education	—	—	—	—	3	7
Duke of York's Royal Military School	—	—	—	—	103	—
Queen Victoria School	—	—	—	—	—	—
Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation	—	—	—	—	1,125	3
Defence Analytical Services Agency	—	—	—	—	10	65
Defence Postal and Courier Service	3	—	7	14	28	15
Army Base Repair Organisation	157	4	1,034	178	209	844
Defence Animal Centre	—	59	—	—	—	—
Defence Secondary Care Agency	135	—	—	5	450	10
Ministry of Defence Police	77	21	172	419	1,014	610
Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre	—	—	—	158	—	—
Naval Recruiting and Training Agency	1	5	5	2	814	240
RAF Training Group Defence Agency	227	463	593	47	193	322
Army Training and Recruitment Agency	895	56	122	101	2,001	997
Logistic Information Systems Agency	—	—	—	—	186	1
Defence Communications Service Agency	17	—	—	1	105	190
Defence Estates Organisation	64	10	297	255	165	167
Naval Bases and Supplies Agency	—	313	—	1	2,086	1,862
RAF Logistics Support Services	—	—	1	364	1	—
RAF Signals Engineering Establishment	—	106	—	415	—	—
Disposal Sales Agency	—	—	—	—	1	—
Defence Clothing and Textile Agency	—	—	—	154	345	4
Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency	33	113	1,236	26	1,262	319
Defence Transport and Movements Executive	—	—	5	—	96	—
Army Technical Support Authority	—	96	111	1	124	12
Defence Dental Agency	12	4	7	12	69	19
Medical Supply Agency	3	1	1	1	29	193
Pay and Personnel Agency	—	—	144	—	—	452
Defence Bills Agency	—	1	—	—	—	—
Defence Codification Agency	—	—	—	—	1	—
Naval Manning Agency	—	—	—	—	97	—
Defence Intelligence and Security Centre	—	18	—	108	—	—
Army Personnel Centre	—	—	—	—	4	1
Ships Support Agency	—	—	—	—	86	2,037
RAF Personnel Management Agency	—	—	—	—	—	234
Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency	—	—	—	—	59	48
Defence Vetting Agency	4	6	2	5	60	71
Medical Training Organisation	—	—	—	—	94	—
Specialist Procurement Services	9	21	43	22	79	278

UK based regular forces

Government office regions	All Great Britain	London	Wales	Scotland	North East	North West	Merseyside
MoD Total[1]	162,007	7,385	3,245	14,208	1,415	1,511	224
MoD Non-Agency	135,012	6,773	1,015	12,514	1,377	1,375	181
Agencies
UK Hydrographic Office	5	—	—	—	—	—	—
Meteorological Office	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency	310	—	—	—	—	—	—
Military Survey	292	27	—	—	—	—	—
RAF Maintenance Group Defence Agency	2,268	—	1,764	—	—	—	—
Service Children's Education	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Duke of York's Royal Military School	1	—	—	—	—	—	—
Queen Victoria School	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Analytical Services Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Postal and Courier Service	201	201	—	—	—	—	—
Army Base Repair Organisation	9	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Animal Centre	110	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Secondary Care Agency	1,429	14	—	1	—	—	—
Ministry of Defence Police	6	1	—	—	—	—	—
Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre	317	—	—	—	—	—	—
Naval Recruiting and Training Agency	3,258	64	15	143	9	10	8
RAF Training Group Defence Agency	3,907	17	356	42	10	16	25
Army Training and Recruitment Agency	7,396	51	67	318	16	23	10
Logistic Information Systems Agency	42	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Communications Service Agency	818	34	18	55	—	—	—
Defence Estates Organisation	4	1	—	—	—	—	—
Naval Bases and Supplies Agency	2,295	1	—	840	—	—	—
RAF Logistics Support Services	528	3	—	5	—	61	—
RAF Signals Engineering Establishment	325	—	—	—	—	—	—
Disposal Sales Agency	1	1	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Clothing and Textile Agency	19	—	—	—	—	—	—
Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency	375	—	—	—	—	24	—
Defence Transport and Movements Executive	81	—	—	—	—	—	—
Army Technical Support Authority	271	7	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Dental Agency	573	36	10	48	3	2	—
Medical Supply Agency	27	—	—	—	—	—	—
Pay and Personnel Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Bills Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Codification Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Naval Manning Agency	178	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Intelligence and Security Centre	395	—	—	—	—	—	—
Army Personnel Centre	239	—	—	227	—	—	—
Ships Support Agency	445	—	—	15	—	—	—
RAF Personnel Management Agency	214	—	—	—	—	—	—
Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency	181	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Vetting Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Medical Training Organisation	475	154	—	—	—	—	—
Specialist Procurement Services	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

UK based regular forces

Government office regions	Yorks & Humberside	East Midlands	West Midlands	Eastern	South East	South West
MoD Total[1]	12,092	6,957	4,694	16,258	49,587	44,431
MoD Non-Agency	10,526	5,847	2,458	14,098	39,147	39,692
Agencies
UK Hydrographic Office	—	—	—	—	—	5
Meteorological Office	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency	—	—	—	31	96	181
Military Survey	—	—	—	—	265	—
RAF Maintenance Group Defence Agency	—	4	467	30	—	3
Service Children's Education	—	—	—	—	—	—
Duke of York's Royal Military School	—	—	—	—	1	—
Queen Victoria School	—	—	—	—	—	—
Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Analytical Services Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Postal and Courier Service	—	—	—	—	—	—
Army Base Repair Organisation	—	—	—	—	9	—
Defence Animal Centre	—	110	—	—	—	—
Defence Secondary Care Agency	217	—	—	129	936	132

UK based regular forces

Government office regions	Yorks & Humberside	East Midlands	West Midlands	Eastern	South East	South West
Ministry of Defence Police	—	—	—	5	—	—
Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre	—	—	—	317	—	—
Naval Recruiting and Training Agency	8	5	118	9	2,112	757
RAF Training Group Defence Agency	295	884	981	22	750	509
Army Training and Recruitment Agency	975	16	324	427	3,993	1,175
Logistic Information Systems Agency	—	—	—	—	42	—
Defence Communications Service Agency	46	—	—	81	314	270
Defence Estates Organisation	—	—	3	—	—	—
Naval Bases and Supplies Agency	1	—	—	1	595	857
RAF Logistics Support Services	—	2	—	436	2	19
RAF Signals Engineering Establishment	—	60	—	265	—	—
Disposal Sales Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Clothing and Textile Agency	—	—	—	—	19	—
Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency	—	—	189	—	103	59
Defence Transport and Movements Executive	—	—	15	—	66	—
Army Technical Support Authority	—	—	115	—	149	—
Defence Dental Agency	24	29	23	49	241	108
Medical Supply Agency	—	—	1	2	1	23
Pay and Personnel Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Bills Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—
Defence Codification Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—
Naval Manning Agency	—	—	—	—	178	—
Defence Intelligence and Security Centre	—	—	—	354	41	—
Army Personnel Centre	—	—	—	—	12	—
Ships Support Agency	—	—	—	—	117	313
RAF Personnel Management Agency	—	—	—	—	—	214
Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency	—	—	—	—	77	104
Defence Vetting Agency	—	—	—	—	—	—
Medical Training Organisation	—	—	—	—	321	—
Specialist Procurement Services	—	—	—	—	—	—

[1] Covers UK regular forces and UK based permanent civilian personnel counted in the official Ministry of Defence civil service figures. Excludes Gurkhas and recalled reservists specially mobilised for service in the former Yugoslavia. UK based casual civilian personnel, and UK based permanent civilian personnel whose salaries are paid for, or re-imbursed by, other non Ministry of Defence organisations (such as NATO and USAF).

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70975]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It is the policy of the MOD to make information widely available to the public in an accessible form, subject to necessary security restrictions. As part of this policy, the Ministry of Defence maintain a number of publicly accessible internet web sites. Topics covered range across the full business activities of the Department, including defence policy and operations, defence research, meteorological and hydrographic information, defence standards, and Service recruitment. We do not hold figures for the average monthly number of accesses, or "hits", to MOD web sites. However, the most recent month's figures are given for each site for which this information is available centrally. Unless otherwise stated, these figures cover the period 1 January 1999 to 31 January 1999.

The main sites currently available are:

Ministry of Defence*(http://www.mod.uk)*: 845,615

Royal Navy (http://www.royal-navy.mod.uk): 425,397

Army (http://www.army.mod.uk): 3,090,270[1]

Royal Air Force (http://www.raf.mod.uk): 1,049,812

Royal Auxiliary Air Force (http://www.rauxaf.mod.uk)

DERA (http://www.dra.hmg.gb)

Atomic Weapons Establishment (http://www.awe.co.uk)

Met Office (http://www.meto.gov.uk)

Hydrographic Office (http://www.hydro.gov.uk)

MOD Directorate of Standardisation (Http://w vw.dstan.mod.uk)

Joint Air Transport Evaluation Unit

(http://dspace.dial.pipex.com/town/avenue/xjy87/index.htm)

[1] Covers period from 1 January 1999 to 7 February 1999

In addition, some Non Departmental Public Bodies, such as Service museums, maintain their own web sites, independent of the MOD.

The costs of setting up and operating these sites, and of individual future budgets, are not held centrally or in the form requested, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

RAF Manston

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) military and (b) civilian aircraft movements there were at RAF Manston in each of the past five years for which figures are available; how many of the civilian movements related to gliders and light aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [70810]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Details of aircraft movements at RAF Manston have been collated since August 1994. The figures are as follows:

Year	Military	Civil Light a/c	Civil Heavy a/c	Total
1994 (August to December)	5,061	19,819	656	25,536
1995	17,450	45,071	1,332	63,853
1996	10,680	42,528	848	54,056
1997	7,598	33,921	1,177	42,696
1998	6,760	29,108	2,110	37,976

With the exception of a gliding squadron whose movement figures are not recorded, no military aircraft are based at RAF Manston. The number of military movements reflects principally the use made of the station by air experience flights and visiting detachments from the University Air Squadron.

Royal Navy Ships (Personal Mail)

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what delays have occurred over the last two months in delivering personal mail to the crews of Royal Navy ships stationed in the Gulf. [71185]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There is no record, in the quality of service checks carried out by the Defence Postal and Courier Service Agency, of any delay in the last two months to personal mails to the crews of Royal Navy ships stationed in the Gulf.

Once received from the Post Office, all personal mail addressed to the crews of Royal Navy ships stationed in the Gulf is dispatched via scheduled commercial aircraft to British Forces Post Offices established at Kuwait and Bahrain and to accredited shipping agents at Dubai.

During the last two months, all mail on hand in the UK for the Gulf area has been dispatched six days a week to Kuwait, five days a week to Bahrain, and three days a week to Dubai. Over the Christmas and New Year holidays there were no mails on hand to dispatch on 25, 26 and 27 December 1998 and on 1 January 1999.

The Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency, which has responsibility for the dispatch of forces' mail worldwide, has a Customer Care Unit that investigates individual inquiries regarding the delivery of mails. During working hours, any inquiry may be made on the Customer Care Helpline, which offers a Freephone service.

I am aware that The Sun newspaper published an article on this matter on 12 February, and I would like to clarify the position. HMS Cumberland arrived in Durban, South Africa on 21 December and sailed on 7 January 1999. All Christmas mail was dispatched to the Ship in Durban safely and on time. HMS Cumberland then docked in Mombasa on 16 January and sailed on 22 January 1999. Unfortunately 15 bags of mail, dispatched to the Ship via Nairobi failed to arrive before she sailed from Mombasa, due to security problems in Nairobi and transport problems between Nairobi and Mombasa. The mail caught up with the ship in Bahrain when she docked there on 1 February.

Countryside

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much land held by his Department he estimates would fall within the definition of open country as set out in the consultation document "Access to the Open Countryside" of February 1998. [71638]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

17. Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to prevent illegal asylum seekers attempting to enter the United Kingdom hidden in vehicles. [69123]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We will tackle the problem of illegal immigration. We are developing increased European and international co-operation to crack down on traffickers. Increased liaison between British and French border authorities is already paying dividends in preventing 2,000 illegal immigrants in the last six months from embarking for Dover. Seven traffickers are being prosecuted by the French as a direct result of information provided by the Immigration Service. The Immigration and Asylum Bill contains several important provisions, including a civil penalty which will apply to drivers of vehicles found transporting clandestine entrants to Britain.

29. Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to relieve the pressure on accommodation for asylum seekers in London and the south-east. [69136]

35. Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to relieve the pressure on accommodation for asylum seekers in London and the south-east. [69142]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As a result of court decisions arising out of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996, Local Councils have faced an unacceptable burden in dealing with asylum seekers. Councils like Dover and Kent deserve great praise for their handling of these issues. Next year, the new Immigration and Asylum Bill will place responsibility on a Government Agency to provide for asylum seekers and to end the disproportionate pressure on Dover and other areas of Kent, as well as London. In the meantime, the Local Government Association is setting up a non-statutory dispersal scheme and the Government have provided extra funding for it.

Licensing Laws

18. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to announce changes to the UK licensing laws, with particular reference to the law relating to Sunday dancing. [69124]

Mr. George Howarth: We are considering industry proposals to relax the restrictions on commercially organised dancing on Sundays. I hope to be able to announce our conclusions soon.

Voluntary Organisations

19. Mrs. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Government have taken to support the work of voluntary organisations. [69125]

Kate Hoey: The Government have developed a new spirit of partnership with the voluntary sector. The published Compacts on relations between Government and the voluntary and community sector have put this relationship on a formal footing for the first time. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 21 January that the Voluntary and Community Unit of the Home Office will be expanded and strengthened into the Active Community Unit to reflect our growing relationship with the sector.

25. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to support and promote the work of voluntary organisations in relation to crime prevention in local neighbourhoods. [69131]

Mr. Boateng: Voluntary organisations have an important role to play in crime prevention and reduction work. That is why the Order under section 5 of the Crime and Disorder 1998 Act requires that a wide range of voluntary bodies be invited to participate in the work of the crime and disorder reduction partnerships. Additionally, my Department funded the work of Crime Concern to produce and publish "Reducing Neighbourhood Crime—A Manual for Action".

Probation Services (Amalgamation)

20. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy in respect of the amalgamation of probation services. [69126]

Mr. George Howarth: "Joining Forces to Protect the Public", published last August, included proposals to align probation areas and police force boundaries. Implementation would reduce the number of probation areas from 54 to 42. We are carefully considering the replies received and expect to announce decisions about the future re-organisation soon.

Crime and Disorder Strategies

21. Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on plans to establish local crime and disorder strategies. [69127]

Mr. Boateng: The Crime and Disorder Act 1998, which received Royal Assent on 31 July 1998, lays a duty upon the local authority and police in every area to formulate and implement a strategy for the reduction of crime and disorder. The strategies—covering a period of three years—must be produced by 1 April 1999.

Local Partnership Crime Audits

22. Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the completion rate of local partnerships' crime audits. [69128]

Mr. Boateng: There is no formal deadline for the completion of audits. The crime and disorder strategies—which follow on from the audits and must be the subject of wide local consultation—have to be completed by 1 April 1999. I am encouraged by the commitment I see on the part of the local crime reduction partnerships to completing the tasks set for them in a timely and effective way.

Police Pensions

23. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his proposals for reforming police pensions. [69129]

Kate Hoey: Following our consultation document of last year on police pensions, work is in hand on detailed proposals for the pension arrangements for new entrants to the service and for changes to the medical retirement procedures. We plan to publish our proposals in the Spring. They will be published in advance of implementation to allow for full consultation with the interested parties.

Liquor Licensing

24. Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform the system of liquor licensing. [69130]

Mr. George Howarth: I announced last May a comprehensive review of liquor licensing legislation. We aim to produce proposals by early next year for a simpler and more effective system.

Crime and Disorder Act 1998

26. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with magistrates regarding implementation of the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 which relate to young offenders; and if he will make a statement. [69132]

Mr. Boateng: Consultation with magistrates, including through the Magistrates' Association, is an important element in taking forward implementation of the youth justice provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act. Through the White Paper "No More Excuses" and a range of draft guidance documents, the Government have sought views on the timing and process of implementation. Through the participation of the courts in 15 areas in pilots of new court orders for dealing with young offenders and of measures to reduce delay, magistrates are also playing a key role in helping to identify effective practice under the new provisions ahead of national implementation.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost to (i) the police service, (ii) the Court Service, (iii) the probation service and (iv) other agencies of implementing the provisions in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [70611]

Mr. Straw: The Explanatory and Financial Memorandum to the Crime and Disorder Bill published on 17 November 1997 set out the estimated resource implications of the Act. The last composite estimates compiled by my Department were produced on 10 August 1998 and are given in the following table:

£000

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Home Office	9,137	27,866	52,742	73,542
Probation Service	1,337	3,028	29,104	49,104
Other	7,800	24,838	23,638	24,438
Prison Service	2,100	5,070	5,060	5,160
Lord Chancellor's Department	3,674	20,731	31,895	33,218
Magistrate Courts	–1,251	–81	7,390	6,871
Crown Court	1,338	5,074	7,578	8,082
Legal Aid	3,587	15,739	16,928	18,266
Crown Prosecution Service	753	2,519	3,219	2,319
Local Authorities	1,811	3,247	15,066	15,066
Total	17,475	59,434	107,983	129,306

The costs and savings of the Act can be accurately determined only after the completion of the pilots in respect of the youth justice provisions, drug treatment and testing orders, the Narey measures and the television links to courts.

The Act is intended to deal more effectively with offending behaviour and to reduce crime. This should in time produce savings across the criminal justice system and a wide range of public services.

Metropolitan Police (Disciplinary Procedures)

27. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the internal disciplinary procedures of the Metropolitan police. [69133]

Kate Hoey: The disciplinary arrangements for officers of the Metropolitan Police are set out in the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1985, which apply to officers throughout England and Wales. Officers who breach any part of the Disciplinary Code, which appears as Schedule 1 to the Regulations, are likely to face disciplinary proceedings.

Under new arrangements being implemented from 1 April 1999, there will be a Code of Conduct to replace the present Discipline Code.

Fire Service (London)

28. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received recently from the Fire Service in London. [69135]

Mr. George Howarth: In December, the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority wrote to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary about the Authority's financial position and its recent review of fire cover. We have also seen the representations which the Authority made to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions about the provisional local government finance settlement for 1999–2000.

Tobacco and Alcohol Smuggling

30. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on co-operation between police and Her Majesty's Customs on tobacco and alcohol smuggling and bootlegging. [69137]

Mr. Boateng: The primary responsibility for countering smuggling and the evasion of duty rests with Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, but there are well established arrangements to ensure close co-operation between the police service and Her Majesty's Customs to combat these and other criminal activities.

Unauthorised Camping

31. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in agreeing operational guidelines with the Association of Chief Constables to deal with unauthorised camping. [69138]

Mr. Boateng: Discussions have been held with representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) with a view to strengthening current operational guidelines on dealing with unauthorised camping. I understand that revised draft guidelines will be considered by ACPO Council at their meeting of 28 April.

Attacks on Teachers

32. Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department will issue guidelines to ensure that all police forces pursue incidents of attacks on teachers. [69139]

Mr. Boateng: In December 1997, the Home Office and the Department for Education and Employment issued a joint guidance document to the police and education services entitled "School Security: Dealing with Troublemakers".

This deals with the safety of pupils and staff and provides guidance on the roles of schools and the police in dealing with assaults.

Licensing Hours (New Year's Eve)

33. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to announce his response to the consultation on new year's eve licensing hours. [69140]

Mr. George Howarth: The closing date for comments on our proposals was last Friday, 12 February. We shall consider them and announce our intentions as soon as we can.

Passport Fees

34. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on passport fees. [69141]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The United Kingdom Passport Agency does not keep figures for representations received on passport fees. However, the number of complaints received is minimal. The United Kingdom passport fee is one of the lowest in the world and represents good value for money.

Police (Parliamentary Questions)

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parliamentary questions he received from hon. Members about police forces outside London in the calendar year 1998. [69895]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Department received 139 Parliamentary Questions concerning issues relating to police forces outside London in the calendar year 1998.

Millennium Celebrations (Costs)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a special allocation of funds, above their normal revenue budgets, to the police and fire services to cover the additional costs arising from the millennium celebrations. [70307]

Mr. Boateng: The Government's plans allow police spending to increase in 1999–2000 by £186 million (2.7 per cent.) to over £7.1 billion. Police authorities will be able to increase their spending power by achieving the 2 per cent. efficiency target which has been set and re-investing the savings in front-line policing. It is the Government's general expectation that the additional costs arising from millennium celebrations should be met from within police budgets.

Central Government revenue support for the fire service in England is provided through the revenue support grant system. Funding pressures for the fire service in England and Wales, including those which may result from the Millennium, were identified by the local authorities' Fire Service Expenditure Forecasting Group under the Central Local Partnership arrangements. These pressures were taken into account in the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Drugs Prevention

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the expenditure on his Department's drugs prevention initiatives, in cash and real terms, in each of the last three years; what is the planned cash and real terms spending in each of the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [70324]

Mr. George Howarth: Home Office expenditure on the Drugs Prevention Initiative and its successor body, the Drugs Prevention Advisory Service, over the period is as follows:

£ million

	Cash	Real terms
1996–87	5.9	6.2
1997–98	6.0	6.1
1998–99[1]	5.8	5.8
1999–2000	6.3	6.1
2000–01	6.3	6.0
2001–02	6.3	5.9

[1] Estimated

In addition, from 1999–2000 the Home Office Drugs Prevention Advisory Service will disburse Drug Action Team Development funding, on behalf of the United Kingdom Anti Drugs Co-ordination Unit. This funding, of £5 million in each year, is provided on a shared basis by the Home Office, the Department of Health, the Department for Education and Employment and Customs and Excise.

Police Overtime

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure on police overtime in each of the last three years, per police force, and in total; what are the rates for (a) overtime pay and (b) standard pay; and if he will make a statement. [70323]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not held centrally on the total expenditure on police overtime and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The provisions for determining police officers' rates of pay for overtime are contained in Regulation 28 of the Police Regulations 1995. The standard rates of pay are:

Pay (Constable to Superintendent)

	Pay point	Annual salary with effect from 1 September 1998 (£)	London salaries
Constable
On commencing service	1	16,056	—
On completion of initial training perid	2	17,964	—
On completion of 2 years' satisfactory service	3	19,029	—
	4	19,533	—
	5	20,211	—
	6	20,859	—
	7	21,540	—
	8	22,161	—
	9	22,722	—
	10	23,460	—
	11	24,321	—
	12	25,410	—
Sergeant	1	24,525	—
	2	25,410	—
	3	26,295	—
	4	27,189	—
	5	27,774	—
	6	28,605	—
Inspector and Chief Inspector	1	31,719	33,171
	2	32,655	34,104
	3	33,588	35,037
	4	34,518	35,970
First Chief Inspector point	5	35,454	36,909
	6	36,183	37,638
	7	36,918	38,370
	—[1]	37,650	39,102
	—[1]	38,307	39,759
Superintendent	1	[2]41,484	—
	2	42,783	—
	3	44,085	—
	4	45,387	—
	5	46,833	—
	6	[3]48,390	—
	7	49,236	—
	8	50,310	—
	9	51,495	—

[1] Only applicable to those chief inspectors who were at the penultimate and maximum point of the scale on 31 August 1994

[2] Min. of Range 1

[3] Max. of Range 1 and min. of Range 2

Pay (ACPO ranks)

	Officers appointed on a fixed term basis with effect from 1 September 1998 (£)	Officers not appointed on a fixed term basis with effect from 1 September 1998 (£)
Assistant Chief Constable	62,259–71,466	59,292–68,064
Designated deputies ACC (D)	80 per cent. of the basic salary of their chief or £71,466, whichever is higher	80 per cent. of the basic salary of their chief or £68,064, whichever is higher
Chief Constable
Population band
up to 500,000	74,616–85,335	71,058–81,267
500,001–1,000,000	78,432–92,232	74,700–87,840
1,000,001–2,000,000	85,335–99,129	81,267–94,410
Over 2,000,000	94,434–106,569	90,036–101,613
Chief Constables of Greater Manchester, Strathclyde and West Midlands	97,848–110,430	93,297–105,291
Metropolitan Police
Commander	62,259–71,466	59,292–68,064
Designated Commander	80 per cent. of the basic salary of Assistant Commissioner	80 per cent of the basic salary of Assistant Commissioner
Assistant Commissioner	93,945–99,129	90,036–94,410
Deputy Commissioner	104,682–112,509	99,570–107,016
City of London
Commissioner	85,335–99,129	81,267–94,410
Assistant Commissioner	80 per cent. of the basic salary of Commissioner or 71,466 whichever is higher	80 per cent. of the basic salary of Commissioner or 68,064 whichever is higher

Speeding Fines

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much was raised from speeding fines in each Policy Authority area in Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [70336]

(2) how much revenue was raised from speeding fines in the UK in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [70335]

(3) how much was raised from speeding fines in each county of Wales in 1997–98; what was the average per county; and if he will make a statement; [70333]

(4) what percentage of revenue raised from speeding fines related to speeding offences caught on cameras in 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [70334]

Mr. Boateng: Information on the amount of revenue raised from speeding fines is not available.

However, information available to me shows that the amounts shown in the table were ordered to be paid in fines in England and Wales and for the four Welsh police forces. Information by individual Welsh county is not readily available, nor is a breakdown to show which fines had been ordered to be paid following speeding offences detected by automatic camera. Figures are not yet available for 1998, and those for 1997 are provisional.

As the majority of speeding offences are dealt with by way of fixed penalty notices, figures for the number of notices issued are also included in the table. The penalty for speeding offences is £40.

Not all fines or fixed penalties will have been paid.

Total amounts ordered to be paid in fines for speeding offences and number of fixed penalties issued for speeding offences England and Wales 1993–1997

	Total amount ordered to be paid in fines for speeding offences	Number of fixed penalty notices issued for speeding offences
1993
Dyfed-Powys	54	4,664
Gwent	175	3,400
North Wales	148	6,302
South Wales	84	4,548
Total England and Wales	12,475	394,758
1994
Dyfed-Powys	54	5,275
Gwent	148	2,251
North Wales	154	6,548
South Wales	79	4,162
Total England and Wales	11,676	472,470
1995
Dyfed-Powys	60	5,823
Gwent	120	2,610
North Wales	142	8,143
South Wales	71	4,191
Total England and Wales	12,512	530,172
1996
Dyfed-Powys	90	3,681
Gwent	258	4,286
North Wales	166	8,833
South Wales	95	11,161
Total England and Wales	12,904	595,052
1997 (provisional)
Dyfed-Powys	95	6,708
Gwent	372	5,263
North Wales	163	9,145
South Wales	233	22,227
Total England and Wales	15,523	712,324

Policing (European Union)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has undertaken on the relative levels and methods of policing in European Union countries; and if he will make a statement. [70321]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office Police Research Group carried out a major review of the size and structure of overseas police forces for the Sheehy Inquiry into Police Responsibilities and Rewards in 1993. The report "Approaches to Rank Structure and Pay in Police Forces: an International Survey" covered the size, rank and career structure, pay and retirement regulations in 14 countries, including many in the European Union. No research on the relative levels and methods of policing in European Union countries has been commissioned by the Home

Office since, although we do maintain good links and regularly exchange information on policing with our European Union partners.

Fire Services Expenditure

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each fire authority in the United Kingdom (a) the SSA per head of population and (b) the actual spending per head of population in each year from 1992 to date. [70268]

Mr. George Howarth: Figures detailing the fire standard spending assessment per head for all local authorities in England, for the financial years 1992–93 to 1998–99, are available in the relevant Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) Handbook—copies of which are in the Library.

Figures for the 1999–2000 provisional fire standard spending assessment per head were given in an answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Tamworth (Mr. Jenkins) on 11 January 1999, Official Report, columns 87–88. The final figures, which show only minor differences, will be published in the SSA Handbook for 1999–2000 in due course.

In Wales, standard spending assessments are not identified by service block.

Tables have been placed in the Library which give the spending figures on the fire service in England and Wales for the years 1992–93 to 1997–98.

Financial provision for the fire services in Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Criminal Activity

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct research to assess the extent of criminal activity among those who have no income from social security benefits or from any other formal source. [70598]

Mr. Boateng: The 1998–99 youth life styles survey examines rates of self-reported offending among young people aged between 12 and 30. A proportion of these will not be in education, employment or training and so will not have any formal source of income.

The Home Office Research, Development and Statistics Directorate are currently conducting the survey. Information will be available later in 1999.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned into the effectiveness of CCTV in detecting crime. [70403]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office Police Research Group study "CCTV in Town Centres: Three Case Studies" has shown that closed circuit television (CCTV) can be effective in reducing crime and the fear of crime, when used as part of a wider strategy.

The Home Office keeps under review the research literature on CCTV and we will be assessing the evaluations of effectiveness produced by the schemes which received funding under the CCTV Challenge Competition as they become available.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to encourage further investment in closed circuit television systems intended to reduce crime. [70751]

Mr. Boateng: Over 170 closed circuit television (CCTV) schemes will receive funding this year under the CCTV Challenge scheme.

In addition, as part of the £250m crime reduction programme, at least £50m will be invested over the next three years in 500 local projects to tackle domestic burglary. The first 60 of these projects are currently being developed to start in April, and some may include CCTV as part of their approach.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate (Liverpool)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to create a unit to respond to hon. Members inquiries at Liverpool IND. [70402]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are no proposals to create a Member of Parliament's inquiry unit at Liverpool Immigration and Nationality Directorate.

Animals (Medical Research)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been commissioned or evaluated by his Department on the development of techniques which would replace the use of animals in medical research; and if he will make a statement. [70666]

Mr. George Howarth: Details of projects funded by the Home Office, and their results, are published in the annual reports of the Animal Procedures Committee, which are laid before Parliament as required by section 20(5) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The Animal Procedures Committee advises on the sponsoring of work aimed at developing or promoting the use of alternatives which replace animal use, reduce the number of animals used or refine the procedures to minimise suffering. The budget for this has been increased by 42 per cent. to £259,000 in 1998–99.

Decisions are still to be made on the projects to fund in the next financial year.

This is not the only money spent by the Government on alternatives: other Departments also fund relevant work as an integral part of scientific research. Industry, too, spends millions of pounds each year on the search for and development of alternatives.

The United Kingdom Government continue to support the European Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods through contributions to the European Union. It is the Centre's task to monitor and co-ordinate research into alternatives and to develop the processes of validation.

Re-offenders

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the re-offending rates of (i) persistent young offenders and (ii) all young offenders. [70614]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have no information about re-offending rates. Information is available about re-conviction rates. Persistent young offenders (as defined in joint Home Office/Lord Chancellor's Department Circular "Measuring Performance to reduce delays in the youth court system") have not been routinely identified in the past in data used to produce re-conviction rates. Plans are in place to do so in future.

Reconviction rates are available for all young offenders. The table sets out the percentage of those aged 10–17 convicted of a standards list offence in 1994 who were re-convicted for such an offence within two years, across a range of disposals.

Percentage

Disposal	Age at sentence 10–17
Conditional discharge	58
Fine	66
CYP supervision order	79
Probation	87
Community service order	74
Custodial sentence	81
Attendance centre order	72

Children and Young Persons Act 1969

Excludes detentions under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1963

The Government have embarked upon a radical restructuring of the youth justice system, including reforms to the youth court and range of new sentencing options. The system as a whole has been given a new statutory aim—to prevent offending by children and young persons. The new court disposals that have been introduced, including the action plan and reparation orders and the new custodial sentence, the detention and training order will all have a clear focus on rehabilitation and preventing future offending and re-offending.

Young Offenders

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost of implementing his target of halving the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders. [70612]

Mr. Boateng: The pledge to halve the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders is aimed at reducing unnecessary delay and improving efficiency. Experience in those areas running fast tracking schemes indicates that the initiatives are generally cost neutral and, in some cases, have already resulted in savings through increased efficiency.

The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 introduced a range of measures which will help to deliver the pledge by strengthening the ability of the court to manage cases and making procedural changes to ensure delays are avoided. The costs or savings of these measures—which cover both youth and adult cases—will be assessed following the pilots which are now in progress.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from (i) youth courts and (ii) other agencies about the implementation of fast-tracking for persistent young offenders. [70613]

Mr. Boateng: We are in regular contact on this issue with practitioners from all of the youth justice agencies, including the courts, through correspondence and attendance at youth justice seminars and conferences. The responses to a Home Office survey of all youth court areas in England and Wales conducted in April 1998 indicated that 160 youth court areas now have a fast tracking scheme. A further survey this year has yet to be completed, but is already confirming that the number of schemes continues to grow.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown, for each of the last three years, of the sentencing decisions made in respect of (i) persistent young offenders and (ii) all young offenders. [70619]

Mr. Boateng: The sentencing decisions in respect of persistent young offenders (as defined in joint Home Office/Lord Chancellor's Department Circular "Measuring Performance to reduce delays in the youth court system") have not been routinely identified in the past, but plans are in place to do so in future. Information is collected about all young people aged 10–17 sentenced for indictable offences by type of sentence or order. The following table contains a breakdown for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Persons aged 10 to 17 sentenced for indictable offences by sex and type of sentence or order—England and Wales

	Persons/year
	1995	1996	1997
Total number of persons sentenced	42,166	44,302	46,301
Absolute or conditional discharge	14,066	14,160	14,457
Fine	4,641	4,671	5,016
Probation order	1,594	1,879	1,996
Supervision order	8,064	8,539	8,728
Community service order	2,667	2,799	2,972
Attendance centre order	4,981	4,880	4,943
Combination order	775	1,020	1,279
Curfew order	-	10	47
Young offender institution	4,326	4,979	5,358
S53 CYP Act 1933	401	635	748
Otherwise dealt with	651	730	777
Total immediate custody	4,326	4,979	5,358
Total community sentences	18,081	19,127	19,945

Source:

CCJU (RDS) IOS110-99.xls

Firearms Compensation

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list by each firearm compensation category and by each police area, the outstanding claims which have not been settled in terms of (a) numbers and (b) amounts; [70575]

(2) what is the total amount paid out to date in firearms compensation since 1997. [70574]

Mr. Boateng: £72.8 million has been paid so far in compensation. Detailed information about the number, category and value of claims outstanding in each police area is not readily available. Overall, there are around 10,000 claims awaiting payment offers under Option C of the schemes, the great majority of which will have received payments under other options. The aim remains to make offers on the outstanding claims by the end of March.

Louise Woodward

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requests he has received from the U.S. court in respect of the enforcement of its order that Louise Woodward should not profit from her conviction. [70572]

Mr. Boateng: As a matter of policy, we do not normally comment on the fact or substance of requests from other governments for mutual legal assistance in relation to criminal matters. The recent out-of-court settlement of private civil proceedings brought in the United States against Ms Woodward by the parents of Matthew Eappen, which is reported to have included undertakings not to profit from any sale of the story in relation to this case, could not be the subject of such a request.

Au Pairs

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the effect on the numbers of au pairs coming to the United Kingdom of the decision by the Department for Education and Employment to include them within the minimum wage provisions; and what representations his Department has made about the matter to the Department for Education and Employment. [70374]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been in contact with my colleagues at the Department of Trade and Industry, who are responsible for the National Minimum Wage provisions. I have made no study of the kind referred to by the hon. Member.

Owen Oyston (Police Interviews)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek a report from the Chief Constable of Greater Manchester on the reasons for police interviews of women in connection with the conviction of Owen Oyston for rape in the last six months. [70720]

Mr. Boateng: I understand that witnesses were contacted by the Greater Manchester Police following the service of a subpoena on the Chief Constable requiring him to disclose material from the criminal proceedings for the purposes of a civil action against Mr. Oyston. Officers contacted witnesses to advise them of the civil proceedings and to seek their consent to the disclosure of their statements. Officers have not taken statements or conducted interviews on behalf of the plaintiff to the civil action.

Prisoners (Early Release)

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in how many cases since 1991 discretionary power has been exercised for the release on compassionate grounds of (a) long-term and (b) life prisoners; [70392]

(2) what criteria he applies in the exercise of his powers under section 36(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 regarding the release of prisoners on compassionate grounds under licence. [70393]

Mr. George Howarth: Following the coming into force of section 30 of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 on 1 October 1997, the release on compassionate grounds of life prisoners is considered under that Act. Section 36(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 now applies only to determinate sentence prisoners.

Prison Service records show that 54 determinate sentence prisoners (including long term) and 18 life sentence prisoners were released on compassionate grounds between the implementation of section 36 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, in October 1992, and the end of 1998.

When considering compassionate release on medical grounds, the Secretary of State applies the following criteria in all cases:

the prisoner is suffering from a terminal illness and death is likely to occur soon; or the prisoner is bedridden or similarly incapacitated; and the risk of re-offending is past; and there are adequate arrangements for the prisoner's care and treatment outside prison; and early release will bring some significant benefit to the prisoner or his/her family

In the case of determinate sentence prisoners, compassionate release may be considered where tragic family circumstances exist, in which case the criteria are as follows:

the circumstances of the prisoner or the family have changed to the extent that if he/she served the sentence imposed, the hardship suffered would be of exceptional severity greater than the court could have foreseen; and the risk of re-offending is past; and it can be demonstrated beyond doubt that there is a real and urgent need for the prisoner's permanent presence with his/her family; and early release will bring some significant benefit to the prisoner or his/her family.

In addition, in the case of all determinate sentence prisoners the following factors are considered:

whether temporary release under the Prison Rules could significantly reduce the prisoner's and/or family's suffering;

the length of the sentence still outstanding; the effect on the overall sentence passed by the court if early release is granted; and any remarks which the trial judge made on sentencing which may have a bearing on the question of release;

the wishes of the prisoner and his/her family and the level of benefit which would derive to the prisoner and/or the family from permanent release; and in medical cases, the diagnosis and prognosis; in particular whether there is a specific estimate of life expectancy; and the degree of incapacitation.

The Secretary of State may also release a determinate sentence prisoner if he is satisfied that other exceptional circumstances exist.

Special Constables

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to introduce payments for special constables. [70947]

Mr. Boateng: None. A pilot scheme was conducted in Dorset between 1991 and 1993 whereby special constables who performed 125 hours duty in a six month period qualified for a bounty payment of £200. The results of the scheme were inconclusive and the Police Service did not consider that a bounty should be mandatory for special constables.

During its review of 1995–96, the Special Constabulary Working Group received evidence suggesting that the overwhelming majority of special constables valued their voluntary status highly and did not want this to be changed. As a result, the Group concluded that a bounty should not be paid to special constables and recommended that the regulation enabling the discretionary payment of a limited bounty should be repealed. We agree with this recommendation and the relevant regulation will be repealed later this year.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to recruit more special constables. [70952]

Mr. Boateng: We support the police forces' recruitment campaigns by holding a Specials Week during which I and a number of my ministerial colleagues attend events held by forces around the country to highlight and promote the service provided by special constables. To complement these activities, some forces are supported with local press and radio advertising costing £500,000. In addition, the Home Office has produced a recruitment video, a series of posters, and a recruitment brochure for the forces.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of special constables currently serving in each police authority area; and what is the cost. [70953]

Mr. Boateng: The provisional figures for the number of special constables in post in each police force area in England and Wales on 30 September 1998 are:

Area	Number
Avon and Somerset	584
Bedfordshire	175
Cambridgeshire	308
Cheshire	416
City of London	69
Cleveland	136
Cumbria	210
Derbyshire	355
Devon and Cornwall	916
Dorset	303
Durham	159
Dyfed-Powys	237
Essex	590
Gloucestershire	245
Greater Manchester	567
Gwent	114
Hampshire	747
Hertfordshire	267
Humberside	289
Kent	565
Lancashire	465
Leicestershire	350
Lincolnshire	233
Merseyside	463
Metropolitan	1,214
Norfolk	351
Northamptonshire	262
Northumbria	360
North Wales	336
North Yorkshire	302
Nottinghamshire	530
South Wales	360
South Yorkshire	266
Staffordshire	558
Suffolk	402
Surrey	226
Sussex	415
Thames Valley	587
Warwickshire	323
West Mercia	499
West Midlands	784
West Yorkshire	590
Wiltshire	176
Total	17,304

The costs of special constabularies are not collected centrally.

Asylum Cases

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a requirement that the officer signing a decision on an asylum case states their grade. [70732]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No. The letter to applicants already makes it clear that in law the decision is that of the Secretary of State. No useful purpose would be served by specifying the grade of the officer signing that letter.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Civil Service grade of the staff who make decisions to deport under (i) section 3(5)(a), (ii) section 3(5)(b) and (iii) section 3(5) of the Immigration Act 1971. [70730]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Decisions to serve a notice of intention to deport are taken by trained staff at the appropriate grade, depending on the complexity of the issues raised. This will normally be either executive officer, or administrative officer for the most straightforward cases, although more complex cases may be dealt with by senior caseworkers at senior or higher executive officer grades. Where a notice is served by the Immigration Service under delegated authority, authorisation is given at Inspector level.

Airline Liaison Officers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he uses to assess the appropriate locations for the postings of airline liaison officers. [71060]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Airline liaison officer locations are selected primarily on the basis of the number of inadequately documented passengers departing from or passing in transit through overseas airports. In addition, due account is taken of other relevant factors: personal safety; the agreement of the host governments; and the co-operation of other bodies including airlines and airport authorities.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what records are kept of action taken by other Governments as a result of assistance given by airline liaison officers. [71061]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Airline liaison officers do not provide direct assistance to other governments on cases involving individual passengers who are not adequately documented for travel to the United Kingdom. They do provide information to the appropriate authorities on the activities of facilitators and racketeers involved in human smuggling and records are kept of the outcome when it is known.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to which locations further airline liaison officers have been posted since 27 July 1998; and to what additional locations he plans to post further officers during 1999. [71063]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since 27 July 1998, airline liaison officers have been posted to Bahrain, Bangkok, Dubai, Istanbul and Pretoria. An officer will be posted to Moscow towards the end of April. By the end of 1999 we plan to have posted up to nine more officers. Final decisions on the exact locations of these additional posts have yet to be made.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of the number of prospective passengers who have not travelled to the United Kingdom in the past 12 months as a result of the work of airline liaison officers. [71062]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In 1998, airlines operating from the five locations where airline liaison officers were based refused carriage to 2,095 prospective passengers who were not adequately documented for travel to the United Kingdom.

Mounted Police

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those police authorities that have disbanded their mounted divisions since 1990. [70886]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not collected centrally.

Bloodhounds

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the bloodhound in helping to track down suspects and detect criminal activity. [70885]

Mr. Boateng: In April 1998, the Policing and Reducing Crime Unit at the Home Office supported an application under the Police Research Award Scheme from Essex Police to purchase and train two Bloodhound and two German Shepherd puppies. The proposal was to train the puppies in an alternative tracking method known as scent discrimination. This method depends on the dog tracking the individual scent of the person rather than the scent of the ground disturbance they have left.

The results of the study are being analysed at the moment and a full report will go to all Police Forces as soon as the analysis is complete, which is expected within three months.

Essex Police

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received over the future use of motor-cycles by the Essex Police Force; and if he will make a statement; [71038]

(2) if he will make a special grant to the Essex Police Force to enable the mounted section to be retained; [71041]

(3) what representations he has received over the future of the mounted section of the Essex Police Force; [71039]

(4) if he will make additional grants to the Essex Police Force to prevent cuts in services; and if he will make a statement. [71040]

Mr. Boateng: Funding of Essex Police in 1999–2000 will increase by £4.6 million (2.9 per cent.) to £163 million. This increase is above the national average. The allocation of resources within the Essex Police is a matter for the Chief Constable and the police authority, as are the use of motorcycles and the mounted section.

I received one representation from the Essex Police Authority about the proposed funding settlement for 1999–2000, which included reference to the consequences of the settlement for the mounted section and the future use of motorcycles by the Essex Police. I understand from the Chief Constable that his proposal to disband the mounted section is based upon their limited operational contribution to the modern day to day policing of Essex. Similarly, the continued use of motorcycles is under consideration as part of the force's drive for improved efficiency.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were serving in the Essex Police Force on 31 December (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998; and what is the projected figure for 1999 excluding officers in that part of the Metropolitan Police area to be transferred to Essex. [71037]

Mr. Boateng: Information on police numbers is collected at the end of March and September. The figures for the period requested are set out in the table.

	Total officer strength
30 September 1992	2,929
30 September 1997	2,944
30 September 1998	2,903

Ministers have no direct control over police numbers. Under legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994, it is for the individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their force, on the basis of the resources made available to them. It is not, therefore, possible to provide a projection of the force's strength for 1999.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70477]

Mr. Straw: I refer my hon. Friend to "Civil Service Statistics 1998", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70463]

Mr. Straw: Thirty-six posts were relocated from central London to Merseyside over the period January to August 1997.

The new Criminal Records Bureau will be established in Merseyside in 2000–2001 under the management of the United Kingdom Passport Agency and will employ up to 1,200 staff.

A total of 31,574 Home Office staff (59.7 per cent.) are located outside London and the South East (including 30,244 (66.5 per cent.) Agency staff).

Cassini Space Probe

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans he has for dealing with the effects of premature re-entry of the space probe Cassini. [70455]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office is the lead government department for satellite incidents. Arrangements are in place to track satellites and advise local authorities and emergency services of any possible impact in the United Kingdom so that local response arrangements can be activated.

Current advice is that the space probe Cassini is unlikely to collide with Earth and is still less likely to hit this country.

My officials will, however, continue to monitor the situation.

Immigration and Nationality Cases

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration and nationality cases are currently being held in a work in progress store; and how many of these have been outstanding for more than (a) six months, (b) one year and (c) two years. [71369]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since 7 December 1998, outstanding immigration cases have been moved to a central Work in Progress Store, from where they will be allocated to caseworkers. New cases, and older cases which were deemed to require early consideration, are stored in a case allocation unit, awaiting allocation to caseworkers.

There are currently 104,356 cases held in the Work in Progress Store. Of these, 71,987 have been outstanding for more than six months; of these 50,150 have been outstanding for more than one year; and of these, approximately 37,500 have been outstanding for more than two years.

There are currently 12,736 cases held in the Cases Allocation Unit, of which 3,670 were awaiting action as at 4 December 1998.

In addition, there are approximately 92,000 citizenship applications. Of these, approximately 70,000 have been outstanding for more than six months; of these, 46,000 have been outstanding for more than one year; and of these, 3,000 have been outstanding for more than two years.

(Work in Progress is a broad term which may include work to be completed more easily and expeditiously than the more intractable claims.)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest date by which immigration and nationality cases currently in a work in progress store are planned to be passed to a case management unit. [71368]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our plans for dealing with Immigration and Nationality Directorate casework backlogs are set out in the Government's White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—A Modern Approach to Immigration and Asylum". Cases in the Work in Progress Store will be actioned consistent with those commitments.

Police Authorities (Legal Costs)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police authorities in England Wales are currently funding in whole or in part the legal costs of serving or former police officers facing criminal charges. [71427]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not collected centrally. The funding of legal costs of police officers involved in criminal proceedings is entirely a matter for police authorities.

Racial Crime (Police Response)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the police response to crimes with a racial element. [69134]

Mr. Boateng: Several assessments have been made recently of this vital area of policing.

The Home Office Police Research Group's report "Policing Racially Motivated Incidents", published in November 1997, found variations in recording and processing procedures between forces, difficulties in applying the concept of racial motivation and poor understanding of relevant legislation. Of the cases where there was potential for further action, only just over a third resulted in a charge or caution.

The thematic report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) on police/community and race relations, "Winning the Race", which was published in October 1997, also registered concerns about levels of awareness within forces of what constituted a racial incident, about recording practices and procedures and about the quality of the police response to racial incidents. HMIC are currently completing their report of a follow-up inspection to assess progress.

Findings from the British Crime Survey published in April 1998—"Ethnicity and Victimisation: Findings from the 1996 British Crime Survey"—showed a considerable gap between crime incidents perceived to be racially motivated by victims and the number of incidents recorded by the police. While various factors mean that an exact match between the two sets of figures could not be expected, under-recording by the police appears to be a significant factor.

The Association of Chief Police Officers issued a good practice guide on the police response to racial incidents in April 1998 responding to those concerns and have set up a working group to consider further improvements, including standardising core recording requirements. A protocol has been agreed with the Crown Prosecution Service to ensure consistency in identifying cases with a racial motivation. We welcome the setting up of the Racial and Violent Crime Task Force in the Metropolitan Police Service.

The report of the Inquiry into matters arising from the death of Stephen Lawrence is expected shortly. The Inquiry's terms of reference require it to identify the lessons to be learned from the investigation and prosecution of racially motivated crime. We expect the Inquiry's report to provide a clear guide to further progress.

Voluntary Organisations (Crime Prevention)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the role of voluntary organisations as partners in combating crime and disorder. [69211]

Mr. Boateng: I believe that voluntary organisations have a vital role to play in tackling crime and disorder. This view is reflected in the fact that a wide range of voluntary bodies must be invited to participate in the work of the local crime and disorder reduction partnerships established by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Furthermore, guidance issued by the Home Office emphasises the importance of the voluntary sector's contribution to the crime and disorder audits and strategies which the local partnerships are currently engaged in producing.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70971]

Mr. Straw: The table gives the information available for each of the websites of my Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies. Figures are approximate where indicated. In no case was the expenditure higher than budgeted.

	Expenditure on setting up website	Operation of website: cost per year (current)	Topics covered	Current average number of hits per month	Estimate expenditure for next 3 years: cost per year
Home Office	£250	£7,500	The work of the Home Office	350,000	£12,500
Fire Service College	£4,000	Nil so far	The work of the Fire Service College	Not available	Not yet decided
Forensic Science Service	Less than £25,000	Not more than £60,000	The work of the Forensic Science Service	1,600	£150,000 first 2 years, then less than £100,000 p. a.
Prison Service (Prison Enterprise Services only)	Within the range £4,950 to £40,918	Included in setup costs	Sales Catalogue	155	Not available
UK Passport Agency	£900	£1,740	The work of the UK Passport Agency	17,600	£1,740
Commission for Racial Equality	£1,000	£5,000	Racial equality race issues	2,500	£10,000 in the first year then as current costs
National Criminal Intelligence Service	£700	£500	Organised crime, criminal intelligence	3,000	£3,000
Police Information Technology Organisation	£12,000	Included in setup costs	Police information technology	37,700	1999–2000: £12,000 2000–01: £5,000 2001–02: £5,00
Youth Justice Board	£250	Not in operation for more than a year	The work of the Youth Justice Board	Not available yet	£1,000

Does not include staff costs

Approximate figure

Exact figure commercial in confidence

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 604, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71010]

Mr. Straw: The total expenditure incurred: (a) by Home Office agencies is as follows:

	£
Prison Service	5,000
Fire Service College	46,045
Passport Agency	[1]118,000
Forensic Science Service	250,000

[1] Figure for April 1997 to end December 1998

Figures on publicity expenditure for all 34 Home Office Non Departmental Public Bodies can be obtained only at disproportionate expense.

(b) by the Central Office of Information is: £2,290,233.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71336]

Mr. Straw: The constituencies I have visited in the course of my official duties in the past 12 months are listed in the table:

Date	Constituency
25 February 1998	Derby, South
3 March 1998	Enfield, Southgate
7 March 1998	Southport
10 March 1998	High Peak
11 March 1998	Feltham and Heston
20 March 1998	Blackburn
2 April 1998	Salford
21 April 1998	North-East Hampshire
28 April 1998	Birmingham, Perry Barr
28 April 1998	Birmingham, Edgbaston
29 April 1998	Southwark, North and Bermondsey
30 April 1998	Elmet
11 May 1998	Oxford, West and Abingdon
12 May 1998	Mole Valley
12 May 1998	Oxford, West and Abingdon
19 May 1998	Portsmouth, South
20 May 1998	Bournemouth, West
16 July 1998	Worcester
21 July 1998	Mitcham and Morden
23 July 1998	Windsor
1 September 1998	Swansea, East
1 September 1998	Swansea, West
1 September 1998	Aberavon
3 September 1998	Birmingham, Ladywood
3 September 1998	West Bromwich, West
3 September 1998	Burton
3 September 1998	Newcastle-under-Lyme
8 September 1998	Uxbridge
8 September 1998	Ealing, Southall
9 September 1998	Lewisham, East
15 September 1998	Henley
15 September 1998	Bristol, West
16 September 1998	Bristol, East
16 September 1998	Bristol, West
22 September 1998	Tyne Bridge
22 September 1998	Leeds, Central
8 October 1998	Coventry, South
13 October 1998	Erith and Thamesmead
27 October 1998	Blackpool, South
19 November 1998	Ashfield
19 November 1998	Bolsover
19 November 1998	Hyndburn
25 November 1998	Chingford and Woodford Green
12 January 1999	Camberwell and Peckham
18 January 1999	Falmouth
22 January 1999	Cardiff, Central
22 January 1999	Cardiff, South and Penarth
22 January 1999	Oxford, West and Abingdon
28 January 1999	Eastleigh
1 February 1999	Harrogate and Knaresborough

Additionally, I have visited a number of constituencies in central and inner London in the normal course of my duties.

A number of minor or incidental meetings and engagements may also have been undertaken in other constituencies to and from the engagements specified above. We do not have a complete record of these.

Persistent Young Offenders

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the upper limit to nullify the effects of unusually lengthy cases used in the time intervals surveys conducted by the Lord Chancellor's Department was not used in the calculation of his benchmark figure of 142 days from arrest to sentencing for persistent young offenders; and if he will estimate the impact on that figure of using such a limit. [70811]

Mr. Boateng: The benchmark figure of 142 days from arrest to sentence in persistent young offender cases was calculated on the basis of a special exercise, which drew a sample of cases from the Police National Computer (Phoenix). Phoenix does not exclude cases on the basis of their length. The Government's pledge is to halve the time from arrest to sentence for all persistent young offenders. A minority of cases may be protracted for reasons outside the control of case management, such as the illness of the defendant or a key witness. However, it is essential that unnecessary delay should be removed from all cases, regardless of their complexity or the exceptional circumstances that may arise. For that reason, the Government consider it appropriate for the benchmark figure to be based on all cases.

Non-domestic Animals (Welfare)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that (a) chimpanzees and (b) other non-domestic animals in private ownership are not maltreated. [70887]

Mr. George Howarth: All non-domestic animals in private ownership are protected by the Protection of Animals Act 1911, under which it is a criminal offence to ill-treat or cause any unnecessary suffering to any captive animal.

In addition, there is legislation for the keeping of these animals in certain circumstances. The Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925 gives local authorities and the police the power to enter at all reasonable times and inspect any premises in which performing animals are kept for training or exhibition, and to inspect those animals.

The Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 makes it an offence to keep certain animals, listed in a Schedule to the Act, without a licence from the local authority. Before issuing a licence the authority should be satisfied that suitable standards of health, welfare and accommodation for the animal will be provided.

Under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981, all zoos must be licensed by the local authority. Inspections are carried out to ensure that the standards of accommodation, staffing or management are adequate for the proper care and well-being of the animals.

PRIME MINISTER

Special Advisers

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many of the special advisers appointed since 1 May 1997 were known personally by the Minister for whom they worked prior to their appointment; [69653]

(2) how many of the special advisers appointed between 1 May 1992 and 30 April 1997 were known personally by the Minister for whom they worked prior to their appointment. [69655]

The Prime Minister: Special Advisers are appointed under terms and conditions set out in the "Model Contract for Special Advisers". Their appointments are made personally by the appointing Minister, on behalf of the Crown. As is the case with appointments under the previous Administration, special advisers will often have worked with or have been known to the appointing Minister before appointment. Their appointment terminates automatically when there is a change of Government.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maples: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total cost incurred by his predecessor in the financial year 1996–97 for the use of RAF and chartered aircraft. [69379]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The total cost incurred by my predecessor in the financial year 1996–97 for the use of RAF and chartered aircraft was £233,872. This is part of the total expenditure of £7.8 million on overseas visits by Ministers under the previous Administration for 1996–97 and compares with expenditure of £6.1 million by this Government in the year 1 May 1997 to 31 March 1998.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Prime Minister how many of the people listed in his answer of 19 November 1998, Official Report, columns 743–44, as accompanying him to Washington in February 1998 were (a) ministers, (b) permanent career civil servants, (c) temporary civil servants, special advisers and political appointees, (d) journalists paying their own fares, (e) businessmen paying their own fares and (f) others. [70233]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 February 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lichfield (Mr. Fabricant) on 13 March 1998, Official Report, columns 366–67. No journalists or businessmen accompanied me on the visit. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) on 10 February 1999, Official Report, columns 283–84.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Prime Minister how many of the people listed in his answer of 19 November 1998, Official Report, columns 743–44, as accompanying him to the G7 summit and UN General Assembly in June 1997 were (a) ministers, (b) permanent career civil servants, (c) temporary civil servants, special advisers and political appointees, (d) journalists paying their own fares, (e) businessmen paying their own fares and (f) others. [70232]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 February 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) on 4 July 1997, Official Report, column 293. Seventeen journalists accompanied me on the visit and paid their own fares. No businessmen attended.

I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) on 10 February 1999, Official Report, columns 283–84.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Prime Minister how many of the people listed in his answer of 19 November 1998, Official Report, columns 743–44, as accompanying him to Japan in January 1998 were (a) ministers, (b) permanent career civil servants, (c) temporary civil servants, special advisers and political appointees, (d) journalists paying their own fares, (e) businessmen paying their own fares and (f) others. [70234]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 February 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 17 February 1998, Official Report, columns 523–24. Nineteen journalists accompanied me on the visit and paid their own fares.

I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) on 10 February 1999, Official Report, columns 283–84.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister when he plans to provide a substantive answer to the question from the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton of 25 January 1999, regarding ministerial Concorde flights (Ref. 67984). [71190]

The Prime Minister: I did so on 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 283.

Ministerial Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the members of the Ministerial Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy and publish the agendas of its meetings; and if he will make a statement on the circumstances under which other Ministers may be invited to participate in its meetings. [71052]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Midlothian (Mr. Clarke) on 21 October 1998, Official Report, columns 1123–35. Other Ministers are invited to attend meetings as and when business requires.

In accordance with long-standing practice adopted by previous Administrations I do not propose to publish the agendas of the Committee's meetings. These documents fall within the exemption for proceedings of Cabinet and Cabinet Committees under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Security Services

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to allow members of the security services to plead a public interest defence in respect of any disclosure they may make. [70903]

The Prime Minister: The Government naturally keep legislation under review in the light of changing circumstances. However, they have no plans to undertake a formal review of the Official Secrets Act 1911.

The introduction of a public interest defence would mean that an officer in the security and intelligence agencies would be able to disclose sensitive information. Only after the information was released, and any damage done, would anyone else be able to make judgment on whether, in fact, the disclosure was in the public interest. There are clearly difficulties with such a proposal.

Staff of the security and intelligence agencies have, since 1987, been able to raise any concerns they have with the Staff Counsellor.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what contacts took place during his visit to Amman on 8 February between Her Majesty's Government and Members of the Iraqi delegation; and if he will make a statement. [71426]

The Prime Minister: No contacts took place.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 24, on Iraq, when (a) the paper circulated by the Russians and (b) the French proposals will be discussed in the Security Council; and if he will make a statement. [69991]

The Prime Minister: The French and Russian proposals were discussed in the Security Council on a number of occasions during January.

On 30 January, the Security Council reached consensus on the next steps on Iraq when it agreed to establish panels to consider three crucial issues: weapons of mass destruction; the humanitarian situation; and Prisoners of War and other Kuwaiti property. The panels are expected to report back to the Security Council by mid-April.

Internal Market

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister what percentage of total EU directives in force is currently under review under the Simpler Legislation for the Internal Market. [71147]

The Prime Minister: The Simpler Legislation for the Internal Market programme (SLIM) is aimed, as its name implies, at Single Market legislation. On 31 December 1998, 1193 Single Market Directives had been transposed into the domestic law of all Member States. This figure includes all Single Market Directives adopted and still in force since the beginning of the European Economic Community. Beginning in May 1996, SLIM reviews have covered around 3.25 per cent. of this legislation, in 14 different areas of activity.

The most recent two phases of SLIM have included reviews of electromagnetic compatibility, insurance, social security and company law legislation.

HEALTH

Noise-induced Hearing Loss

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department is undertaking to assess the effects of noise-induced hearing loss on natural hearing deterioration through aging. [67479]

Mr. Hutton: None. The Department funds research and development to support its work on policy development and evaluation in health and social care. The Department also manages the National Health Service research and development levy which is used to support research and development of relevance to the National Health Service in hospitals, general practice and other health care settings, and to fund the NHS research and development programme. In addition, the Medical Research Council (MRC)—which receives most of its income via grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology in the Department of Trade and Industry—funds medical research as part of the Government's funding of the science and engineering base. The MRC also funds basic research including the study of molecules and cells, genetics and infections and immunity (£158 millions per annum) which will inform research in this area.

Details of projects directly funded by the Department or supported through the NHS research and development levy can be found on the National Research Register (NRR). This is available in the Library and most medical libraries on CD Rom, and on the Internet: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nrr.htm. The NRR also contains many details of projects/trials funded by the MRC and other funders.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to each of the Government's public consultations. [69773]

Ms Jowell: The Department carefully analyses the responses to all consultation exercises it undertakes, and decisions are taken in the light of this assessment. We explain how decisions reflect our assessment of responses, but the decision to publish those assessments is made on a case-by-case basis.

Breast Feeding

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial provision he has made for the promotion of breast feeding in the current financial year. [70148]

Ms Jowell: In England, the financial provision for the promotion of breastfeeding during 1998–99 is £140,000. This includes publicity expenditure on promoting breastfeeding and grants awarded under Section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 to voluntary organisations concerned with promoting breastfeeding. It does not include the incidental expenditure of those attending meetings to discuss the promotion of breastfeeding either within the Department or the National Health Service.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69956]

Ms Jowell: Of the Department's seven executive non-departmental public bodies, the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW), the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (ENB) and the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA) publish the minutes of meetings. In none of these cases is this under a statutory requirement.

CCETSW and ENB publish the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings. In neither case is this under a statutory requirement.

CCETSW, ENB, HFEA, the National Biological Standards Board, the National Radiological Protection Board and the Public Health Laboratory Service Board publish registers of members' interests in line with the commitment given in Quangos: Opening the doors (Cabinet Office, July 1998). The Medical Practices Committee will be publishing a register shortly. In none of these cases is this under a statutory requirement.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69974]

Ms Jowell: Of the Department's seven executive non-Departmental public bodies, the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW) and the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (ENB) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings. In neither case is this under a statutory requirement.

CCETSW, ENB, and the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA) hold public meetings. In none of these cases is this under a statutory requirement.

CCETSW, ENB, HFEA and the Medical Practices Committee (MPC) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards. Only HFEA does so under a statutory requirement. We have included those bodies which have members with consumer expertise, even if there is not a dedicated consumer place.

CCETSW, ENB, HFEA, MPC, the National Biological Standards Board, the National Radiological Protection Board and the Public Health Laboratory Service Board all operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure. In none of these cases is this a statutory requirement.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. [69914]

Ms Jowell: All of the Department's seven executive non-Departmental public bodies have a statutory base. These are: the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW), the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting (ENB), the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA), the Medical Practices Committee (MPC), the National Biological Standards Board (NBSB), the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) and the Public Health Laboratory Service Board (PHLSB).

CCETSW, HFEA and MPC are already subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. ENB, NBSB and NRPB will soon be subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner as they are due to be brought within his jurisdiction shortly by means of an Order in Council which goes before the Privy Council this month. PHLSB is subject to the jurisdiction of the Health Service Commissioner and is therefore excluded from the Parliamentary Commissioner's jurisdiction.

NHS Consultants

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what written and oral representations or submissions he or his Department have received since May 1997 concerning NHS consultants working outside the NHS; and if he will make a statement on their contents. [70327]

Mr. Denham: Ministers and officials have received written and oral representations from many individuals, organisations and trust managers about National Health Service consultants. Departmental officials have also talked to a range of individuals and organisations in preparing to open negotiations with the British Medical Association on a new consultant contract, and these discussions have generated a variety of ideas and opinions. Negotiations opened in December.

Some representations have expressed concern about the time consultants spend on private practice and questioned their commitment to the NHS. Others have emphasised their hard work and dedication. Most consultants work very hard for the NHS. We are alert, however, to the possibility of conflicts of interest where consultants work outside the NHS. We want to modernise their contract to ensure that the skills and commitment of consultants are priorities and goals of the NHS and through this to resolve any apparent conflict of interest between private and NHS work.

Research (Human Tissue)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the use of human tissue in drug research; and if he will make a statement. [70621]

Ms Jowell: The use of human tissue in drug research can provide valuable information, in combination with information from other studies, when assessing the quality, safety and efficacy of medicinal products. The use of human tissue in drug research, along with other screening tests, may also help pharmaceutical companies to select a drug from a range of developmental drugs for further development.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the institutions funded by the Government to carry out research using human tissue. [70622]

Ms Jowell: It is likely that each National Health Service provider, medical school, and some universities and other research institutes in receipt of research funding or research support funding will be undertaking research using human tissue (including blood and cells). The precise list would change all the time as research is commissioned and ceases. It is likely to include all large teaching hospitals and medical schools at most times.

Details of projects directly funded by the Department or supported through the NHS research and development levy can be found on the National Research Register (NRR). This is available in the Library and most medical libraries on CD Rom, and on the Internet: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nrr.htm. The NRR also contains many details of projects/trials funded by the Medical Research Council and other funders.

NHS Pay System

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish proposals to modernise the NHS pay system. [71710]

Mr. Denham: We have today published the paper "Agenda for Change—Modernising the NHS Pay System" which gives details of our proposals. Copies are available in the Library.

North and East Devon Health Authority

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 9 February 1999, Official Report, column 166, concerning the judgment in R. v. North and East Health Authority, when he will complete his assessment of the implications of the case. [71408]

Mr. Hutton: We expect to complete our assessment following the decision on appeal.

Contraceptives

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he has issued to general practitioners on the prescription of contraceptives to under-16 year olds. [70454]

Ms Jowell: Guidance on contraceptive services for young people, including those under 16, is contained in the Department's circular Health Circular (86)1/, Health Circular (Family Practitioner) (86)1/, Local Authority Circular (86)3, copies of which are available in the Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70464]

Mr. Denham: The Department has a total of 4,896 staff, of whom 51 per cent. are based outside of London in some 40 offices throughout England. The Department underwent a major relocation exercise in 1993 when staff, mainly from London, were relocated to Leeds to establish the National Health Service Executive which now employs 652 people in Leeds. Around 50 staff in the NHS Estates Agency relocated from London to Leeds at the same time. The NHS Pensions Agency relocated to Fleetwood from Canons Park, London, in 1967. There are currently no plans for further relocation.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70478]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is in the table. The Department has no employees in Scotland or Wales.

	Department (excluding Agencies)	Medical Devices Agency	Medicines Control Agency	NHS Estates Agency	NHS Pensions Agency	Total
East Midlands	29	0	1	0	0	30
Eastern	5	0	6	1	0	12
London	1,760	128	482	2	0	2,372
Merseyside	16	0	0	0	0	16
North East	122	0	0	1	0	123
North West	165	8	5	0	489	667
South East	230	10	10	4	0	254
South West	133	0	0	0	0	133
West Midlands	252	0	0	3	0	255
Yorkshire and Humberside	892	0	4	138	0	1,034
Total	3,604	146	508	149	489	4,896

Cold-related Illnesses

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the increase in admissions to hospital for cold-related illnesses during the winter months and the effect of this on the availability of hospital beds. [70448]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service came under intense pressure over the Christmas and New Year period as a result of flu and flu-like illness and respiratory disease. The Emergency Services Action Team will be identifying lessons to be learned for next winter and also feeding these into the National Beds Inquiry we have set up within the Department.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the costs to the National Health Service of treating cold-related illnesses; and what measures he is taking to reduce these costs. [70451]

Mr. Hutton: Information is not collected on the cost to the National Health Service of treating cold-related illnesses. Information on treatments and costs are based on the treatment undertaken and not on the range of causes of the illness or disease.

The Department supports campaigns aimed at reducing the incidence of illness. One project which is related to cold conditions is "Keep Warm, Keep Well". As there are many influences on cold-related illness, this programme also involves the Departments of Social Security and the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The campaign is backed by Age Concern, England, Help the Aged and Neighbourhood Energy Action.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what (a) support and (b) advice his Department has offered to health authorities in respect of treating illnesses caused by cold and damp conditions in the home; [70449]

(2) what analysis his Department has made of (a) the extent of illness caused by cold and damp housing and (b) the cost to his Department of treating such illness. [70450]

Ms Jowell: The introduction of Health Improvement Programmes, through the White Paper "The new NHS", will bring all local players together to develop cross cutting plans to tackle the whole range of factors that cause ill health, of which cold and damp conditions in the home is one. These proposals encourage health authorities to take an overarching approach to addressing the health needs of their populations and are designed to produce overall improvements in health and reductions in inequalities.

The Government recognise that cold and damp housing and poor housing conditions generally can contribute to ill health. However, poor health can be influenced by a large number of causes other than housing. Poverty, unemployment and unhealthy lifestyles are examples of interacting factors that can have at least as great an effect. Therefore, it is not possible to establish or quantify links between specific housing conditions and ill health. As a result, nor is it possible to make estimates of National Health Service expenditure on ill health related to specific housing conditions.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend the NHS wheelchair voucher scheme to cover powered wheelchairs. [71134]

Mr. Hutton: An evaluation of the powered wheelchair and voucher scheme initiatives was commissioned last year from the York Health Economics Consortium. The evaluation is expected to be completed in the spring. Any decision to extend the voucher scheme to include powered wheelchairs will be taken in the light of the consortium's recommendations.

Mr. Rodney Ledward

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce his decision on the holding of a public inquiry into the causes, consequences and implications of the conduct of Mr. Rodney Ledward. [71315]

Mr. Denham: We have decided to conduct an independent inquiry into the performance of Mr. Rodney Ledward. We shall make an announcement shortly on the terms of reference and membership of the inquiry panel.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70970]

Ms Jowell: The Department's internet site has information on a wide range of topics covering the Department's activities and policies including Departmental responsibilities and objectives, press releases, Ministerial team details, Chief Medical Officer information, and the full text of all Departmental circulars and some Departmental publications. The Medical Devices Agency (MDA) Internet site includes information on reporting adverse incidents and Year 2000 and medical devices. The Medicines Control Agency (MCS) internet site covers its structure and functions together with electronic copies of some publications. The NHS Pensions Agency (NHSPA) internet site targets over 11,000 NHS employers on the co-administration of the pension scheme. The NHS Estates web site also includes information on its structure and functions and the text of some circulars. Statistical data concerning the cost and usage of the web sites are as follows:

Web site	Department[1]	MDA	MCA	NHSPA	NHS Estates
Setup costs (£000)	8	2	—	32	—
Operation costs 1998–99 (£000)	[2]10	—	5	14	0.5
Average monthly hits	1,011,300	24,800	2,200	[3]1,100	25,000
Estimated expenditure 1999–2001 (£000)	[4]10	—	—	20	—
Estimated expenditure 2000–01 (£000)	11	—	—	14.5	—
Estimated expenditure 2001–02 (£000)	12	—	—	14.5	—

[1] The central Department internet site home page address is www.doh.gov.uk; the MDA is www.medical-devices.gov.uk; the MCA is www.open.gov.uk/mca/mcahome.htm; the NHSPA is www.nhspa.gov.uk

[2] This excludes the cost of the Department's CCTA foundation membership which partly covers web hotelling costs for the Department and MDA as well as other services

[3] The NHSPA internet site was launched on 23 December 1998, and this figure only reflects the first month of operation

[4] This is an estimated figure and may be amended in the light of Modern Government and Freedom of Information proposals in the future

The following information is available on the Department's non-departmental public bodies web sites on the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA), National Radiological Protect Board (NRPB), Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) and National Biological Standards Board (NBSB)):

Web site	FEA	NRPB	PHLS	NBSB
Setup costs (£000)	6	—	22	4
Operation costs 1998–99 (£000)	—	—	—	2
Average monthly hits	3,500	20,000	110,000	13,500
Estimated expenditure 1999–2000 (£000)	10	—	—	2
Estimated expenditure 2000–01 (£000)	3	—	—	2
Estimated expenditure 2001–02 (£000)	3	—	—	2

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 560, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71009]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is given in the table.

£ million

	Estimated expenditure (since 1 May 1997)
(a) Non-departmental public bodies—public opinion research, television, radio and newspaper advertising	0.45
(b) The previously supplied total expenditure for television, radio and newspaper advertising during 1997–98 (£2.08 million) was all for work supplied by Central Office of Information. The total estimate for this work in 1998–99 has not yet been produced.	—

Diet (Mortality)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish details of the risks of mortality assessed by his Department from the consumption of foodstuffs associated with incidence of cancer and cardiovascular illness for (i) men and (ii) women aged (a) 20, (b) 30, (c) 40, (d) 50, (e) 60 and (f) 65 years. [70088]

Ms Jowell: The detailed information on risk of mortality from cancer and cardiovascular disease that is associated with the consumption of individual foods is not available in the form requested. It is the balance of foods making up the whole diet that is important in determining risk rather than individual foods. Independent expert advice to Government on the Nutritional Aspects of Cancer and Cardiovascular Disease has been published in reports by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy in 1998 and 1994 respectively. These reports are available in the Library.

Smoking

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cigarettes per day are smoked by the average smoker. [70692]

Ms Jowell: In England, in 1996–97, the average number of cigarettes smoked by adult smokers aged 16 and above was 15 a day.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adults in the United Kingdom were (a) cigarette smokers and (b) smokers of other tobacco products at the latest date for which figures are available. [70693]

Ms Jowell: The latest data relate to 1996–97, and show that amongst adults aged 16 and over in the United Kingdom: (a) 28 per cent. were cigarette smokers; (b) 3 per cent. were cigar smokers, and 1 per cent. were pipe smokers. Cigar and pipe smoking is mostly confined to men.

Dentistry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations from hon. Members he has received about the implementation of the investing in dentistry scheme; how many hon. Members have sought meetings with him; and how many have taken place. [70882]

Mr. Denham: We have received 70 letters from hon. Members. I have not had any requests from hon. Members to meet me to discuss the investing in dentistry initiative.

Medical Staff (Violent Attacks)

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to deal with violent attacks on nurses, doctors and other medical staff. [69120]

Mr. Denham: Violence to staff in the National Health Service is unacceptable and will not be tolerated. The Government are planning a cross-government drive to reduce the incidence of violence against staff. This has the firm support of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor and my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General. The campaign will be backed up by national guidelines for action, including prevention, prosecution, sentencing, good practice and challenging targets. The overarching message of this campaign will be that violence against NHS staff is unacceptable and the Government are determined to stamp it out.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates he has made, for each of the next five decades, of the increased cost to the National Insurance Fund of the increased rebates advocated in A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions. [64949]

Mr. Timms: The estimated additional cost of the extra rebates because of State Second Pension is as follows:

£ billion (1998–99 prices)

	2010	2020	2030	2040	2050
Cost	0.9	1.4	2.1	2.9	4.1

The introduction of Stakeholder Pension schemes is expected to lead to higher levels of contracting out. It is estimated that for every million people who contract out, £0.7 billion would be lost in National Insurance contributions.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the real cost to an employee on average earnings of the restoration of the earnings link to the basic state pension for (a) 2000, (b) 2010, (c) 2020, (d) 2030, (e) 2040 and (f) 2050, based on a growth in national income and average earnings of 1.5 per cent. per annum; and if he will estimate for the same years the real costs as they would be if the basic state pension was linked to prices and in the absence of the minimum income guarantee. [69193]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The information is in the table.

Weekly contributions required by employees on average earnings to meet the cost of price and earnings upratings of national insurance fund benefits

	Price uprating of benefits and earnings limits		Earnings uprating of benefits and earnings limits
Year	£ per week	Percentage of all earnings	£ per week	Percentage of all earnings
2000	29	7.5	30	7.6
2010	33	7.3	37	8.1
2020	34	6.4	46	8.7
2030	35	5.7	61	9.9
2040	32	4.5	73	10.2
2050	29	3.5	84	10.1

Notes:

1. The information is in constant 1998–99 price terms. However, costs can be met in a number of ways and the liability would not necessarily fall on employees.

2. Estimates assume 1.5 per cent. real earnings growth.

3. Means-tested benefit offsets have not been taken into account as they do not constitute part of the National Insurance Fund.

Source:

Estimates have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be, in each of the next five decades, the gross and net public expenditure costs of the proposals outlined in A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions. [64948]

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 376, which gives the gross and net public expenditure costs for State Second pension compared to SERPS. The public expenditure costs arising from the introduction of Stakeholder Pension schemes would be dependent on the level of take-up. The estimated cost of guaranteeing eligible pensioners an income of at least £75 a week is £265 million in 1999–2000.

Child Support Agency

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many absent parents in each of the last three years filed returns with the Child Support Agency stating that they were self-employed. [70430]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Ms Rosie Winterton, dated 11 February 1999:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the self employed non-resident parents dealt with by Child Support Agency.

I am not able to provide all of the information in the precise format that you have requested, but have provided as much as is available.

Information relating to the number of self employed non-resident parents who have had a maintenance assessment is produced by the Analytical Services Division of the Department of Social Security.

The Department of Social Security Analytical Services Division publish quarterly a summary of statistics relating to child support, the latest report was published today and shows that at November 1998 36,500 maintenance assessment cases referred to self employed non-resident parents. The full report is available in the House of Commons library. Information for previous years and comparisons with the total live and assessed caseload are shown in the table attached.

We acknowledge that cases where the non-resident parent is self employed can be more difficult to progress, especially where the non-resident parent does not wish to co-operate. The key to assure early co-operation is by personal contact with our clients. By approaching clients at the initial stages of their assessment we aim to build a better relationship with them, address their concerns promptly and provide an improved level of service.

We have recently completed a pilot study in the South Western Business Unit, looking at how best to process self employed cases. Trials using dedicated staff dealing exclusively with the self employed have shown a marked reduction in processing time and an increase in the collection of maintenance. We intend to have specific sections, supported by accountants where necessary, in each of the other 5 front line Business Unit by March 1999 to deal exclusively with self employed customers.

The Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill published on 10 February 1999 contains a provision which allows the Inland Revenue to pass information about the earnings of a self employed non-resident parent where the Agency enquiries have failed to establish the facts. This will allow assessments to be made in a number of the most difficult cases.

Additionally, we have increased resources for our Client Helplines and the National Enquiry Line, extended our hours of opening to cover 8.00am to 8.00pm Monday to Friday and 9.00am to 5.00pm on Saturdays and carried out trials to greatly improve and increase clients' opportunities to secure a face to face service.

I hope this is helpful.

Maintenance assessments for self employed non-resident parents

	November 1996	November 1997	November 1998
Live and assessed caseload	545,900	694,500	864,400
Self Employed cases	21,100	28,900	36,500

Maintenance assessments for self employed non-resident parents

	November 1996	November 1997	November 1998
Self Employed cases as % of live and assessed caseload	4%	4%	4%

Minimum Wage

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the effect of the introduction of the minimum wage on the number of family credit claimants where the main earner has gross weekly earnings of (a) under £40, (b) £40 to £79.99, (c) £80 to £119.99, (d) £120 to £159.99, (e) £160 to £199.99, (f) £200 to £249.99, (g) £250 to £300 and (h) £300 and over. [69750]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

The impact of the introduction of the national minimum wage (nmw) on the distribution of gross weekly earnings of the main earner

Gross Earnings £ per week	Above NMW level—no change in Family Credit (FC)	Below NMW level but on maximum FC. Earnings rise—no change in FC	Below NMW level. Earnings rise. FC falls (but by less than the increase in earnings)	Below NMW. Earnings rise—float families above the levels at which FC is payable	Total
Under £40	25,500	3,500	5,000	1,500	37,500
£40—£79.99	118,000	61,000	70,500	5,500	256,000
£80—£119.99	113,000	—	60,000	8,500	182,000
£120—£159.99	94,000	—	35,000	5,000	134,000
£160—£199.99	93,500	—	12,000	2,500	108,000
£200—£249.00	70,000	—	2,500	2,500	75,000
£250—£299.99	16,500	—	—	500	16,500
£300+	2,000	—	—	—	2,000
Total	532,500	65,000	185,000	26,000	811,000

Notes:

1. Estimates based on a 5 per cent. sample of FC recipients and the 1995–6 Family Resources Survey uprated to 1999–2000 prices. Estimates calibrated to 1999–2000 FC forecast assuming FC continues throughout the year.
2. Estimates assume no restoration of earnings differentials above the minimum wage and no employment effects.
3. Analysis shows that partners earnings may also increase on introduction of the minimum wage
4. Estimates rounded to nearest 500. Totals may not sum owing to rounding. (—) indicated a figure of less than 250.

Pneumoconiosis

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many working miners are in receipt of a disability pension for pneumoconiosis; [69930]

(2) how many former mineworkers are in receipt of a disability pension for pneumoconiosis; and how many cases were made an award in the last year for which figures are available. [69929]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

At 5 April 1997 there were approximately 7,700 awards[1] of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit (IIDB) in payment in respect of pneumoconiosis (prescribed disease D1) where the attributable industry was coalmining. In the 1997–98 year there were 229 new awards[2] for pneumoconiosis made where coal was the attributable agent. It is not known how many of these people may still be employed in the industry.

[1] Figures based on a 10 per cent. sample of IIDB assessments in GB, which includes an adjustment for late statistical returns.

[2] Figure from 100 per cent. data of new diagnoses

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division).

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many posthumous awards were made for pneumoconiosis in the last year for which figures are available broken down by (a) age, (b) degree of disability and (c) coalfield area. [69931]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many former mineworkers are in receipt of a disablement assessment for vibration white finger; and in how many cases an assessment was made in the last year for which figures are available; [69926]

(2) how many former mineworkers are in receipt of a disablement pension for vibration white finger; and how many pensions were awarded for the disease in the last year for which figures are available. [69927]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

At 5 April 1997 there were approximately 1,000 awards[1] of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit (IIDB) in payment due to vibration white finger, where the attributable industry was coalmining.

In the year 1997-98 there were 183 assessments[2] made where coalmining was the attributable industry, above the disablement threshold for payment (14 per cent.) which would have resulted in payment of benefit. There were 2,175 new assessments[2] which were below the disablement assessment threshold for payment (14 per cent.). Some of these may have been aggregated with another prescribed disease, but would not in themselves have attracted a benefit award. It is not known how many of these people may still be employed in the mining industry.

[1] Figure based on a 10 per cent. sample of IIDB assessments in GB, which includes an adjustment for late statistical returns.

[2] Figures from 100 per cent. data on new diagnosis.

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division).

Asbestosis

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women, broken down by occupation, (i) are in receipt of a disablement pension for asbestosis and (ii) were made an award in the last year for which figures are available. [69932]

Mr. Bayley: The Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit—newly diagnosed awards of asbestos-related diseases in the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998

	All	Men	Women
All Occupations	1,030	1,008	22
Corporate managers	2	2	0
General managers	1	1	0
Physical, mathematical and engineering science professionals	3	3	0
Other professionals	1	1	0
Physical and engineering science associate professionals	17	17	0
Life science and health associate professionals	1	0	1
Teaching associate professionals	1	0	1
Office clerks	4	2	2
Personal and protective services workers	6	4	2
Extraction and building trades workers	280	279	1
Metal, machinery and related trades workers	301	299	2
Precision, handicraft, printing and related trades workers	52	51	1
Other craft and related trades workers	38	35	3
Stationary plant and related trades workers	97	96	1
Machine operators and assemblers	43	37	6
Drivers and mobile plant operators	69	69	0
Sales and services elementary occupations	14	12	2
Agricultural, fishery and related labourers	2	2	0
Labourers in mining, construction, manufacturing and transport	97	97	0
Armed forces	1	1	0

Notes:

1. Figures are not available by occupation or attributable agent for the total numbers of people receiving benefit related to asbestos.

2. Asbestos related diseases that are prescribed for the purpose of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit are Pneumoconiosis (prescribed disease D1), where the attributable agent is asbestos, Diffuse mesothelioma (prescribed disease D3), Carcinoma of the lung (prescribed disease D8) and Bilateral diffuse pleural thickening (prescribed disease D9). The table shows the new diagnosis for benefit purposes of these asbestos-related diseases, which have attracted an award of benefit in the 1997–98 year, by gender and occupation.

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division). Figures based on 100 per cent. data.

Electron Microscopes

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the accuracy of electron microscopes employed for purposes of assessing the presence of asbestos fibres in lung tissue; and if he will make a statement. [70185]

Mr. Bayley: This Department does not use electron microscopes for assessing the presence of asbestos fibres in lung tissue. The accuracy of electron microscopes is a matter for the providers of any such microscopy service.

Special Medical Boards (Correspondence)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions hon. Members have written to his Department about individual findings of special medical boards since 1986. [70181]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have been received from former mineworkers claiming for chronic bronchitis and emphysema since (a) 13 September 1993 and (b) April 1997; and how many awards were made over the period broken down by (i) age, (ii) degree of disability and (iii) coalfield area. [69934]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out as follows.

Claims to industrial injuries disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema received between 13 September 1993 and 31 March 1996, by BA area directorate

Benefits Agency directorate	Claims received
Anglia	27
Chilterns	24
South London and Wessex	—
West Country	163
East London and Essex	43
South East	507
Wessex	1
East Midlands	6,266
Midlands and South West	680
West Mercia	3,870
Wales	10,354
Merseyside	539
Greater Manchester	355
Lancashire and Cumbria	2,377
Tyne Tees	7,540
South Yorkshire and Humberside	7,202
North and West Yorkshire	3,103
Glasgow and Paisley	252
North, Central and West Scotland	1,954
East Scotland	2,484
Total Great Britain	47,741

Claims to industrial injuries disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema received between 13 September 1993 and 31 March 1996, by BA area directorate

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division) data from Benefits Agency "BREM" and Central Data Unit. 100 per cent. data, which are provisional and subject to amendment.

Claims to industrial injuries disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema between 1 April 1996 and 31 December 1998 by BA area directorate

Benefits Agency directorate	1 April 1996 to 1 April 1997	9 April 1997 to 31 December 1998
East London and Anglia	7	22
Chilterns	2	15
London South	12	721
West Country	12	93
Mercia	524	11,137
West Midlands	31	978
Wales	693	7,950
North West Coast	65	819
Greater Manchester	97	1,408
Yorkshire	605	8,045
Tyne Tees	279	5,216
West of Scotland	34	1,514
East of Scotland	94	4,007
Total Great Britain	2,455	41,925

Note:

The Benefits Agency area directorates were reorganised with effect from April 1996

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division) data from Benefits Agency "BREM" and Central Data Unit. 100 per cent. data, which are provisional and subject to amendment.

Awards of industrial injuries disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema by percentage disability between 13 September 1993 and 31 March 1996

	13 September 1993 to 1 October 1994			2 October 1994 to 31 March 1996
	Percentage disability			Percentage disability
Benefits Agency directorate	14–24	25–34	Over 34	14–19	20–25	Over 25
Anglia	0	0	3	0	0	0
Chilterns	0	3	1	0	0	0
South London and Wessex	0	0	0	0	0	0
West Country	1	0	2	0	3	0
East London and Essex	0	0	0	0	0	0
South East	4	3	25	0	0	2
Wessex	0	0	0	0	0	0
East Midlands	38	52	521	5	16	104
Midlands and South West	3	2	50	0	0	1
West Mercia	22	43	315	4	8	17
Wales	203	223	891	4	48	161
Merseyside	5	18	26	0	0	1
Greater Manchester	4	8	19	0	1	0
Lancashire and Cumbria	18	25	104	1	3	6
Tyne Tees	33	83	467	2	7	48
South Yorks and Humberside	57	96	620	3	15	87
North and West Yorkshire	61	65	294	1	3	23
Glasgow and Paisley	0	2	6	0	0	0
North, Central and West Scotland	3	12	45	0	0	4
East Scotland	1	10	83	1	1	7
Total Great Britain	453	645	3,472	21	105	461

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division) data from Benefits Agency "BREM" (for period 13 September 1993 to 1 October 1994) and Central Data Unit (for period 2 October 1994 to 31 March 1996). 100 per cent. data, which are provisional and subject to amendment.

Awards of industrial injuries disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema between 1 April 1996 and 31 December 1998 by BA area directorates

	1 April 1996 to 31 March 1997 Degree of disability			1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998 Degree of disability			1 April 1998 to 31 December 1998 Degree of disability
Benefits Agency directorate	14–19%	20–25%	Over 25%	14–24%	25–34%	Over 34%	14–19%	20–25%	Over 25%
East London and Anglia	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Chilterns	0	0	0	0	0	1	0	0	0
London South	1	0	0	18	10	45	2	20	47
West Country	0	0	2	4	4	15	1	0	9
Mercia	2	14	69	137	192	1,733	7	35	477
West Midlands	0	0	2	7	17	109	1	1	10
Wales	4	11	39	207	264	1,178	37	108	474
North West Coast	2	0	5	36	24	80	3	9	56
Greater Manchester	1	12	5	20	33	154	10	24	86
Yorkshire	2	5	77	82	153	1,105	6	109	489
Tyne Tees	0	1	11	94	185	828	17	39	237
West of Scotland	0	0	0	39	48	189	12	6	20
East of Scotland	0	1	5	38	120	527	16	36	242
Total Great Britain	12	44	215	682	1,050	5,964	112	387	2,147

Notes:

1. Details of age and coalfield are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.
2. It is not known how many of these people may still be employed in the industry.
3. Details are provided by the Benefits Agency (BA) Area Directorates; it should be noted that the number of (and area covered by) these Directorates altered in April 1996.

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division) data from Benefits Agency "BREM" and Central Data Unit 100 per cent. data, which are provisional and subject to amendment.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many posthumous awards for chronic bronchitis and emphysema have been made to former mineworkers since 13 September 1993 broken down by (i) age, (ii) degree of disability and (iii) coalfield area. [69887]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women broken down by occupation are in receipt of a disablement pension for mesothelioma. [69928]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Industrial-Injuries Benefit—Current assessments of diffuse mesothelioma at 5 April 1997 by the industry attributable to the disease

Thousand

	All assessments	Men	Women
All Industries	0.7	0.7	—
Agriculture, hunting and forestry	—	—	—
Fishing	—	—	—
Mining and quarrying	—	—	—
Manufacturing	0.3	0.3	—
Electricity, gas and water supply	—	—	—
Construction	0.2	0.2	—
Wholesale and retail trade	—	—	—
Hotels and restaurants	—	—	—
Transport, storage and communication	0.1*	0.1*	—
Financial intermediation	—	—	—
Real estate renting and business activities	0.1*	0.1*	—
Public administration and defence; compulsory social security	—	—	—
Education	—	—	—
Health and social work	—	—	—
Other community, social and personal activities	[illegible]	[illegible]	—
Private households with employed persons	—	—	—
Extra-territorial organisations and bodies	—	—	—

Notes:

1. Figures based on a 10 per cent. sample of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit assessments in GB, which include an adjustment for late statistical returns.
2. The convention '—' means nil or negligible, and an asterisk indicates that a figure may be too small to be statistically reliable.
3. Details of occupation are not recorded on Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit current mesothelioma assessments data.

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division)

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many posthumous awards for mesothelioma were made for (a) men and (b) women, broken down by occupation, who have died in the last year for which figures are available. [69933]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pensioners (Tax and Benefits)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners (a) pay income tax and receive a means-tested benefit, (b) pay income tax but do not received a means-tested benefit, (c) do not pay income tax but do receive a means-tested benefit and (d) do not pay income tax and do not receive a means-tested benefit and if he will break down the total by (i) sex, (ii) marital status and (iii) five year age bands. [69695]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the tables.

Thousand

	Single male pensioners	Single female pensioners	Pensioner couples	All pensioner benefit units
Pensioners paying income tax and receiving a means-tested benefit
60–64	10	30	20	70
65–69	10	20	10	40
70–74	20	20	10	40
75–79	10	20	*	30
80+	10	20	*	30
Total	60	110	40	210
Pensioners paying income tax and not receiving a means-tested benefit
60–64	90	170	840	1,100
65–69	110	140	520	770
70–74	100	160	350	610
75–79	60	100	190	360
80+	80	120	140	340
Total	440	690	2,040	3,170
Pensioners not paying income tax and receiving a means-tested benefit
60–64	90	140	170	400
65–69	80	220	170	480
70–74	80	360	160	600
75–79	70	370	150	590
80+	120	570	130	820
Total	440	1,660	780	2,880
Pensioners not paying income tax and not receiving a means-tested benefit
60–64	30	30	110	170
65–69	40	130	270	440
70–74	40	210	310	560
75–79	40	200	200	430
80+	50	310	150	510
Total	200	880	1,040	2,110

Notes:

1. Figures are given to the nearest 10,000 pensioner benefit units, although not necessarily accurate to that degree.

2. Figures of less than 5,000 pensioners are denoted by '*'.

3. Figures should be treated with caution since taxpaying status is not directly measured by the Family Resources Survey, but has been modelled to the 1997–98 tax system.

4. Pensioner benefit units are defined as single people aged 60 or over and couples (married or cohabiting) where at least one partner is aged 60 or over.

5. Taxpaying pensioner benefit units are defined as those where at least one individual in the benefit unit is modelled as liable to income tax.

Source:

The estimates are based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey and replicate those given in the answer of 5 November 1998, Official Report, columns 249–50. We anticipate that estimates based on the 1996–97 Family Resources Survey will be available after February 1999, as stated in the answer of 8 February 1999, Official Report, column 68.

Pensioner Claimants (Benefits)

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what financial provision he expects to make in the financial year 1999–2000 for (a) administration of income support and (b) means-testing of social security benefits in relation to pensioner claimants. [70257]

Angela Eagle: Expenditure on the administration of Income Support for all client groups for 1999–2000 is estimated by the Benefits Agency to be £259.6 million. Of this total, it is estimated £71.3 million will be expenditure on the administration of pensioner cases.

Estimated programme expenditure for the main means-tested benefits claimed by pensioners for the period 1999–2000

£ billion

Benefit	Amount
Income Support (Minimum Income Guarantee)	4.0
Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit	5.5

Notes:

1. The figures on administrative costs exclude payment for postage, encashment charges, accommodation costs office service contracts, computer infrastructure charges and other central service costs. Information on these overheads apportioned by benefit is not routinely available.

2. Figures on programme expenditure are consistent with those published in the November 1998 Pre-Budget Report.

3. For the purposes of Income Support, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit, the term "pensioner" refers to a single person aged 60 or over, or a couple where one or both members is aged 60 or over.

Benefits (Maladministration)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for each of the principal benefits administered by his Department, (a) the number of claims for financial redress for maladministration, (b) the number of such claims which were successful and (c) the amount of compensation paid in each of the categories (i) loss of statutory entitlement, (ii) actual financial loss, (iii) delay and (iv) consolatory payments, for each of the last 10 years. [70195]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Financial redress for maladministration paid for each of the principle benefits administered by the Department of Social Security in 1997–98

Type of benefit/ allowance	Total number of successful claims	Compensation paid for loss of statutory entitlement £	Compensation paid for actual financial loss £	Compensation paid for delay £	Compensation paid for consolatory payments £
Sickness Benefit	59	29,177	329	29,009	1,180
Invalidity Benefit	262	69,280	9,581	89,877	2,400
Incapacity Benefit	578	138,874	18,285	129,306	2,235
Retirement Benefit	796	641,169	23,421	212,668	5,600
Widows Benefit	186	150,324	5,382	70,424	150
Attendance Allowance	103	35,743	3,793	21,540	400
Disability Living Allowance	357	114,726	24,946	46,203	3,735
Invalid Care Allowance	110	64,265	474	15,749	1,325
Severe Disablement Allowance	1,856	43,793	572	311,694	0
Industrial Injury Disablement Benefit	125	107,813	10,786	47,078	1,250
Reduced Earnings Allowance/Severe Hardship Allowance	43	58,940	8,956	23,002	0

Financial redress for maladministration paid for each of the principle benefits administered by the Department of Social Security in 1997–98

Type of benefit/ allowance	Total number of successful claims	Compensation paid for loss of statutory entitlement £	Compensation paid for actual financial loss £	Compensation paid for delay £	Compensation paid for consolatory payments £
Child Benefit	1,649	105,321	15,157	2,426	150
Family Credit	307	116,451	4,989	1,861	0
Income Support	2,088	241,618	344,511	293,113	8,705
Jobseekers Allowance	654	21,237	60,820	1,105	490
War Pensions Allowance[1]	82	2,655	1,217	13,581	100

[1] Information relating to War Pensions Allowance is available in UK form only

Notes:

1. Departmental special payment arrangements were reviewed in 1996, and new categories of consolatory payments were introduced from April 1997. Data have been provided for 1997–98, which is the only complete financial year since the change.
2. Previous statistical data did not separately identify different categories of ex-gratia payments.
3. The number of claims made for financial redress for maladministration for previous years is unknown. Details are held only of those which were successful. However, fuller information is now being collected and will be available for the 1998–99 financial year, and future years.

Special Medical Boards (Respiratory Diseases)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the address of each special Medical Boarding Centre for Respiratory Diseases in the United Kingdom. [70175]

Mr. Bayley: The address of each Medical Boarding Centre where Respiratory Disease (RD) examinations are carried out is as listed. Claimants who are unable to travel are seen at their own home.

South West

Bournemouth Medical Services Examination Centre (MSEC)
20–28 Cotlands Road
Bournemouth
Dorset

Bristol MSEC
Disability Benefit Centre
Government Buildings
Flowers Hill
Brislington
Bristol

Exeter MSEC
Unit 4
Ground Floor
Killerton House
Park 5
Harrier Way
Exeter

Gloucester MSEC
Cedar House
Spa Road
Gloucester

Plymouth MSEC
Argosy House
Longbridge Road
Plympton

Truro MSEC
Pydar House
Pydar Street
Truro

Swindon MSEC
Spring Gardens West
Princes Street
Swindon

Wales

Cardiff
Government Buildings
St. Agnes Road
Gabalfa
Cardiff

Swansea
4th Floor
Grove House
3 Grove Place
Swansea

Bangor
Ty Clwyder
The rear of 339 High Street
Bangor

Wrexham
Ty Maylor
15–17 Grosvenor Road
Wrexham

Scotland

Glasgow MSC
Corunna House
29 Cadogan Street
Glasgow

Inverness MSEC
2 Baron Taylor Street
Inverness

Aberdeen MSEC
Atholl House
86–88 Guild Street
Aberdeen

Edinburgh MSEC
44 York Place
Edinburgh

Dundee MSEC
The Vine
Magdalene Yard Road
Dundee
Yorkshire
Barnsley MSEC
Joseph Locke House
Heelis Street
Barnsley
Bradford MSEC
43 Cheapside
Bradford
Doncaster MSEC
Crossgate House
Wood Street
Doncaster
Huddersfield MSEC
Crown House
Southgate
Huddersfield
Halifax MSEC
Crossfield House
St. James Road
Halifax
Keighley MSEC
Worthy House
Low Street
Keighley
Hull MSEC
Stanley Street
Springbank
Hull
Scarborough MSEC
Arundel Place
Scarborough
Leeds MSC
Government Buildings
Otley Road
Lawnswood
Leeds
Sheffield MSEC
Queen Street
Sheffield
Pontefract MSEC
Hirst Yard
Newgate
Pontefract
York MSEC
St. Denys Road
York
North West
Manchester MSC
Albert Bridge House
Bridge Street
Manchester
North East
Newcastle MSC
Arden House
Regent Centre
Regent Farm Road
Gosforth
Newcastle
Sunderland MSEC
2nd Floor
60 The Bridges
Sunderland
Durham MSEC
Elvet House
Hallgarth Street
Durham
East Midlands
East Midlands
Stoke MSEC
Ridgehouse Drive
Festival Park
Stoke on Trent
Nottingham MSEC
Chaddesdon House
77 Talbot Street
Nottingham
Chesterfield MSEC
Beetwell House
Beetwell Street
Chesterfield
South East
Euston MSEC
Euston Road
London
Canterbury MSEC
Nutwood House
Chaucer Road
Canterbury.

Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of (a) applications for and (b) awards of disablement benefit for (i) chronic bronchitis and (ii) emphysema since 13 September 1993 in respect of coal miners (1) for the United Kingdom as a whole and (2) for each of the regional special medical boarding centres for respiratory diseases. [70179]

Mr. Bayley: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the tables.

New claims to industrial injuries disablement benefit for coal miners suffering from chronic bronchitis and emphysema received between 13 September 1993 and 31 March 1996, by BA area directorate

Benefits Agency Directorate	Claims received
Anglia	27
Chilterns	24
South London and Wessex	—
West Country	163
East London and Essex	43

New claims to industrial injuries disablement benefit for coal miners suffering from chronic bronchitis and emphysema received between 13 September 1993 and 31 March 1996, by BA area directorate

Benefits Agency Directorate	Claims received
South East	507
Wessex	1
East Midlands	6,266
Midlands and South West	680
West Mercia	3,870
Wales	10,354
Merseyside	539
Greater Manchester	355
Lancashire and Cumbria	2,377
Tyne Tees	7,540
South Yorks and Humberside	7,202
North and West Yorkshire	3,103
Glasgow and Paisley	252
North, Central and West Scotland	1,954
East Scotland	2,484
Total Great Britain	47,741

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division) data from Benefits Agency 'BREM' and Central Data Unit. 100 per cent. data, which are provisional and subject to amendment

New claims to industrial injuries disablement benefit for coal miners suffering from chronic bronchitis and emphysema between 1 April 1996 and 31 December 1998 by BA area directorate

Benefits Agency Directorate	Claims received
East London and Anglia	29
Chilterns	17
London South	733
West Country	105
Mercia	11,661
West Midlands	1,009
Wales	8,643
North West Coast	884
Greater Manchester	1,505
Yorkshire	8,650
Tyne Tees	5,495
West of Scotland	1,548
East of Scotland	4,101
Total Great Britain	44,380

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division) data from Benefits Agency 'BREM' and Central Data Unit. 100 per cent. data, which are provisional and subject to amendment

Awards of industrial injuries disablement benefit for coal miners suffering from chronic bronchitis and emphysema between 13 September 1993 and 30 September 1997 by special medical board

Medical Boarding Centres (GB)	Number of awards (assessments of 14 per cent. or more disability)
Swansea	323
Bristol	16
Cardiff	1,944
Glasgow	308
Edinburgh	51
Stoke on Trent	398
Leeds/Sheffield[1]	1,607
Manchester	240
Newcastle	1,493
London	6
Total Great Britain	6,386

Notes:

1. The special medical boarding centre at Sheffield transferred to Leeds in 1996.
2. Figures are not available separately for chronic bronchitis and emphysema, because they are prescribed as one disease (PD D12) for Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit.
3. Claim figures for Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema are not available for each of the boarding centres but are provided for Great Britain and for the Benefits Agency (BA) Area Directorate. These areas changed boundaries at April 1996 and this is reflected in the tables.
4. Details of special medical boards are not available for Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit claims data and are available only for awards data until 30 September 1997.

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division) 100 per cent. data.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) applications for and (b) awards of disablement benefit in respect of coal miners suffering from pneumoconiosis there were for (1) the United Kingdom as a whole and (2) each of the special medical boarding centres for respiratory diseases in each year from 1988 to 1997. [70184]

Mr. Bayley: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the tables.

Industrial injuries disablement benefit

Number of special medical boardings during the year and number of awards for pneumoconiosis relating to the coal agent

Great Britain

	1988		1989		1990
Medical boarding centre	Boardings	Awards	Boardings	Awards	Boardings	Awards
All Boards	1,042	299	1,061	339	896	344
Cardiff	228	47	278	73	155	46
Swansea	126	27	102	19	103	30
Glasgow	41	10	41	14	34	11
Stoke on Trent	79	18	74	24	50	23
Sheffield	338	119	364	147	358	150
Manchester	89	29	99	30	57	28
Newcastle	126	45	96	29	126	50
London	15	4	7	3	13	6

Great Britain

	1991		1992		1993
Medical boarding centre	Boardings	Awards	Boardings	Awards	Boardings	Awards
All Boards	1,083	379	1,104	383	1,122	395
Cardiff	181	49	190	58	182	58
Swansea	112	18	108	21	82	22

Great Britain

Medical boarding centre	1991 Boardings	Awards	1992 Boardings	Awards	1993 Boardings	Awards
Glasgow	62	19	41	6	44	10
Stoke on Trent	70	31	55	17	69	27
Sheffield	424	174	521	221	502	205
Manchester	63	28	64	24	51	12
Newcastle	158	54	112	34	177	58
London	13	6	13	2	15	3

Great Britain

Medical boarding centre	1994 Boardings	Awards	1995 Boardings	Awards
All Boards	1,563	583	n/a	384
Cardiff	153	56	n/a	58
Swansea	89	19	n/a	17
Glasgow	18	5	n/a	4
Edinburgh	23	6	n/a	5
Stoke on Trent	89	47	n/a	17
Sheffield	462	274	n/a	217
Manchester	63	28	n/a	21
Newcastle	648	141	n/a	43
London	18	7	n/a	2

Great Britain

Medical boarding centre	1996 Boardings	Awards	1997 1 January to 30 September only Boardings	Awards
All Boards	n/a	322	n/a	148
Bristol	n/a	3	n/a	2
Cardiff	n/a	46	n/a	40
Swansea	n/a	25	n/a	8
Glasgow	n/a	7	n/a	5
Stoke	n/a	14	n/a	20
Leeds	n/a	172	n/a	25
Manchester	n/a	22	n/a	14
Newcastle	n/a	33	n/a	33
London	n/a	—	n/a	1

Notes:

1. Figures are not available specifically for the coal mining industry, but are available for Great Britain, where coal has been the attributable agent for pneumoconiosis.

2. Figures are not available on applications by special medical boarding centre. They are available up to 1994 for applications that reach the examination stage.

Source:

DSS (Analytical Services Division) 100 per cent. data.

Disablement Benefit

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of (a) applications for, and (b) awards of disablement benefit in each of the years 1988 to 1997 for (1) the United Kingdom as a whole and (2) each of the special medical boarding centres for respiratory diseases for (i) asbestosis, (ii) mesothelioma, (iii) lung cancer alone, (iv) lung cancer with accompanying bilateral diffuse pleural thickening, (v) lung cancer with accompanying unilateral diffuse pleural thickening, (vi) lung cancer with pleural plaques, (vii) bilateral diffuse pleural thickening alone, (viii) unilateral diffuse pleural thickening alone and (ix) pleural plaques alone. [70183]

Mr. Bayley: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available has been placed in the Library.

Special Medical Boards

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the criteria for appointment to the special medical boards for respiratory diseases. [70176]

Mr. Bayley: Doctors appointed to special medical boards for respiratory diseases must hold full registration with the General Medical Council. They must have not less than five years' post-registration experience in a clinical field relevant to disability assessment, and have successfully completed an appropriate training course in disability analysis, assessment of disablement arising from industrial injuries and prescribed industrial diseases, and in interpretation of chest x-rays and relevant pulmonary function tests.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for each year since 1985 the number of (a) appeals and (b) successful appeals against decisions of special medical boards for respiratory diseases. [70182]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Appeals heard and decided

Year	Total	Decided in appellant's favour	Percentage in appellant's favour
1991	469	158	33.7
1992	690	185	26.8
1993	881	291	33.0
1994	1,001	321	32.1
1995	1,178	277	23.5
1996	1,302	448	34.4
1998	1,096	280	25.5

Notes:

1. Data for the years 1985 to 1990 are not available.

2. Data for central collection in 1997 were not provided by the Medical Regions owing to internal re-structuring within ITS.

Source:

The Medical Appeal Tribunals which have been registered with the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS).

Benefit Payments

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to consult those involved in the issue of tackling domestic violence on the question of split benefit payments; [70535]

(2) what plans he has to pay benefits so that men receive payments in respect of their entitlements only and women receive payments in respect of the entitlements of themselves and their children. [70539]

Angela Eagle: We have commissioned research into the current financial roles and responsibilities of couples on benefit to determine whether any changes to the existing arrangements for paying benefit are needed to support Welfare to Work. The final report on this research will be published.

We have no plans to consult with any organisation tackling domestic violence at this stage, but it may be appropriate to do so in the future.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70459]

Angela Eagle: Over many years this Department has had a policy of locating offices in the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment. The Benefits Agency has relocated work from London to three processing centres in Glasgow, Makerfield and Belfast; and when the Child Support Agency was set up, its six processing centres were located in areas of high unemployment.

There are no immediate plans for further decentralisation.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70473]

Mr. Timms: The information is available in the "Civil Service Statistics 1998", which is placed in the Library of the House.

Incapacity Benefit (Appeals)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if the piloted changes to the composition of appeal tribunals for incapacity benefit are to be introduced nationally; [70558]

(2) what is the current average time before appeals are heard by appeal tribunals in relation to incapacity benefit. [70559]

Angela Eagle: The current average delay in hearing all appeals, including those on Incapacity Benefit, is seven months. This is clearly unacceptable and we are committed to improvements. Changes will be introduced in the second half of this year, under the provisions of the Social Security Act 1998.

One change will be to move away from the rigid requirement of a three person tribunal in every case to a more flexible approach, where the tribunal will be made up of people with the expertise to consider the issues in each appeal. Appeals on Incapacity Benefit will be heard by a lawyer and a doctor.

We will be bringing the necessary regulations to the House shortly.

During the passage of the Social Security Bill through the Lords, we introduced an amendment at the request of the President of the Independent Tribunal Service, His Honour Judge Michael Harris, to allow the early introduction of flexible tribunal composition in Social Security appeal tribunals. Judge Harris has used this power to allow appeals on Incapacity Benefit to be heard by a lawyer, assisted by a doctor. This has allowed him to test out the arrangements for more flexible tribunal composition.

Early indications are that the new flexibility appears to be working well. Tribunal chairmen operating the new arrangements are reporting overall improvements in service as a result of the change. There is no evidence to suggest that the percentage of appeals upheld has been affected by the introduction of the new arrangements.

Pensions Schemes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) personal pension plans and (b) occupational pension schemes are currently held in the United Kingdom. [70694]

Mr. Timms: There are 10 million personal pension plans, but some plan holders have more than one plan. There were 155,367 occupational pension schemes in the United Kingdom as at March 1998. There are about 10.5 million people of working age in Great Britain who are members of occupational pension schemes.

National Insurance

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of individuals who will be affected by the abolition of the employee entry rate in national insurance contributions; and what will be the average cost per individual. [70689]

Mr. Timms: Some 20 million people will pay an average of nearly £70 a year less in National Insurance contributions as a result of the abolition of the employee entry fee in April 1999.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, columns 718–79, (1) if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure; [71032]

(2) if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71033]

Mr. Timms: Task forces and review bodies do not incur any expenditure other than staffing costs, which are met from within existing Departmental running costs.

This Department's Headquarters expenditure on focus groups in general e.g. exploring attitudes of specific clients and/or staff groups, is as follows:

Year	Amount £
1997–98	110,000
1998–99[1]	190,000

[1] Estimated

The cost of publications and other publicity not included in the previous answer is as follows:

Total spend for year 1997–98

Business unit	Total publicity cost (£)
Benefits Agency	2,693,476
Contributions Agency	1,079,857
Child Support Agency	305,083
War Pensions Agency	—
Headquarters	1,858,917

Estimated spend for the year 1998–99

Business unit	Total estimated publicity cost (£)
Benefits Agency	3,4[illegible],579
Contributions Agency	1,585,888
Child Support Agency	238,984
War Pensions Agency	—
Headquarters	4,446,979

Non-departmental bodies do not incur expenditure on the items listed in my previous Answer.

Information for the Central Office of Information is not available as it is not possible to disaggregate the expenditure on relevant work carried out by the Central Office of Information from the total amount spent on publicity.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70964]

Angela Eagle: The Department and its agencies use the Internet as one of a variety of methods to communicate with the public. The DSS website is updated regularly and includes separate webpages for the individual agencies and others. The website covers numerous topics and contains over 3,000 pages providing a range of information on benefits, complaints procedures and corporate documentation such as press releases, Ministerial speeches and Agency business plans.

Average number of hits per month on departmental websites

Agency	Number
Benefits Agency	294,018
Contributions Agency	166,578
Child Support Agency	66,945
Information Technology Services Agency	15,608
War Pensions Agency	10,190
Headquarters	295,417
Analytical Services Division	14,272
Lone Parent Information Service	55,688
Pensions Information	57,972
Working Benefit Information	17,646
Other corporate information	288,969
Central Adjudication Service	17,870
Independent Case Examiner	592
Industrial Injuries Advisory Council	105
Pensions Advisory Service (OPAS)	4,744
Women's National Commission	5,699
Total	1,312,313

	£000
Estimated set up costs	20
Current web service delivery costs[1]	27
Estimated expenditure: web service delivery costs[1]
1999–2000	28.4
2000–01	29.8
2001–02	31.3
Estimated expenditure: DSS staff costs[1]
1999–2000	210
2000–01	220.5
2001–02	231.5

[1] These costs are available only for the Department as a whole and are borne by the Information Technology Services Agency who undertake a corporate role with respect to DSS Internet service provision

Pensions Statements

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the annual pension statements proposed in the Green Paper "Partnership in Pensions" will include details of the predicted level of the minimum income guarantee at individuals' retirement age, and of predicted benefits receivable therefrom. [71305]

Mr. Timms: No. As outlined in the Green Paper, the purpose of the proposed statements is to give individuals simple, clear and understandable details of their current and projected State and private pension rights.

Income Support

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumption was made about the number of pensioners and pensioner units in 2050 for the purpose of his estimates of the proportion likely to be receiving income support. [71480]

Mr. Timms: The estimates made of the proportion of pensioner units likely to be receiving Income Support in 2050 have been based on 1992-based population projections by marital status in 2022, from the Government Actuary's Department (GAD). These have been adjusted to 2050 using 1996-based population projections of the number of individuals from GAD. The assumed number of pensioner units in 2050 is approximately 11 million, with approximately 14.5 million individuals over state pension age.

Notes:

1. A pensioner unit is defined as a single pensioner at State pension age or above, or a couple in which the head is state pension age.

2. Figures have been rounded to the nearest 0.5 million.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if a person has earnings of £9,000 per annum or less throughout their lifetime, retires in 2050 on the basic state pension and the state second pension, and lives for a further 20 years, at what point they will start to need income support to top up their income. [71157]

Mr. Timms: Our aim is that the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) should move in line with earnings over the long-term, as resources allow, but not necessarily in each single year. Consequently, it is not possible to answer the question with any precision.

On the assumption that the person referred to has no other sources of income or capital, and that the MIG moves in line with earnings between now and 2050 and for each single year following 2050, he or she would become eligible for Income Support some 5 years after reaching State pension age.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the increase in the number of pensioners receiving income support in March 2002 resulting from the minimum income guarantee, assuming that the guarantee is uprated in line with (a) prices and (b) average earnings. [71482]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Uprating the Minimum Income Guarantee by prices using the Rossi index (RPI less housing costs) would not result in any new pensioner cases floating onto the Minimum Income Guarantee.

The increase in the number of pensioners receiving Income Support (IS) assuming the Minimum Income Guarantee is uprated in line with earnings is estimated to be 40,000 in 2000–01 and 90,000 in 2001–02.

Notes:

1. The estimates are based on Departmental forecasts of the number of pensioners on IS consistent with the CSR.

2. Figures have been rounded to the nearest 10,000.

3. The future estimates of the ROSSI and earnings indices are based on Treasury forecasts.

4. "Pensioners" in this reply refers to single people aged 60 or over, or couples where one or both members is aged 60 or over.

NIRS2

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the saving to the Exchequer as a result of delays to and underpayment of benefits following problems with the new NIRS2 computer system. [71382]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available. The difference between the actual initial and emergency payments made to date and the eventual full awards for Retirement Pension, Widows Benefit, Incapacity Benefit and Jobseeker's Allowance currently cannot be calculated. The figure will be available only when all claims have been reviewed and underpayments or overpayments are known.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many extra staff his Department (a) has had to employ and (b) expects to employ in future to deal with backlogs as a result of delays in the implementation of the NIRS2 system; and what estimate he has made of the cost of employing the extra staff. [71383]

Mr. Timms: The Department has to date not had to employ any extra staff as a result of the delays in their implementation of the NIRS2 system. However, both the Benefits Agency and the Contributions Agency are continuously reviewing the situation with regard to dealing with the backlogs and will employ extra staff only if deemed necessary.

Fraud

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the New Fraud Strategy, in response to the consultation on the Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business" (Cm 4012). [71309]

Mr. Timms: We will be publishing the strategy shortly.

Second Pension

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the state second pension will be calculated by reference to each year's earnings. [71483]

Mr. Timms: Yes.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what intervals under the single gateway proposals (a) single mothers and (b) other claimants will be required to attend for interview as a condition of receiving benefit. [71304]

Angela Eagle: Interviews will be required both as part of the initial claiming process and on the occurrence of specified events thereafter. These events will be prescribed in Regulations in relation to each client group.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71347]

Mr. Darling: The information is in the table.

Date	Constituency
5 May 1998–6 May 1998	Belfast, West
12 May 1998	Regent's Park and Kensington, North
14 May 1998	Brighton, Pavilion
20 May 1998	Croydon, Central
10 June 1998	South Holland and The Deepings
22 June 1998	Newcastle
24 June 1998	Eastwood; Paisley, South; Glasgow, Kelvin; Glasgow, Rutherglen; East Kilbride
1 July 1998	Meriden

Date	Constituency
1 July 1998	Hornsey and Wood Green
1 July 1998	Dudley, South
16 July 1998	Torfaen
22 July 1998	Cambridge
23 July 1998	Vauxhall
29 July 1998	Southwark, North and Bermondsey
23 September 1998	Lewisham, West
24 September 1998	North- East Fife
25 September 1998	Eastwood
1 October 1998	Blackpool, North and Fleetwood
3 October 1998	Edinburgh, Central
13 October 1998	Glasgow, Kelvin
26 October 1998	Croydon, Central
6 November 1998	Dundee, West
13 November 1998	Dundee, West
27 January 1999	Hastings and Rye
10 February 1998	Southwark, North and Bermondsey

Note:

The period between 5 May 1998 up to 1 July 1998 were visits made by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Social Security.

WALES

Overseas Visits

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what overseas visits he has made since his appointment; and what the cost was of each visit. [69275]

Mr. Michael: I have made one overseas visit since my appointment, which was to Brussels on 7 and 8 January to meet European Commissioners at the invitation of Commissioner Neil Kinnock. I was accompanied by my Principal Private Secretary and the total cost was £762.

Welsh Joint Education Committee

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on restructuring the Welsh Joint Education Committee; and if he will make a statement. [69707]

Mr. Hain: In addition to a meeting with WJEC representatives on 13 May 1998, my right hon. Friend has received a small number of letters on this matter. We have the highest regard for the work of the WJEC. The qualifications it offers have an enviable reputation built on high standards maintained over many years. I expect that the WJEC will continue to make an important contribution towards raising educational standards in Wales.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the meetings held between his Department and representatives of the Welsh Joint Education Committee since May 1998. [69708]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend met the Chairman, the Senior Vice Chairman and the Chief Executive of the WJEC on 13 May 1998.

Departmental Officials

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the names of officials in his Department who are currently on secondment from private companies, (b) the companies by which they are employed and (c) their current responsibilities. [70043]

Mr. Michael: Central records are held on three such secondments but it is not our policy to identify individuals:

Company	Current responsibilities
BT	To provide assistance with the development of a programme to promote information and communication technologies in Wales
King Sturge	To provide assistance with the development and assessment of PFI (private finance initiative) contracts supported by the Department
Barclays Bank	Switchboard Operator

New Deal

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of people in each of the various stages of the New Deal; and what assessment he has made of the impact of the New Deal on the unemployment count. [70067]

Mr. Hain: The latest statistics published by the Department for Education and Employment show that 7,900 young people were on the New Deal for 18–24s in Wales at the end of November 1998.

Within this total, 4,300 young people were in the Gateway and almost 3,400 were on an option, of whom about: 1,000 were in a subsidised job; 600 were in the Environment Task Force; 400 were in the Voluntary Sector Option; and 1,400 were in Full-Time Training and Education.

A further 200 people had completed their option and were receiving additional assistance to secure jobs as part of the Follow-through arrangements.

Between January and November 1998, almost 2,700 unemployed young people left the New Deal in Wales for an unsubsidised job. Between April 1998, when the New Deal for 18–24s was introduced throughout Wales, and October 1998 (the latest available data) unemployment amongst the client group fell by 34 per cent.

Goods Vehicles

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the effect of allowing vehicles with an 11.5 tonne drive axle weight unrestricted access to trunk roads in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [69675]

Mr. Hain: The decision to allow 11.5 tonne drive axle vehicles unrestricted access to UK highways prompted the major programme of assessment and strengthening of structures which started in 1989.

All structures not known to be capable of safely carrying 11.5 tonne drive axle vehicles have been assessed and those needing immediate attention have already been strengthened at a total cost of about £25 million. The remaining trunk road supporting structures that still require strengthening will be strengthened over the next 5 years. In the meantime, they will be allowed to remain in unrestricted use but subject to an enhanced regime of regular inspection.

The trunk road network in Wales will become a responsibility of the National Assembly.

Private Patients

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will instruct NHS hospitals in Wales to restrict the numbers of non-urgent treatments of private patients. [70049]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: NHS trusts already have considerable autonomy to determine the scope of any private practice. The proportion of patients treated privately in NHS hospitals in Wales is very low, approximately 0.5 per cent. of all NHS treatment.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Crickhowell House

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the total expenditure on Crickhowell house to make it ready for the National Assembly. [70381]

Mr. Michael: The costs of making ready Crickhowell house are included in the estimate for establishing the Assembly stated in the Financial Memorandum to the Government of Wales Act 1998. Actual figures will be published as soon as they are available.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of people employed by the local education authorities of Wales, indicating separately (a) professional and (b) ancillary employees. [70918]

Mr. Hain: Information in the form requested is not available centrally. However, data on teachers and other people employed by local education authorities in 1998 are shown in the following table:

	Teachers (a)	Education Others (b)
Full-time	25,114	9,180
Part-time	3,649	28,885
Total	28,763	38,065

Notes:

(a) Provisional figures for January 1998, collected by Welsh Office. Includes all teachers and lecturers employed by local education authorities and educational psychologists. Excludes teachers employed in Grant Maintained schools.

(b) Figures produced by the Local Government Management Board as at September 1998. Includes school transport staff; youth and community workers; nursery assistants; administrative, secretarial and clerical staff in the education service; school caretakers; canteen and school playing field staff; non-teaching staff employed on careers guidance; library staff employed by libraries either located in or serving education establishments.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mining

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed in the mining industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [70916]

Mr. Hain: According to estimates from the Coal Authority there were 1,235 people employed in coal mining in Wales at September 1998.

The Office for National Statistics' Annual Employment Survey suggests that, at September 1996, there were less than 100 people employed in other mining activities in Wales.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Education Action Zones

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will begin consultations regarding the implementation of education action zones. [71149]

Mr. Hain: We expect this to be a matter on which the National Assembly for Wales will decide in due course.

Welsh Language

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with headteachers and governors of schools in Monmouth regarding the compulsory teaching of Welsh at Key Stage 4; and if he will make a statement. [71166]

Mr. Hain: In accordance with statutory requirements, the Qualifications, Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales (ACCAC) consulted the headteacher and the governing body of Monmouth Comprehensive School on the proposal to lift the exemption from teaching Welsh to pupils at Key Stage 4 from September 1999. ACCAC considered the case put forward by the school and concluded that there were not sufficient grounds to warrant the further extension of the exemption granted in 1990. Accordingly, ACCAC recommended, in January 1998, that the exemption be lifted and that Welsh should be made a compulsory subject at Key Stage 4 from 1999.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave careful consideration to ACCAC's report and the case put forward by the school. He accepted ACCAC's recommendation and published, for comment, a draft Order giving effect to it. A copy of the draft Order was sent to the headteachers and governing body of Monmouth Comprehensive School. After careful consideration of the points made to him in response to the publication of the draft Order, my right hon. Friend concluded that no matters of substance arose which were not dealt with in ACCAC's report. An Order giving effect to ACCAC's recommendation came into force on 20 November 1998. This will bring Monmouth Comprehensive School into line with all other non-Welsh-speaking schools in Wales as regards the teaching of Welsh to pupils at Key Stage 4 from September 1999.

Housing Renovation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available to local authorities in Wales his estimate of the minimum finance which each authority might expect to receive for housing renovation and repair, out of the all Wales fund for which initial bids are invited by 15 February; and if he will make a statement on the guidance which he plans to give to local authorities on the preparation of 1999–2000 housing budgets in advance of decisions on the total finance which will be available to them from his Department. [71354]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I cannot estimate the amount of resources which will be allocated to individual local authorities until their bids have been considered. I do not issue guidance on the preparation of housing budgets as these are matters for individual local authorities.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what date he plans to inform local authorities in Wales of their allocation from the all Wales fund for housing renovation for which they have been invited to bid; by what date the final bids have to be submitted by local authorities; and if he will list the criteria on which these bids will be assessed. [71351]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I intend to issue decisions on the allocation of the resources by the beginning of the next financial year. Final detailed bids must be with my Department by 12 March 1999. The criteria for assessment of bids will depend on the nature and priority of the scheme involved. Details are set out in my Department's letter of 25 January, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the total cost of renovations and repairs needing to be done to the housing stock of Wales (a) in the public rented sector, (b) in the voluntary rented sector and (c) in the private sector. [71352]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The latest estimates of the costs of repair are from the 1993 Welsh House Condition Survey. The available information is given in the following table.

The 1997–98 Welsh House Condition Survey is being completed. Information from this survey will be available later this year.

Estimated total cost of repair of occupied first homes,[1] by tenure, 1993

Tenure	Total repair cost (£ million at 1993 prices)
Rented from local authorities or Development Board for Rural Wales	244
Rented from housing associations	13
Rented from private landlords	153
Owner occupied	863
All tenures	1,273

Following the transfer of powers, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

National Assembly

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to lay a draft Order making provision for the elections to the National Assembly for Wales; and if he will make a statement. [71682]

Mr. Michael: I am laying before the House today a draft of the National Assembly for Wales (Representation of the People) Order 1999; a draft will similarly be laid in another place. An earlier draft was subject to extensive consultation with political parties and other interested groups last year. Powers to make the Order are derived from section 11 of the Government of Wales Act 1998. It is subject to Affirmative Resolution procedure.

The draft Order makes comprehensive provision for elections to the National Assembly—my intention has been to produce an instrument which can be read without requiring reference to provisions in earlier legislation. The draft therefore incorporates, with modifications to fit the circumstances of the Assembly, provisions from the Representation of the People Acts 1983 and 1985, together with statutory instruments made under those Acts and other legislation, among the matters dealt with in this way are registration of voters, polling and counting arrangements, absent voting, voting offences, campaign offences and election petitions. The draft Order also, however, takes account of the new requirements of the Registration of Political Parties Act 1998 in relation to party nomination procedures and the use of party emblems on ballot papers, and the recommendations of the Neill Committee on the limitation of political parties' campaign expenditure at the all-Wales level.

For the assistance of the House I am making arrangements for a summary guide to the draft Order to be placed in the Libraries as soon as possible. Copies of illustrative examples of the ballot papers proposed for use in both the constituency and the regional elections have today been placed in the Libraries of the House. The format of the ballot papers takes account of comments received from focus groups of voters who were consulted on various designs; the ballot paper for the regional elections will contain the names of the candidates on each registered party's list, in accordance with undertakings given during the passage of the Government of Wales Act.

I propose, if both Houses of Parliament are content with the draft, to make this Order next month. The first formal stage of the elections process under the Order is publication of notices of elections. This is scheduled to take place no later than 26 March 1999.

Staff Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [70960]

Mr. Michael: The Welsh Office rates of mileage are as follows:

Pence per mile

	Cars with engine capacity
	Up to 1500cc	1501cc–2000cc	Over 2000cc
Up to 4,000 miles	35	45	48
Over 4,000 miles	20	25	32

The over 2000cc rate has been frozen at the rates shown for the previous two financial years to reflect Departmental policy on green housekeeping.

Pence per mile

	Motorcycles
	Up to 125cc	Over 125cc
Up to 4,000 miles	14.6	22.1
Over 4,000 miles	6.1	9.0

Rates reflect third party fire and theft insurance. A higher rate may be claimable when officers are able to obtain comprehensive insurance cover, as follows:

Higher rates

	Pence per mile	Pence per mile
Up to 4,000 miles	16.2	25.3
Over 4,000 miles	6.1	9.0

Pedal Cycles: 6.0 pence per mile

Public Transport Rate: 23.8 pence per mile.

The Welsh Office green transport plan will be announced in March. It will contain further measures to encourage staff to use greener forms of travel.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 690, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71034]

Mr. Michael: (a) NDPB's expenditure cannot be broken down into categories requested. The total expenditure up to January 1999 is £10,382,005. Expenditure by CADW is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

(b) Expenditure incurred through the Central Office of Information on public opinion research, advertising and direct mail is included in the figures given for the previous answer.

The total spent through COI during the period May 1997-November 1998 was £1,448,809. This includes the expenditure on the above, plus other forms of publicity work undertaken by my Department during the period.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 690, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71035]

Mr. Michael: No additional expenditure had been incurred by (a) task forces and review bodies, (b) focus groups, or (c) on market research.

(d) In addition to the expenditure on public opinion research, TV, radio, press advertising and direct mail given in my previous answer, my Department has spent £2,713,930 on publications and other forms of publicity in the period May 1997-November 1998.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70962]

Mr. Michael: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71345]

Mr. Michael: Since my appointment I have visited the following parliamentary constituencies in Wales:

Alyn and Deeside CC

Blaenau Gwent CC

Cardiff, Central BC

Cardiff, South and Penarth BC

Cardiff, West BC

Carmarthen, West and South Pembrokeshire CC

Ceredigion CC

Clwyd, South CC

Conwy CC

Cynon Valley CC

Delyn CC

Islwyn CC

Montgomeryshire CC

Neath CC

Newport, East CC

Newport, West CC

Pontypridd CC

Preseli Pembrokeshire CC

Rhondda CC

Swansea, East BC

Swansea, West BC

Torfaen CC

Vale of Clwyd CC

Vale of Glamorgan CC

Wrexham CC

Ynys Môn CC.

Carers

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if additional funding in the form of a ring-fenced grant will be made available to Welsh local authorities to provide the means for carers to have a break from their caring responsibilities. [70954]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Welsh local government revenue settlement is not hypothecated. We are consulting widely with carers, their representatives and local authorities about how the National Strategy for Carers, announced by the Deputy Prime Minister on 8 February 1999, should be implemented in Wales. Final decisions will be taken by the National Assembly for Wales.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Teachers

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many whole-time equivalent teachers were employed in Wales on 31 January 1999. [71152]

Mr. Hain: Information on teachers employed in schools is collected annually in January. Results for 1999 are not yet available. As at January 1998, there were 26,135 whole-time equivalent qualified teachers employed in schools in Wales.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Pierhead Building

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the annual running costs of the Pierhead building. [71299]

Mr. Michael: The estimated annual running cost for the Pierhead Building is about £220,000.

Class Sizes

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Key Stage 1 pupils were in classes with more than 30 pupils in each of the last five years. [71298]

Mr. Hain: As I informed the hon. Member in my replies of 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 609, and 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 250, information on the number of pupils in classes of 30 or more was not collected before 1998. In January 1998, 30,734 Key Stage 1 pupils were in classes of over 30 pupils.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the average class size is in the Bridgend County Borough; and what it was in May 1997. [71294]

Mr. Hain: The latest available information shows that the average class size of registered classes in primary schools in Bridgend County Borough Council was 28.7 as at January 1998. Comparable information is not available for May 1997.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Individual Learning Accounts

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in setting up individual learning accounts; and if he will make a statement. [71150]

Mr. Hain: Building on the work of the development projects in the West Wales and North Wales TEC areas, a small number of Individual Learning Accounts, supported by TEC resources, will start to become available from 1999. This is in advance of the launch of the National Framework in the year 2000.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the changes in administrative costs to the NHS in Wales consequent upon the reorganisation of NHS trusts this year and over the next four years. [71170]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: A new configuration of NHS trusts in Wales will be in place from 1 April 1999. The net savings (costs) in running costs for the first 5 years have been estimated as follows:

Year	£000
1999–2000	(4,860)
2000–01	3,100
2001–02	6,320
2002–03	6,620
2003–04	6,740

These figures are indicative as total costs depend on exact details of redundancies which are yet to be established. Therefore, 1999–2000 costs may be reduced.

Following the transfer of powers, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Teachers (Attacks)

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions his Department has held with police forces on the investigation of incidents of attacks on teachers. [69118]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Following the fatal stabbing of London head teacher, Philip Lawrence, in December 1995, the Working Group on School Security was established. The group continues to meet regularly to discuss a wide range of issues with security implications for schools, and includes representatives from the police and the Home Office.

The Department also worked closely with the police and the Home Office on the production of guidance on "School Security: Dealing With Troublemakers", which was issued in December 1997. This promotes close co-operation between schools and local police to create effective local partnerships, and encourages schools to adopt a system of recording and reporting all incidents.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71337]

Mr. Blunkett: My Department does not hold records of official visits on a constituency basis and we could supply this information only at disproportionate cost.

Building Works (VAT)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many grant maintained-foundation schools with basic need capital building projects starting after 1 April will have building works which are liable for VAT; how these building projects will be funded after August; how payments will be made to individual schools, with particular reference to the role of local education authorities in passing on funding to schools; and what arrangements are in place for grant maintained-foundation schools to reclaim VAT paid on these projects; [71357]

(2) how many grant maintained-foundation schools have basic need capital building projects starting after 1 April; in how many of these cases the funding will be provided directly to the school via the Funding Agency for Schools; what is the estimated cost of those projects for which funding will be provided directly to the schools via the Funding Agency for Schools; and what proportion of these costs (a) relate to new buildings and (b) involve no element of VAT on the building works. [71356]

Ms Estelle Morris: Until 31 March 1999, responsibility for the progress of basic need capital projects in grant-maintained schools remains the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools (FAS). I have written to the Chairman of the FAS, asking him to write to my hon. Friend, and will arrange for a copy of the reply to be placed in the Library.

In a recent letter to all grant-maintained schools, which was prepared jointly by the Funding Agency for Schools and the DfEE officials, the FAS explained that, between 1 April 1999 and 31 August 1999, the Department will assume responsibility for the payment of capital grant in respect of such projects. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends later this year to lay Regulations under Schedule 32 to the School Standards and Framework Act 1998, which will give him the powers to pay grant after 31 August 1999 to foundation schools and other former grant-maintained schools for capital projects committed before 1 September 1999. That letter also explained that where the Department agrees to pay grant on work which attracts VAT which cannot be reclaimed, the level of grant allowed will reflect this. Liability for VAT will depend on the nature and purpose of the building works.

Decisions about when refunds of VAT can be claimed from HM Customs & Excise are for the Financial Secretary to the Treasury.

New Deal (Hertfordshire)

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have entered the New Deal for long-term unemployed people aged over 25 years in Hertfordshire since 29 June 1998; and how many have (a) left to enter unsubsidised jobs, (b) left to enter subsidised work, (c) returned to jobseekers' allowance and (d) entered education or training opportunities and work-based training for adults. [70247]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Richard Page, dated 11 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply direct to your questions about New Deal for those aged over 25 years in the Hertfordshire area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

The latest Government Statistical Service figures to the end of November 1998 show that, 330 long-term unemployed people aged 25 or over in the Employment Service Hertfordshire Unit of Delivery have entered New Deal, since its inception in June 1998. Of those entering the New Deal advisory process, 17 have found unsubsidised work; 3 have found subsidised work; 1 has entered an Education and Training opportunity; and 1 has begun Work Based Training for Adults. Only one person has subsequently returned to claim Jobseekers Allowance.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have entered the New Deal for the young unemployed in Hertfordshire; how many have left to enter unsubsidised work; and how many have transferred to other benefits. [70248]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Richard Page, dated 11 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply direct to your question about New Deal for 18–24 year old participants in Hertfordshire. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

The latest Government Statistical Service figures to the end of November 1998 and Provisional Management Information to the end of December 1998 show that, 702 young people in the Employment Service Hertfordshire Unit of Delivery have entered New Deal for 18–24 year olds. Of those leaving Gateway by Immediate Destination 185 have found unsubsidised work; 12 have found subsidised work; and 38 have moved onto other benefits.

I hope this is helpful.

Teachers (Pensions)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if provision exists for teachers to take early retirement without the need for schools to top up their pensions, on the occasions when such teachers are prepared to accept actuarially reduced pensions; and if he will make a statement. [71138]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There is no current provision in the Teachers' Pensions Regulations for teachers to take an actuarially reduced pension at their own request. Whether such a provision should be introduced was included in the Terms of Reference of the Working Group undertaking the Long Term Examination of the Teachers' Pension Scheme. I anticipate receiving the Working Group's report and recommendations on this question in the very near future.

Design Technology Graduates

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students are (a) currently taking a postgraduate certificate in education in design technology and (b) in their fourth year of a B.Ed design technology course. [70442]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The following table shows registrations to design and technology postgraduate initial teacher training in England in 1998–99. Information on registrations to the fourth year of an undergraduate design and technology initial teacher training course in 1998–99 is not available.

Table 1: Actual and forecast registrations to design and technology postgraduate initial teacher training (ITT) course in England, in 1998–99

	Registrations
Actual[1]	502
Forecast[2]	44
Assumed total	546

[1] Actual registrations represent those students who registered between 1 August and 14 October 1998.

[2] Forecast registrations represent those students whom the ITT provider forecasts to register between 15 October 1998 and 31 July 1999. Therefore, registrations to Open University and Maryvale Institute, whose ITT course commence in January, are included in forecast registrations.

Source:

TTA recruitment survey, 1998–99

The most recent data available on the number of registrations in the final year of both postgraduate and an undergraduate design and technology initial teacher training course in England are as follows:

Final-year trainees registered on a design and technology initial teacher training course, by level, in England 1996–97

	Final-year trainees
Postgraduate	606
Undergraduate	584
Total	1,190

Source:

TTA Survey under the Framework for the Assessment of Quality and Standards in ITT

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70786]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The rules of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme (PCSPS) provide that Civil Service pension benefits may be withheld in whole or in part if a serving or former civil servant is convicted of:

> one or more offences under the Official Secrets Act 1911 to 1989 for which the person concerned has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment of at least 10 years or has been sentenced on the same occasion to two or more consecutive terms amounting in the aggregate to at least 10 years; or > an offence in connection with any employment to which the PCSPS applies, being an offence which is certified by a Minister of the Crown either to have been gravely injurious to the State or to be liable to lead to serious loss of confidence in the public service.
>

In addition, forfeiture of pension benefits where a person is convicted of treason is provided for in the Forfeiture Act 1870.

In the last five years there has been one case of forfeiture of pension involving a serving or former civil servant.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70977]

Mr. Kilfoyle: My Department fully supports the open government initiative and the Internet forms an integral part of our overall communications, publications and information strategy.

The Cabinet Office, its Agencies and NDPBs, and the Central Office of Information are responsible for a total of sixteen web sites, the details of which are given in the table.

Cabinet Office agencies, NDPBs and other associated web sites

Name	Content of site	Expenditure Initial and running costs	Estimated expenditure over the next 3 years	Hits per month (average)
10 Downing Street (www.no-10.gov.uk)	The full range of the Government's activities, including current news, live broadcasts, discussion forums, and the history of No 10 and past Prime Ministers	The cost to my Department of redesigning the 10 Downing Street web site was £27,048. The running costs for the site are met by the budget of the Prime Minister's Office and separate figures are not identifiable.	Not separately identifiable.	900,000
Cabinet Office (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk)	The site provides a wide range of information, for example, cabinet and its committees, ministerial responsibilities, pan Government programmes, guidance, codes and best practice	Not separately identifiable. Expenditure is part of the wider Cabinet Office Communications and publications activities	Not separately identifiable.	60,700
Direct Access Government (www.open.gov.uk/gdirect)	This web site is a one-stop-shop providing access to the regulatory guidance and forms commonly required by businesses.	Not separately identifiable.	£70,000 to upgrade the web site—excludes running costs.	243,900

Cabinet Office agencies, NDPBs and other associated web sites

Name	Content of site	Expenditure Initial and running costs	Estimated expenditure over the next 3 years	Hits per month (average)
Central IT Unit (www.open.gov.uk/citu)	This web site features guidance on electronic government	The Central IT Unit web site was set up at a cost of £14,000. The operational charges for 1998–99 are £20,000. Both are within budget	£20,000 per year	Not available
Central Communications and Telecommunications Agency (www.ccta.gov.uk)	This site contains details of the services that CCTA offers and guidance on technological issues	The estimated cost of maintaining CCTA's own web site is under £5,000 per year. The estimated marginal cost of initially establishing the CCTA web site is under £10,000.	Estimated expenditure on this web site for 1999–2000 is around £20,000.	46,600
CGIS (www.open.gov.uk)	CGIS hosts information from around 130 public sector organisations and units, plus the Royal Household. It is one of the largest public sector web sites in Europe	The set-up costs for this site were under £50,000. Estimated operational costs for 1998–99 are £330,000.	Estimated expenditure on this web site for 1999–2000 is around £595,000. Figures are not yet available for 2000–02.	22.95 million
Her Majesty's Stationery Office (www.hmso.gov.uk)	The HMSO web site was set up in 1996 following a decision by Ministers to publish all new Acts and Statutory Instruments on the Internet. The site describes HMSO and its responsibilities	There were no charges to Government in setting up the site. Maintenance charges for calendar year 1998 were £8,299.	Estimated charges for 1998–99 are £9,174. Costs of up to £19,756 have been allocated for 1999–2000.	44,600
Central Office of Information COI site (www.coi.gov.uk/coi)	COI's role and performance; description of COI's services; frequently asked questions; an extensive guide to the use of the web.	—	£64,000 (total).	Included in figure of 1.2 million (below)
Government Press Release site	Press Releases from 54 Government sites.	Set up costs were £32,000. Upgrade costs were £28,500 and this year's operational costs are estimated at £82,500.	£176,500 (total).	1.2 million
British Monarchy Site (www.royal.gov.uk)	Information on the British Monarchy.	Set up costs were £38,000. This year's operational costs are estimated at £44,000.	Estimated expenditure over the next three years is expected to be in line with current costs. However, the popularity of the site has prompted a review of its scope and this may result in changes to planned operational costs.	11.2 million
Civil Service College (www.open.gov.uk/college)	This site contains a full directory of courses offered by the College.	The Civil Service College web site was set up, at no charge to Government, in 1995. The operational charges for 1997–98 were £7,050 and this year is £1,175—both within budget.	£1,175 per year.	16,500
The Buying Agency (www.open.gov.uk/tba)	The site covers a basic overview of The Buying Agency's operations, their Year 2000 programme and details of their suppliers who claim to be year 2000 compliant. The site occasionally promotes events such as the Public Sector Expo.	The Buying Agency's web site was developed in-house but costs are not separately identifiable. The Agency pays £3,000 operational costs per year.	£3,000 per year.	2,200
Womens National Commission (www.thewnc.org.uk)	The WNC web site covers: the remit of the WNC, how it works, some of the key issues with which it is concerned and a list of the membership and the publications. It also has cross references to the web sites of some of the member organisations.	The direct cost to the WNC is setting up of the WNC web site was around £30 for the registration of the name. The design costs were met centrally by DSS where the WNC was located until October 1998. The cost of operating the site is still being met centrally through the DSS IT budget.	Costs will be met centrally by Cabinet Office and are not separately identifiable.	Not known

Cabinet Office agencies, NDPBs and other associated web sites

Name	Content of site	Expenditure Initial and running costs	Estimated expenditure over the next 3 years	Hits per month (average)
Committee On Standards In Public Life (www.open.gov.uk/cspl)	The web site includes: background information on the work of the Committee; information on individual Committee Members; the Register on Interests of Committee Members; a list of Committee Publications; abstracts of Committee Publications; and links to other relevant web sites.	The web site for the CSPL was set up in May 1997. The cost of establishing and maintaining the web site to date is £2,500. The web site was redesigned in 1998 at a cost of £3,888. All costs were met from within the Committee's budget.	Budgeted at less than £1,000 per year	4,400
Public Appointments Unit (www.open.gov.uk/pau)	The purpose of the Directory is to provide an open, public record of key public appointments made by Government departments. It contains details of appointments made to executive NDPBs, advisory bodies, public corporations, nationalised industries and NHS bodies.	The Public Appointments Unit's Directory of Appointments was launched in January 1997. The cost of setting up the web-site was £7,000. The current cost of operating the site is £10,000 per year.	Total estimated expenditure for the next three years is likely to be around £24,000.	4,000
Property Advisers To The Civil Estate (www.property.gov.uk)	PACE's web site details its structure and services	There were minimal setting up charges and the annual connection charge currently stands at £14,000 per year.	£14,000 per year.	100

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps the Government have taken to prevent the patenting of genes used for manufacture of food products. [69011]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

The Patents Act 1977 sets down the requirements which must be met to obtain patents for inventions in all fields of technology. Under this Act it is possible to patent genes for use in any manufacturing sector; the food sector included. However, the mere discovery that a gene exists in nature, when there has been no technical step, is not patentable. During negotiations on a recently adopted EC Directive on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions (98/44/EC), the United Kingdom Government ensured that the Directive does not extend what is patentable in this area.

The Directive also confirms that patent rights are granted without prejudice to other legislation. Thus, if a patented gene is used in the manufacture of food products, its use is subject to all other legislation which controls such acts, including those laws protecting human and animal health and the environment.

Beam Trawlers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will give producer organisations an allocation of effort for beam trawlers for the 1999 fishing year; and if he will make a statement on the factors which have given rise to delay. [69865]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 11 February 1999]: As I explained during the Fisheries debate on 15 December 1998, Official Report, column 829, a first meeting with the industry was held earlier that day on possible modifications to the beam trawl effort allocation arrangements introduced last year. During those discussions the industry raised a number of points with us and asked for certain illustrative figures to be prepared as the basis for further talks. This work involves updating the fleet segmentation and looking at other detailed technical issues. The Producer Organisations concerned understand what is involved and that it is not possible to provide definitive figures at the start of the fishing year. We will convene a further meeting soon.

Date-based Export Scheme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many abattoirs have indicated that they are prepared to be dedicated to the date-based export scheme. [70631]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 11 February 1999]: A small number have expressed an interest, but we have not at this stage asked for formal applications. It would be premature to do so before the Commission have carried out their inspection, which they must do before a date can be set for the resumption of exports.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70414]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 11 February 1999]: In the time available, it is possible to provide only information relating to disposals of land and buildings. These are listed in the table.

Property	£ Sale price
Government Buildings, Crosby Road, North Yorks	[1]1
Government Buildings, Alphington Road, Exeter Devon	5,916,008
Tangley Place, Worplesdon, Guildford, Surrey	863,000
Litley Court, Hampton Park Road, Hereford	527,000
130 Hyndford Road, Lanark, Scotland	225,000
Pocklington Industrial Estate, Pocklington, East Yorks	325,000
357 Station Road, South Leigh, Oxon	67,000

[1] The buildings at Crosby Road which were erected at Government expense in the 1950s, were in need of replacement. Various options were considered including a new build by Government, a Private Finance Initiative arrangement, and a private developer scheme. A variation of the last of these options involving the sale of the site to the developer and a lease back after modern replacement buildings had been erected, offered best value for money for the Exchequer.

The total income received from the disposals listed above is £7,923,009.

We aim to dispose of a further 20 properties over the next two years or so.

Bovine TB

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for controlling TB in cattle in the areas outside the study areas identified by Professor Bourne for the duration of that study. [70633]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 11 February 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for East Devon (Sir P. Emery) on 11 February 1999, Official Report, columns 418–19.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has made contingency plans to deal with the consequences of disruption to the services offered by the Meat Hygiene Service in the event of industrial action; and if he will make a statement. [68319]

Mr. Rooker: Contingency plans were drawn up to minimise the effect of industrial action by Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) staff on Tuesday 2 February. Food safety, public health and animal welfare were fully protected. The MHS strictly enforced meat hygiene, specified risk material and animal welfare Regulations in all licensed plants whether or not they were able to operate on the day of strike action.

The decision by UNISON to call strike action by its Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) members at the present time is very disappointing. MHS staff have a vital role to play in ensuring the highest hygiene and animal welfare standards are applied within plants. The MHS pay offer is fair and equitable. Indeed, the total value of the offer is on par with the current average civil service settlements.

The MHS is continuing negotiations with UNISON with the involvement of ACAS to seek to resolve the dispute at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken by the Government to assist a resolution of the current abattoir inspectors' dispute. [70198]

Mr. Rooker: The decision by UNISON to call strike action by its Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) members at the present time is very disappointing. MHS staff have a vital role to play in ensuring the highest hygiene and animal welfare standards are applied within plants. The MHS pay offer is fair and equitable. Indeed, the total value of the offer is on par with the current average civil service settlements.

The negotiation to pay is delegated to officials. The MHS is continuing negotiations with UNISON with the involvement of ACAS to seek to resolve the dispute at the earliest opportunity.

Genetically Engineered Animal Feed

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current procedures for approving genetically engineered animal feeds; if ACRE has sole responsibility for assessing applications; and who will take such decisions in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Union. [70347]

Mr. Rooker: In addition to meeting requirements applicable to all animal feeds, a GM feeding stuff requires approval for commercial use following the procedures set out in Directive 90/220/EEC. This Directive has the objective of ensuring that the product does not cause harm to animals, human health or the environment. The applicant must submit a dossier of the required information to one Member State who takes the lead for that product, and assesses the information and the potential risks. Once content, the lead Member State forwards the dossier to the Commission with an opinion. Other Member States then consider the dossier and are free to require further information. A collective decision on whether to give EU wide approval for the product is then decided by qualified majority voting.

In the United Kingdom, the dossiers are considered by DETR in consultation with MAFF and the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices. The Environmental Protection Act 1990 requires that formal advice on the safety of GM animal feed is sought from the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE). In addition, the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes (ACNFP) also advises MAFF Ministers on implications for the safety of food. In the near future, there will be an important role for the new Advisory Committee on Animal Feedingstuffs, liaising as necessary with ACRE and the ACNFP. Advice is also sought from interests in other Departments and English Nature. The final decision is made by the Secretaries of State and the Minister of Agriculture acting jointly.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to ensure that genetically engineered animal feed is labelled as such. [70348]

Mr. Rooker: The Ministry is pressing the Commission to forward to the Council its proposal on novel feeds, to include labelling of GM materials.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total farm income for Cumbria for each of the last five years for which figures are available. [70570]

Mr. Rooker: Estimates of Total Income From Farming for counties within England are only available for 1995 and 1996. These estimates are calculated by apportioning Total Income from Farming in England according to areas of crops and numbers of livestock.

Total Income From Farming in Cumbria is estimated to have been £155 million in 1995 and £143 million in 1996.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the change in gross terms in total farm income for Cumbria for the latest year for which figures are available. [70573]

Mr. Rooker: Total Income from Farming in Cumbria in 1996 is estimated to have been 7.7 per cent. lower than it was in 1995. Estimates for 1997 and 1998 are not yet available. These estimates are calculated by apportioning Total Income From Farming in England according to areas of crops and numbers of livestock.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the net farm income for each farm sector in Cumbria for the last five years. [70569]

Mr. Rooker: Net farm income estimates are based on the Farm Business Survey. The sample size is not sufficient to provide reliable estimates of net farm income by farm types at County level.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers will be available to the Food Standards Agency to enforce food labelling regulations. [70814]

Mr. Rooker: Enforcement of food labelling regulations will continue to be carried out by existing relevant authorities (in general, this is carried out at the local level). The Food Standards Agency will have powers under the Food Safety Act 1990 to issue Codes of Practice to local enforcement authorities, and to provide guidance on labelling and other enforcement matters. The Agency will also have powers to take over enforcement from local authorities, where appropriate.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers the Food Standards Agency will have to regulate the activities of local authorities with regard to enforcement of food hygiene and labelling regulations. [70815]

Mr. Rooker: The provisions in the draft Food Standards Bill would enable the Food Standards Agency to set standards for the enforcement of food law, and audit local authority enforcement activity against those standards. The aim of these powers is to promote food law enforcement that is of a consistently high standard between local authorities.

It is also proposed that the Agency will have powers under the Food Safety Act 1990 to issue Codes of Practice to local authorities, and to provide other guidance on enforcement matters.

Salmonella

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to investigate the incidence of salmonella in chickens sold in supermarkets. [70883]

Mr. Rooker: Government funded surveillance of UK-produced chickens on retail sale has clearly shown that the proportion with Salmonella has been falling steadily over the years. The Department of Health intends commissioning a further survey later this year to establish the current position.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70470]

Mr. Morley: Since May 1997 we have established the British Cattle Movement Service at Workington, Cumbria which created around 300 jobs. Altogether 70 per cent. of all permanent staff in MAFF and its Agencies work outside London in about 150 different locations. Any further office moves will be considered on their merits.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Weapons Inspectors (Iraq)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) members of the staff of his Department and (b) persons otherwise attached to his Department have served with the UN weapons inspectors in Iraq since 1991. [67018]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 25 January 1999]: (a) Fourteen FCO employees have served with the UN weapons inspectors in Iraq since 1991.

(b) The FCO recruits, administers and, in most cases, pays for all UK-supplied personnel serving with the UN weapons inspectors in Iraq (including UNSCOM and IAEA). The FCO has supplied 286 such personnel (in addition to the 14 FCO employees) since 1991. These individuals come from the Armed Forces, other Government departments, industry and universities.

Private Military Companies

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his officials have had with representatives of private military companies since the guidelines following the Legg report were introduced; and if he will list the companies concerned. [69353]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Private military companies include companies engaged in a wide range of activities.

On 24 July 1998, interim guidance was issued to all FCO officials on contacts with private military companies. This was intended to direct FCO officials on their contacts with such companies, and to guard against subsequent misinterpretation. We are in the process of preparing more detailed guidance in consultation with other Whitehall departments. We intend to make this available to Parliament and to companies or individuals who request it.

Since the introduction of the interim guidance, officials have reported contacts with a range of companies on a range of issues. Most of these contacts have been initiated by the companies themselves and have been of a routine nature. It is not our intention to publish names or details.

Government Communications Headquarters

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 February 1999, Official Report, column 493, if he will break down the costs of the compensation into that paid in relation to (a) the impact on pensionable pay on retirement of the decision and (b) the loss of pensionable service. [69380]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 8 February 1999]: GCHQ officials are in contact with the Council of Civil Service Unions about the details of the compensation packages for each of the fourteen ex-GCHQ employees. GCHQ intend to finalise those packages, in consultation with the Council of Civil Service Unions, as soon as possible.

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70031]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Legal services are performed for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office by London barristers in the following main situations:

(a) domestic litigation including judicial review and personnel cases;

(b) international litigation, for example before the International Court of Justice;

(c) litigation before the European Commission and Court of Human Rights for which FCO Legal Advisers are agents for the Government, though in almost all such cases the policy lead and financial responsibility falls to another Government department;

(d) advisory work.

Apart from the ECHR cases, no central records are kept and it would not be possible without disproportionate time and expense to provide an accurate response to the hon. Member's questions. It is, however, thought that the numbers of cases in categories (a), (b) and (d) are very small. It is also thought that there have been few, if any, cases in which the London solicitors' firms have been instructed.

So far as ECHR cases are concerned, there are as of 21 January 1999 some 184 current cases. Counsel are not instructed in every case. Some 22 different London Counsel are currently instructed (some on more than one case) from 12 different barristers' chambers. As indicated, fees almost always for payment by other Government departments.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the Government in its important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom departments are expected to use for the rest of the Government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not on one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the Government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

Arms Brokers

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the German Government's proposals on the regulation of arms brokers in the EU; and what plans he has in this respect. [70338]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We welcome the German Government's decision to raise with EU partners the question of controls on trafficking and brokering in strategic goods. This is in line with the recommendation in the Trade and Industry Committee's Report on Strategic Export Controls of December 1998 (HC 65) that the benefits and potential pitfalls of some multilaterally agreed form of licensing or registration of arms dealers be explored within the EU.

The German proposals differ in a number of respects from the Government's proposals for controls on trafficking and brokering as set out in the White Paper on Strategic Export Controls presented to Parliament by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade in July 1998 (Cm 3989). The Government are reviewing the White Paper proposals in the light of comments by respondents to the White Paper, and will also take into account the progress of discussions in the EU.

Strategic Arms Report

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the annual report on Strategic Arms to be published. [70337]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The report will be published as soon as possible.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [70939]

Mr. Fatchett: The information is as follows:

FCO staff are entitled to claim the following mileage rates, expressed in pence per mile

	Pence per mile
Private cars
Public Transport rate (for duty travel in the United Kingdom)	24.8
Standard rate (for duty travel when official or public transport is not readily available)
Up to 4,000 miles per year	39.5
Over 4,000 miles per year	22
Leave rate (for travel to or from Overseas Posts on leave or compassionate or serious domestic hardship journeys)	16.3
Motor cycles
Public Transport rate only
Up to 4,000 miles per year	18.5
Over 4,000 miles per year	7.5
Cylces
Public Transport rate only	5.6

The FCO will comply with published Government targets to have green transport plans, aimed at promoting greener travel, in place for its London headquarters estate by 31 March 1999 and for its provincial site by 31 March 2000. The practical measures which will be identified in the FCO's green transport plan do not currently include a review of mileage rates.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70479]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to "Civil Service Statistics 1998", which is placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70465]

Mr. Fatchett: The FCO has under three and a half thousand staff working in the UK at any one time—in central London, Croydon and Milton Keynes. We have no plans for decentralisation. The FCO also has a small Agency, Wilton Park Conference Centre, in Sussex.

The British Council moved part of its HQ to Manchester in 1992; it also has offices in Edinburgh, Cardiff and Belfast and regional officers in a number of cities around the UK.

The BBC World Service is based in Central London, except for BBC Monitoring, which is based in Reading.

Ethiopia and Eritrea

Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's implementation of the non-binding arms embargo against Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNSCR 1227) and on the steps taken to publicise the ban. [71645]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: In light of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1227 the Government have banned exports from the UK to Ethiopia and Eritrea of all goods and technology on the Military List, which forms Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994. The Government have also set in hand action to amend the Order so that a licence is required for all transhipments of such goods through the UK to either country and, given the embargo, no such licences will be issued. The Crown Dependencies and Overseas Territories have been asked to take appropriate action to enforce the ban in their own jurisdictions.

The Government are also pressing for the EU to adopt a mandatory arms embargo.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office will be issuing a press release on the embargo. An updated version of the list of all UK policy commitments on the application of strategic export controls, including arms embargoes, will be placed in the Library of the House. The FCO has already issued guidance on the ban to Departments in London, Posts overseas and other Whitehall Departments.

Bahrain

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the role of Her Majesty's Government in the appointment of a former serving officer in the British Army in a leading security role on behalf of the Government of Bahrain. [71303]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK Government received a request from the Government of Bahrain in 1966 for help in recruiting a successor to the Head of the Bahraini Special Branch. Ian Henderson informed us that he wished to be considered for the post. We passed on his request to the Bahrainis, whose decision it was to appoint him.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will introduce an embargo on the export of arms to Bahrain. [71302]

Mr. Fatchett: There are no plans to introduce such an embargo.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent to which human rights are violated by the Government of Bahrain; and what action he has taken to increase respect for human rights in Bahrain. [71300]

Mr. Fatchett: We take seriously any abuse of human rights wherever it might occur. I regularly raise our concerns about the provision of human rights in Bahrain with Bahraini Ministers and officials. I welcomed Bahrain's ratification of the Convention Against Torture and its agreement to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross to monitor prison conditions in Bahrain. I have also urged Bahrain to communicate more with human rights NGOs, including Amnesty International.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 288, what (a) categories and (b) quantities of humanitarian assistance have been given to (i) Kurdish groups in northern Iraq and (ii) Shia groups in southern Iraq. [71428]

Mr. Fatchett: Since 1991, HMG have donated over £73 million in bilateral aid to Iraq, in addition to giving aid via the EU. We have an aid programme for northern Iraq of some £3 million a year, which focuses on village rehabilitation, provision of medical supplies and assistance for mines-affected communities. Projects are being directed through the Kurdistan Children's Fund and Kurdish Life Aid, among others.

Our £7 million programme for Baghdad-controlled Iraq includes £2 million for the International Committee of the Red Cross and £2 million for the rehabilitation of water and sanitation infrastructure. In January, we also approved £540,000 for the rehabilitation of hospitals and increased the water and sanitation project by a further £211,000 to help rehabilitate water networks. We also delivered supplies of food and medicines to hospitals in early 1998, but nothing has been delivered since June, when the Iraqi authorities banned all further delivery of food and medicines outside the "oil for food" programme.

We also have a programme of assistance to Iraqi refugees in Iran, many of whom fled from the marshlands of southern Iraq. In 1997–98 we gave over £540,000 for Iraqi refugees. This focuses on the provision of emergency supplies and primary health care for refugees living in camps.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the public engagements of the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), on 1 February. [70649]

Mr. Fatchett: My public engagements for Monday 1 February were as follows:

The hon. Alexander Downer MP, Australian Foreign Minister

Host meeting for London based Heads of Mission—Millennium Celebrations

Speech at Royal United Services Institute

Andrew Miller MP

Israeli Ambassador

New Zealand High Commissioner

Dr. Chris Gambel, Director, Chatham House

Dinner with Next Century Foundation.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the steps taken by the Government to implement the requirement in UNSCR 1160 for UN member states to prevent arming and training for terrorist activities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [71549]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (United Nations Sanctions) Order 1998 implemented in UK law the ban on the sale of arms and related material to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia imposed by Security Council Resolution 1160. In order to ensure that we have done everything possible to prevent UK nationals from providing training for terrorist activities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, an amending Order was made on 10 February by the Privy Council to make it an offence to provide training or training facilities likely to assist the carrying out of acts of terrorism there. This is the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (United Nations Sanctions) (Amendment) Order 1999.

On the same date, there were also made the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (United Nations Sanctions) (Dependent Territories) (Amendment) Order 1999; the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (United Nations Sanctions) (Channel Islands) (Amendment) Order 1999; and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (United Nations Sanctions) (Isle of Man) (Amendment) Order 1999. These Orders contain similar provisions.

Hong Kong

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the People's Republic of China concerning the independence of the Hong Kong legal system. [71316]

Mr. Fatchett: We have regularly made clear to the Chinese Government our views on the independence of the judiciary, including through the Sino-British Joint Liaison Group. We have recently made it clear that any move to restrict the independence of the judiciary would be a matter of serious concern.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the status of the Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal. [71317]

Mr. Fatchett: The 1984 Sino-British Joint Declaration on the Question of Hong Kong stipulates that

> "the power of final judgement of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region shall be vested in the Court of Final Appeal".

In the Basic Law of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region it is provided that a Court of Final Appeal shall be established with the power of final adjudication vested in it. The Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal was established by local ordinance in time for the return of sovereignty over Hong Kong to China.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in resolving the fishing dispute in British waters around Gibraltar. [71381]

Ms Quin: We reached an understanding with the Spanish Government in October on the situation that prevailed from 1991 to 1997, when fishing in British waters around Gibraltar took place in moderation and the fishermen respected the authority of the Gibraltar law enforcement agencies. We agreed with the Spanish Government that we should revert to that situation. We nevertheless faced continuing difficulties on the water. On 27 January a Spanish fishing vessel was arrested. Fishermen demonstrated at the border on 29 January, preventing movement through it. We protested to the Spanish authorities about this. The fishermen and the Chief Minister of Gibraltar reached agreement on 3 February that satisfied them both, building on the understanding we had reached with Spain. These new arrangements have been working well in practice. We hope that they succeed in sorting out a problem that was causing difficulties in the region and in relations with Spain. We have always taken the view that any lasting solution to this problem must involve dialogue and cooperation at the local level.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions he is taking to reduce the queues at the Gibraltar-Spanish frontier. [71380]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary spoke on the telephone to the Spanish Foreign Minister on this subject on 11 February. The Embassy in Madrid has also raised it on several occasions recently with the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs. We have made it clear to the Spanish authorities that such delays are unjustifiable and unacceptable and that we look to them to allow movement across the border in conformity with EU obligations. We have also drawn the situation to the attention of the President of the European Commission.

European Parliament Building, Strasbourg

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated cost of the new Parliamentary building in Strasbourg for the European Parliament; what is the United Kingdom's contribution; and if he will make a statement. [67687]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

According to the European Parliament, the cost of the new Parliamentary building in Strasbourg is currently estimated to be some 400 million euros. The European Parliament will have the option to purchase the new building under the terms of its lease and I understand it does intend to exercise this option. This cost of purchase would be borne by the European Parliament's administrative budget, within the limit on annual resources set by the EC budget. The UK's contribution to the new Parliament building, after taking account of the effect of the abatement, will be around 5 per cent. of the total, i.e. broadly around 20 million euros.

TREASURY

Channel Islands and Isle of Man

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with other EU ministers about the tax status of the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. [66125]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 18 January 1999]: There have been no discussions on the tax status of the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what powers the Government have to influence the tax regimes of the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. [66122]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The UK Government are discussing harmful tax competition issues with the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man and expect that they will play a full and constructive part in international initiatives on this subject. Legislation on taxation matters has always taken the form of laws enacted by the island legislatures.

Tax Havens

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the [illegible]ndent territories of each member state of the European Union which are tax havens. [66126]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 18 January 1999]: The OECD Report "Harmful Tax Competition: An Emerging Global Issue" recommended the establishment of a Forum to implement the Report and that the Forum should produce a list of tax havens on the basis of the factors identified in the Report by October 1999. It would not be appropriate to anticipate the outcome of that exercise.

Fraud

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money within the EU budget was spent on tackling fraud in each of the last 10 years. [66123]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Total spending to combat fraud and financial mismanagement is not separately identified in the EC budget. For example, administration spending is classified according to its type (pay, stationery etc.) rather than aim (anti-fraud etc.). However, payment appropriations for a number of budget lines that relate primarily to the fight against fraud and financial mismanagement are given in the following table. In addition, the entire budget of the European Court of Auditors—amounting to some 66 million euros in 1999—is directed at cutting out fraud and financial mismanagement in the EC budget.

It should be noted that the Community's effectiveness in tackling fraud is not just about the amounts that are spent on anti-fraud measures in the EC budget. Expenditure in the EC budget on such measures should be seen alongside the work Member States put into combating fraud, which is where most impact can be made.

Payment appropriations 1990–99

Budget item	Heading	1990[1] Outturn	1991[1] Outturn	1992[1] Outturn	1993[1] Outturn	1994[1] Outturn	1995[1] Outturn	1996[1] Outturn	1997[1] Outturn	1998 Budgeted	1999 Budgeted
A-2554	Conferences, congresses and meetings in connection with the activities of the associations of European Lawyers for the protection of the financial interests of the Community	—	—	0.1	0.2	0.2	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3	0.3
A-3530	Unit to co-ordinate action against fraud	0.2	0.0	0.1	0.3	0.1	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2	0.2
A-3531	Controls, studies, analyses in connection with the fight against fraud	3.1	3.9	1.1	2.6	3.1	2.9	3.4	3.7	2.8	2.8
A-3532	Combating fraud in the textile sector	—	0.0	—	0.1	0.6	0.3	0.4	0.4	0.5	0.5
A-354	Tax harmonisation and computerised customs network for fraud prevention	1.4	1.2	0.9	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
A-355	European documentation, co-ordination and study network to control of cross border crime and fraud	—	—	0.1	0.2	0.4	—	0.1	—	—	—
A-4530	Expenditure in support of the Unit to co-ordinate action against fraud	—	0.1	0.2	0.0	—	—	—	—	—	—
A-4531	Expenditure in support of controls, studies, analyses in connection with the fight against fraud	—	0.7	3.2	2.1	—	—	—	—	—	—
A-454	Tax harmonisation and computerised customs network for fraud prevention	—	1.0	3.1	1.4	—	—	—	—	—	—
B1-360	Measures to combat fraud affecting the European Agriculture Guidance and Guarantee Fund—Guarantee Section	—	8.7	8.3	54.4	66.3	51.3	24.7	36.8	45.0	38.0
B-3820	Measures to control and combat fraud	16.4	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
B-3821	Other forms of inspection in agriculture	2.9	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
B2-121	Measures to combat fraud affecting the European Regional Development Fund	—	—	—	—	—	0.0	—	—	—	—
B2-131	Measures to combat fraud affecting the European Social Fund	—	—	—	—	—	0.1	—	—	—	—
B2-150	Action against fraud in the field of structural policy	—	—	—	—	—	—	0.5	0.5	0.8	0.8
B2-301	Measures to combat fraud affecting the Cohesion Fund	—	—	—	—	—	0.2	0.2	0.1	0.3	0.3
B2-511(0)	Inspection in agriculture	—	22.8	27.2	17.7	11.1	8.1	12.8	11.5	20.0	15.0
B2-5111	Other forms of inspection in agriculture	—	3.2	3.1	0.5	—	—	—	—	—	—
B2-519	Campaign against fraud in agriculture	—	—	—	—	0.2	0.8	—	—	—	—
B5-910	General measures to combat fraud	—	—	—	—	—	—	3.4	4.6	4.4	4.4
B6-910	Actions to combat fraud in the area of research	—	—	—	—	—	0.0	0.0	—	—	—
B7-650	Measures to combat fraud in the co-operation sector	—	—	—	—	—	—	0.0	—	—	—
B8-2510	Inspection in agriculture	—	0.1	0.3	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
B8-2511	Other forms of inspection in agriculture	—	2.1	4.1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total		24.0	43.8	51.7	79.5	81.9	64.4	45.9	58.0	74.3	62.2

[1] Figures given to nearest 0.1 million ecus.

[2] Figures given to nearest 0.1 million euros.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost will be of the working families tax credit in its first year. [70277]

Dawn Primarolo: The total cost of the Working Families Tax Credit in 2000–01, the first full year of the credit, is estimated to be about £4.3 billion.

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70038]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The detailed information requested either is the subject of confidentiality or could not be provided expect at unreasonable cost (or both).

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the government in their important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of Junior Counsel whom departments are expected to use for the rest of the government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not on one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example, where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

Euro Notes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which euro notes (a) have been and (b) are planned to be printed in the UK. [70604]

Ms Hewitt: As part of the Bank of England's involvement in various aspects of Euro preparatory work, they are participating in a pre-production trial for Euro notes. The printing trials of the Euro 5 and 20 are complete and the printing trial for the 50 is under way. There are no other Euro notes planned for trialing in the UK. Notes printed as part of the trial are for analytical and comparative purposes only and will not be issued.

Euro Exchange Rate

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has made to the European Bank and to the Euro X committee about the exchange rate of the euro. [70616]

Ms Hewitt: None.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people who will benefit financially in the first year from the introduction of a national minimum wage within (a) the Northern Region and (b) the city of Sunderland. [70370]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Fraser Kemp, dated 15 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the introduction of the national minimum wage.

The precise information you requested is unavailable. However, estimates of the proportion of people who are currently earning below the minimum wage for (a) the North East Region and (b) the Sunderland Local Authority District are available. These have been placed in the House of Commons Library under the title of "New Earnings Survey (NES) 1998—National Minimum Wage Distribution Tables".

Duty Free

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the additional full-year yield to the Exchequer which will result from the abolition of the system of duty-free goods; and if he will make a statement. [70441]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 11 February 1999]: It is not possible to predict with any degree of certainty the additional revenue which will result from the abolition of duty-free sales within Europe. Estimates are sensitive to a whole range of assumptions about the nature of the successor regime and the post-abolition marketing strategies of the duty-free operators. There is insufficient certainty on either of these points to make meaningful predictions at this stage.

Beer Duty

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the proceeds to the Treasury, exclusive of VAT, of (a) each penny of beer duty and (b) total beer duty for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [70904]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

Year	Proceeds per penny[1]	Duty receipts
1989	108	2,105
1990	109	2,226
1991	104	2,282
1992	103	2,376
1993	102	[2]2,230
1994	105	2,500
1995	106	2,646
1996	104	2,606
1997	107	2,682
1998	104	2,698

[1] The figures for proceeds of a penny per pint have been calculated assuming average strengths.

[2] The system for charging beer duty changed in June 1993. This led to a reduction in receipts of approximately £200 million.

VAT

Mr. Todd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has obtained of non-charging of VAT by businesses whose potential VAT receipts are of a scale which would oblige VAT registration. [70788]

Dawn Primarolo: First, I must make it clear that only those traders whose taxable turnover exceeds £50,000 are required to register for VAT.

The Government are very concerned about those traders who under-declare their true takings to avoid paying VAT or to avoid VAT registrations. Additional staff are being devoted to this work to counter fraud, avoidance and non-compliance. Within the UK there are now 135 outfield staff deployed regionally in Shadow Economy Teams whose prime function is to tackle traders fraudulently avoiding paying VAT, including failing to register for VAT. An additional objective of this activity is to provide a level playing field for the legitimate trade. The teams also liaise with and work closely with other Government Departments.

This year these teams have identified 2,590[1] unregistered traders who should have been registered and an additional £17.1 million[1] revenue.

[1] To 30 November 1998: latest figures available for 1998–99.

Unemployment (Cambridgeshire)

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many 18 to 24-year-olds were registered as unemployed and claiming benefit in the Cambridge travel-to-work area in (i) April 1997, (ii) April 1998 and (iii) October 1998. [70424]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 11 February 1999]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Andrew Lansley, dated 15 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on those registered unemployed and claiming benefits in the Cambridge travel-to-work area (TTWA).

The information you have requested is derived from the monthly claimant count of people claiming unemployment-related benefits (i.e. Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance credits). Essentially, all people who were claiming these benefits on the count day are counted.

The data you have requested for those age 18–24 in the Cambridge TTWA is given below and are not adjusted to take account of seasonal factors.

Cambridge TTWA: Claimant count age 18–24 year olds:

April 1997: 1,018

April 1998: 818

October: 1998: 786.

Self-employed Persons

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for each of the last five years how many people were self-employed, broken down by (a) occupation and (b) region. [70432]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 11 February 1999]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Rosie Winterton, dated 15 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the self-employed.

The data requested is set out in the attached tables and relates to Labour Force Survey estimates based on people who reported that they were self-employed in their main job.

Thousand

	1994	1995	1996	1997	Spring 1998
Self-employed people, by occupation
UK, not seasonally adjusted
All self-employed[1]	3,301	3,355	3,286	3,335	3,257
Managers and administrators	801	851	768	816	803
Professional occupations	367	393	400	397	420
Associate professional and technical occupations	365	347	375	407	418
Clerical and secretarial occupations	110	106	120	107	107
Craft and related occupations	976	959	934	921	859
Personal and protective services	108	118	123	135	129
Selling	144	126	122	126	128
Plant and machine operatives	222	249	241	239	215
Other occupations	201	200	194	185	180
Self-employed people, by Government Office Region
Not seasonally adjusted
United Kingdom	3,301	3,355	3,286	3,335	3,257
North East	91	98	87	95	93
North West (GOR) and Merseyside	321	324	339	335	298
North West (GOR)	276	268	289	290	247
Merseyside	45	55	50	45	51
Yorkshire and the Humber	232	260	258	252	248
East Midlands	222	212	216	211	223
West Midlands	264	280	258	277	263
Eastern	336	350	343	342	331
London	443	443	431	430	464
South East (GOR)	538	531	537	560	520
South West	362	376	353	361	334
England	2,810	2,873	2,820	2,863	2,775
Wales	181	161	160	153	160
Scotland	225	235	225	231	234
Northern Ireland	84	86	81	88	88

[1] Includes people who did not state their occupation

Source:

Labour Force Survey, Office for National Statistics

Wages (Paisley)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many (a) men and (b) women working (i) part-time and (ii) full-time in Paisley, South earn less than (1) £3 per hour, (2) £3.60 per hour and (3) £2.50 per hour; and in each case what is the percentage of the total number involved. [71431]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Douglas Alexander, dated 15 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on earnings in Paisley South.

The New Earnings Survey (NES) can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. However, the release of NES data is restricted to figures which are derived from a sufficiently large sample of employees, and which have an acceptable level of accuracy. Estimates of the number of men and women in Paisley South who earn less than the levels quoted cannot be provided, because the small sample size produces unreliable statistics. I have therefore provided data for Renfrewshire in the attached table. These are based on the 1998 NES, the latest for which data are available.

The NES is based on a one per cent. sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff earning below the tax threshold and in particular those who work part-time.

New Earnings Survey, April 1998

Employees on adult rates, whose pay for the survey' pay-period was unaffected by absence. Hourly earnings excluding overtime payments

	Percentage earning
	Less than £2.50	Less than £3.00	Less than £3.60
Renfrewshire
Full-time males	0.0	0.5	3.5
Part-time males	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—
All males	0.0	0.5	3.8
Full-time females	1.7	1.7	4.3
Part-time females	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—
All females	1.9	1.9	9.2
All full-time employees	0.6	1.0	3.8
All part-time employees	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—
All employees	1.0	1.2	6.5

[1] Denotes that a reliable estimate is not available

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70456]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the "Civil Service Statistics 1998", which is available in the Libraries of the House. Total numbers of staff in Departments and Agencies are provided but a regional breakdown is provided for Departmental staff only.

Gaming Duty

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average increase in the income to the Treasury per transaction arising from the increase in gaming duty announced in the 1998 Budget. [70656]

Dawn Primarolo: No such estimate is available.

Private Health Care

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual average levy on a private healthcare insurance scheme as a result of the extension of insurance premium tax to such schemes in the 1997 Budget. [70678]

Dawn Primarolo: Insurance Premium Tax has applied to private medical insurance since the tax was introduced in 1994. The current rate is 4 per cent. In 1997, the legislation was amended to apply IPT again to a few insurance schemes that had been repackaged to benefit from the exemption for long-term policies. This protected £70 million tax revenue potentially at risk and removed a distortion of competition.

Fuel Duty

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) domestic households and (b) businesses have been affected by the changes in fuel and gas oil duty announced in the 1997 and 1998 budgets; and in each case what has been the average cost. [70680]

Ms Hewitt: This information is not available.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses have been affected, and by what average amount, as a result of the reduction in the (a) main and (b) small firms rate of corporation tax in the 1997 and 1998 budgets. [70674]

Dawn Primarolo: The reductions in the main rate of corporation tax will benefit some 40,000 companies and the reductions in the small companies' rate will benefit some 360,000 companies. The full effect of the April 1997 rate cuts will occur only in payments made in 1999–2000 and similarly the full effect of the small companies' rate cut in April 1999 will occur only in payments made in 2000–01. The 1 per cent. cut in the main rate in April 1999 will start to have an effect from 1999–2000 as these companies will by then be partly paying tax in quarterly instalments.

The expected average gain for each type of company as a result of the tax cuts is given for each budget in the tables:

1997 Budget

£

	Average reduction in payment per company in:
	1998–99	1999–2000
Cut in main rate from 33 per cent. to 31 per cent. on 1 April 1997	35,000	49,000
Cut in small companies' rate from 23 per cent. to 21 per cent. on 1 April 1997	500	700

1998 Budget

£

	Average reduction in payment per company in:
	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Cut in main rate from 31 per cent. to 30 per cent. on 1 April 1999	7,500	25,000	27,500
Cut in small companies' rate from 21 per cent. to 20 per cent. on 1 April 1999	neg	250	350

Pensions

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the average annual cost to (a) a personal pension plan and (b) an occupational pension scheme as a result of the abolition of ACT credits; [70683]

(2) what estimate he has made of the average increase in contributions which will have to be made to (a) a personal pension plan and (b) an occupational pension scheme in order to maintain the value at maturity they would have attained had not ACT credits been abolished. [70682]

Ms Hewitt: It is for pension providers and their contributors to decide what pension contributions should be paid after taking many factors into account.

Company Cars

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average number of company cars owned or leased per company in the United Kingdom. [70697]

Ms Hewitt: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Simon de Danser

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the boarding of the Simon de Danser by Customs and Excise officials. [70891]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Valerie Davey) on 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 357.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to answer the four parliamentary questions tabled by the hon. Member for Maldon and East Chelmsford on 14 January for answer on 18 January. [71087]

Dawn Primarolo: I have done so today.

Ice Cream Sales

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual revenue from VAT on ice cream sales by mobile ice cream vendors. [71130]

Dawn Primarolo: The annual revenue from VAT on the sale of ice cream eaten away from the home is approximately £20 million. It is not possible to separate the amount from mobile vendors.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 16 February 1999

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Whipps Cross-Redbridge Relief Road

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 252, if he will require from the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency an explanation for the cause of the delays and cost arrears in respect of the Whipps Cross-Redbridge Relief Road; and if he will publish this explanation. [70070]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Kerman to Mr. David Amess, dated 11 February 1999:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked Lawrie Haynes, the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Contract 4 of the A12 Hackney to M11 Link Road. I am replying in his absence from the office.

The start on this contract was initially delayed by protest action and, as I said in my last letter, the procurement and installation of additional specialist mechanical and electrical equipment has proved difficult.

The increase in costs is due to protester action and increases in statutory undertakers costs. The additional mechanical and electrical works required for the safe operation of the George Green tunnel also cost more than originally anticipated.

Regional Planning Guidance

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government will publish its new draft guidance on preparing regional planning guidance. [71422]

Mr. Caborn: Draft Planning Policy Guidance Note 11 on "Regional Planning" will be published on Monday 15 February.

Copies will be placed in the Library and made available in the Vote Office.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total cost of accommodation and internal travel for the Minister for the Environment and those who accompanied him to the Antarctica Treaty meeting in Antarctica. [67977]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 28 January 1999]: Travel costs from New Zealand to Antarctica and return, internal travel and accommodation costs in Antarctica were paid for by the New Zealand Government.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many (a) civil servants and (b) political advisers accompanied the Minister for the Environment to the Antarctica Treaty meeting in Antarctica; and what was the total cost of their airfares; [67978]

(2) what was the cost of the flights for the Minister for the Environment to attend the Antarctica Treaty meeting in Antarctica; and in what class he travelled. [67979]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 28 January 1999]: I attended an informal meeting of Ministers and senior Government officials from Antarctic Treaty Nations at the invitation of the New Zealand Government. Some 24 countries were represented. The main focus of the meeting was to look at the way the continent has been affected by environmental changes from climate change to ozone depletion. I was accompanied by one civil servant. No political adviser accompanied me.

The cost of the two return business class flights to New Zealand was £8,709. Flight costs from New Zealand to Antarctica were paid by the New Zealand Government.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what use the Minister for the Environment made of RAF aircraft to travel to and from the Antarctica Treaty meeting in Antarctica. [67980]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 28 January 1999]: None.

Ministerial Flights

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 335, if he will list (a) the departure and arrival points for the RAF plane and helicopter flights on (i) 3 May 1997, (ii) 23 July 1997, (iii) 22 January 1998, (iv) 23 March 1998 and (v) 26 September 1998 and (b) the RAF units to which the planes or helicopters were attached. [69098]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The information requested is in the table.

	Departure point	Arrival point	RAF Unit
3 May 1997	Wembley	Kensington Palace	N.32 Squadron
23 July 1997	Northolt	Manchester Airport	N.32 Squadron
2 January 1998	Northolt	Riga	N.32 Squadron
23 March 1998	Humberside Airport Brussels	Brussels Northolt	N.32 Squadron
26 September 1998	Stanstead	Blackpool	N.32 Squadron

Ministers are required under the Ministerial Code to always make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements.

In 1997–98 this Government spent £6.1 million on Ministers' visits overseas. The spend on overseas visits between April and December 1998 is £4 million. This compares to £7.8 million and £6.9 million for the last two years of the previous administration.

Waste Management Licences

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications by operators to surrender waste management licences in each of the last three years have been (a) made and (b) granted. [70211]

Mr. Meale: The figures for applications made to the Environment Agency under section 39 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 are as follows:

	1996–97[1]	1997–98	1998–99[1, 3]
Applications made under section 39 of the 1990 Act	[2]—	201	247
Applications accepted under section 39 of the 1990 Act	[2]—	128	109
Applications rejected under section 39 of the 1990 Act	[2]—	10	2

[1] 1 April-31 March

[2] No reliable figures are available for 1996–97. Following the transfer of responsibility from waste regulation authorities the central collection of statistics by the Environment Agency commenced in 1997–98.

[3] For the first 9 months of the year

Goods Vehicles

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that British haulage operators do not face unfair competition as a result of tax increases proposed on vehicles running at an 11.5 tonne drive axle weight on roads in Britain. [70103]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his pre-Budget statement on 3 November 1998, Official Report, columns 681–702, vehicle excise duty rates for goods vehicles with 11.5 tonne axle weights will be set to discourage strongly the use of such vehicles, in view of the additional road damage that they cause. The Integrated Transport White Paper stated that the Government would seek to encourage the use of goods vehicles with a maximum weight of 41 tonnes on 6 axles, which have the same payload as 40 tonnes on 5 axles but cause significantly less road wear.

The Government firmly believe that the best way to help industry, including hauliers, is to create a climate of sustainable economic growth and long-term investment in business. The last Budget included a number of general measures from which hauliers could benefit: main corporation tax will be reduced to 30 per cent. from 1 April 1999, and small companies' corporation tax rate will be cut to 20 per cent. from 1 April 1999.

Local Government Reform

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the encouragement his Department is giving to local authorities to consult with the public in connection with the White Paper on local government reform. [70377]

Mr. Raynsford: Our local government White Paper makes it clear that the Government attach the highest importance to councils consulting local people as they take forward their plans to modernise. We shall shortly publish for consultation a draft Bill to transform the political management and ethical framework of councils. We expect all councils to lead a full local debate on these issues in their area.

Carbon Monoxide Poisoning

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the expenditure was on press, radio and television awareness advertising to warn of the dangers of carbon monoxide poisoning for the last five and the current financial years. [70366]

Mr. Meale: Estimated figures for the Government's spend on press, radio, TV and other forms of Carbon Monoxide awareness material for the last five and current financial years are given in the table.

£

Financial Year	Expenditure
1993–94	10k
1994–95	1m
1995–96	600k
1996–97	1.25m
1997–98	238k
1998–99	270k

The peaks in expenditure in 1994–95 and 1996–97 are explained by the major TV, film and national press advertising campaigns mounted in those years. Total spending for the period is approaching £3.5 million pounds. In addition the gas supply industry has assisted in this awareness-raising effort by including advice with gas bills mailed to consumers.

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many deaths occurred as a result of carbon monoxide poisoning in houses of multi-occupation in the period 1993 to 1998. [70368]

Mr. Raynsford: There are no specific records available for deaths from carbon monoxide (CO) poisoning in houses in multiple occupation (HMOs).

However, I can advise my hon. Friend that the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) record all gas-related deaths from CO poisoning, and whether they occur in rented or owner-occupied housing.

On average HSE have recorded 30 deaths each year since 1993. Of these, approximately one third occurred in rented accommodation.

HSE's records do not include no-gas related CO deaths (such as those caused by CO inhalation from solid fuel) which do not fall within the scope of gas safety legislation enforced by HSE.

Essential Car Use

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he received on possible exemptions from charges for essential car users in response to his consultation paper, "Breaking the Logjam". [70727]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As at 11 February 1999, my Department has received 36 responses to "Breaking the Logjam", of which 18 raised the issue of exemptions from charges for essential car users. The issue has also been raised in general correspondence on a number of occasions. The closing date for responses to the consultation paper is 31 March 1999.

Genetically Modified Crops

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what evidence he has assessed that genetically modified crops have caused (a) deaths and (b) health damage to humans. [70754]

Mr. Meale: I am not aware of any evidence that genetically modified crops have caused (a) deaths or (b) health damage to humans.

Aggregates

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) on what date London Economics completed its field work for the second research contract into the environmental costs and benefits of the supply of aggregates; [71704]

(2) on what date he received the final conclusions of the second research contract carried out by London Economics into the environmental costs and benefits of the supply of aggregates; [71705]

(3) on what date he communicated the final conclusions of the second research contract carried out by London Economics into the environmental costs and benefits of the supply of aggregates to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. [71706]

Mr. Raynsford: The fieldwork was completed on Friday 5 February. London Economics are preparing their final report which will include the conclusions of the project. We have not yet received the final conclusions and have therefore not communicated these to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Housing Associations (Rents)

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the housing associations identified by the Housing Corporation as having rents above their recommended levels and in each case the percentage by which their average rents exceed the Housing Corporation's recommended levels. [71139]

Mr. Raynsford: The Housing Corporation's requirement that year-on-year rent increases by registered social landlords (RSLs) should not exceed RPI+1 per cent. came into effect from 1 April 1998.

Published data on RSL rent increases relate to 1997–98, the year before the Corporation's performance standard became operative. The information is set out in a Corporation research publication (Source 32) a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library. Rent increases are shown for individual RSLs with more than 250 homes in ownership or management.

The Corporation has recently visited a number of RSLs with forecast rent increases in 1998–99 above RPI+1 per cent. as well as some which had high outlying rent levels compared to other RSLs as at 31 March 1998. The purpose of these visits was to establish the reasons for the rent variations and whether strategies were in place to achieve compliance with the Corporation's performance standards. The result of these investigations will be published shortly by the Corporation. I will ensure a copy is placed in the Library.

London Underground (Consultants Fees)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the total fees his Department has paid to date to consultants engaged in the financial and operational restructuring of London Underground; what additional sums he expects to pay consultants on this work; which consultants have been employed on the restructuring project; and if he will make a statement on progress made so far with the project. [71179]

Dr. Reid: The Department has not paid any money to consultants engaged in the financial and operational restructuring of London Underground. However, London Transport has spent money on such consultants and I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake) by my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London on 13 January 1999, Official Report, column 212. It is not normal practice to publish forecasts of total costs, for the good reason that publicising such information could undermine the public sector's ability to manage the costs of advisers.

The main consultants employed by London Transport are:

PricewaterhouseCoopers (financial)
Freshfields (legal)
Ove Arup and Partners (engineering)
Arthur Andersen (operations entity design)
PA Consulting (Infrastructure entities design and financial modelling)
Horngold and Hill (project management)
Richard Ellis (property)
Sedgwick (insurance)
Bacon & Woodrow (pensions)

Work on restructuring London Underground into one operations entity and three infrastructure entities is proceeding. London Transport expect to invite expressions of interests from potential bidders shortly.

Millennium Dome (Transport)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the contingency plans presented to his Department by London Underground last month for access to the Millennium Dome, in the event of the Jubilee Line extension not being open on time. [71419]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have, through my Millennium Access Co-ordination Group, recently examined in detail London Underground's proposed contingency plans to manage problems on any of the main transport links to the Dome. We are now close to endorsing their proposals, but I have asked London Underground to undertake further work on certain aspects before they formally move to the next stage of mobilising the plans. A summary of the finalised plans will be placed in the Library as soon as this further work has been completed and the plans have been formally endorsed.

Endangered Species

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what controls exist on the trade in endangered species between states of the European Union. [71418]

Mr. Meale: The trade in endangered species is regulated by Council Regulation (EC) No 338/97, which implements the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES) within the European Union. Certificates are required to enable the sale or commercial use of species listed in Annex A of the Regulation and to allow the movement of wild taken specimens of these species. Certificates are also required to enable the re-export of CITES specimens by other EU Member States and owners of CITES specimens may at any time be required to provide evidence to confirm that these were lawfully imported or acquired.

Railtrack

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make an assessment of how his policy on investment in the railway infrastructure by Railtrack is affected [illegible] Railtrack's policy on dividend payments to shareholders. [71494]

Ms Glenda Jackson: While recognising that Railtrack is a private sector company and must make a profit, the Government have made it clear that they are not convinced that enough of Railtrack's profits are being invested back into the network. Railtrack receives substantial public subsidy through the access charging regime. We need to be sure that the taxpayer is getting proper value for money.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the best value regime will apply to the component parts of the GLA. [71105]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government Bill applies the best value regime to both the Greater London Authority, so far as it exercises its functions through the Mayor, and the four functional bodies which will deliver the main London-wide services (Transport for London, the London Development Agency, the Metropolitan Police Authority, and the London Fire and Emergency Planning Authority).

The Bill also allows for the Secretary of State to provide, by Order, for the GLA to be a best value authority in relation to specified functions of the Authority which it does not exercise through the Mayor, and specified functions which are not functions of the Authority but are functions of another best value authority.

The Secretary of State may also specify, by Order, modifications to the way in which best value would apply to these functions. Any such Orders would be subject to the affirmative resolution procedure in Parliament.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the proportion of GLA expenditure which will be (a) self-financed and (b) met by grants. [71107]

Mr. Raynsford: In the White Paper "A Mayor and Assembly for London" published on 25 March 1998, we estimated that the annual costs of the Mayor, Assembly, their support staff and some central services would be about £20 million a year. We made it clear that the Government had decided to meet most of the cost themselves through grant and that London council tax payers would contribute about three pence a week on a Band D council tax bill.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish an indicative budget for the GLA setting out (a) the component budgets, (b) any central support costs and (c) income from (i) grants, (ii) council tax and (iii) charges. [71106]

Mr. Raynsford: I will publish the GLA's budget for 2000–01, including the information requested, following the local government finance settlement in February 2000. Publication of later years budgets will be a matter for the Mayor.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations and on what timetable his Department is undertaking to inform the preparation of the GLA's first budget. [71108]

Mr. Raynsford: The GLA will not exist at the start of the financial year 2000–01, so their budget for that year will be set by the Secretary of State. Detailed transitional arrangements for the GLA's first year budget have yet to be settled. My Department will be consulting interested parties widely over the coming months, to enable the GLA's budget for 2000–01 to be prepared in provisional form by the end of November 1999 and finalised by the end of February 2000, in line with the timetable for local government finance generally.

Funerals

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions his Department has held with (a) the Confederation of Burying Authorities and (b) the National Association of Memorial Masons regarding changes to legislation affecting funeral arrangements; [71502]

(2) when he proposes to reply to the letter from the National Association of Memorial Masons sent to him last November. [71503]

Mr. Raynsford: No discussions have yet been held. But my Department will discuss with both the Federation of Burying Authorities and the National Association of Memorial Masons the suggested legislation. I have now written to the National Association of Memorial Masons confirming the assurances which they received from my Department in December that they would be included in the discussions.

Norwegian Aviation Tax

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if agreement has been reached with the Norwegian Government concerning the liability of British airlines to pay Norwegian aviation tax; and if he will make a statement. [70940]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government believe that the tax on aviation fuel, introduced by Norway on 1 January 1999, is in breach of the UK/Norway Air Services Agreement, signed in Oslo on 26 January 1979, which exempts aviation fuel for international flights from tax. Officials wrote to the Norwegian authorities on 4 January drawing attention to this apparent breach and asking them to rescind the tax. I understand that the Norwegian Government are currently reviewing the position, in the light of this and other similar representations received.

In principle, the Government are in favour of an aviation fuel tax, but we believe this should be agreed at international level. Action by individual states or by groups of states would infringe existing international agreements, distort airline competition and could have environmental disbenefits.

Bus Services (Fuel Duty)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the eligibility criteria for rebate of fuel duty in respect of bus services. [71739]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The eligibility criteria for fuel duty rebate are reviewed from time to time.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received urging him to include bus services within the fuel duty rebate where they are specifically designed to convey pupils to school. [71740]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have received very few representations on this matter. Bus services specifically designed to convey only pupils to school, rather than the general public, are not eligible for fuel duty rebate. However, services provided or secured by a local education authority are eligible for rebate providing that seats on the vehicles concerned are normally available to members of the general public and are regularly used by them.

Vehicle Fuel Bills

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the average annual fuel bill for (a) privately owned motor vehicles, (b) company cars and (c) commercial vans and lorries. [71665]

Dr. Reid: I regret that information has not been published in the form requested, although related information on the use of vehicles and expenditure is available from a number of published sources.

Information on the relative mileage of company and private cars is available from the national Travel Survey, and published in "Focus on Personal Travel", 1998 edition. The most recent estimates are that private cars average 8.3 thousand miles per year compared to company cars' 22.6 thousand. However, on average only 11.4 thousand of that mileage is for business purposes, the remainder being for private purposes.

Information on average mileage and fuel consumption estimates are published in The Transport of Goods by Road for heavy goods vehicles, and in The Survey of Small Commercial Vehicles for smaller vans and lorries. Information on expenditure on private motoring is available from the Family Expenditure Survey.

However, I will undertake to use the relevant sources to provide estimates in the form requested and write to the Hon. Member. I will arrange for copies of the letter to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

British Waterways

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the Government's decision on the status and future of British Waterways. [71947]

Mr. Meale: An announcement on the future for British Waterways will be made on Thursday 18 February. Copies of all the relevant documents will be placed in the Library of the House on that day.

Raptors

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in assessing the impact of raptor numbers on game bird and racing pigeon interests; and what future work is planned. [71948]

Mr. Meale: In an answer to a Parliamentary Question on 14 January 1998, Official Report, column 229, my predecessor reported on the work of the Raptor Working Group which was set up in 1995 to investigate this matter.

In the last 12 months, the Group has taken forward the programme of work outlined in the Parliamentary Answer. It has concentrated on formulating possible solutions to the conflicts arising between certain birds of prey and game and pigeon interests. The Group submitted an interim report to Ministers in November 1998.

The Working Group intends to complete this year its programme of work which will include the following:

to consider the results and implications of the 1998 national survey of hen harriers; assess the results and implications of the research on raptor predation of red grouse as influenced by moorland management practices; review the findings of the Langholm management trial; assess the results of the research on interactions between racing pigeons and birds of prey and consider practical mechanisms for the resolution of any problem in this area; review outputs from Scottish Natural Heritage's Moorland Working Group and other fora; consider means to assess why illegal killing of birds is still prevalent.

It will then produce a final report and recommendations to Ministers in late 1999.

Ports Policy

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's ports policy. [71995]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government look to the ports industry to play an important role in the development of their integrated transport policy. This will involve the promotion of environmental sustainable transport and the regeneration of local communities in which ports have traditionally made a contribution.

We believe that all ports should be publicly accountable for their statutory powers and duties. Accountability must become a much more open process than at present, and shared with all stakeholders, not just users.

Safety cannot be left to chance. Lives and property must be protected. So, too, must port environments because many port facilities are close to important and sensitive habitats. There must be a more considered approach to port safety if acceptable standards are to be achieved throughout the industry.

We must ensure that trust ports fulfil their obligations to all the interests entrusted to them. A separate consultation paper has been issued on these proposals and responses are now being considered. The Government believe, however, that trust port status confers special obligations on these ports to operate openly and with full regard to the interests of their local communities. Without open accountability, it is not clear how fully this is achieved; the evidence suggests that in many cases it is not.

The Department is preparing a comprehensive ports policy paper and an invitation to comment has been released today. I have placed a copy of the consultation document in the Library.

Development Plans

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the draft revision of Planning Policy Guidance Note 12 on development plans. [72141]

Mr. Caborn: I am pleased to announce the publication tomorrow of a fully revised public consultation draft of PPG12 on Development Plans.

Copies will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Attorney-General what changes he proposes for the Crown Prosecution Service's cash and running cost limits for 1998–99. [71998]

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class VIII Vote 4 will be increased by £1,007,000 from £228,926,000 to £229,933,000 and the gross running costs limit for Class VIII Vote 4 will be increased by £1,007,000 from £220,920,000 to £221,927,000.

The cash limit increase of £1,007,000 consists of an increase of £1,300,000 and a decrease of £293,000. The increase is required to fund the early departure costs of senior lawyers who are leaving the CPS on structural grounds as a result of implementing the move to a new 42 Area structure. The decrease results from the need to transfer £227,000 to the Treasury Solicitor's Department in respect of the balance of the cost of the Glidewell review and a transfer of £66,000 to the Home Office which represents a CPS contribution towards the cost of Integrating Business and Information Systems in the Criminal Justice system (IBIS) initiative. The increases will be offset by transfers and a change to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Attorney-General what proposals there are to change the 1998–99 cash limit or running cost limit for the work of HM Procurator General and Treasury Solicitor. [71999]

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Class VIII Vote 6 will be reduced by £411,000 from £6,257,000 to £5,846,000. The gross running costs will be increased by £771,000 from £26,763,000 to £27,534,000 whilst the running cost limit will be increased by £529,000 from £8,031,000 to £8,560,000.

The running costs limit increase is partially due to initial early retirement costs (£350,000) associated with the closure of the Government Property Lawyers' Agency which was announced to Parliament on 11 November 1998. This will be met from end year flexibility provision as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36. The increase is also due to the residual costs of the Crown Prosecution Service Review (£227,000) and the costs associated with the extension of powers relating to Unduly Lenient Sentences (£7,000) falling on this Vote. These will be offset by PES transfers from the Crown Prosecution Service and the Home Office respectively. A further increase in running costs is due to classification changes of European Fast Streamers income and VAT refunds.

The reduction in the cash limit is due to the increase in running costs being more than offset by lower VAT payment to Customs and Excise (£900,000), greater than expected VAT refunds on contracted out services (£55,000) and receipts from various Government Departments for services provided by the Lawyers' Management Unit (£40,000).

The increases will be offset by transfers and charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

DEFENCE

Overseas Commitments

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to tackle problems of overstretch, following the increase in the United Kingdom's overseas defence commitments. [70394]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) and for South Ribble (Mr. Borrow) on 25 January 1999, Official Report, column 4. The matter of overstretch is very carefully considered when operational commitments are entered into.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many press releases have been issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71445]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence Press Office issues all press notices on defence policy matters. For the period in question it has issued the following number:

	Number
1990	136
1991	145
1992	306
1993	186
1994	178
1995	147
1996	170
1997	231
1998	333

In addition to the MOD Press Office, the various regional military public relations offices issue press notices covering routine local issues, as well as copies of centrally issued press releases which they may consider to be relevant to their region. Precise figures for those press notices issued by all of the regional offices, which take account of such "duplicate" releases, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The two Defence Agencies which issue their own press notices are the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) and the Met Office. The number of press notices they have issued in the period are as follows:

	DERA	Met Office
1990	—	—
1991	—	32
1992	—	43
1993	—	62
1994	—	24
1995	20	52
1996	23	54
1997	13	49
1998	14	44

Press notices covering appointments to MOD-sponsored non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) are issued centrally by the MOD press office. NDPBs do issue their own press notices from time to time covering routine matters; complete records are not held centrally, however, for the period in question.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71460]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Rules governing the work of the Government Information and Communication Service are laid down in the Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the Library of the House. For the period in question, the cost to my Department of distributing press releases centrally was approximately £31,000. Figures covering the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, the Met Office and non-departmental public bodies are not separately identified within their budgets.

Iraq

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the cost in each year of the enforcement of the no fly zones over the (a) North and (b) South of Iraq. [71388]

Mr. George Robertson: Enforcement of the northern and southern no-fly-zones over Iraq began in 1991 and 1992 respectively. The annual additional costs of each operation since that time are as follows:

£ million

	North	South
1991–92	2.6	—
1992–93	4.2	5.3
1993–94	9.6	6.5
1994–95	10.5	4.6
1995–96	5.9	4.7
1996–97	2.3	4.1
1997–98	2.3	3.4
1998–99	3.2	7.6

The figures for 1998–99 are estimates. The Southern no-fly-zone estimate in this year takes account of the deployment of RAF aircraft to Kuwait as well as Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the legal authority for the imposition and enforcement of the no fly zones over the (a) North and (b) South of Iraq. [71387]

Mr. George Robertson: Coalition patrols of the Northern and Southern no-fly zones in Iraq are in support of UNSCR 688. They are justified under international law on the basis of overwhelming humanitarian necessity. They prevent Saddam Hussein from using his air force against the Iraqi people in the north and south and enable us to monitor the actions of his forces on the ground. In responding to the threat from Iraqi air-defence systems, coalition aircraft have responded in self defence in a proportionate manner. This action is justified under international law on the basis of self defence.

RAF Flights (Staverton)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what risk assessment he has carried out or has received from the RAF of flights over the North Cotswolds to the North East of Staverton Airport in Gloucestershire; what information he has received from the RAF regarding the precautions they are taking to avoid mid-air collisions in that air space; what information the RAF supplies about its flights to the authorities at Staverton Airport; what minimum height above ground level is permitted for (a) RAF fighters, (b) Hercules transport planes and (c) Chinook helicopters; and if he will make a statement. [71194]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Safety in the air is a key priority in all military flying activities. No specific risk assessments have been carried out in the area north-east of Staverton Airport, but my Department has carried out a detailed study into the effectiveness of 'see and avoid', the primary means of collision avoidance in open airspace. The results of this study were published on 2 February 1998, Official Report, column 469, and copies of the report placed in the Library of the House.

There is no requirement for the authorities at Staverton Airport to receive information about military low-flying sorties outside their aerodrome traffic zone; military aircraft wishing to pass through the zone must, however, seek permission from Staverton Airport Air Traffic Control before doing so.

The minimum separation distance for RAF fighters and Hercules aircraft between themselves and the ground, any structure or any other aircraft except those in the same formation is 250 ft. Chinooks are permitted to fly down to ground level.

Submarines and Fishing Boats

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to modify the regulations contained in the Submarine/Fishing Vessel Interaction Code of Practice; and if he will make a statement. [66470]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 20 January 1999]: The Code of Practice is regularly improved by modifications following annual Fishing Industry Liaison Meetings of representatives from the Fishing Industry and Government Departments.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many allegations concerning a breach of the Submarine/Fishing Vessel Interaction Code of Practice have been brought to his notice in the past 15 months; and if he will make a statement. [66471]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 20 January 1999]: Two confirmed incidents have been reported to Ministers and I am aware of three further allegations, which were later shown not to be breaches of the Code. No damage or injury has resulted from any incident since the full implementation of the Code of Practice and it continues to provide an effective safety mechanism.

RN Base Faslane

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, column 460–61, on RN Base Faslane, on what occasions radiation supervisors have been required to carry out the work of radiation monitors in each of the last five years; and on how many occasions all duty supervisors were carrying out such work. [69086]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are no prescribed occasions when a Supervisor has to carry out the work of a monitor, however, supervisors can enter radiological areas as part of their duties. The number of occasions when duty supervisors carried out the work of a monitor cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost. However, the number of times supervisors have entered radiological areas in each of the last five years is as follows:

1994: 257

1995: 219

1996: 264

1997: 184

1998: 38.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 331, on replies to parliamentary questions, how many times Exemption 2 in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information was used by his Department in replying to questions on the subject of the Territorial Army, to justify withholding information in the last 12 months. [69397]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Once.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70784]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him yesterday by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office.

RAF Innsworth

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with personnel at RAF Innsworth, Gloucestershire, about plans to reduce the level of policing of the MOD area at Innsworth; and if he will make a statement. [70892]

Mr. Doug Henderson: None. However, policing arrangements at RAF Innsworth have been reviewed recently. On present plans, the present complement will be retained for the next two years. Any proposals for subsequent changes will be subject to consultation in the usual way.

RAF Brize Norton

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what the implications are for (a) staffing and (b) resources at RAF Brize Norton of (i) replacing the fleet of VC-10s and Tristars and (ii) the Future Strategic Tanker Aircraft programme; and if he will make a statement; [71576]

(2) what proposals he has under consideration for the transfer of staff and resources from RAF Brize Norton to Boscombe Down as a result of the Future Strategic Tanker Aircraft programme. [71578]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The MOD is in only the initial stages of discussions with a wide range of organisations interested in bidding PFI solutions to meet the requirement for the Future Strategic Tanker Aircraft

(FSTA). We have yet to receive any proposals. It is, accordingly, far too soon to speculate on implications for any particular location.

Defence Estate Organisation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to set targets for the Defence Estate Organisation for 1999–2000. [71905]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We expect to be able to announce the key 1999–2000 performance targets for Defence Estate Organisation at the end of next month.

Army Cadet Force (Chorley)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the Army Cadet Force detachment at Chorley will be accommodated in the future. [72142]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I am pleased to announce that, following consultation with the territorial Auxiliary and Volunteer Association, I have decided to reprovide the facilities currently afforded to the Army cadet Force detachment at Chorley, within the curtilage of the Territorial Army centre in which they are currently based. This will provide the cadets with up to date facilities and minimise disruption over the period of change. The remainder of the site will be disposed of, as originally announced, once the facilities for the cadets have been provided. We will, of course, liaise with the local authorities on this matter.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Long-stay Patients

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many long-stay patients there are in medical wards in (a) Antrim Hospital and (b) Whiteabbey Hospital. [70200]

Mr. McFall: There were 10 patients in medical wards in Antrim Hospital and 6 patients in medical wards in Whiteabbey Hospital who, on 9 February 1999, had been in-patients for more than 4 weeks.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for how long the longest-stay patient has been in a medical ward in (a) Antrim and (b) Whiteabbey hospitals. [70202]

Mr. McFall: The patient with the longest stay in a medical ward in Antrim Hospital was admitted on 16 November 1998. The patient with the longest stay in a medical ward in Whiteabbey hospital was admitted on 1 July 1996.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many long-stay patients assessed as being ready for discharge to nursing home care are in medical wards in (a) Antrim Hospital and (b) Whiteabbey Hospital [70207]

Mr. McFall: There were 4 patients in medical wards in Antrim and 2 patients in medical wards in Whiteabbey who, at 9 February 1999, were assessed as ready for discharge to nursing or residential home care.

Nursing Care (Costs)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average weekly cost of providing nursing care in (a) private sector accommodation and (b) a hospital in Northern Ireland. [70201]

Mr. McFall: The information is not available in the form requested.

No separate assessment has been made centrally of the cost of providing nursing care in private sector accommodation.

Costing information on providing "nursing care" in a hospital is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish her Department's collation and assessment of responses to all the Government's public consultations. [69767]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Service First Unit in Northern Ireland proposes to publish a Northern Ireland version of the guide: "How to conduct written consultation exercises" for Departments and Agencies in late March 1999. The guide will include a provision that, where circumstances permit, a summary of views and information collected from a consultation exercise will be made available, unless the respondents have requested confidentiality for their comments.

Portadown

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) arrests and (b) convictions have been made in relation to illegal pro-Orange Order demonstrations in Portadown since July 1998. [70212]

Mr. Ingram: There have been 135 arrests and 33 persons convicted during the period July 1998 to January 1999 in connection with illegal parades in Portadown.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been (a) arrested and (b) charged in connection with the destruction of Catholic-owned businesses in Portadown since July 1998. [70209]

Mr. Ingram: There have been no persons arrested or charged to date in connection with the destruction of Catholic-owned businesses in Portadown, where the religion of the owner is known, since July 1998.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many arrests have been made in connection with the intimidation of Catholic families in the Craigwell area of Portadown by pro-Orange Order demonstrators. [70301]

Mr. Ingram: One person has been arrested for incitement to hatred at Craigwell Avenue. Three persons were arrested at Corcrain Bridge, close to Craigwell Avenue, for Public Order offences. Twenty one persons were arrested resulting from a riot situation at Corcrain Bridge/Charles Street.

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if paramilitary beatings are included in the factors which she has to take into account in determining whether a paramilitary organisation has ended violence permanently. [70144]

Mr. Ingram: Yes. Parliamentary beatings are a relevant consideration, among others, in coming to the judgment the Secretary of State makes under section 3(8) of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998.

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the factors which she will take into account in determining whether to invoke her powers to review the list of organisations under section 3(10) of the Act in respect of an organisation not specified under section 3(8) of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 which is involved in paramilitary beatings, mutilations and shootings. [70135]

Mr. Ingram: The Secretary of State is under a duty from time to time to review the list of organisations which are specified organisations. In forming her belief whether the criteria in section 3(8) of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 are satisfied in relation to an organisation not yet specified, she takes into account the factors set out in section 3(9) of that Act and other factors relevant in the circumstances.

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what reports she has received from the RUC on the involvement of members of paramilitary organisations not specified by order under section 3 (8) of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 in paramilitary beating, mutilations and shootings in Northern Ireland; and what assessment she has made of these reports. [70139]

Mr. Ingram: Reports are frequently received from the Royal Ulster Constabulary on these attacks. The Secretary of State takes them into account in assessing the state of ceasefires under section 3(8) of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998.

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what factors she will take into account in determining whether paramilitary beatings carried out by organisations not specified by order under section 3(8) of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 constitute a breach of the ceasefires; [70136]

(2) what factors she takes into account in reaching the judgment that a paramilitary ceasefire is complete and unequivocal. [70145]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State takes into account the factors set out in section 3(9) of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 and such other factors as are relevant in the circumstances to the judgment she makes, for the purposes of section 3(8) of that Act, as to whether a ceasefire has been established, and is being maintained, which is complete and unequivocal.

Prisoners

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons convicted of a qualifying offence set out in the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 have been released from prison under the Accelerated Release Scheme. [70143]

Mr. Ingram: To date, there have been 241 prisoners released under the terms of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998. This is drawn from information received by the Secretary of State as at 9 February 1999 from the Sentence Review Commissioners to whom prisoners apply for early release.

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons released from prison in Northern Ireland under the terms of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998, were serving (a) a fixed term sentence of at least five years and (b) imprisonment for life. [70142]

Mr. Ingram: In order to be eligible for release under the terms of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998, persons must be serving fixed term sentences of 5 years or more, or imprisonment for life. All those released fall into these categories. A breakdown is given.

This is drawn from information received by the Secretary of State as at 9 February 1999 from the Sentence Review Commissioners to whom prisoners apply for early release.

Life sentence/fixed term	Total
Lifers	74
Fixed term	167
Grand total	241

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons convicted of qualifying offences will be eligible for accelerated release from prison under the terms set out in the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998. [70224]

Mr. Ingram: To date, there have been 241 prisoners released under the terms of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998, with a further 150 prisoners who have successfully applied to the Sentence Review Commission and who have received Substantive Determinations with a release date in the future. This gives a total of 391 eligible prisoners. This is drawn from information received by the Secretary of State as at 9 February 1999 from the Sentence Review Commissioners to whom prisoners apply for early release.

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons convicted of a scheduled offence, including murder, and serving a fixed term sentence of at least five years will still be in prison two years from the date of the commencement of the Accelerated Release Scheme set out in the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998. [70141]

Mr. Ingram: Persons eligible for consideration for the Accelerated Release Scheme who will still be in prison two years from the date of the commencement of the Accelerated Release Scheme will include:

those who have not applied to the Sentence Review Commission those who, although eligible to apply, and having made application, have failed to satisfy the criteria for release

those who at the second anniversary of the commencement of the Scheme will not have served the minimum period required under Section 10(7) of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998.

At this point in time it is not possible to quantify how many eligible persons may still be in prison on the date in question.

Security Arrangements

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions she has had on the normalisation of security arrangements in Northern Ireland with those Northern Ireland parties represented in the Assembly. [70269]

Mr. Ingram: None. Individual normalisation measures are operational decisions for the Chief Constable to take in the light of his assessment of the threat at the time and the advice of the General Officer Commanding. Local MPs are consulted as appropriate. The Secretary of State is responsible for developing the Government's overall strategy and has not had discussion with Northern Ireland parties represented in the Assembly on the strategy paper she intends to publish soon.

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the removal of security installations in Northern Ireland since 10 April 1998. [70274]

Mr. Ingram: Since 10 April 1998, nine security installations (two sangars and seven Permanent Vehicle Checkpoints) have been demolished, one Army Base has been vacated and is being demolished and seven Patrol Bases have been vacated and closed down.

The decisions to demolish and vacate these installations were based on the operational assessment of the Chief Constable consistent with the threat level.

The following are the nine installations which have been demolished:

Sangar at Crumlin road, Belfast and the Hill top sangar overlooking the former PVCP on the main Belfast-Dublin road at Cloghogue, Newry; and Permanent Vehicle Checkpoints at Bessbrook (3), Aughnacloy, The Hump, Strabane, Muff, Londonderry and Letterkenny road, Londonderry.

The Fort Whiterock Army base in West Belfast has been vacated and is presently being demolished.

The following are the seven Patrol bases in Co. Fermanagh which have been vacated and closed down:

Mullan bridge

Roscor bridge

Wattle bridge

Gortmullan

Annaghmartin

Killyvilly

Clonatty Bridge.

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what progress has been made in the reduction of the numbers and role of armed forces deployed in Northern Ireland since 10 April 1998; [70273]

(2) if she will list the de-escalation in security measures in Northern Ireland that has taken place since 10 April 1998. [70137]

Mr. Ingram: Since the reinstatement of the Provisional IRA ceasefire in July 1997, the Chief Constable has announced a progressive reduction in security measures in the Province. Each step has been fully consistent with the level of threat and taken after a review of the security situation.

From 10 April to the end of August, key factors which influenced the levels of security across the Province included attacks on security forces, the marching season and terrorist incidents, the most serious being the bomb in Omagh.

However, from September, the following measures have been taken:

Base Reductions

October

Vacation of Letterkenny, Muff and Hump vehicle checkpoints

Demolition of Crumlin Road Sangar

Demolition of R16 Road Sangar

Announcement of closure of Fort Whiterock

November

Demolition of three PVCPs at Bessbrook

Work started (and continues) to demolish Letterkenny vehicle checkpoint

January 1999

Work started (and continues) to demolish Fort Whiterock Army Base

Closure of 7 Fermanagh Base Patrols

February 1999

Demolition completed of Muff vehicle checkpoint

Demolition completed of Aughnacloy vehicle checkpoint

Demolition completed of Hump vehicle checkpoint

Troop Movements

September

The last remaining company of the Rural Reinforcement Battalion (RRB) returned to the Mainland

October

The last remaining company of the Urban Reinforcement Battalion (URB) returned to the Mainland

November

Drumadd Roulement Battalion (DRB) returned to the Mainland

Military Patrol Support to RUC

September

Military patrols ceased in Belfast Region

Military patrols ceased in South Derry

October

Military patrols ceased in Waterside and City side, Londonderry

Military patrols ceased in RUC G Division

November

Military patrols ceased in the Strabane Sub Division.

Health Board Funding

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the capitation formula for the health boards was last determined; and what changes to the funding formula per board are proposed over the current planning period. [70099]

Mr. McFall: The current Regional capitation formula was determined in September 1997 and was first used to inform the 1998–99 allocation to Health and Social Services (HSS) Boards.

The following changes, which will apply to all HSS Boards, are proposed over the current planning period:

(i) the updating of the age and sex expenditure weights currently used in the formula;

(ii) the development and implementation of Northern Ireland specific indicators of need in those parts of the formula which currently have interim weightings based on English research.

(iii) the development and implementation of weightings designed to compensate Boards in respect of the possible additional need for, and additional cost of, providing services in rural areas; and

(iv) the development and implementation of an improved methodology for adjusting Board allocations based on the capacity of each Board's residents to fund (in total or in part) their own care.

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding was given to each of the health boards in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years. [70101]

Mr. McFall: Details of the Health and Personal Social Services (HSS) Board allocations for 1993–94 to 1997–98 for the purchase of health and social care are shown in the following table:

£000

Financial year	Northern HSS board	Southern HSS board	Eastern HSS board	Western HSS board	Total
1993–94	206,711	169,130	411,015	145,838	932,694
1994–95	222,059	181,762	423,774	154,446	982,041
1995–96	238,619	193,290	448,641	166,096	1,046,646
1996–97	252,246	194,613	434,200	181,369	1,062,428
1997–98	261,667	203,320	452,228	189,586	1,106,801

Fracture Service

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland from what budgets the recently announced £4 million for an improved fracture service in the Northern Ireland Health Service will be funded; and how much will be distributed to each health board. [70096]

Mr. McFall: The announcement on 20 January 1999 of £4 million for improved fracture services related to a capital scheme to enable the centralisation of fracture and accident and emergency services on the Royal Victoria Hospital site. The funding will provide enhanced and extended facilities and equipment at the Royal Victoria Hospital. The project will also involve additional investment of £1.1 million per year to provide additional scheduled theatre lists on the RVH site, increased outreach clinics in Antrim and Craigavon Hospitals and additional consultant sessions for outpatients. Both these sums will be met from the CSR settlement for the HPSS which I announced on 15 December 1998.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were on waiting lists in each month in the past five years in the Northern Ireland Health Service for each recorded speciality. [70098]

Mr. McFall: The number of people on waiting lists in the last five years in the Northern Ireland Health Service for each recorded speciality are not available monthly. Data are available on a quarterly basis from June 1994 and are set out in the table.

Table 1: Number on inpatient waiting list by specialty, June 1994 to September 1996

	Quarter ending
Specialty	June 1994	September 1994	December 1994	March 1995	June 1995	September 1995	December 1995	March 1996	June 1996	September 1996
General surgery	8,381	8,348	8,275	8,442	8,187	8,825	9,166	8,698	9,023	10,367
Urology	2,647	2,691	2,886	2,509	2,750	2,923	2,901	2,668	3,015	3,389
T & O	3,124	3,134	3,010	2,753	2,906	3,174	3,427	3,570	4,158	4,579
ENT	5,478	4,836	4,764	5,117	5,516	5,243	5,168	5,561	5,768	5,688
Opthalmology	4,988	4,621	4,519	4,340	4,064	3,897	4,036	3,807	4,079	4,204
Oral Surgery	835	734	751	832	942	1,027	938	884	943	911
Paediatric dentistry	103	135	127	101	106	74	57	70	64	71
Neurosurgery	267	246	232	231	247	271	302	296	308	347
Plastic surgery	2,401	2,323	2,283	2,658	2,829	2,643	2,557	2,463	2,511	2,552
Cardiac surgery	521	449	443	398	395	460	471	495	539	521
Paediatric surgery	1,706	1,586	1,477	1,534	1,623	1,411	1,251	1,231	1,277	1,341
Thoracic surgery	88	135	138	155	135	130	142	153	171	183
Accident and emergency	0	0	5	7	6	4	6	9	8	3
Anaesthetics	504	485	469	369	359	355	414	456	483	544
General medicine	213	251	293	456	386	584	468	549	610	672
Gastroenterology	131	169	252	313	275	263	269	318	338	446
Endocrinology	0	0	22	19	27	15	24	28	25	28
Haematology (Clin.)	0	0	2	1	4	11	8	5	4	15
Cardiology	702	666	713	685	722	727	[illegible]	781	890	956
Dermatology	124	374	345	370	466	478	300	268	287	300
Thoracic Med	0	25	15	29	29	23	41	30	30	31
Nephrology	2	5	6	7	6	—	8	3	—	2
Neurology	94	81	86	80	95	92	102	112	116	127

Table 1: Number on inpatient waiting list by specialty, June 1994 to September 1996

	Quarter ending
Specialty	June 1994	September 1994	December 1994	March 1995	June 1995	September 1995	December 1995	March 1996	June 1996	September 1996
Rheumatology	39	114	135	159	189	259	257	293	300	296
Paediatrics	0	0	6	31	39	41	28	22	25	13
Paediatric Neurology	0	0	0	6	4	3	2	5	2	5
Geriatric med	31	46	39	36	16	24	19	26	29	32
Dental medicine specialties	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Gynaecology	3,299	3,283	3,514	3,315	3,369	3,511	3,616	3,511	3,513	3,598
Clinical oncology	70	67	75	62	60	59	67	65	58	69
Haematology	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Histopathology	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Other	31	0	[illegible]	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
All specialties	35,779	34,804	34,9[illegible]	35,015	35,752	36,524	36,803	36,377	38,574	41,290

Number on inpatient waiting list by specialty, December 1996 to December 1998

	Quarter ending
Specialty	December 1996	March 1997	June 1997	September 1997	December 1997	March 1998	June 1998	September 1998	December 1998
General surgery	11,685	12,549	12,624	13,445	13,933	12,568	12,465	11,970	11,612
Urology	3,338	3,566	3,489	3,662	3,546	3,389	3,744	3,521	3,509
T & O	4,754	4,952	5,232	5,237	5,333	5,336	4,939	5,278	5,500
ENT	5,148	6,154	6,289	6,027	6,138	6,174	6,389	6,153	5,819
Opthalmology	4,368	4,307	4,502	4,344	4,580	4,517	4,781	4,745	4,623
Oral Surgery	884	801	499	532	468	502	542	662	594
Paediatric dentistry	91	96	108	101	105	134	126	102	133
Neurosurgery	360	406	404	405	403	419	425	422	413
Plastic surgery	2,514	2,587	2,887	2,939	2,966	2,773	2,587	2,378	2,307
Cardiac surgery	528	550	573	533	529	512	463	437	473
Paediatric surgery	1,390	1,430	1,554	1,558	1,625	1,421	1,182	1,042	794
Thoracic surgery	192	228	205	207	197	186	201	186	195
Accident and emergency	3	7	7	11	2	0	0	5	11
Anaesthetics	558	557	552	627	644	729	814	837	868
General medicine	748	838	871	734	940	1,135	1,154	1,058	1,255
Gastroenterology	458	446	455	476	494	472	528	619	568
Endocrinology	24	23	14	20	31	29	26	21	27
Haematology (Clin.)	2	1	1	3	1	0	0	0	23
Cardiology	877	947	892	949	1,012	973	1,026	997	979
Dermatology	276	277	214	294	298	247	262	333	413
Thoracic Med	21	16	25	3	10	5	4	1	1
Nephrology	1	3	68	62	84	75	114	120	117
Neurology	146	203	223	210	235	244	283	229	156
Rheumatology	267	319	320	358	302	406	338	311	395
Paediatrics	15	15	21	18	11	16	11	11	15
Paediatric Neurology	2	3	3	2	1	2	0	0	0
Geriatric med	13	15	39	15	20	18	19	15	15
Dental medicine specialties	0	0	0	0	2	3	9	0	0
Gynaecology	3,901	4,415	4,414	4,650	4,758	4,619	4,779	4,912	4,853
Clinical oncology	50	58	57	39	66	97	69	59	57
Haematology	0	0	1	0	1	4	3	4	2
Histopathology	0	0	0	0	5	0	0	0	0
Other	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
All specialties	42,614	45,769	46,543	47,461	48,740	47,005	47,283	46,428	45,727

Source:
CH1

Action for Community Employment

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many (i) men and (ii) women aged (a) 18 to 24 and (b) over 25 years old were employed under the ACE programme each month during 1998; [70074]

(2) how many jobs have been lost under the ACE programme in each of the past 12 months; [70072]

(3) how many people moved from the ACE programme into permanent jobs in each of the past five years; [70071]

(4) how many (i) men and (ii) women aged (a) 18 to 24 and (b) over 25 years old were employed under the ACE programme in each of the last five years; [70075]

(5) when the ACE programme is to be terminated. [70073]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for these issues has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Malcolm Moss, dated 15 February 1999:

Parliamentary Questions 70071–70075

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your questions about the Action for Community Employment (ACE) programme.

Parliamentary Question 70071

Details of the number of people moving from ACE into permanent employment are derived from a biannual survey of those who have left the programme. The flow into employment is therefore based on those who respond to the survey. The figures for the last five years for which data is available are

Year	Into employment (percentage)
1993	35
1994	38
1995	38
1996	37
1997	44

Parliamentary Question 70072

During 1998 there was a net reduction in the number of jobs provided by ACE but in some months there was in increase. In December 1997, 4,334 jobs were provided and the movements over the following 12 months:

Month	Increase/Reduction
January	–33
February	+18
March	–36
April	–11
May	–.09
June	–.19
July	–.63
August	–81
September	+12
October	+44
November	+20
December	+62

Number of jobs at end of December 1998: 3939

Reduction over 12 month period: 496

Parliamentary Question 70073

The ACE programme will be phased out during 1999 and its replacement, Worktrain, will become operational in August 1999. Transitional arrangements will be made for those remaining in ACE beyond July 1999.

Parliamentary Question 70074

Details of the number of participants by age group in the ACE programme were not collected prior to the introduction of New Deal.

Since early 1998, approximately 25 per cent. of ACE participants were aged between 18 and 24. Following the introduction of the New Deal for 18–24 year olds, recruitment of people in this age group into ACE was discontinued. Numbers have now reduced to 194 females and 189 males. I expect that by April 1999 there will be no 18 to 24 year olds participating in ACE.

At the end of December 1998 there were 2,111 females and 1,344 males (total 3,455) in the 25+ age group participating in the ACE programme.

Parliamentary Question 70075

As I explained in my answer to question 70074, prior to the introduction of New Deal, information on the age of ACE participants was not collected. However on the assumption that approximately 25 per cent. of participants were in the 18–24 years group, (as was the situation whenever New Deal was introduced) and 7.1 per cent. were over 25 years, then the following estimates apply:

Average occupancy

Year	18–24 years old		Over 24 years old		Totals
	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Grand Total
1994–95	1,123	1,188	3,406	3,575	4,538	4,762	9,301
1995–96	1,154	1,136	3,477	3,422	4,631	4,559	9,189
1996–97	920	820	2,769	2,466	3,689	3,286	6,975
1997–98	701	559	2,111	1,678	2,812	2,237	5,049
1998–99[1]	194	189	2,206	1,311	2,400	1,500	3,900

[1] Estimated outturn figures

I hope you find this reply useful.

Arms Decommissioning

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information she has obtained on public attitudes in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) the Republic of Ireland towards (i) decommissioning of arms and (ii) punishment beatings. [71582]

Mr. Ingram: The Secretary of State is fully aware of the attitudes of the majority of people in Northern Ireland towards decommissioning and paramilitary attacks. The Government are committed to implementing all aspects of the Good Friday Agreement.

Obtaining information on public attitudes in the Republic of Ireland is a matter for the Irish Government.

National Lottery

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money from the National Lottery Distribution Fund has been paid to (a) environmental, (b) educational, (c) health and (d) tourism programmes in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years. [70100]

Mr. Banks: I have been asked to reply.

To date the Lottery distributing bodies have made 1,634 awards to the value of £497 million in Northern Ireland. The table shows a breakdown by Good Cause. Many of these projects are likely to contribute to the environment, health, education and tourism of Northern Ireland but these cannot be separately identified in the way requested.

The National Lottery Act 1998 created a new good cause allowing Lottery money to fund innovative projects in health, education and the environment. These initiatives will be run by a new distributor, the New Opportunities Fund (NOF). NOF has begun to invite applications and will be making its first awards this spring.

Details of Lottery awards for Northern Ireland and the rest of the UK are listed on the Department for Culture, Media and Sports website at www.lottery.culture.gov.uk.

Distributing body	Number of awards	£ Value of awards
Arts Council for Northern Ireland	426	27,142,851
Sports Council for Northern Ireland	406	30,455,505
National Lottery Charities Board	672	38,353,915
Heritage Lottery Fund	93	27,168,986
Millennium Commission	37	374,722,232
Total	1,634	497,843,489

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the parliamentary constituencies which she has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71338]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Both myself and the Parliamentary Secretary have undertaken a number of visits to regions since taking up office at the Privy Council. Records for official visits are not held on a constituency basis, and most will have taken in more than one constituency at a time. The following cities or regions were visited:

East Midlands

West Midlands

Welwyn Garden City

Lincoln

Skegness

Newcastle

Doncaster

Darlington.

Additionally, we have visited a number of constituencies in London as part of our official duties.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Norman Shaw Buildings

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee how long the temporary arrangement is due to last for the provision of a passage between the House and the Norman Shaw buildings. [70996]

Sir Sydney Chapman [holding answer 15 February 1999]: As part of the agreement with London Underground Ltd. for the development of Westminster station and Portcullis House, they have built a new public subway under Bridge Street which opened last week. The next stage is for London Underground to refurbish the old subway, which will then provide a direct and private link between the Palace and the outbuildings to the north of the Street.

It is anticipated that the subway will re-open in the latter part of 2000.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ASSIST Programme

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs about the ASSIST programme. [71057]

Clare Short: I have discussed the ASSIST programme with the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with a view to ensuring that we take a consistent approach across government to security sector issues.

Officials of my Department have also discussed the ASSIST programme with officials of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Arms Exports

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on how many occasions the full interdepartmental working group on overseas development co-operation has met at ministerial level since 25 September 1998; and what discussions it has held on arms exports. [71043]

Clare Short: The Interdepartmental Working Group on Development (IDWG) last met on September 25 1998. A further meeting will be held in the spring.

The IDWG has discussed broad issues of security sector reform but has not specifically discussed arms exports.

Ministry of Defence

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for Defence about the new Defence Diplomacy Mission; [71058]

(2) what discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for Defence on the Ministry of Defence's outreach assistance programme and the use of the British Military Assistance Fund. [71059]

Clare Short: There are close contacts at Ministerial and official level between my Department and the Ministry of Defence. These cover a wide range of Defence Diplomacy and related issues, including Outreach and the use of the Defence Military Assistance Fund.

Security Sector Reform

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's policy on using the European Community Development Budget funds to finance security sector reform activities and initiatives to remove small arms from circulation. [71044]

Clare Short: The possibility of using EU development funds to finance security projects is a difficult issue from a legal point of view. The Commission enjoys competence in the field of development co-operation under the EU's first pillar, competence on conflict prevention and resolution rests with Member States under the EU's second pillar (known as the Common Foreign and Security Policy). We are making progress, however, in advancing the principle that wherever possible, development assistance should contribute to the prevention of conflict; the November 1998 Development Council agreed conclusions to this affect.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by her Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71465]

Clare Short: Rules governing the work of the Government Information and Communications Service (GICS) are laid down in the Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the Library of the House.

Since May 1997, the Department for International Development has issued 110 press releases. The total cost of these press releases is approximately £13,000. The costs include postage and wire service.

The Commonwealth Development Corporation has issued 42 press releases since May 1997. The total cost of these press releases is approximately £6,000. The costs include postage, wire service, photocopying and consultancy services.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many press releases have been issued by her Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71450]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development has issued the following number of press releases in each of the years 1990 to 1998:

Year	Number
1990	114
1991	102
1992	111
1993	94
1994	106
1995	71
1996	50
1997	58
1998	74

The only relevant agency or non-departmental body to issue press releases is the Commonwealth Development Corporation which has issued the following number of press releases in each of the years 1990 to 1998:

Year	Number
1990	no figures available
1991	no figures available
1992	no figures available
1993	no figures available
1994	no figures available
1995	9
1996	20
1997	16
1998	28

Sudan

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if her Department has provided or offered assistance (a) bilaterally and (b) through Operation Lifeline Sudan, to (i) the Government of Sudan, (ii) the rebel movement in Sudan and (iii) non-Governmental organisations active in Sudan, for de-mining projects in Sudan. [71768]

Clare Short: While a state of civil war continues to exist, we will not offer assistance for de-mining projects in Sudan.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when the facilities at Malakal, El-Obeid and Khartoum airports were first offered by the Government of Sudan as air transport centres for Operation Lifeline Sudan humanitarian relief flights; when Sudanese airport facilities started to be used by Operation Lifeline Sudan; for what reasons these internal Sudanese facilities were not used earlier by Operation Lifeline Sudan; and what are the estimated savings to Operation Lifeline Sudan of using El-Obeid and Khartoum airports. [71686]

Clare Short: The Government of Sudan have offered for some years the use of airports in the north of the country for relief flights to the south, but donors have preferred to operate from an independent base in Kenya. Northern Sudanese air strips were used last year for the first time because of the greatly increased need due to the crisis. The difference in cost is not yet known, but a major independent study of Operation Lifeline Sudan, undertaken in 1996, concluded that it would be marginal.

The cost of delivering food by air in Sudan last year was approximately 15 times the World Food Programme's average world wide food delivery cost. Real savings for the relief effort will come from maximising land routes, including rail, for delivery of humanitarian assistance to vulnerable areas of southern Sudan. We are pressing the UN to make progress on this.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the non-Governmental organisations working in Sudan which have received funding from her Department, or its predecessor, over the past eight years; and what the level of funding for each was in those years. [71765]

Clare Short: This information is included in the following table.

£

NGO expenditure	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99[1]	Total
Aain	—	—	—	—	65,584	374,608	33	—	—	440,225
ACORD	1,800,000	750,000	290,000	365,000	203,356	71,925	59,531	50,000	50,000	3,639,812
Across	—	208,904	—	100,000	—	—	—	—	40,000	348,904
Action Disability and Development	18,612	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	18,612
Aief	—	—	—	—	250,000	450,000	—	—	—	700,000
Aktion Afrika Hilfe	—	—	—	—	—	—	50,000	133,961	—	183,961
Amref	39,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	39,000
British Red Cross	1,000,000	184,558	—	289,360	608,179	200,000	—	—	250,000	2,532,097
CAFOD	300,000	—	634,976	329,750	1,786,978	—	105,404	—	4,000	3,161,108
CARE	2,998,486	6,365,553	3,305,186	1,997,676	1,724,974	511,327	896,201	1,127,042	716,694	19,643,139
Christian Aid	400,000	2,196,320	554,601	216,666	441,804	—	—	—	334,330	4,143,721
Christian Outreach	310,000	245,682	175,000	221,000	143,850	150,000	35,000	—	—	1,280,532
CONCERN	161,000	344,475	224,244	272,737	—	—	—	—	—	1,002,456
GOAL	—	21,744	6,909	245,000	322,290	—	75,681	16,433	511,355	1,199,412
Health Unlimited	—	—	9,515	—	—	—	—	—	—	9,515
Help the Aged	60,000	60,000	60,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	180,000
ICRC	—	184,558	—	—	—	—	—	—	1,000,000	1,184,558
IFRC	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	315,000	—	315,000
International Extension College	150,000	153,785	100,000	100,000	100,000	100,000	—	12,097	—	715,882
Islamic Relief	—	—	—	—	59,945	59,602	59,125	—	—	178,672
Merlin	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	731,418	731,418
MSF	—	—	62,000	—	447,323	—	589,028	274,172	2,608,775	3,981,298
Ockenden Venture	258,268	145,217	272,172	199,950	118,000	201,050	231,585	68,492	—	1,494,734
Oxfam	—	—	100,000	10,000	740,854	439,635	183,256	880,801	87,000	2,441,546
Plan International	267,998	44,000	49,500	55,000	—	—	—	—	—	416,498
SCF	1,720,799	2,135,414	2,107,767	2,930,062	1,800,265	964,892	1,137,716	1,323,923	636,055	14,756,893
SOS Sahel International	49,210	43,969	27,605	34,579	36,062	17,689	—	—	—	209,114
Tear Fund	—	—	—	—	—	—	94,408	—	25,540	119,948
Vetaid	—	—	—	—	—	106,800	198,419	—	—	305,219
World Vision	—	31,250	—	—	50,074	394,090	186,296	72,352	233,393	967,455
You and Me	40,000	32,446	36,800	—	32,700	34,250	20,000	14,000	—	210,196
Total	9,573,373	13,147,875	8,016,275	7,366,780	8,932,238	4,075,868	3,921,683	4,288,273	7,228,560	66,550,925

[1] Estimated

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many personnel within Operation Lifeline Sudan directly monitor food aid diversion. [71789]

Clare Short: The World Food Programme has increased the number of food aid monitors to 125 as part of its response to the joint OLS/SRRA/SPLA Task Force Report.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what guidelines have existed for Operation Lifeline Sudan's procurement of food supplies for its emergency food aid programmes; and if Operation Lifeline Sudan is procuring food from within Sudan itself. [71767]

Clare Short: Operation Lifeline Sudan itself does not procure food. This is the responsibility of the UN World Food Programme, international agencies and non-governmental organisations operating in Sudan who have a full range of policies and procedures for the procurement of food and related services. Food is purchased from within Sudan when this represents the most cost effective option.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many of his staff monitor food aid diversion in Sudan. [71799]

Clare Short: Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) monitors food aid diversions. We regularly raise this and other humanitarian issues with the SPLA both bilaterally and in concert with OLS. It was discussed most recently on 25 January in London with SPLA's UK representatives and on 26 January in Nairobi at a joint OLS/Donor meeting with John Garang, leader of the SPLA. At both meetings, assurances were given that action against food aid diversions would be taken.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) if she will estimate the amount of food aid misappropriated by combatants in southern Sudan; [71796]

(2) what estimate she has received from Operation Lifeline Sudan of the amount of food aid misappropriated by combatants in southern Sudan. [71797]

Clare Short: No definitive figures are available and the scale of diversions by the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) and government supported militias vary with location. During November and December, the UN World Food Programme estimated that 3.47 per cent. of food aid delivered was diverted overall. It is suspected that further losses occur after the food has been distributed.

The Task Force report on a mission carried out jointly by Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS), the Sudan Relief and Rehabilitation Association (SRRA) and the SPLA in August 1998 identified a number of cases of diversion. Copies of this report are being deposited in the House of Commons Library.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what official reports she has received on food aid diversion in southern Sudan in the past 12 months. [71792]

Clare Short: We received the report of the OLS/SRRA/SPLA Joint Targeting and Vulnerabilities Task Force in SPLA Controlled Areas of Bahr el Ghazal in August 1998. Copies are being deposited in the House of Commons Library.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the effect on the population of the floods in Sudan in 1998, and the effectiveness of the response of the Government of Sudan and the international community to the floods. [71685]

Clare Short: Many thousands of people were adversely affected by the floods in Sudan last year. We contributed £250,000 towards the flood relief efforts of the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies which were timely and well targeted. We have made no assessment of the response by the Government of Sudan or the rest of the international community.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff within the European Community Humanitarian Office monitor food aid diversion in Sudan. [71800]

Clare Short: Three EC staff are involved with the ECHO programme in southern Sudan. Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) is responsible for monitoring food aid diversions.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has received from the European Community Humanitarian Office on the amount of food aid misappropriated by combatants in southern Sudan. [71798]

Clare Short: We have received no such estimates from the European Community Humanitarian Office.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many sites in southern Sudan are currently served by Operation Lifeline Sudan; and how many were so served in (a) January 1998 and (b) January 1997. [71766]

Clare Short: In November/December 1998, the most recent period for which information is available, 103 rebel held areas were served by the UN World Food Programme in southern Sudan. In addition, deliveries were made to Government of Sudan held locations. More detailed information is not readily available.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the amount of British aid to southern Sudan which has been misappropriated in order to purchase weapons and war material. [71790]

Clare Short: No definitive figures are available on the amount of food aid diversions in southern Sudan. It is important that the peace process is pursued vigorously in parallel with humanitarian relief to minimise the danger of such assistance feeding the war economy. We and the international community are supporting the efforts of the Inter Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) to broker a long-term agreement and are pressing both sides of the conflict to undertake serious negotiation towards a lasting and just peace.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list all the agreements and arrangements made to date between Operation Lifeline Sudan and all parties to the conflict in order to facilitate relief operations and humanitarian assistance in affected parts of Sudan. [71684]

Clare Short: This information is not readily available.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the efficiency, transparency and effectiveness of Operation Lifeline Sudan. [71769]

Clare Short: Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) expanded its response in 1998 in very difficult circumstances as the crisis in southern Sudan unfolded. The UN and donors have learned several lessons from the experience. We are in close touch with the UN to improve the effectiveness of the operation and are working with them.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the work of food aid monitors within Operation Lifeline Sudan; how many monitors are in the field; and where they are based in southern Sudan. [71791]

Clare Short: The role of the World Food Programme (WFP) food monitors is to oversee food distribution. They are effective at ensuring that food aid is allocated fairly at distribution points, but less so in preventing some of the food from being diverted between distribution and its eventual delivery to vulnerable households. Since the recent crisis, we have been pressing for firmer action on diversion. WFP has increased the number of food aid monitors to 125. Monitors shift from location to location, depending where food aid deliveries are to be made.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what discussions she has had on food aid diversion in Sudan with her fellow development Ministers in the European Union; [71793]

(2) what representations she has made on food aid diversion in Sudan at meetings of the Development Council/General Affairs Council in Europe. [71794]

Clare Short: Discussions with development and foreign ministers have focused on the main cause of the suffering in Sudan, the civil war, and on how to work with the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) and the IGAD Partners Forum to achieve a long-term and just peace settlement. Action on food aid diversion needs to be led by the UN System. I have discussed the problem with the appropriate agencies.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which she is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans she has further to decentralise the location of her Department and its agencies. [70462]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) operations are already decentralised. We have two offices in the UK: 414 staff are located in East Kilbride and 755 in London. In addition DFID has offices abroad in Bangkok, Harare, Bridgetown, Dhaka, Delhi, Nairobi, Pretoria and Suva employing, mainly under contract, 207 UK-based and 280 locally recruited staff.

I also refer my hon. Friend to "Civil Service Statistics 1998" which is available in the Library of the House and which provides a regional breakdown of staff.

In April 1998 my Department announced that 43 jobs from DFID's London office would be moved to East Kilbride. I have no plans to relocate any further parts of my Department. My Department has no agencies.

Aid Schemes (Former Soviet Union)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the British aid schemes currently operating in the former states of the Soviet Union giving assistance to the educational and health care systems; what private or semi-private British aid initiatives are operating in conjunction with these; and if she will make a statement. [71175]

Clare Short: We are operating a wide range of know-how fund projects in the countries of the former Soviet Union in the health and education sectors. I will place a list in the Library of the House. These projects are undertaken with a variety of partners. They are usually implemented on a contractual basis with UK or other organisations. A variety of health care professionals contribute their time for free to our Health Small Partnerships Scheme in Russia and Ukraine.

TREASURY

Pensions (LISAs)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if LISA style pensions are to be used as freestanding top-ups to existing (a) personal and (b) occupational pension plans. [69890]

Ms Hewitt: The Treasury's proposal, currently under consultation, is for an investment vehicle to help launch stakeholder pensions. As the Chief Secretary stated in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Preseli Pembrokeshire (Ms Lawrence) on 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 677–78, this financial instrument could also be used by any other kind of pension: personal pensions, occupational pensions and additional voluntary contributions to occupational schemes.

Office for National Statistics

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what consultations he has had with trades unions representing the staff of the Office for National Statistics regarding the current review of that department; [69679]

(2) what plans his Department has to privatise the work of the Office for National Statistics. [69849]

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in reviewing the way the Office for National Statistics delivers its outputs in order to ensure that it makes the best use of the resources available. [71996]

Ms Hewitt: I am today releasing the findings of a review of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of the House. This has concluded that there is scope within ONS to achieve efficiency savings rising to around £20 million per year. The review has been guided by a Steering Group under the Chairmanship of Peter Ellwood, Group Chief Executive of Lloyds TSB, and draws on work carried out by the consultants KPMG.

ONS has achieved significant efficiency savings since its creation three years ago. The review identified ways of building on its forward efficiency plans through further streamlining of activities within ONS and the development of closer working arrangements with appropriate private sector organisations. The proposed changes would allow ONS to focus professional resources and management attention where they can add most value.

These findings will be made available to staff in the ONS. I will invite the trade unions to give me their reactions to the findings before making any decisions on the way forward.

Sierra Leone (Weapons)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action HM Customs and Excise is taking to investigate recent allegations that two British companies have been involved in supplying weapons to rebels in Sierra Leone. [70663]

Dawn Primarolo: The investigation of alleged breaches of United Kingdom export controls is a matter for the Commissioners of HM Customs and Excise. It is not the Commissioner's general practice to comment publicly about the existence or nature of [illegible] investigations.

Euro Exchange Rate

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the current exchange rates for the euro on the balance of trade with Euroland. [70615]

Ms Hewitt: The trade balance reflects a variety of factors and it is difficult to isolate the effects of the exchange rate. In the three months to November 1998, shortly before the introduction of the Euro, the UK had a trade in goods deficit with the Eurozone economies of £1.8 billion, compared with £1.5 billion in the previous three months.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on (a) the use of and (b) the cost of focus groups by the Financial Services Authority for its advertising campaigns. [71129]

Ms Hewitt: This is a matter for the Financial Services Authority.

Highly Indebted Poor Countries Initiative

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the total amount of Government expenditure by Malawi on debt servicing in (i) 1980, (ii) 1985, (iii) 1990, (iv) 1995 and (v) the latest available year. [71392]

Ms Hewitt: The World Bank publication Global Development Finance: Country Tables 1998 gives the following figures for 1980, 1989, 1990, 1995 and 1996. It does not give data for 1985.

Year	Debt service paid (US$m)
1980	68
1989	58
1990	103
1995	105
1996	68

Pensions Mis-selling Advertisement

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Ice Cream Alliance regarding the Financial Services Authority advertising campaign on pensions mis-selling. [71132]

Ms Hewitt: The Chief Executive of the Ice Cream Alliance wrote to the Chancellor and the Financial Secretary on 2 February.

EMU Preparations Standing Committee

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the most recent meeting of the Standing Committee on Preparations for EMU. [71945]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer held the most recent meeting of the Standing Committee on 27 January 1999. I have arranged for copies of the minutes to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Pensions Mis-selling

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress in the review of personal pensions mis-selling. [71946]

Ms Hewitt: The Personal Investment Authority (PIA) has confirmed that it is satisfied that all 41 major firms are devoting sufficient energy and resources to the review of personal pension mis-selling. It judged that all the firms monitored by the Treasury have made sufficient progress towards their priority review targets to be removed from the published list. The Treasury has acted on the PIA advice and suspended publication of figures.

However, firms will still be monitored and expected to conclude the priority review, and make swift progress with phase 2. The Treasury reserves the right to resume publication of information about firms' progress should it prove necessary.

The regulators' advertising campaign for phase 2 of the pension review is now well under way. Younger people should take the opportunity of finding out whether they might be due redress for mis-selling. Anyone who receives a letter from their pension firm should read it carefully and decide whether they wish to put their case forward for review.

Fuel Duties

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the Exchequer's average receipt from (a) a small and medium-sized enterprise and (b) a company with more than 100 employees arising from (i) the increase in the road fuel escalator to 6 per cent., announced in the 1997 Budget, (ii) the indexation of vehicle excise duty, announced in the 1997 Budget, (iii) the bringing forward of fuel duty increases, announced in the 1998 Budget, (iv) the increase in diesel duty differential, announced in the 1998 Budget, (v) the increase in duty on super-unleaded petrol duty, announced in the 1998 Budget and (vi) the increase in company car fuel tax, announced in the 1998 Budget. [71664]

Ms Hewitt: The effect of these measures across enterprises and companies will vary considerably; this reflects the differing circumstances of individual enterprises and companies.

VAT

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the EU legislative provisions which permit a reduction in the rate of VAT from 17½ per cent. to five per cent.; and if he will make a statement. [71000]

Dawn Primarolo: Under the provisions of Article 12(3)(a) of the Sixth VAT Directive, Member States have the option of applying one or two reduced rates of VAT, at not less than 5 per cent., to any of the goods and services specified in Annex H of that Directive.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses were affected by the landfill tax announcement in the 1998 Budget; and if he will estimate the average cost per business. [70670]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 February 1999]: It is not possible to identify how many businesses send their waste to landfill instead of to another waste disposal option such as recycling or incineration. It is therefore not possible to given an average cost per business.

Trading Loss Carry Back

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses have been affected by the 1997 Budget measure to restrict trading loss carry back to one year. [70675]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The restriction on carry back of trading losses could affect up to 20,000 companies a year but the numbers will vary from year to year depending on trading conditions.

Driving Costs

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what additional revenue the average (a) private motorist and (b) company car driver will have contributed to the Exchequer as a result of the 1997 and 1998 budgets. [70681]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The effect of Budget measures on private motorists and company car drivers will vary considerably; this reflects the differing circumstances of individual private motorists and company car drivers.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many households were affected by the reduction of VAT on fuel in the 1997 Budget; and what is the average change in (a) electricity and (b) gas bills. [70673]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Approximately 24½ million households benefited from the reduction of VAT on fuel.

The cut in the VAT rate on domestic fuel from 8 per cent. to 5 per cent. in September 1997 is estimated to have reduced the bill for a typical household in 1998 by £7.50 for electricity and by £9.00 for gas.

Civil Service Pay Awards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average percentage increase in salaries of non-industrial civil servants, excluding members of the senior civil service, in his Department for 1998–99; and to what extent the pay awards were staged. [69508]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The headline pay settlement was 2.95 per cent. on the pay bill and together with the additional funds from staff turnover, staff in post received performance related increases averaging 3.9 per cent. The increases were not staged.

SCOTLAND

Sports Funding

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate the Scottish Sports Council has made of the total revenue financial support provided by Scottish councils for sport in 1998–99 and in each of the previous five years. [69713]

Mr. Galbraith: The Scottish Sports Council does not make separate estimates for this but uses figures on local authority expenditure on leisure and recreation collected by the Scottish Office. The figures, which are not available at a more disaggregated level, are as follows:

Net local authority revenue expenditure on leisure and recreation

Year	£000
1998–99	[1]286,310
1997–98	[2]294,612
1996–97	303,832
1995–96	307,048
1994–95	289,803
1993–94	282,346

[1] Estimate

[2] Provisional

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

New Housing Partnership

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the budget is for the New Housing Partnership scheme in 1998–99, 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02. [70309]

Mr. Macdonald: Following is the information requested:

£ million

	New Housing Partnerships selected for funding in May and October 1998	New Housing Partnership bids currently under consideration
1998–99	35	—
1999–2000	30	23
2000–01	20	95
2001–02	5	160

I will be making an announcement shortly about the selection of bids currently under consideration for funding.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the process is by which bids for funding for the New Housing Partnership scheme are scrutinised. [70312]

Mr. Macdonald: Bids for funding are being assessed by the New Housing Partnership Advisory Group against the criteria set out in the Department's letters of invitation. The Group has sought clarification, from some local authorities, on aspects of their bids. The Group will shortly be making recommendations to me on the merits of the bids, and I will make an announcement shortly. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who sits on the panel that scrutinises bids for the New Housing Partnership scheme; and how and for what reason they were chosen. [70313]

Mr. Macdonald: The members of the New Housing Partnerships Advisory Group are:

Scottish Office

David Belfall (Chair)

John Breslin

Rod Merrall

Convention of Scottish Local Authorities

Albert Tait

Kenny Simpson

Scottish Federation of Housing Associations

David Orr

Chartered Institute of Housing

John Perry

Alan Ferguson

Scottish Homes

Stuart Nichol

Chief Executive, Broomleigh Housing Association

Keith Exford.

The Group provides advice to Ministers on bids received from local authorities for New Housing Partnerships funding.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matte[illegible]r the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the criteria are that local authorities have to meet to be entitled to funding from the New Housing Partnership scheme. [70311]

Mr. Macdonald: The criteria for New Housing Partnership funding have been set out in letters issued by the Scottish Office Development Department. A copy of the Department's letter of 24 August 1998, which invites bids for the period 1999–2000, has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Council House Debt

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the total level of council house debt, including capital debt, by local authority area in Scotland; [70310]

(2) what are the expected levels of council house debt, including capital debt, by local authority area for 1998–99, 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02. [70315]

Mr. Macdonald: Information on local authority housing debt is collected annually from local authorities. The most recent estimates available, as at 1 April 1998, are shown in the table.

Authority	Debt (£)
Aberdeen City	134,682,000
Aberdeenshire	150,821,000
Angus	34,655,914
Argyll and Bute	53,594,327
Clackmannanshire	26,589,900
Comhairle nan Eilean Siar	44,629,236
Dumfries and Galloway	107,598,933
Dundee City	117,916,400
East Ayrshire	83,426,996
East Dunbartonshire	45,574,000
East Lothian	43,554,000
East Renfrewshire	25,643,300
Edinburgh City	283,591,341
Falkirk	90,976,000
Fife	208,240,991
Glasgow City	914,638,203
Highland	222,559,000
Inverclyde	97,559,900
Midlothian	25,138,104
Moray	50,066,031
North Ayrshire	86,772,000
North Lanarkshire	231,658,606
Orkney Islands	4,769,000
Perth and Kinross	47,759,926
Renfrewshire	143,943,035
Scottish Borders	69,226,695
Shetland Islands	60,157,961
South Ayrshire	60,397,134
South Lanarkshire	230,800,643
Stirling	45,625,903
West Dunbartonshire	92,236,590
West Lothian	69,886,114
Scotland	3,904,689,183

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the time scale is, by local authority area, for the repayment of council house debt; and by when he expects all council housing debt to be repaid. [70328]

Mr. Macdonald: Information about the time scale for repayment of council housing debt is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Housing Debt

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what extra funding he plans to provide to assist local authorities to repay housing debt. [70320]

Mr. Macdonald: We have indicated that, in certain circumstances, we will be prepared to provide assistance with housing debt to councils which tranfers their housing stock into community ownership. This assistance will be available where the transfer represents good value for money and is selected to proceed under the New Housing Partnerships initiative. Detailed arrangements will need to be agreed in individual cases and be affordable. The resources necessary will be found from within the funding available under the New Housing Partnerships initiative.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Homelessness

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent on homeless initiatives on in 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99. [70316]

Mr. Macdonald: Expenditure by The Scottish Office on homeless initiatives in 1996–97, 1997–98 and provision for 1998–99 is set out in the table:

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Scottish Office grants to voluntary bodies	354,000	454,000	577,000
Rough sleepers initiative	—	2,173,000	3,331,000
Total	354,000	2,626,000	3,908,000

In addition, local authorities in Scotland and Scottish Homes commit resources to help meet the needs of the homeless through their ongoing housing programmes.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Rough Sleepers Initiative

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which organisations will be responsible for spending the extra funding for the Rough Sleepers Initiative announced on 16 December 1998. [70319]

Mr. Macdonald: These additional resources will be available in 2000–01 and 2001–02. Decisions about their use will be a matter for the Scottish Administration and Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland from which budget the extra funding for the Rough Sleepers Initiative announced on 16 December 1998 was funded; and from what programmes funding has been taken as a result. [70317]

Mr. Macdonald: The additional funding for the Rough Sleepers Initiative announced on 16 December 1998 was identified following the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review. It has not been taken from resources previously allocated to other programmes.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Sheriff Courts

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from lawyers about a decline in their work at sheriff courts because of changes in administrative practice. [70344]

Mr. McLeish: None.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of changes in the last five years in the (a) number and (b) proportion of cases that are going to the Sheriff Court as a result of changes in administrative practice. [70343]

Mr. McLeish: The long-term trend has been for growth in business in the Sheriff Courts. In the past 5 years, the general trend in summary and solemn business and in civil business has been for a small reduction in the number of cases and for a small increase in the average of length of cases going to trial or proof. Many factors influence trends in court business but there is no evidence that administrative practice in the courts has significantly affected the national picture.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Fiscal Fines

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the financial return from fiscal fines in the last recorded year and the distribution of fines by amount. [70342]

Mr. McLeish: Information provided by the district courts shows that in 1997–98 approximately £527,000 was collected from the payment of fiscal fines. Information on the amount of fines by value is not held centrally.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Health White Paper

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the White Paper on improving Scotland's health will be published; and if he will make a statement. [71997]

Mr. Dewar: The White Paper "Towards a Healthier Scotland" is being published on 17 February. Copies will be laid before the House and will be available in the Library of the House and the Vote Office.

The White Paper sets out the Government's strategy for improving health for all in Scotland, and builds on the positive response to the Green Paper "Working Together for a Healthier Scotland", published in February 1998.

Our drive to better health includes a coherent attack on the roots of ill health such as poverty, unemployment, and a polluted environment, combined with action to encourage healthier lifestyles and to address Scotland's key health problems. An over-arching aim is to tackle health inequalities. There is a specific focus on measures to improve the health of children and on new initiatives against Scotland's 2 major killing diseases—cancer and coronary heart disease. Particular emphasis is placed on the development of a concerted approach to health improvement across Government, and involving the National Health Service, local authorities, voluntary and other bodies whose policies and actions impact on health.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 9 February 1999, Official Report, columns 173–74, on education expenditure, if he will list the figures for 1996–97 and 1998–99 in 1997–98 prices. [71475]

Mrs. Liddell: The following table shows the final outturn for 1996–97 and 1998–99 at 1997–98 prices. Final outturn figures for any year are generally higher than the budget estimates.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Local authority education spending

£000

Councils	(at 1997–98 prices) 1996–97 Final outturn	1998–99 Budget estimates
Aberdeen, City	89,341	85,849
Aberdeenshire	112,428	108,748
Angus	49,212	48,531
Argyll and Bute	50,745	47,781
Clackmannanshire	24,686	24,524
Dumfries and Galloway	69,220	68,752
Dundee	72,078	67,317
East Ayrshire	60,566	59,034
East Dunbartonshire	54,677	52,479
East Lothian	38,496	36,867
East Renfrewshire	43,711	42,963
Edinburgh, City	163,076	159,645
Eilean Siar	24,181	23,945
Falkirk	64,331	62,503
Fife	171,942	162,655
Glasgow City	297,819	280,488
Highland	116,861	112,712
Inverclyde	43,894	44,286
Midlothian	41,639	40,132
Moray	42,935	40,600
North Ayrshire	66,870	67,062
North Lanarkshire	165,163	160,818
Orkney	15,756	14,947
Perth and Kinross	57,593	57,221
Renfrewshire	84,710	82,385
Scottish Borders	49,522	46,425
Shetland	24,483	23,183
South Ayrshire	53,847	45,889
South Lanarkshire	149,232	137,007
Stirling	41,655	38,478
West Dunbartonshire	50,896	51,861
West Lothian	85,289	77,231
Scotland	2,476,854	2,372,320

Note:

All figures are net current expenditure excluding loan and leasing charges as returned by the individual local authorities to The Scottish Office, adjusted to 1997–98 prices using the GDP deflator.

Scottish Parliament (Income Tax)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 9 February 1999, Official Report, column 172, on income tax and the Scottish Parliament, if he will estimate for (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03 the extra money which would be paid into the Scottish Consolidated Fund from a decision to raise income tax by one penny by the Scottish Parliament (i) gross and (ii) net of deductions. [71476]

Mr. Dewar: It is currently estimated for 2000–01 that the yield from a decision to increase the basic rate of income tax by one penny for Scottish taxpayers is as follows:

£ million

Gross	Net[1]
180	175

[1] Net of income-related benefits: Working Families Tax Credit, Income Support, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Projections are not available for later years.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) by social services authority and (b) in total (i) the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1998–99, (ii) the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1999–2000, (iii) the difference between the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1998–99 and 1999–2000, (iv) that difference expressed as a percentage of the 1998–99 figure, (v) the special transitional grant for 1998–99, (vi) the difference between the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1999–2000 and the standard spending assessment for personal social services for 1998–99 combined with the special transitional grant for 1998–99, (vii) the difference between the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1999–2000 and the standard spending assessment for personal social services for 1998–99 added to the special transitional grant for 1998–99 and expressed as a percentage of the 1998–99 figure and (viii) the indicative level of specific and special grants for 1999–2000. [71318]

Mr. Galbraith: The Social Work Services Grant Aided Expenditure (GAE) allocations for authorities relating to items (i) and (iv) are set out in the table. There has been no direct equivalent to the Special Transitional Grant in Scotland. Specific Grants for training and mental illness totalling £22.2 million in 1999–2000 are included n the GAE figures shown.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Social Work GAE

£ million

	1998–1999	1999–2000	Change	Change Percentage
Aberdeen City	43.0	44.9	1.9	4.4
Aberdeenshire	36.8	37.8	1.1	2.9
Angus	22.9	23.7	0.8	3.5
Argyll & Bute	19.9	20.7	0.8	3.8
Clackmannanshire	9.0	10.0	1.0	11.3
Dumfries & Galloway	27.2	29.7	2.5	9.2
Dundee City	35.4	37.5	2.1	5.9
East Ayrshire	24.9	26.6	1.7	6.9
East Dunbartonshire	15.4	16.2	0.8	5.2
[illegible]t Lothian	16.8	18.3	1.5	8.8
East Renfrewshire	13.7	14.4	0.7	4.8
Edinburgh, City of	99.4	100.5	1.1	1.1
Eilean Siar	7.7	7.5	–0.2	–2.3
Falkirk	28.7	29.8	1.2	4.1
Fife	67.1	72.1	5.0	7.4
Glasgow City	174.2	179.1	4.8	2.8
Highland	37.9	40.2	2.3	6.1
Inverclyde	19.6	20.5	0.9	4.3
Midlothian	13.3	14.3	1.0	7.6
Moray	14.5	15.3	0.7	5.1
North Ayrshire	28.9	31.3	2.4	8.5
North Lanarkshire	63.0	67.9	4.9	7.8
Orkney Islands	3.5	3.7	0.2	4.6
Perth & Kinross	25.0	26.6	1.6	6.4
Renfrewshire	35.4	27.0	1.6	4.4
Scottish Borders	21.0	22.2	1.2	5.5
Shetland Islands	4.3	4.3	0.0	0.3
South Ayrshire	23.0	24.1	1.1	4.9
South Lanarkshire	55.9	58.6	2.7	4.9
Stirling	16.1	16.9	0.8	4.9
West Dunbartonshire	20.6	22.0	1.4	6.7
West Lothian	26.2	27.5	1.4	5.2
Scotland Total	1,050.2	1,101.0	[1]50.8	[1]4.8

[1] In addition £0.5 million (0.3 per cent.) is being transferred from local to central training

Salmon

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the procedures adopted in Norway to deal with infectious salmon anaemic outbreaks. [71439]

Mr. Macdonald: ISA has been present in Norway since the mid-1980s, and new outbreaks of the disease have persisted in recent years. The Norwegian authorities require fish to be withdrawn from sea cages when a specified level of mortality has been reached. In other respects their controls are similar to those applied in the UK, notably the requirement for infected farms to be fallowed for up to 6 months. The Secretary of State continues to believe that the eradication of the current outbreak of ISA in Scottish waters is a realistic and desirable objective, and current measures are directed to that end, in line with EU legislation. The Norwegian authorities have been very helpful in offering information and advice, and regular contact is being maintained.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Closed Circuit Television (Witnesses)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many cases at (a) the Sheriff Court and (b) the High Court closed circuit television equipment has been employed in the examination of vulnerable witnesses in each of the past seven years; and if he will make a statement. [70250]

Mr. McLeish: Figures shown in the table are for the use of closed circuit television equipment in the relatively small number of cases which proceeded following successful application. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

	High Court	Sheriff Court
1991[1,2]	0	0
1992[1]	8	1
1993[1,3]	5	2
1994	3	6
1995	1	4
1996	2	0
1997	5	0
1998	3	7

[1] Edinburgh and Glasgow only

[2] October to December

[3] January to May

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sheriff courts which are equipped with closed circuit television; and if he will make a statement. [70249]

Mr. McLeish: The sheriff courts which are equipped with closed circuit television are:

Aberdeen

Airdrie

Edinburgh

Falkirk

Glasgow

Greenock.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) of 9 February 1999, Official Report, column 170, on Scottish Enterprise, if he will ensure that a copy of the letter from the Chairman of Scottish Enterprise is placed in the Library. [71325]

Mr. Dewar: A copy of the letter from the Scottish Enterprise Chairman will be placed in the Library in due course. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount spent by Scottish Enterprise on graduate placement schemes in the most recent year for which figures are available. [71385]

Mr. Dewar: Expenditure on the delivery of graduate placement schemes is an operational matter for the Scottish Enterprise network. I have asked the Scottish Enterprise Chairman to write to the hon. Member. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the total cost to Public funds of the Metropolitan police in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [72144]

Mr. Straw: The Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District has estimated that net revenue expenditure for the Metropolitan police for 1999–2000 will be £1,880,068,000 and he intends to issue precepts which would result in a council tax for police purposes of £77.44 for a property in valuation Band D.

I have discussed this with representatives of local authorities in the Metropolitan police district.

I have informed the Receiver that I am content with the estimates and the proposed precept.

In Inner London, the Receiver's precepts cover also the Inner London Magistrates Courts Service and the Inner London Probation Service. His proposals would result in council taxes for these services of £6.40 and £8.78 respectively for a property in valuation Band D.

Compared with the current year, the proposed precepts would result in an increase in the Receiver's council tax of 5.2 per cent. in Inner London and 9.5 per cent. in the rest of the Metropolitan police district.

Asylum Seekers

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give further details about the operation of the asylum seeker support arrangements for which provision is made in Part VI of the Immigration and Asylum Bill. [72145]

Mr. Straw: On 17 February, I will place in the Library a draft Process Manual which describes the way the Home Office proposes to discharge its responsibilities for supporting asylum seekers, and what they may expect. The draft Manual will be revised and may be expanded as more detailed elements of the scheme are designed and settled. Once its policy is in final form, it will be sub-edited into clearer English.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the towns and cities where accommodation will be provided for asylum seekers under the terms of the Immigration and Asylum Bill; what estimate he has made of the cost of such accommodation; how many places will be made available; what kind of accommodation will be provided; what standards will be required; and if he will make a statement. [71670]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No towns or cities have been identified at this stage. Asylum seekers will be dispersed to cluster areas. No cluster areas have yet been designated, but the intention is that such areas would have available accommodation (without resorting to sink estates) and placements would take account of the value of linking to existing communities and the support of voluntary and community groups.

No estimate has been made of the cost of the accommodation alone. As a result of the comprehensive spending review provision of £350 million in 1999–2000, £300 million in 2000–01 and £250 million in 2001–02 was added to the Home Office baseline to cover the overall asylum support costs. The project team which has been set up to take forward the asylum support provisions in the Immigration and Asylum Bill are currently considering the development of cluster areas, the amount and type of accommodation which will be needed, and associated standards.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress in considering the cases of those applicants for political asylum who entered the country prior to July 1993 indicating how many cases had been (a) considered, (b) granted indefinite leave to remain and (c) personally interviewed; what checks are made on whether an applicant is a genuine refugee; and if he will make a statement. [71671]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information on the outcome of asylum applications made before 1 July 1993 was given in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith and Fulham (Mr. Coleman) on 1 February 1999, Official Report, column 422.

Where these cases are dealt with under the measures announced in July 1998 the substantive asylum claim is not considered. However, the cases of applicants who do not qualify to be considered under the backlog clearance measures, or who claim that they have been disadvantaged by the grant of indefinite leave rather than asylum, will be considered in the normal way against the criteria in the 1951 United Nations Convention.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department has made in considering the cases of those applicants for political asylum who made applications between 1 July 1993 and 31 December 1995. [71669]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: About 88,000[1] applications for asylum were made between 1 July 1993 and 31 December 1995. The status of those cases which had been decided at 31 December 1998 is set out in the table.

An estimated 20,000 cases remained undecided, but this estimate is likely to be reduced following a recent count of Immigration and Nationality Directorate's outstanding work.

[1] Excluding dependents.

	Percentage of total decisions[1]
Granted Asylum	6
Granted Exceptional Leave	13
Refused after full consideration	69
Refused on 3rd country grounds	4
Paragraph 340 refusal[2]	8

[1] Percentages are estimates rounded to the nearest whole number.

[2] Paragraph 340 of the Immigration Rules. For failure to provide evidence to support an asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to invitation to interview.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assumptions he has made as to when his proposed new system for supporting asylum seekers as set out in the Immigration and Asylum Bill will come into operation; how many staff will be recruited to operate the system and from where they will be drawn; what will the likely cost of the new system; what will be its budget; and if he will make a statement. [71726]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our current plans are that the new asylum support system will come into effect on 1 April 2000. But much depends on the progress of the Immigration and Asylum Bill through Parliament, the necessary planning arrangements, and the provision of support services.

The Home Office is currently considering the number of staff required in the Asylum Support Directorate, which will be the new body set up to administer the new asylum support arrangements.

Information on the source of those staff, likely costs and the budget is not known at this stage because it is to some extent dependent on Parliamentary progress.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct checks at (a) Heathrow and (b) Dover, to determine how many political asylum seekers are now arriving in Britain without documents; and if he will make a statement. [71727]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Comprehensive immigration checks are already in place at Heathrow and Dover. All arriving passengers are examined by an Immigration Officer and are required to hold valid travel documents including visas where necessary. In addition to normal immigration controls there are regular surveillance operations at Heathrow and Dover.

The Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 is also applied and financial charges under that Act are levied on carriers who bring inadequately documented passengers to the United Kingdom. Statistics on these passengers are recorded by the Immigration Service.

Immigration Service

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the impact of the refurbishment works at Lunar House on the operation of the Immigration Service. [71728]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 3 December 1998, Official Report, column 251.

Freedom of Information Bill

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of work on the draft Freedom of Information Bill. [70864]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 10 February 1999, Official Report, columns 257–59.

Parentline and Childline

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much (a) core and (b) project funding he is providing in the current financial year for (i) Parentline and (ii) Childline; and how much he is providing for Childline's work on bullying in schools. [70707]

Mr. Boateng: In the current financial year, the Home Office is providing £108,000 to Parentline to help them expand the service they provide into a national freephone helpline for parents. This is in addition to £25,000 from the Department of Health under their section 64 grants programme and £35,000 funding from the Department for Education and Employment to the National Stepfamilies Association for a joint project with Parentline.

The Home Office does not fund Childline.

Asylum and Immigration Appeals

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the (a) average, and (b) longest time taken by his Department to grant leave to enter or remain to a person whose asylum appeal had been allowed in 1998; and if applicants were entitled to (i) benefits and (ii) family reunion as a refugee pending the grant of such leave. [70718]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that information regarding the time between a final appeal outcome and a subsequent decision to grant leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

A person whose asylum appeal has been allowed is not entitled to benefits of family reunion until leave as a refugee has actually been granted. Once such leave has been granted benefits will be backdated to the date they ceased.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many decisions to deport made under section 3(5)(6) of the Immigration Act 1971 with a right of appeal not limited by section 5 of the Immigration Act 1998 have been (a) made, (b) withdrawn after an appeal against the decision was allowed and (c) withdrawn in other circumstances since the introduction of section 5 of the 1998 Act. [70728]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Section 5 of the Immigration Act 1988, as amended, places certain restrictions on the right of appeal where a decision is taken to make a deportation order against a person under section 3(5)(a) or section 3(5)(aa) of the Immigration Act 1971, or under section 3(5)(c) against a family member of such a person.

Information at the level of detail requested could be obtained only through the examination of individual records and is, therefore, available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many final decisions on asylum applications were taken by an officer of administrative officer grade in 1997 and 1998, broken down by (i) successful and (ii) unsuccessful applications. [70733]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the information on how many final decisions on asylum applications taken by an administrative officer grade in 1997 and 1998 could be obtained only by examination of individual case records and is, therefore, available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact which delays to the development of the new casework system are having on the processing of asylum claims and other services provided by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [70908]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate caseworking operation is at present being reorganised and new ways of working are being introduced as part of the business change and modernisation initiative. The disruption has caused a temporary reduction in service standards and in numbers of casework decisions.

Under the privately financed contract for the Casework Programme the financial risk of late delivery of elements of the Programme is carried by Siemens Business Services. There is no reason to believe the delay in delivery of the full casework information technology application will reduce casework decisions or service standards over the contract period.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were removed as illegal entrants in each year from 1993 to date. [70736]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is given in the table.

Removals and voluntary departures as a result of illegal entry action, 1993-First Half 1998[1]

	Number of persons
	Removed as illegal entrant	Departed voluntarily[2]
1993	3,410	380
1994	2,740	550
1995	2,570	590
1996	2,860	540
1997	3,690	820
1998[1]	1,990	420

[1] 1998 figures relate to the first half year, 1 January to 30 June.

[2] Persons departing 'voluntarily' after illegal entry action had been initiated against them.

Note:

All figures are rounded.

Leave to Remain Applications

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for further leave to remain have been (a) made in the prescribed form and (b) treated as invalid because they were not made in the prescribed form for each quarter since prescribed forms were introduced. [70729]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since 25 November 1996, it has been obligatory for persons wishing to make an application to vary the duration and/or conditions of their leave in the United Kingdom to use the application forms prescribed for this purpose. Statistical information on the total number of applications received was recorded from February 1997 onwards, but this did not record individual categories. Information on the total number of applications received and the number of applications deemed invalid is given in the table. It is not possible to provide a more detailed breakdown between the different types of application forms received.

	Valid applications	Invalid applications
1997
Q1	[1]8,639	[1]3,264
Q2	20,395	11,059
Q3	23,162	9,309
Q4	29,628	8,180
1998
Q1	27,115	6,822
Q2	26,858	5,711
Q3	27,563	4,625
Q4	22,904	3,754

[1] Counting during Quarter 1 did not begin until part way through the quarter

The figures recorded relate to postal applications only.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on granting family reunion to persons with exceptional leave to remain for less than four years in the United Kingdom where they are unable to maintain and accommodate family members. [70734]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: People with less than four years' exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom, whether or not they are able to satisfy the maintenance and accommodation requirements of the Immigration Rules, are not normally allowed to be joined by their pre-existing spouse or minor dependent children under the terms of the family reunion concession.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for leave to remain for an indefinite period on the grounds of marriage to a British or settled spouse from (a) women and (b) men were (i) granted and (ii) refused in (x) 1996, (y) 1997 and (z) 1998 to the latest convenient date; and of those refused, for each year, how many were refused because his Department was not satisfied (1) that the couple intended to stay together permanently as husband and wife, (2) that there was adequate accommodation available, (3) that there was adequate maintenance available and (4) other grounds; and of those refused for reason (1), in how many cases domestic violence was alleged. [70710]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table. Allegations of domestic violence are not separately recorded.

Grants and refusals of applications for indefinite leave to remain on the grounds of marriage 1996–98

	1996	1997	1998[1]
Women
Grants	17,570	16,160	18,300
Refusals:
No intention to live together	380	250	160
Other reasons	10	10	20
Men
Grants	11,900	10,700	12,900
Refusals:
No intention to live together	430	190	160
Other reasons	20	20	10

[1] Provisional

Pagers (Security Service)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what controls exist to regulate the interception by MI5 of signals from pagers. [71492]

Mr. Straw: In accordance with section 5(b) of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949, members of the Security Service may, in the course of their duty as Crown Servants, use wireless telegraphy apparatus to obtain information as to the contents, sender or addressee of any message sent by means of pager. They may do so only in the performance of the Service's functions as laid down in the Security Service Act 1989, and as with any other kind of information obtained by the Service, the disclosure of the product from such interception is regulated by the terms of that Act. In addition, the interception of such messages is subject to the mechanisms established by the Act for dealing with complaints.

Au Pairs

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to alter his Department's recommendation of £35 to £40 as a reasonable weekly allowance for au pairs working a maximum of 25 hours under rule 88 of the Immigration Rules. [71735]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: With effect from 1 April, overseas nationals living in the United Kingdom as au pairs will be subject to the National Minimum Wage provisions.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to encourage members of the Afro-Caribbean community to register to vote in elections. [70133]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government carry out an annual advertising campaign to encourage all electors to register, but particularly targeted at the young and members of ethnic minorities. The Home Office also has regular contact with Operation Black Vote. In addition, my Working Party on Electoral Procedures has been considering how to maximise registration, and will shortly be issuing guidance to electoral registration officers.

Human Rights Act 1998

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have for a public information campaign about the implications of the Human Rights Act 1998. [70134]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are considering this, alongside other priorities, and will announce our decision as soon as we can.

Visas (Teachers)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many working holidaymaker visas were issued to overseas teachers in the last three years for which figures are available; [71440]

(2) how many working holidaymaker visas are currently issued to overseas teachers; and how many of these are known to be staying in (a) London and (b) the rest of the United Kingdom. [71441]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the information requested is not available in the form requested.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many press releases have been issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71449]

Mr. Straw: The information for my Department and its agencies is as follows:

Year	Home Office	Prison Service	Forensic Science Service
1990	475	—
1991	452	—
1992	340	—
1993	319	56

Year	Home Office	Prison Service	Forensic Science Service
1994	314	68
1995	308	61
1996	404	57
1997	386	67	11
1998	524	73	17

[1] Figures include any press releases issued for the Passport Agency and Forensic Science Service (FSS) until April 1997. Thereafter, FSS figures are shown separately.

I shall ask the Chief Executives of the non-departmental bodies to write to the hon. Member shortly with information about any press releases they may have issued.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71464]

Mr. Straw: Rules governing the work of the Government Information and Communication Service are laid down in the Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the Library.

The primary costs of issuing press releases relate to their electronic distribution, which is carried out through the Central Office of Information, and postage. The estimated total of these costs is £36,124. No central record of other costs which may be involved (e.g. faxing, e-mail etc.) is available.

Asylum and Immigration (Prosecutions)

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been under section 8 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1995; and how many have resulted in convictions. [70735]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Section 8 of the 1996 Act came into force in January 1997. No prosecutions were brought in either that year or in 1998.

Our general approach towards the enforcement of this section remains as in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 27 October 1998, Official Report, column 119.

Marriages of Convenience

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the scale of abuse of the immigration system by those entering into marriages as a means of obtaining settlement in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [71654]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Precise figures to reflect the use of a sham marriage to obtain settlement in this country are not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. The perception of some agencies most involved in tackling this abuse is that it is considerable and widespread.

Appointments (Police Authorities)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police authority (a) the number of names submitted to him for appointment as independent members to serve from April 1999, (b) the number of existing police authority members included in those names, (c) the number of names returned by him to the police authority concerned and (d) the number of existing members of police authorities included in the list returned by him. [71191]

Mr. Boateng: The information is provided in the table for the 37 police authorities (established under section 3 of the Police Act 1996) to which I have returned names so far. I have added column (e) to show the number of independent member vacancies for each police authority.

Police authority	(a)	(b)	(c)	(d)	(e)
Avon and Somerset	12	2	6	1	3
Bedfordshire	20	2	10	2	5
Cambridgeshire	20	3	10	2	5
Cheshire	20	2	10	2	5
Cumbria	16	4	8	2	5
Derbyshire	11	2	5	1	3
Devon and Cornwall	20	2	10	2	5
Dorset	20	5	10	3	5
Durham	16	3	8	2	4
Dyfed-Powys	23	5	11	3	6
Essex	16	3	8	2	4
Gloucestershire	20	2	10	2	5
Greater Manchester	24	3	12	2	6
Gwent	20	4	10	3	5
Hampshire	12	3	6	2	3
Hertfordshire	20	4	10	2	5
Humberside	16	3	8	2	4
Kent	16	3	8	2	4
Lancashire	12	1	6	1	3
Leicestershire	20	2	10	2	5
Norfolk	20	5	10	3	5
Northamptonshire	19	4	9	4	5
Northumbria	20	3	10	2	5
North Wales	20	3	10	2	5
North Yorkshire	16	3	8	1	4
Nottinghamshire	16	3	8	2	4
South Wales	16	3	8	2	4
South Yorkshire	20	5	10	3	5
Staffordshire	20	3	10	3	5
Surrey	20	4	10	2	5
Sussex	16	3	8	2	4
Thames Valley	20	3	10	2	5
Warwickshire	10	1	5	1	4
West Mercia	20	5	10	3	5
West Midlands	16	3	8	2	4
West Yorkshire	20	5	10	3	5
Wiltshire	20	3	10	2	5

Homosexual Advance Defence

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the first report of the New South Wales Attorney General's Department's Homosexual Advance Defence Working Party; and if he will make a statement. [71084]

Mr. Boateng: The Final report of the Attorney General of New South Wales (Australia) Department's review of the Homosexual Advance Defence was issued in September 1998. The report concluded that it must be a standard of the law that claims of non-violent homosexual advances can neither excuse fatal violence nor mitigate any offence of violence. It makes a number of recommendations, including legislative reform to exclude a non-violent homosexual advance from forming the basis of the defence of provocation. It is not clear whether the Government of New South Wales have accepted this recommendation.

We have no current plans to review the law on provocation as it applies in England and Wales.

Immigration Applications

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average applicants (a) for leave to remain for a year on the grounds of marriage, (b) for indefinite leave to remain on grounds of marriage, (c) for indefinite leave to remain as a child of a parent or parents settled here, (d) for indefinite leave to remain as the parent of a child or children settled here, (e) for an extension of stay as a student, (f) for asylum when the person was recognised as a refugee, (g) for asylum when the person was granted exceptional leave to enter or remain, (h) for naturalisation as a British citizen on the grounds of residence, (j) for naturalisation as a British citizen on the grounds of marriage to a British citizen, (k) for registration of a minor as a British citizen, whose applications were decided at the end of (i) March 1997, (ii) June 1997, (iii) September 1997, (iv) December 1997, (v) March 1998, (vi) June 1998, (vii) September 1998 and (viii) December 1998 had waited since applying; and how long a person applying in January 1999 in each of these categories may expect to wait for a decision. [71414]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table. No target times have been set for the completion of applications in these categories made during January 1999.

Average length of time (in months) taken to decide applications

	Applications decided in quarter ending:
Application made for:	March 1997	June 1997	September 1997	December 1997	March 1998	June 1998	September 1998	December 1998
Leave to remain for a year on the grounds of marriage	9	9	8	8	10	10	8	5
Indefinite leave to remain on grounds of marriage	2	3	3	3	4	4	4	2
Indefinite leave to remain as a child of parent(s) settled here[1]	4	6	5	5	5	7	6	5
Indefinite leave to remain as the parent of child(ren) settled here[1]	4	4	4	5	5	5	7	5
Extension of stay as a student	4	4	3	3	3	3	4	2
Asylum when the person was recognised as a refugee (pre-1993 Act applications)[2]	56	58	61	62	66	69	79	81
Asylum when the person was recognised as a refugee (post-1993 Act applications)[2]	22	22	22	20	21	19	19	20
Asylum when the person was granted exceptional leave to enter or remain (pre-1993 Act applications)[2]	63	73	73	79	85	85	87	90
Asylum when the person was granted exceptional leave to enter or remain (post-1993 Act applications)[2]	12	15	14	14	13	15	13	15
Naturalisation as a British citizen on the grounds of residence	16	17	19	21	20	21	22	21
Naturalisation as a British citizen on the grounds of marriage to a British citizen	15	16	18	20	20	21	21	20
Registration of a minor as a British citizen	7	7	7	7	8	9	7	7

[1] Excluding decisions where indefinite leave to remain was refused

[2] ie The Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993

Asylum Detainees

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how many people detained under the Immigration Act powers he has (i) demanded and (ii) received the expenses of detention under (a) Schedule 2 paragraph 19(1) and (b) Schedule 2 paragraph 20(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 from the carrier, in each year since 1993 to the latest convenient date in 1998; and what is the annual total of moneys received. [70709]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Records show that for each of the financial years between 1 April 1993 and 31 March 1998, the Immigration Service demanded payment for:

7,219 people in 1993–94

5,226 people in 1994–95

10,868 people in 1995–96

15,182 people in 1996–97

19,126 people in 1997–98.

Payments were received for:

6,495 people in 1993–94

4,506 people in 1994–95

9,796 people in 1995–96

13,537 people in 1996–97

13,168 people in 1997–98.

The figures shown are for Schedule 2 paragraph 19(1) and 20(1) cases. A separate breakdown between these categories could be produced only at disproportionate cost. The monies received for each of the financial years shown is as follows:

£767,760 in 1993–94

£291,063 in 1994–95

£373,101 in 1995–96

£709,199 in 1996–97

£1,360,690 in 1997–98.

EU Nationals

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of each European Union country have been given temporary admission on arrival in the UK, in each year from 1993 to the latest date for which figures are available. [70745]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is available for the 12 largest ports, and is given in the table. The data relate to persons whose European Union nationality was initially in doubt but later found or assumed to be correct.

European Union Nationals given temporary admission

Year	Nationality	Number[1]
1993	France	1
	Greece	1
	United Kingdom	12
		14
1994	United Kingdom	8
1995	Italy	1
	Portugal	3
	United Kingdom	24
		28
1996	France	2
	Greece	1
	Italy	1
	Portugal	6
	United Kingdom	10
		20
1997	France	6
	Greece	1
	Italy	2
	Netherlands	1
	United Kingdom	2
		18
1998	France	1
	Italy	1
	Netherlands	1
	Portugal	2
	United Kingdom	13
		18

[1] Data relate to Heathrow (4 terminals), Gatwick (2), Manchester (2), Dover East, Harwich, Stansted, Waterloo.

Airside Transit Visas

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people of which nationalities required to hold an airside transit visa were (a) granted and (b) refused such visas in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 1998. [70737]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information by nationality is not centrally recorded. The available information, which is in the Library, is by region and relates to the British diplomatic post where the visa was applied for, which is not necessarily in the country of which the applicant is a national. Data for 1996 and 1997 are given in the table. No data are yet available for 1998.

Grants and refusals of applications for direct airside transit visas, by geographical region of place of application, 1996–97

	1996		1997
Region	Issued	Refused	Issued	Refused
Equatorial Africa	2,330	150	2,670	100
Southern Africa	70	100	90	[1]—
Near East/North Africa	40	[1]—	70	10
Middle East	4,950	40	7,120	100
Far East	1,930	20	800	20
South Asia	860	20	1,490	20
South East Asia	650	[2]—	220	[2]—
Australasia/South Pacific	10	[2]—	20	[2]—
Western Europe	3,230	10	3,570	20
Central Europe/FSU	380	[1]—	280	10
Southern Europe	2,040	20	2,980	10
North America	6,130	[1]—	9,380	10
West Indies and Atlantic	270	10	240	10
Latin America	310	[1]—	100	[1]—
Global Totals	23,200	280	29,000	300

[1] Negligible (i.e. five or fewer)

[2] Nil

Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 regarding conspiracy in this country to commit terrorist attacks abroad. [70750]

Mr. Straw: Section 5 of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998—Conspiracy to commit offences outside the United Kingdom came into effect on 4 September 1998. Information on prosecutions from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database will begin to become available in the Spring of this year.

Mounted Police

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those police forces which have mounted sections; how many horses there are in each case; and what plans he has to ensure that present numbers are maintained. [71042]

Mr. Boateng: Information on police mounted sections is not collected centrally. Under the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994, the allocation of resources within a force is decided locally by the chief constable. The decision whether to maintain a mounted section is an operational matter for the chief constable to decide.

Drugs Misuse Programme

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of his Department's budget has been allocated to implementing the Government's Drugs Misuse Programme. [70806]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1998–99, estimated expenditure on specific programmes to tackle the misuse of drugs represented about 0.65 per cent. of total central expenditure in the Home Office. Following the Comprehensive Spending Review settlement this figure will rise to over 1.5 per cent. in 1999–2000 with the allocation of an additional £34 million.

Mediation UK

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department received an application for funding from Mediation UK; what evaluation he has made of it; and what action he proposes to take. [70206]

Mr. Boateng: An application for funding by Mediation UK was received by the Home Office in September 1998 and was duly considered. It was concluded that, when compared with some 70 competing bids, a sufficient case had not been made for support. The Director of Mediation was informed of the decision last month. A number of right hon. and hon. Members have since made representations to the Home Office. These will be considered and taken into account. I have agreed to meet the Director of Mediation UK to discuss future funding.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 604, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71011]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that the systems in use by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate are millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [71091]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Immigration and Nationality Directorate information technology (IT) systems have been audited for millennium compliance. A programme of upgrade, replacing or decommissioning different systems is in progress and on course to ensure that all necessary IT support continues into the year 2000.

South Wales Police Force

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are employed by South Wales Police; and what the figure was in May 1997. [71296]

Mr. Boateng: Information on police numbers is collected at the end of March and September. The statistics for the period requested are set out in the table:

	Total officer strength
30 September 1998	2,946
30 September 1997	2,990
30 March 1997	2,976

The figures exclude officers seconded to National Crime Squad, or central services such as National Criminal Intelligence Service and National Police Training.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Petrol Taxation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the average retail price of petrol per litre in each country of the European Union, the tax element in these prices and the proportion of the final price accounted for by taxation in each case. [70762]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The information requested for unleaded petrol prices in mid-December 1998 is as follows:

	Average price (pence per litre)
	Total	Of which taxes	Percentage of tax
United Kingdom	63.9	53.5	83.7
Austria	54.7	38.2	69.9
Belgium	58.5	45.7	78.2
Denmark	56.3	43.0	76.4
Finland	61.0	50.3	82.5
France	62.7	52.1	83.1
Germany	55.4	42.8	77.3
Greece	41.1	28.3	68.8
Ireland	51.3	35.5	69.1
Italy	62.0	47.4	76.4
Luxembourg	42.6	28.9	67.9
Netherlands	64.3	49.9	77.6
Portugal	54.9	40.8	74.4
Spain	44.1	31.7	71.8
Sweden	58.5	44.7	76.4

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the representations which his Department has received objecting to the proposed Multilateral Agreement on Investment; and if he will make a statement. [71320]

Mr. Wilson: Negotiations on the Multilateral Agreement on Investment are no longer taking place. The Department received a number of representations during the course of the negotiations, which we took carefully into account.

Postal Charges

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations (a) his Department and (b) the Royal Mail undertook with the Periodical Publishers Association concerning changes to postal charges announced on 14 January; and what notice was given of the proposed changes. [71109]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department has had no consultations with the Periodical Publishers Association about the proposed postal tariff changes, which are primarily a matter for the Post Office in consultation with the Post Office Users National Council. I understand from the Post Office that they are in regular contact with major trade associations about long term strategy for postal services.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70471]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Information on the topic is published in "Civil Service Statistics 1998", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date he will publish detailed guidance on the National Minimum Wage Regulations. [71737]

Mr. Ian McCartney: A preliminary guidance booklet is already available and we have set up a telephone helpline to deal with specific inquiries. Definitive guidance on the National Minimum Wage will be published shortly.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in response to the consultation on the draft National Minimum Wage Regulations. [71738]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Department of Trade and Industry received some 300 written responses to the consultation exercise on the draft National Minimum Wage Regulations. In addition, officials from the Department also met representatives from a number of interested bodies, including the CBI, TUC, EEF, NFU, LGMB, UNISON, GMB, FRES and NESTOR.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the estimated date of commencement for the National Minimum Wage Regulations. [71736]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The National Minimum Wage Regulations were laid before Parliament today and take effect on 1 April.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what factors underlie the delay in laying before the House the National Minimum Wage Regulations. [71731]

Mr. Ian McCartney: There has been no delay.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when the drafting of the National Minimum Wage Regulations was completed; [71734]

(2) on what date he intends to lay the National Minimum Wage Regulations. [71733]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The drafting of the National Minimum Wage Regulations has been completed and the Regulations were laid before Parliament for approval today.

South Asia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the way in which the UK is advancing its policies on sustainable development through international trade with South Asia. [70998]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The Department of Trade and Industry, in conjunction with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department for International Development (DfID), consistently work together with the Governments of South Asia to promote sustainable development in the region through both international trade and overseas investment.

Trade liberalisation and increased international trade have also enabled developing countries such as those in South Asia to derive more benefit from access to overseas markets and from inward investment. This in turn increases prosperity and enables developing countries to raise their standards of environmental and social protection. We will continue to support actively this process both bilaterally and through international fora such as the WTO and EU where we work to enhance access for trade from South Asia.

The UK is a major trading and investment partner for the countries of South Asia. An area critical to sustainable development is that of infrastructure. In this regard the Department works closely with the private sector and other bodies, such as DfID, the Export Credits Guarantee Department and the Commonwealth Development Corporation, to maximise the UK's contribution to the development of South Asia.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons he was not able to provide a figure for expenditure on public opinion research in his answer to the hon. Member for Bath of 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 315; and for what reasons this did not apply to his answer to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) of 17 February 1998, Official Report, columns 567–69. [70669]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 February 1999]: Information on the cost of public opinion research is not separately identified. The list of surveys and cost given in the answer to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 17 February 1998, Official Report, columns 567–69, included all surveys which involved an element of public opinion gathering but it is not possible separately to identify the costs of that element.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70965]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Management of the web sites of my Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies, and Government Offices for the Regions is devolved to those with responsibility for particular areas. The costs associated with setting up and on-going operation of sites are not held or collected centrally and therefore the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The same is true both for future expenditure plans and for information on final costs versus initial budget estimates.

In terms of topics covered, the DTI site and associated sites now offer information on nearly every area of the Department's responsibilities and the central DTI site (those within the Web domain "www.dti.gov.uk") received an average of just over 3,000,000 hits per month over the last six months. Again, hits for all the sites for which my Department is responsible could be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 315, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71018]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Expenditure on direct mail and advertising incurred through the COI and not included in my previous answer was £26,000 and £1.14 million respectively.

Chief Executives of the Department's Executive Agencies have been asked to write to the hon. Member direct. Expenditure for non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 315, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71019]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Information on expenditure by task forces, review bodies and focus groups is not held centrally and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Expenditure from DTI's centrally-managed budgets for publications and all other forms of publicity, except advertising and direct mail, since May 1997 has been £6.59 million.

Privatised Research Establishments (Sale)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what restrictions apply to the sale of privatised research establishments to new owners. [69663]

Mr. Battle: Because research establishments provide a wide range of outputs and services, Government considered the details of each potential sale on a case by case basis. Restrictions relating to the re-sale of privatised researched establishments will depend on the original terms of sale of each privatised research establishment.

St. Kilda

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment has been made of the potential impact on the natural environment around St. Kilda following the decision to grant a licence for oil exploration. [70990]

Mr. Battle: The advice of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee (JNCC, the Government's statutory advisers on environmental matters) was fully taken into consideration in the decision about which blocks should be offered for licence in the 17th Round of offshore petroleum licensing. In the light of the JNCC's advice, no blocks were offered for licence within 25 miles of St. Kilda. In the event, the nearest block for which a licence was awarded is 45 miles from the island.

Any deep drillings, as well as developments for the commercial extraction of oil or gas and the construction of pipelines, are also subject to project-specific consent under the Offshore Petroleum Production and Pipe-lines (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1998. These implement the Environmental Impact Assessment Directive (85/337/EEC) across the whole of the UK Continental Shelf. They require that before making any decision about the granting of consent for specific petroleum projects, the Secretary of State must consider the likely environmental impact of those projects. Under the Regulations, the JNCC and the relevant fisheries departments are consulted about all applications for consent and where they recommend that a full environmental statement be required, that statement must be made available to the public for their comments and the Secretary of State must take into consideration any comments when making his decision about consent for the relevant project.

Companies carrying out seismic surveys on the UK Continental Shelf are required to follow guidelines produced by the JNCC to reduce the possible impact of noise during surveys. Reports of cetaceans sighted during these surveys are published by the JNCC annually.

Assisted Area Status (Ystradgynlais)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will designate the Ystradgynlais area in Powys as having assisted area status under derogation 92/3c. [71323]

Mr. Wills: No decisions have been taken on the review, but careful consideration will be given to the needs of all areas.

Business Excellence Model

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on Government policy on the use of the Business Excellence Model in SMEs. [70150]

Mr. Wills: The Government are supporting the use of the Business Excellence Model as a framework for businesses to adopt a systematic approach to business improvement. DTI is a founder member of the British Quality Foundation, which is responsible for developing and disseminating the model in the UK. DTI best practice materials have been developed around this model and also promote its use. Furthermore, the Department is encouraging Business Links to use the Business Excellence Model in their work with SMEs and it will also form part of the recently announced CBI/DTI "Fit for the Future" campaign.

Unsolicited Faxes

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects details to be announced of the scheme to enable corporate subscribers to opt out of receiving unsolicited direct marketing faxes. [71068]

Mr. Wills: Under the Telecommunications (Data Protection and Privacy) (Direct Marketing) Regulations 1998, the Office of Telecommunications (OFTEL) is responsible for establishing a scheme to enable corporate subscribers to opt out from receiving unsolicited direct marketing faxes. The Director General of Telecommunications has issued invitations to tender to run the scheme, and expects to award a contract at the end of March. The successful tenderer will announce details of the scheme shortly thereafter.

Unsolicited Telephone Calls

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to regulate unsolicited direct marketing telephone calls to private individuals. [71069]

Mr. Wills: The Government have addressed this issue in the Telecommunications (Data Protection and Privacy) (Direct Marketing) Regulations 1998, which come into force on 1 May. The Regulations establish an "opt-out" scheme for individual subscribers (private individuals and sole traders in the UK, as well as partnerships in England, Wales and Northern Ireland) who do not wish to receive unsolicited direct marketing calls. The Office of Telecommunications (OFTEL) is responsible for establishing the opt-out scheme. The Director General of Telecommunications has issued invitations to tender to run the scheme, and expects to award a contract at the end of March.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70036]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathon Crowe as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the Government in their important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom departments are expected to use for the rest of the government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their Departmental legal advisers, for example where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

On 1 September 1995 the DSS established framework agreements for the supply of legal services with three firms of solicitors—Bird & Bird, Dibb Lupton & Allsop, and Wansboroughs Willey Hargrave. Under that framework agreement the DSS HQ and its Agencies have used those firms for major information technology contracts, some of which are continuing. However specifying sums of money paid to them would involve disproportionate costs.

The framework agreements have recently been re-let, the successful solicitors being Bird & Bird, Dibb Lupton & Allsop, Simmonds & Simmonds and Eversheds.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69979]

(2) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69959]

(3) which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement; [69830]

(4) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner; [69910]

(5) which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69944]

Mr. Timms: This Department sponsors two executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs). The information for these bodies is set out in the table.

	DSS executive NDPBs
	Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority		Pensions Compensation Board (PCB)
	Voluntary	Statutory requirement	Voluntary	Statutory requirement
Have a statutory base?		Yes		Yes
Admit members of public to all board or committee meetings?	Not practicable		Not practicable
Hold public meetings?	No	—	No	—
Have lay or consumer representatives on their boards?	—	—	—	—
Operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure?	Yes	—	—	Yes
Subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner?	—	Yes	—	Yes

DSS executive NDPBs

	Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority Voluntary	Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority Statutory requirement	Pensions Compensation Board (PCB) Voluntary	Pensions Compensation Board (PCB) Statutory requirement
Publish minutes of meetings?	No	—	No	—
Publish agendas and documents for those meetings?	No	—	No	—
Publish a register of members' interests?	Yes	—	Yes	—

PCB meets when there is a claim for compensation and will potentially be considering commercially confidential information. The Board may hold oral hearings to gather information and these could be held publicly if parties agree.

The OPRA and PCB Boards are made up of representatives nominated, according to the requirement of the legislation governing the bodies, from various parts of the pensions industry, and organisations such as the TUC and CBI. However, the Board members do not serve in any type of representative capacity, and in discharging their functions each Board member is required to set aside any vested interests.

OPRA's three-stage complaints procedure is explained in their leaflet 'Putting things right—a guide to how we handle complaints'. Complaints which are not resolved either by a complaints officer (stage 1) or the chairman (stage 2) are referred to an independent complaints adjudicator.

PCB's complaints procedure is explained in 'The Pensions Compensation Board (Determinations and Review Procedures) Regulations 1997'.

Both the OPRA and PCB Boards have agreed codes of conduct based on the model code issued by Cabinet Office. A Register of Board members' interests is held and updated on a regular basis. Copies of the register are available from the Secretary of each Board.

This Department sponsors five advisor NDPBs. The information for these bodies is in the table.

DSS Advisory NDPBs

	Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions (CACWP)	Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board (DLAAB)	Industrial Injuries Advisory Council (IIAC)	Social Security Advisory Committee (SSAC)	War Pensions Committees (WPC)
Admit members of public to all board or committee meetings?	No	No	No	No	No
Hold Public meetings?	No	No	No	No	No
Have lay or consumer representatives on their Boards?	Yes	Yes		—	Yes
Publish minutes of meetings?	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes
Publish agendas and documents for those meetings?	Yes	No	No	No	Yes
Publish a register of members' interests?	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes

DLAAB meets representatives from groups involved in working with and for people with disabilities. Through this contact the Board is able to gain a different perspective of the needs of people affected by various conditions and take into account their concerns.

These activities are undertaken by a statutory requirement, all other activities are undertaken on a voluntarily basis.

The legislation which governs CACWP and the WPCs requires there to be representatives of ex-service organisations or persons with ex-service experience.

The legislation which governs DLAAB requires there to be at least one member with personal experience of caring for disabled person, and six or more who are disabled persons.

The legislation that governs IIAC requires that the members other than the chairman shall include an equal number of persons appointed by the Secretary of State, after consultation with such organisations as he thinks fit, to represent employers and employed earners respectively.

The legislation that governs SSAC requires that one member must be appointed after consultation with organisations representative of workers, one after consultation with organisations representative of employers, one after consultation with the head of DHSS Northern Ireland, and one member must have experience of work among chronically sick and disabled people and should preferably but not necessarily be a chronically sick or disabled person. However, these members do not act in a representative capacity.

Both the minutes and the agenda/associated papers of CACWP meetings are publicly available. They are circulated to a wider audience than just Committee members, i.e., all War Pensions Committees and certain ex-service organisations not represented on CACWP. Copies are also available to others on request.

A summary of meetings will be made available on IIAC's website.

Both the minutes and agenda/associated papers of WPC meetings are available on request.

Each Board have agreed a code of conduct, and compiled a register of Board members' interests that is available for public inspection.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the additional costs which would be incurred by including in his package of measures to tackle pensioner poverty the annual uprating of the Minimum Income Guarantee in line with average earnings in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02. [71481]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The additional costs of uprating the Minimum Income Guarantee in line with average earnings is estimated to be £260 million in 2000–01 and £560 million in 2001–02.

Notes:

1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest £10 million.
2. The figures are based on forecasts of pensioners in receipt of Income Support consistent with estimates provided for the Comprehensive Spending Review settlement.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings he estimates will be achieved in the social security budget for 1999–2000 as a result of the introduction of the national minimum wage within (a) the northern region and (b) the city of Sunderland. [70369]

Mr. Darling: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Estimates of the effect on DSS benefit expenditure of the introduction of the national minimum wage

£ million (1999/2000)

Benefit	Savings
Income Support	10
Jobseeker's Allowance (income-based)	10
Housing Benefit	110
Family Credit/Working Families Tax Credit	185
Council Tax Benefit	25
Total	340

Notes:

1. Savings figures are calculated by raising the earnings of current benefit recipients to the level of the National Minimum Wage. No other factors are taken into account.

2. Estimates are based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey, imposing the 1999–2000 tax and benefit structure, assuming 1998–99 levels of caseloads, prices, benefit rates and earnings. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Pensioners (Income Support)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many pensioners would receive income support in each of the next five years assuming (a) that the April 1998 level of income support was indexed to prices and (b) that the Government implement their proposed minimum income guarantee for pensioners. [70596]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Thousand

	Estimated number of pensioner units receiving income support assuming:
	(a) Price indexation of income support	(b) Implementation of MIG
1999–2000	1,495	1,[illegible]60
2000–01	1,608	1,673
2001–02	1,722	1,787

Notes:

1. Pensioner benefit unit means a single person aged 60 or over, or a couple where one member is aged 60 or over.

2. Figures are not available for years beyond 2001–02. The figures are estimates of the average number of cases in each financial year. Figures are rounded to the nearest 1,000.

3. Figures given for part (b) are consistent with those published in the November 1998 pre-budget report.

4. The figures exclude pensioners in residential care and nursing homes.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 January 1999, Official Report column 222, what assumptions about post-retirement indexation of (i) the basic state pension, (ii) the state second pension and (iii) the minimum income guarantee underlie his estimates of the numbers of pensioners on income support. [70803]

Mr. Timms: The estimates provided assume that the basic State Pension and State Second Pension are indexed in line with prices when in payment, and that the Minimum Income Guarantee is indexed in line with the growth in average earnings (assumed to be 1.5 per cent. per year above the growth in prices).

The actual level of indexing of the Minimum Income Guarantee in future years will depend on the prevailing economic conditions. We have stated that our long-term objective is to increase the Minimum Income Guarantee in line with average earnings, as resources allow, so that even the least well off pensioners can share in rising national prosperity.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Asset Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70409]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 11 February 1999]: The National Asset Register published in November 1997 showed the assets held by the Department, its agencies and associated public bodies to be 195 freehold properties, 54 historic leasehold properties, 59,500 personal computers, 24,400 printers and 2,853 vehicles.

In the period to the end of January 1999 the Department sold a relatively small percentage of its personal computers and printers. 746 vehicles were sold realising £2,223,458.

The Department's freehold and historic leasehold properties were transferred to the private sector as part of two Private Finance Initiative deals. On 8 January 1998 the Department transferred the six properties in the Newcastle Estate (Newcastle Longbenton, Gosforth Broadway West, Newcastle Ponteland Road, Washington Emerson House, Newcastle Tyneview Park and Washington Durham House) to the Newcastle Estate Partnership. The Department did not receive a cash sum but will be charged rentals at a reduced rate for the period of the contract. On 1 April 1998 the remainder of the Department's estate was transferred as part of the Private Sector Resource Initiative for Management of the Estate (PRIME). The Department received cash consideration of £250 million. The National Audit Office have performed Value For Money studies on both of the contracts. The reports are due to be published later this year.

The estimated total cash raised from such sales to date is £252,223,458.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70783]

Mr. Timms: I refer the right hon. Member to the Written Answer from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 569.

Single Gateway

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional resources will be made available to fund interviews taking place under the Single Gateway system proposed in the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill. [71189]

Angela Eagle: The Single Work-Focused Gateway will be piloted in 12 areas, commencing in June 1999. A total of £79.5 million in additional resources has been allocated, from the Invest to Save Budget, to fund these pilot exercises. An important reason for piloting the Single Work-Focused Gateway is to measure the costs in order to inform decisions about national implementation.

Bereavement Benefits

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if widowers who become eligible for widowed parent's allowance or bereavement allowance will have payments based upon their own, or their spouse's national insurance contribution record; and if he will estimate the annual costs of making benefit payments based on the best of either their own or their spouse's record. [71415]

Angela Eagle: In line with the contribution conditions currently applied to Widows' Benefits, entitlement to bereavement benefits for widowers will be calculated on the National Insurance contribution record of the spouse.

Information on annual costs of calculating entitlement based on the best of either the widowers own or their spouses contribution record is not available. However, if entitlement to bereavement benefits were based on widowers own contribution record, the estimated extra benefit cost would be of the order of £40 million a year in the first three years of the scheme (there would also be additional administrative costs).

Notes:

1. Estimates are presented net of income-related benefit offsets, in line with those in the consultation document "A new contract for Welfare: Support in Bereavement".

2. Income-related benefit offsets were estimated using the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey and the Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiries.

3. The underlying contributory benefit effects have been provided by the Government Actuaries Department.

4. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £10 million and provide broad orders of magnitude.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will break down the estimated savings to be made on changes to incapacity benefit into those from (a) the clawback on occupational payments and (b) the introduction of new contributory rules. [71417]

Mr. Bayley: The proposed modernisation of Incapacity Benefit for new claimants, with reformed contribution conditions and taking into account 50 per cent. of amounts of occupational and personal pensions over £50 a week, will reduce benefit expenditure. It is estimated that it will be reduced by £70 million in the first year (£45 million due to occupational pensions and £25 million to contribution conditions), £255 million in the third year (£190 million due to occupational pensions and £60 million to contribution conditions) and £700 million per year after 10 years (£550 million due to occupational pensions and £150 million to contribution conditions).

Notes:

1. Figures may not sum due to rounding.

2. Savings from taking account of occupational and personal pensions allow for overlap with savings from reformed contribution conditions.

3. 10 year figures are rounded to the nearest 50 million which reflects the greater degree of uncertainty in the longer term.

Single Parents (Income Support)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers of single parents claiming income support since 1994, broken down into those claimants who are (a) single, (b) widowed, (c) separated and (d) divorced; and if he will also list the number of children of single parents in each of these categories. [71416]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available as details on the marital status of Income Support claimants is not collected.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many press releases have been issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71454]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

The number of press releases issued by the department and its agencies from 1990 to 1998

Year	HQ	Benefits Agency	Contributions Agency	Child Support Agency
1991	198	7
1992	219	21	2
1993	229	25	26	18
1994	211	29	26	1
1995	180	29	20	2
1996	294	34	21	1
1997	291	60	50	10
1998	311	42	28	4

Notes:

1. During the year 1990 the Department was part of the Department of Health and Social Security. Figures are not available for that year.

2. Prior to 1992 the Department's HQ Press office distributed press releases concerning information on National Insurance Contributions.

3. Press Releases for the War Pensions Agency and Information Technology Services Agency are included in the figures given for Headquarters.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71469]

Mr. Timms: Rules governing the work of the Government Information and Communications Service are laid down in the Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the Libraries of the House.

The total cost of press releases issued since May 1997 is as follows.

Copies of Headquarters Press Notices are distributed to the media electronically on our behalf by the Central Office of Information (COI). From May 1997 to December 1998 the total cost of distribution via the COI was £36,693.

Benefits Agency total cost £6,595.

Contributions Agency total cost £4,810.

Child Support Agency total cost £1,866.56.

The costs of press releases issued by the War Pensions Agency and Information Technology Service Agency are included in the total for Headquarters.

Pensions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate (a) the proportion of the working age population and (b) the number of people of working age, with (i) an occupational pension and (ii) a personal pension; and if he will give the same estimates for each year from 1992; [71651]

(2) if he will estimate (a) the proportion of the working population and (b) the number of people of working age who have (i) an occupational pension and (ii) a personal pension and who are only paying in levels of contributions equal to or lower than their National Insurance rebates. [71653]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out here.

There are about 35 million people of working age in Great Britain. About 10.5 million (30 per cent.) of these people are members of an occupational pension scheme. It is not known how many of these only pay contributions equal to or lower than their National Insurance rebates.

There were about 5.6 million holders of appropriate personal pensions (APPs) at the end of September 1997. Of these about 3 million pay no further contributions into their APP in addition to the National Insurance rebate. However some holders of these plans may also make payments into other personal pension plans.

In total there are about 10 million personal pension plans held at present, although some plan holders will have more than one plan. Information on the amounts paid into these plans is not available.

Information on the numbers of people with occupational and personal pensions are not available for each year since 1992.

Customer Satisfaction Surveys

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what surveys of customer satisfaction have been carried out by (a) the Benefits Agency, (b) the Employment Service and (c) the Child Support Agency since 1992; and if he will place copies in the Library. [71652]

Angela Eagle: The Benefits Agency carried out national customer satisfaction surveys in 1992, 1993, 1994 and 1995. The Child Support Agency carried out national customer satisfaction surveys in 1992, 1993, 1994 and 1995. The Employment Service carried out surveys of the satisfaction of Jobcentre users in 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995 and 1997.

Copies of all surveys have been placed in the Library.

Since 1995 this Department has conducted further research and surveys on customers' views of service delivery. These concentrate on aspects of service where information is limited—for example, because there have been changes to service or where potential issues, or areas for improvement, have been identified. Research is also conducted to monitor Charter standards.

Disabled Claimants

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure the provision of (a) suitable training for interviewers to handle sensitive the special requirements of the physically and mentally disabled, (b) measures to ensure full disabled access to all buildings in which claimants will be interviewed and (c) a sufficiently flexible time limit requirement for attending interviews to meet the needs of claimants with particular disabilities before the implementation of his welfare reform proposals relating to the disabled. [71583]

Mr. Bayley: We will ensure that advisers are equipped with sufficient skills and knowledge to deal effectively and sensitively with people who are physically or mentally disabled. This will include identifying where more specialist help and support is necessary and making arrangements to enlist that support on behalf of the individuals concerned.

We are committed to ensuring that disabled people have unrestricted access to services and sites. Accordingly, we will ensure that the Single Work-Focused Gateway will be delivered from sites offering full access. We will also ensure that disabled people are given sufficient time to make arrangements to attend an interview; are given sufficient opportunities to attend; have access to specialist communicators where necessary and have the opportunity for the interview to take place in their home where necessary.

Lone Parents (Single Gateway)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on the interview and single gateway for lone parent families; and if he will make a statement. [71711]

Angela Eagle: Officials from this Department have met with representatives of national organisations representing lone parent families. They have expressed general support for the principles which underpin the Single Work-Focused Gateway and officials are currently working to ensure that any concerns expressed by the organisations are recognised in the ongoing development of the gateway.

Disabled People (Single Gateway)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on the interview and single gateway for disabled people; and if he will make a statement. [71712]

Angela Eagle: Following publication of "A New Contract for Welfare: The Gateway to Work" (Cm 4102), this Department has received a total of 342 responses, 150 of which made representations on the Single Work-Focused Gateway in relation to disabled people. In addition, officials from the Department have met with representatives of national organisations representing disabled people. They have expressed general support for the principles which underpin the Single Work-Focused Gateway and officials are currently working to ensure that any concerns expressed by the organisations are recognised in the ongoing development of the gateway.

Lone Parents (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average number of hours that lone parents in receipt of income related benefits work per week in Portsmouth. [69852]

Angela Eagle: The administration of income related benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 15 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what the average number of hours is that lone parents in receipt of income related benefits work per week in Portsmouth.

The information requested is only partially available. The main income related benefits for working families are Family Credit (FamC) and Disability Working Allowance (DWA). Details are available from a 5 per cent. sample of claims in payment for FamC and a 100 per cent. scan of the DWA claims in payment. The latest information available is for August 1998 and shows that the average number of hours worked are 24 for FamC and 25 for DWA.

There are other income related benefits which families may receive, notably Income Support, Housing Benefit, and Council Tax Benefit. Unfortunately details of the number of hours worked cannot be obtained.

I am also able to inform you that the scan of FamC and DWA cases indicated that there were approximately 1,400 lone parents receiving FamC (rounded to the nearest 100) and 29 receiving DWA in the Portsmouth Local Authority District.

I hope that you find the above information useful.

Family Credit (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) for how many hours on average the main earners in couples receiving family credit work per week in Portsmouth; [69682]

(2) how many families receive the maximum family credit benefits in Portsmouth. [70275]

Angela Eagle: The administration of Family Credit is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 15 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking, how many hours the main earners in couples receiving Family Credit work per week, and how many families receive the maximum family credit benefits, in Portsmouth.

The information is not available in the format requested. Family Credit is a national benefit and is administered centrally by the Family Credit Unit and statistics are produced on a national basis.

However, a periodic scan of the computer System is conducted which obtains details from a 5% sample of the claims in payment. As at August 1998, this indicated that the main earners, in couples receiving Family Credit, worked on average 31.3 hours per week, and that there were 1,100 families (rounded to the nearest 100) in receipt of the maximum amount of Family Credit, in the Portsmouth Local Authority District.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Tobacco and Alcohol Smuggling

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disability claimants have had their benefits withdrawn by the Benefits Agency because they have been found to be smuggling or bootlegging tobacco and alcohol, and how much money was saved in 1997–98. [70014]

Mr. Timms: The administration of benefits is the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Jacqui Lait, dated 15 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many disability benefits claimants have had their benefits withdrawn by the Benefits Agency (BA) because they have been found to be smuggling or bootlegging tobacco and alcohol, and how much money was saved in 1997–98.

The information is not available in the format requested because it is not possible to identify how many claimants of any particular benefit have had their benefit or benefits stopped or withdrawn specifically because of bootlegging or smuggling activities, and how much money was saved in such cases.

However I can tell you that we have specific activity going on in the Channel area. David Riggs wrote to you on my behalf on 25 March 1998, following an earlier Parliamentary Question you tabled, and let you know about the BA Ports project. The Ports Project achieved savings of £1.24m in the year 1997/98 and its success led to our decision in April 1998 to create a separate unit to carry on with the work. In the current year to date, this team known as Port Fraud Investigation Team, has achieved savings of £1.49m.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Working Parents

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the extra child care provisions put in place since the launch of the plan for Parents at Work by the Benefits Agency in May 1998. [70171]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. I will ask him to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Audrey Wise, dated 15 February 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if I will list the extra childcare provisions put in place since the launch of the plan for Parents at Work by the Benefits Agency (BA) in May 1998.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to give you an update on progress with our Nine Point Plan for Parents at Work. It may be helpful if I briefly outline the actions we have taken so far.

Our main objective has been to set up a comprehensive network of Childcare Champion posts that have now been filled, with the last Champion taking up post in December last year. We know from the major review of childcare provision which we undertook in the BA in 1997 that there is a significant demand from staff for childcare but not enough holiday playschemes in operation.

The first task of the Childcare Champions is to establish the areas of greatest need for playschemes. Approximately thirty possible schemes have already been identified and we expect ten of these to be up and running by Summer 1999. East new scheme will receive initial funding of up to £3000. We aim to have a further forty schemes established by March 2001. The Childcare Champions will also consider whether any of the holiday playschemes can be extended to provide after-school clubs but we expect the scope for this to be fairly limited.

Participation on management committees for the Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships has been secured by some of the Childcare Champions. This will help the Agency play an active part in local childcare planning alongside Local Education Authorities and Training Enterprise Councils etc. We will also be looking to encourage other employers from the public, private and voluntary sector, to join us in partnership with the aim of improving childcare provision for all working parents in the community.

As you will be aware, the Nine Point Plan also highlighted areas for improvement of the BA's Family Friendly policies. There has been considerable progress in this area with provision made to allow staff paid leave to sit on local Out of School Development Committees. A "Family Friendly" booklet has been produced and distributed to staff setting out the range of family friendly and childcare policies available.

To ensure that managers and staff fully understand the real business benefits of effective family friendly policies, a further booklet "The Business Benefits of Family Friendly Policies" with examples of good practice for all line managers has also been produced and distributed. Also an article entitled "Parents at Work" has been published in the Agencies "BA Newsletter" and seminars have been held country wide to launch the initiative positively and gain the understanding and support of managers at all levels.

The Agency already has family friendly policies, providing 325 nursery and 1,350 holiday playscheme places for staff, which compares favourably with external organisations. Our commitment to full implementation of our Nine Point Plan will go even further towards helping all our staff balance more effectively their work and family lives.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Miss H. McNulty

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what contact was made with Walsall Social Services before Miss H. McNulty, of Walsall, reference JP/4L/JKM was refused a Social Fund payment for a mobility scooter; and if he will make a statement; [70445]

(2) for what reasons Miss H. McNulty, reference JP/4L/KJM in Walsall was refused a social fund payment for a mobility scooter; [70447]

(3) if Miss H. McNulty, of Walsall, reference JP/4L/JKM was seen by officials prior to a decision being made that she should not receive a Social Fund payment for a mobility scooter; [70444]

(4) what circumstances were taken into account when deciding that a Social Fund payment for a mobility scooter should be refused in the case of Miss H. McNulty, of Walsall, reference JP/4L/KJM; [70446]

(5) if he will ensure that the local Benefits Agency office in Walsall reconsiders the application by Miss McNulty; and if he will make a statement. [70768]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Social Fund is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Winnick, dated 15 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the Benefits Agency (BA) refusal of a Social Fund payment to Miss H McNulty, in particular whether contact was made with Walsall Social Services before a decision was made; for what reasons a payment was refused; if Miss McNulty was seen by officials prior to the decision, what circumstances were taken fully into account; whether the local office intends to send an official to see Miss McNulty; and if the local office in Walsall will reconsider the application.

Neither the Social Fund Officer, Social Fund Review Officer or Social Fund Inspector made any contact with Walsall Social Services prior to making their respective decisions to refuse a Social Fund payment to Miss McNulty for a mobility scooter. It is not the practice of the BA to approach Social Services without the express permission of the customer. The application form which Miss McNulty completed asked if there was anyone she would like contacted in connection with the application, but the offer was declined.

Miss McNulty was refused a Community Care Grant for a mobility scooter on the grounds of insufficient priority. Although the eligibility and qualification criteria for a Community Care Grant [Social Fund directions 25 and 4 (a) (ii)] were met, the demands on the district grants budget are such that only high priority grant applications can be met. The Social Fund Officer, Social Fund Review Officer, and Social Fund Inspector decided that Miss McNulty's need for a mobility scooter was not of high priority in her circumstances.

The eligibility and qualification criteria for a Budgeting Loan [Social Fund directions 8 and 2] were also met. Again, the demands on the district loans budget are such that only high priority loan applications can be met. The Social Fund Officer, Social Fund Review Officer, and Social Fund Inspector decided that Miss McNulty's need for a mobility scooter was not of high priority in her circumstances, so a Budgeting Loan was refused.

A Crisis Loan was refused because the Secretary of State has excluded mobility needs from consideration for a Crisis Loan [Social Fund direction 23].

The mobility scooter was not considered to be a medical item as it does not treat, cure, alleviate, prevent, or diagnose a medical condition. [Medical items are excluded by the Secretary of State from Social Fund payments]

Miss McNulty was not seen by officials of the Benefits Agency or Social Fund Inspectorate prior to the decision to refuse her a Social Fund payment. However she received copies of all papers relating to her application and replied to these papers with her own comments.

There is no provision in the Social Fund scheme for the local office to reconsider the application after it has been subject of a decision by a Social Fund Inspector, therefore there is currently no intent to visit Miss McNulty in connection with the application in question.

I empathise with the difficulties faced by many of our customers, particularly our vulnerable and disabled customers such as Miss McNulty. I am satisfied that my staff have given full consideration of the facts but accept a home visit could have been carried out.

There are two possible ways forward: Miss McNulty could either make another application for a payment from the Social Fund for a mobility scooter, but an immediate repeat application would be excluded by Direction 7 (if this was made within 26 weeks of her former application); or she could apply for a judicial review of the first decision if she thinks that there was an error in law in the processing of the application.

I am sorry I could not be of more help on this occasion.

WALES

Task Forces

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the (a) task forces, (b) review panels and (c) advisory groups within his Department; and if he will state, in respect of each, (i) the remit, (ii) the membership, (iii) details of members' principal employment and (iv) the level of members' remuneration. [70042]

Mr. Michael: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Environmental Enhancement Works

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans the Welsh Development Agency has for environmental enhancement works for (a) the urban corridors from Queensferry to Connahs Quay, Deeside and (b) Buckley, Flintshire; and if he will make a statement. [70917]

Mr. Hain: This is an operational matter for the Welsh Development Agency and I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend directly. I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70778]

Mr. Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office, on 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 569.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71281]

Mr. Michael: Welsh Office expenditure on programmes targeted at supporting people with learning disabilities, physical and sensory disabilities and mental health problems totalled £46.6 million in 1998–99. Other expenditure related to people with disabilities is incurred in other programmes and by the Department as an employer but this is a normal and integral aspect of business which is not separately identified. For this reason the full proportion of departmental spending on people with disabilities cannot be identified.

Homelessness

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons are currently registered homeless in Wales; and how many were so registered for the quarter ending June 1997. [71297]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information is not collected centrally on the number of individual people estimated to be homeless. Information on homeless households is shown in the following table.

Homeless households: Wales

	April-June 1997	July-September 1998
Unintentionally homeless and in priority need	1,137	1,208
Intentionally homeless and in priority need	87	81
Homeless but not in priority need	1,020	95

Excludes households not eligible for assistance under the Housing Act 1996

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

A4042

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he held regarding the bridging of A4042 during his recent visit to Croesyceiliog. [71164]

Mr. Hain: The visit was arranged by my hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth (Mr. Edwards) and I have since had discussions with Welsh Office officials.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Aggregate External Finance

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is estimated amount of aggregate external finance excluding specific grants for local government in 1999–2000; and how this figure compares with each year since 1992. [71650]

Mr. Michael: The figures requested are given in the following table.

Aggregate external finance in Wales, net of specific grants

Year	£ million
1992–93[1]	2,156.6
1993–94	2,139.5
1994–95	2,204.1
1995–96	2,238.3
1996–97	2,280.1
1997–98	2,333.4
1998–99	2,443.1
1999–2000	2,570.2

[1] Includes funding for Further Education. £124 million was transferred out of the local authority sector in 1993–94 when Further Education funding became the responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council for Wales.

Following the transfer of functions, this matter will become one for the National Assembly.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated aggregate external finance as a percentage of the total standard spending of local government in 1999–2000; and what was the equivalent percentage in each year since 1992. [71649]

Mr. Michael: The requested figures are given in the following table.

Aggregate external finance as a percentage of total standard spending, net of specific grants

Year	Percentage
1992–93	89.4
1993–94	89.3
1994–95	88.5
1995–96	87.6
1996–97	86.7
1997–98	86.8
1998–99	86.3
1999–2000	86.1

Following the transfer of functions, this matter will become one for the National Assembly.

National Assembly

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost of the opening ceremony of the National Assembly. [71154]

Mr. Michael: An estimate of the costs involved in the Opening Ceremony of the National Assembly is currently being made, and details will be sent to the hon. Member when they are available.

National Carers Strategy

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each local authority (a) the amount of grant that will be payable in each year to support the National Carers Strategy, (b) the estimated number of carers and (c) the product of dividing (a) by (b). [71103]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The information requested is not yet available. We are consulting widely with carers, their representatives and local authorities about how the National Strategy for Carers, announced by the Deputy Prime Minister on 8 February, should be implemented in Wales. Final decisions will be taken by the National Assembly for Wales.

Following the transfer of functions, the issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71472]

Mr. Michael: Rules governing the work of the GICS are laid down in the guidance of the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the "Working Guide for Government Information Officers". Copies of both documents are in the Library of the House.

The cost of press releases issued by my Department, Agencies and non-departmental bodies since May 1997 is not kept centrally, but I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many press releases have been issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71457]

Mr. Michael: The number of press releases issued by my Department in 1990 is not held centrally, but the figures for each of the years from 1991 to 1998 are:

1991: 622

1992: 668

1993: 759

1994: 644

1995: 631

1996: 599

1997: 650

1998: 774

So far this year—147.

The number of press releases issued by the Department's agencies and non-departmental bodies in those years is not kept centrally, but I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) by social services authority and (b) in total (i) the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1998–99; (ii) the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1999–2000, (iii) the difference between the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1998–99 and 1999–2000, (iv) that difference expressed as a percentage of the 1998–99 figure, (v) the special transitional grant for 1998–99, (vi) the difference between the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1999–2000 and the standard spending assessment for personal social services for 1998–99 combined with the special transitional grant for 1998–99, (vii) the difference between the standard spending assessment for personal social services in 1999–2000 and the standard spending assessment for personal social services for 1998–99 added to the special transitional grant for 1998–99 and expressed as a percentage of the 1998–99 figure and (viii) the indicative level of specific and special grants for 1999–2000. [71319]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: In Wales, standard spending assessments (SSAs) are not identified against specific service blocks as in England. Nor is there an equivalent of special transitional grant. Instead, each year since 1993, the Secretary of State has identified for each authority the additional indicative amount attributed to care in the community in its total SSA. The final tranche of £21 million was included in the 1998–99 general revenue settlement. Details are given in the following table.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 610, the local government settlement for 1999–2000 included £5 million to modernise and improve children's services. Again details of how these resources are to be distributed are given in the following table.

In addition, the Welsh Office is making available, through specific grant, £2.4 million in 1999–2000 to provide training support for personal social services.

Additional resources included in standard spending assessments for 1998–99 and 1999–200

£000

County or county borough council	Additional resources for care in the community 1998–99	Additional resources for Utting 1999–2000
Blaenau Gwent	533	130
Bridgend	917	228
Caerphilly	1,158	343
Cardiff	2,092	672
Carmarthenshire	1,343	231
Ceredigion	489	101
Conwy	935	146
Denbighshire	731	137
Flintshire	941	214
Gwynedd	920	156
Isle of Anglesey	494	100
Merthyr Tydfil	435	128
Monmouthshire	560	101
Neath Port Talbot	1,093	256
Newport	920	304
Pembrokeshire	800	174
Powys	887	144
Rhondda, Cynon, Taff	1,766	425
Swansea	1,685	441
Torfaen	615	184
Vale of Glamorgan (The)	790	213
Wrexham	898	207
Total county and county borough councils	21,000	5,033

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Lucas SEI Factory, Ystradgynlais

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will designate through the planning process the site of the Lucas SEI factory of Ystradgynlais in Powys as dedicated for manufacturing purposes. [70999]

Mr. Hain: This is a matter for the local planning authority. The adopted Powys Structure Plan already seeks to protect such sites from other forms of development. However, I am talking with Welsh Office officials, the Welsh Development Agency and others to provide alternative job opportunities involving manufacturing.

CABINET OFFICE

Working Time Directive

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many civil servants in each Government Department have been invited to waive the Working Time Directive requirement to work less than 48 hours a week on 17 consecutive weeks; how many civil servants in each Department have refused to waive the requirement; and what is the total cost, broken down by department, of compliance with the Directive. [70994]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This information is not held centrally, and is obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

New Deal

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the numbers of New Deal participants currently working in each Government Department. [71187]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I refer the right hon. Member to the written answer my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Mudie), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment, gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) on 19 November 1998, Official Report, column 755. Updated figures will be available towards the end of April.

Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 229, if he proposes to set a target end date for completion of the review of the work of the Joint Consultative Committee. [71730]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: No.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Football Task Force

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what response he has made to the Football Task Force report, Investing in the Community. [71993]

Mr. Banks: I fully support the practical recommendations made in the Task Force's report on football and the community. I have written today to the bodies identified in the report as having a role to play in implementing the relevant recommendations.

There are several recommendations which are for Government to consider. One is to assist with the 'Players in the Community Days' which the Task Force has recommended the Professional Footballers' Association consider. The Government will offer whatever assistance is needed with this scheme in the light of their response.

The other four recommendations relate to Government funding for football, in particular at the grass roots level. My Department is carefully considering the proposals made by the Task Force in this area, especially how they relate to the overall objectives of the Department in relation to sport as a whole. I will be consulting other Government Departments where necessary.

Football plays a significant part in the community life, and footballers can play a key role in supporting community schemes and setting standards of behaviour. The Government will offer whatever assistance they can to help in the development of football in the community and at the grass roots level.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69838]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department fully supports the proposals on "Quangos: Opening the Doors" and is determined that the public bodies that it sponsors comply with its recommendations for greater openness at the earliest opportunity. The information requested about current practice is contained in the following table:

NDPB	Publish minutes of meetings	Publish agenda's etc.	Publish register of interests[1]	Statutory requirements
Advisory Committee for the Public Lending Right	[3]No	No	No	No
Advisory Committee on Historic Wreck Sites	[5]No	No	No	No
Advisory Committee on the Government Art Collection	No	No	No	No
Advisory Council on Libraries	No	No	No	No
Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art	[4]No	No	No	No
Royal Fine Art Commission	No	No	No	No
Theatres Trust	No	No	[2]Yes	No
Treasure Valuation Committee	No	No	No	No
Football Taskforce	No	No	[6]No	No

[1] All NDPBs either have, or shortly will have a register of interests in place. This is in line with the commitment given in "Quangos: Opening the Doors".

[2] Members interests published in the Theatres Trust annual report.

[3] Reports on the work of the PLR advisory committee appear in the Registrar's annual review.

[4] The Committee publishes an Annual Report, which contains a summary of cases heard.

[5] The ACHWS publishes an annual report which gives an account of the work of the Committee in the previous year.

[6] The Football Taskforce register is available for inspection.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69952]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department fully supports the proposals in "Quangos: Opening the Doors" and is determined that the public bodies that it sponsors comply with its recommendations for greater openness at the earliest opportunity. The information requested about current practice is contained in the following table:

NDPB	Publish minutes of meetings	Publish agenda's etc.	Publish register of interests[1]	Statutory requirements
Arts Council of England	[2]No	No	Yes	No
British Library	No	No	No	No
British Museum	No	No	[3]No	No
British Film Institute	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
British Tourist Authority	No	No	Yes	No
Broadcasting Standards Commission	[4]No	No	[5]No	No
Crafts Council	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
English Heritage	No	No	Yes	No
English Sports Council	No	No	Yes	No
English Tourist Board	No	No	Yes	No
Football Licensing Authority	No	No	[6]No	No
Geffrye Museum	No	No	Yes	No
Historic Royal Palaces	No	No	Yes	No
Horniman Museum	No	No	Yes	No
Imperial War Museum	No	No	[7]No	No
Library and Information Commission	No	No	No	No
Millennium Commission	No	No	[8]No	No
NFTS	No	No	[9]No	No
National Lottery Charity Board	No	No	[10]Yes	[10]Yes
New Millennium Experience Co. Ltd.	[11]No	No	Yes	[12]Yes
Museum of London	No	[13]No	Yes	No
Museums and Galleries Commission	No	No	Yes	No
National Gallery	No	No	Yes	No
National Heritage Memorial Fund	Yes	No	Yes	No
National Museum of Science and Industry in Manchester	No	No	[14]No	No
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside	No	No	[15]No	No
National Maritime Museum	No	No	[16]No	No
National Museum of Science and Industry	Yes	Yes	[17]No	No
National Portrait Gallery	[18]Yes	No	Yes	No
Natural History Museum	[19]No	[19]No	[20]No	No
NESTA[21]	No	No	No	No
NOF	Yes	No	[10]Yes	[10]Yes
Public Lending Right	Yes	No	n/a	No
Royal Armouries	No	No	Yes	No

NDPB	Publish minutes of meetings	Publish agenda's etc.	Publish register of interests	Statutory requirements
Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts	No	No	No	No
Royal Commission on Historical Monuments (England)	No	No	Yes	No
Sir John Soane's Museum	No	Yes	[22]No	No
Tate Gallery	No	No	Yes	No
UK Sports Council	No	No	[23]No	No
Victoria and Albert Museum	No	No	[24]No	No
Wallace Collection	No	No	Yes	No

All executive NDPBs are expected to have a register of interests. The majority of DCMS executive do have one, or are in the process of establishing one. The majority are available for inspection by the public but are not necessarily published.

A summary report is produced, excluding commercially sensitive information. This is distributed to ACE staff, national and local newspapers, regional arts boards and advisory panels.

The British Museum has a register but this is not published.

Minutes of meetings are not published as a matter of course; however, the Commission does publish its findings on complaints and all its research reports.

The BSC does maintain, for internal reference only, a register of Members' interests.

The Football Taskforce has a register but this is not published.

The IWM register of interests is not published but its availability is publicised.

The Millennium Commission does maintain, for internal reference only, a register of Members' interests.

A register of NFTS Directors is available from Companies House.

A register of interests is required by the National Lottery Act 1998.

NMEC is required by Companies Acts legislation to allow the inspection of the minutes of meetings.

As a public sector company NMEC is required to follow the requirements in the Companies Acts.

The Museum of London does publish some documents arising from meetings.

The Museum of Science and Industry in Manchester does have a register of interests but does not publish it.

The National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside register of interests is not published but is available for inspection on request.

The National Maritime Museum register of interests is not published but its existence and availability is made known in the NMM annual accounts.

The NMSI register of interests is available by application to the Committee Manager.

Minutes of meetings are published on the National Portrait Gallery website.

The agendas, minutes and documents for the Natural History Museum are available to be inspected by appointment in the Museum library.

The Natural History Museum register of interests is available on request.

NESTA is a new body established by the 1998 National Lottery Act. It is still finalising its operating procedures and processes.

The Sir John Soane's Museum register of interests is not published but is available for inspection on request.

The UKSC maintains a register of members' interests but does not publish it.

Interests are recorded in the V&A annual accounts.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69975]

Mr. Chris Smith: [pursuant to his reply, 15 February 1999, c. 468–70]: Due to an error, the footnotes in my previous Answer were incomplete. The following table gives the information required:

NDPD	Admit the public to all meetings	Hold public meetings	Have lay or consumer board members[16]	Operate a form of appeal or complaints procedure	Statutory requirements
Arts Council of England	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
British Library	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
British Museum	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
British Film Institute	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
British Tourist Authority	No	No	No	Yes	No
Broadcasting Standards Commission	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
Crafts Council	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
English Heritage	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
English Sports Council	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
English Tourist Board	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
Football Licensing Authority	No	No	No	Yes	No
Geffrye Museum	No	No	Yes	No	No
Historic Royal Palaces	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Horniman Museum	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
Imperial War Museum	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
Library and Information Commission	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Millennium Commission	No	No	No	Yes	No
National Film & Television School	No	No	No	[14]No	No
National Lottery Charity Board	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
New Millennium Experience Co Ltd	No	Yes	No	Yes	[20]Yes
Museum of London	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Museum of Science and Industry in Manchester	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No

NDPD	Admit the public to all meetings	Hold public meetings	Have lay or consumer board members[16]	Operate a form of appeal or complaints procedure	Statutory requirements
Museums and Galleries Commission	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
National Gallery	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
National Heritage Memorial Fund	No	Yes	No	[15]Yes	No
National Maritime Museum	No	No	No	Yes	No
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside	No	[3]No	No	Yes	No
National Museum of Science and Industry	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No
National Portrait Gallery	No	No	[4]No	Yes	No
Natural History Museum	No	No	No	Yes	No
NESTA	No	No	No	No	No
NOF	No	Yes	No	Yes	No
Public Lending Right	No	No	No	No	No
Royal Armouries	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts	No	No	No	Yes	No
Royal Commission on Historical Monuments (England)	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Sir John Soane's Museum	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
Tate Gallery	No	No	Yes	Yes	No
UK Sports Council	No	No	No	No	No
Victoria and Albert Museum	No	No	No	Yes	No
Wallace Collection	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No

Notes:

[1] The British Museum say that all their Board Members are visitors and users. Those Trustees that sit on the External Relations and Public Services Committee have particular responsibility for consumer interests including disability issues.

[2] The Imperial War Museum say that none of its Board is a museum professional: all are "lay" and may ask questions as consumers.

[3] The NMGM have agreed in principle to hold one open meeting a year beginning in 1999

[4] The National Portrait Gallery do not allow non-Trustees to attend Board meetings

[5] English Heritage advise that one commissioner has been a recipient of a grant and can be described as a "consumer". As not all Commissioner are experts in the fields they represent they can be described as lay members

[6] The Museum of London say that its Board is made up of people from a wide number of backgrounds who include people with lay or consumer representations.

[7] The National Museum of Science and Industry say that the Board is composed of individuals appointed by Government selected from those with interests and expertise which will assist and advise the Museum both with regard to visitors and care of the collections. These unpaid individuals provide a wide range of scientific, visitor, management and educational experience

[8] The English Tourist Board holds three public meetings with Regional Tourist Boards annually which are also open to the industry and public

[9] Members of the public who are complainants on fairness in broadcasting are invited to attend Commission hearings in which their complaint is being considered. However, meetings of Commission members are not usually open to the general public. The Commission does hold public meetings throughout the country in the form of consultation groups.

[10] Members of the BSC are appointed on merit and we aim to ensure that its membership has a wide representation of skills to enable the Commission to fulfil its remit.

[11] As part of its remit, the Commission deals with complaints from the public on fairness and standards in broadcasting. There is no formal appeals system against its decisions.

[12] The BSC was created by the Broadcasting Act 1996, which lays down some general rules about the Commission's membership and function.

[13] The NFTS sees its public as its students and tutors whom are allowed to attend all board meetings if they so wish.

[14] The NFTS complaints procedure is for use by its student and tutor representatives.

[15] The NHMF operate a Review and Complaints Committee for applicants to the Heritage Lottery Fund who are unhappy with the way their application has been handled.

[16] All DCMS appointments are made in accordance with guidance from the Commissioner for Public Appointments. A field of candidates is identified in every case against an agreed role specification, and an element of independent scrutiny is always included in the process.

[17] As part of the NMEC Section 106 Planning Agreement with the London Borough of Greenwich, the NMEC are obliged to hold a public meeting for local residents. Two meetings have so far taken place.

[18] NMEC has formed a number of advisory committees which are comprised of lay/consumer people.

[19] Staff from the Millennium Commission hold meetings with the public.

[20] As a public sector company NMEC is required to follow the requirements in the Companies Acts.

Public Consultations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish his Department's collation and assessment of responses to all the Government's public consultations. [69772]

Mr. Chris Smith: When the DCMS issues a public consultation paper it will, in line with central guidance issued by the Cabinet Office, either publish a summary of the views collected or make the results available on request (in each case subject to respecting confidentiality requested by those responding).

Concessionary Television Licence Fees

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will assess the benefits of providing television licences free of charge for (a) pensioners and (b) disabled people; and if he will make a statement. [70989]

Janet Anderson: The current review of the future of the BBC licence fee after 2002 will include a consideration of the structure of the existing concessionary television licence scheme and whether a suitable alternative structure could be available. The independent review panel will report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by the end of July this year. There will then be a period of public consultation on the panel's recommendations. It would not be right for the Government to preempt the outcome of the review.

Theme Parks

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what grants are available for the creation of rides at theme parks in the North West from the English Tourist Board. [71490]

Janet Anderson: There are no grants available from the English Tourist Board (ETB) for this purpose.

The North West, like all parts of the country, benefits from the work of the British Tourist Authority and of the ETB. A significant part of the grant to the ETB is passed on to the ten regional tourist boards for local programmes and marketing.

New support structures announced on 14 December, as part of the results of the DCMS Departmental Spending Review, will ensure that in future more effective use is made of public spending on tourism in England, with a greater proportion going to the regions.

World Cup Bids (2006)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he has taken to establish that the bidding process for the 2006 World Cup will be free from bribery. [68459]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The Government expect bids to bring international events to this country to be pursued with openness and integrity. I take a close interest in ensuring this is so, and following controversy about Olympic bids have received assurances from the Football Association that the bid for the 2006 World Cup naturally will comply fully with the published guidelines, and will certainly be free from recourse to bribery. I accept those assurances and will continue vigorously to assist with the FA campaign for the 2006 bid, whose strength and viability rest on its quality against bidding criteria.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70976]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 February 1999]: My Department's main web site (www.culture.gov.uk) costs £2,000 per annum to run and did not incur any set up costs. The web site has on average 130,000 'hits' per month and contains information about the work of the Department, contact details for Ministers and public inquires, and a range of publications, consultation papers, and links to sponsored bodies.

The National Lottery Awards web site cost £42,000 to set up and has, on average 5,000 'hits' per month.

The Royal Parks Agency have a web site hosted by the CCTA and from January this year costs £500 per annum to run. The web site contains information on each of the Royal Parks. There is no information on the number of 'hits' for this site.

We do not hold information on our non-departmental public bodies web sites and this could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Television Subtitles

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 31, what specific policies his Department intends to bring forward to improve the level of subtitling on cable and satellite television following the meetings his officials have held with broadcasters and subtitle providers. [69645]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 15 February 1999]: My officials have had a useful series of meetings with the cable and satellite broadcasters, those representing viewers with sensory disabilities and subtitling providers. I met the RNID on 20 January. We are now considering in the light of the information from those meetings how we can encourage the cable and satellite broadcasters to improve on a voluntary basis the current provision of subtitling on their services.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimates his Department has made of how long it will be before digital set top boxes are able to support subtitling. [69644]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I understand from the Independent Television Commission that all services within the six digital terrestrial multiplexes are providing subtitles with the exception of a small number of ITV companies within the Channel 3/4 multiplex who expect to commence very shortly.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if his Department intends to make recommendations to the ITC about how its annual targets for subtitling for deaf and hard of hearing people should be calculated, with particular reference to digital television. [69643]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The Broadcasting Act 1996 requires the Independent Television Commission (ITC) to draw up a code on promoting the understanding and enjoyment of programmes by persons who are deaf and hard of hearing. The code must include specified minimum targets which are laid down in the 1996 Act, which also gives the Commission the power to set interim targets. Under the provisions of the Act, it is solely a matter for the ITC to draw up the code. The Act places a statutory duty on the Commission to consult those bodies or persons who represent the interests of people with sensory disabilities, before drawing up their code.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimates his Department has made of the proportion of subtitled programmes for deaf and hard of hearing viewers (a) at present and (b) in five years time for (i) digital terrestrial, (ii) satellite, digital and analogue and (iii) cable television. [69642]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 15 February 1999]: For digital terrestrial services, the Broadcasting Act 1996 requires that by the tenth anniversary of the introduction of any digital terrestrial television programme service, not less than 50 per cent. of non-excluded programme hours broadcast in any service should be subtitled. The Act gives the Independent Television Commission the power to set interim targets and the Commission has set an interim requirement of 5 per cent. for the first year and 25 per cent. for the fifth year and no programmes are to be excluded. Existing broadcasters obligations on subtitling under the Broadcasting Act 1990 will of course apply to their simulcast digital services. The Commission will monitor broadcasters' progress towards meeting those requirements.

There are no similar statutory requirements on cable and satellite broadcasters to provide subtitling on their analogue or digital services. My officials have asked cable and satellite broadcasters their plans for provision of subtitling on their digital services and those who responded have indicated a willingness to transmit the subtitling commissioned for digital terrestrial television on other delivery platforms.

After-school Sports Clubs

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the amount of money which the New Opportunities Fund will spend on after-school sports clubs. [70650]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 15 February 1999]: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport said in his reply to the hon. Member for East Surrey (Mr. Ainsworth) on 16 November 1998, Official Report, column 350, no specific amount has been earmarked for providing children with sporting opportunities at after-school clubs, but activities offered may include sporting and outdoor learning activities, and structured, learning-oriented play. The amount allocated for these activities will be determined by the New Opportunities Fund in response to the applications received.

The New Opportunities Fund will commit £400 million to out of school hours activities during the current licence period to September 2001. Of this, £180 million will be committed to education activities, £200 million to child care, and £20 million to projects combining child care and education.

Out of school hours education projects should involve at least half of all secondary schools, at least a quarter of all primary schools, and at least half of all special schools by 2001. Out of school child care projects should provide places for 865,000 children by 2003.

The Prime Minister also announced an extra £400 million for the New Opportunities Fund between now and 2001. We have consulted on how this money should be spent and have proposed that part of the additional amount should be committed to an expansion of the existing out of school hours initiative, to enhance the contribution made by summer schools not only to literacy, numeracy and opportunities for arts, but also to sport.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps the Government will take to encourage physical exercise as part of its new after-school care programme. [70295]

Mr. Banks: Through the New Opportunities Fund (NOF) we have committed £400 million of National Lottery money to out of school hours activities during the current licence period to September 2001. Of this, £180 million has been committed to education activities, £200 million to child care, and £20 million to projects combining child care and education. Out of school hours education projects should involve at least half of all secondary schools, at least a quarter of all primary schools, and at least half of all special schools by 2001. Out of school child care projects should provide places for 865,000 children by 2003.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has also announced an extra £400 million for the New Opportunities Fund between now and 2001. We have consulted on how this money should be spent and have proposed that part of the additional amount should be committed to an expansion of the existing out of school hours initiative, to enhance the contribution made by summer schools not only to literacy, numeracy and opportunities for arts, but also to sport.

The Policy Directions issued to NOF ensure that it takes into account relevant national and local strategies in relation to each initiative. For out of school hours learning this includes Extending Opportunity: a national framework for study support (In England) and any similar guidance produced elsewhere. Study support is learning activity outside normal lessons and embraces many activities, including sports, games and adventurous outdoor activities.

The National Lottery Act 1998 required NOF to draw up a strategic plan containing its assessment of needs and its priorities in dealing with them, on which it must consult the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport. This ensures that there is a proper strategy for distributing Lottery proceeds. No specific targets have been allocated to NOF for providing physical exercise opportunities at after-school clubs, but in reviewing NOF's strategic plan we shall ensure that the projects it supports promote young people's well-being through a range of activities, including sport and creative activities.

Staff Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [70955]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The mileage rates currently applicable to staff within the Department for Culture, Media and Sport and The Royal Parks Agency are:

Pence per mile

	Per mile	Up to 1500cc	1501-2000cc	Over 2000cc
Car—Standard rate
Up to 4,000 miles	—	34	43	47
Over 4,000 miles	—	19	23	31
Public transport rate	23	—	—	—
Passenger supplement
First passenger	2	—	—	—
Others	1	—	—	—
Equipment supplement	3	—	—	—

Pence per mile

	Per mile	Up to 125cc	Over 125cc
Motor cycles—up to 4,000 miles
Third party insurance	—	14.6	22.1
Comprehensive insurance	—	16.2	25.3
Over 4,000 miles	—	6.1	9.0
Bicycles
Mileage allowance	6	—	—

DCMS and RPA offer season ticket loans for public transport and loans to assist in the purchase of bicycles. My Department is aiming to meet the Government targets on green transport by March 1999. It will seek to identify practical measures aimed at promoting greener travel including reviewing car mileage rates.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70469]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I have not relocated staff and have no plans to do so. However, I will be establishing a new post for my Department in each of the Government Offices in the English regions in the next financial year. I am also encouraging the decentralisation of work to all the English regions from a number of the national bodies sponsored by my Department and located in England.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70483]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to "Civil Service Statistics 1998" which is placed in the Libraries of the House. This includes regional information. Staff at the Royal Parks Agency are all based in the London area.

English Tourist Board

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to change the name of the English Tourist Board. [71729]

Janet Anderson: On 14 December 1998 we announced in "A New Cultural Framework" that we would establish a new streamlined, more strategic body to support tourism in England. An implementation Team is looking at all aspects of the body, including its role, detailed remit and name.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received about genetically modified crops from the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes; and if he will make a statement. [68629]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 1 February 1999]: All advice received from the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes is published in their Annual Reports. Copies of these have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has held with English Nature about genetically modified crops. [68066]

Mr. Nick Brown: On 16 November my hon. Friend the Minister of State met the Chairman of English Nature to discuss genetically modified crops. In addition my officials and those of English Nature have attended recent meetings at which this subject has been discussed.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the circumstances in which food and food ingredients containing, or produced using, genetically modified organisms or micro-organisms must be labelled. [69875]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Provision for labelling novel foods is described in article 8 of Regulation 258/97. This requires that the consumer is informed of any characteristic or property of the food, such as composition, nutritional value or intended food use, which renders a novel food or food ingredient no longer equivalent to an existing food or food ingredient. In addition, the food must be labelled if it could have health implications for certain population sectors, contains ingredients that raise ethical concerns or contains a genetically modified organism.

Finally, Regulation 1139/98 on labelling genetically modified (GM) soya and maize sets a precedent for the labelling of all food ingredients containing or produced from genetically modified organisms where they contain GM material (protein or DNA).

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the information held by his Department on consumers' attitudes towards genetically modified food. [68089]

Mr. Nick Brown: My Department encourages all its research contributors to publish details of their work in peer reviewed scientific journals.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information held by his Department about consumers' attitudes towards genetically modified food was released to (a) Monsanto, (b) Novartis and (c) other companies wishing to introduce genetic modification into Britain. [68090]

Mr. Nick Brown: Research sponsored by my Department on consumer attitudes towards biotechnology is available for public viewing in the library of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Its availability, as with other research projects, is announced in the Food Safety Information Bulletin.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what discussions he has held with retailers about consumers' attitudes towards genetically modified food; [68088]

(2) what discussions he has held with retailers about consumers' attitudes towards genetically modified food. [68062]

Mr. Nick Brown: Ministerial colleagues and I have held meetings with retailers on a variety of matters including genetically modified food. In relation to genetically modified food we have stressed the importance we attach to safety and labelling.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on (a) genetically modified organisms and (b) the biotechnology industry from the US Administration. [66682]

Mr. Nick Brown: I met US Trade Representative, Ambassador Barshefsky, on 23 October 1998. The Ambassador expressed some concerns about the way genetically modified organisms were being dealt with in the EU. I reassured her that the UK Government was committed to a science-based approach which protected human health and the environment.

Consultation Exercise

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the dates and venues of the meetings which he will be holding or attending which form part of his consultation exercise Towards a New Direction for UK Agriculture. [66904]

Mr. Nick Brown: Following the conference on Agenda 2000 CAP reform on 11 January, further consultation meetings are being arranged by MAFF Regional Service Centres. Details of these are being suitably publicised at local level.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date or dates the decision was taken to launch the consultation exercise, Towards a New Direction for UK Agriculture. [66908]

Mr. Nick Brown: I refer the hon. Member to my statement to the House on 16 November 1998, Official Report, columns 624–26, announcing a package of aid measures for livestock farmers. In the course of that statement I mentioned that the Government would be undertaking—in consultation with all interested parties—a thorough review of the rural economy and consulting widely on a range of issues over the coming months.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many responses his Department has received as part of the consultation exercise Towards a New Direction for UK Agriculture; and if he will publish them. [66905]

Mr. Nick Brown: Details of numbers of forms received in response to the consultation exercise will be published in due course, along with an analysis of their content. Unless the authors object, copies of letters (though not individual forms) will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much the consultation exercise Towards a New Direction for UK Agriculture cost (a) to produce and (b) in postage. [66909]

Mr. Nick Brown: The costs for the consultation exercise "Towards a New Direction for UK Agriculture" were as follows:

(a) to produce—£41,000

(b) postage—£37,000.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what mechanisms have been devised (a) to collate and (b) to utilise the responses to the consultation exercise Towards a New Direction for UK Agriculture ahead of the deadline for the conclusion of Agenda 2000 negotiations. [66907]

Mr. Nick Brown: The exercise of handling the responses to the consultation exercise has begun and appropriate mechanisms for data input are being put in place. Regional meetings are being arranged in the next few weeks to highlight the issues at stake and further encourage informed comment. Responses received will be utilised to help ensure that informed decisions are made about future agricultural policy so as to take full account of UK farming interests, along with those of consumers and the environment.

Foodstuffs

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those cases in which a Member State has sought to invoke Article 12 of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 (restricting or suspending trade in and use of food or food ingredients) in addition to an examination by the European Commission within the Standing Committee on Foodstuffs under that Article. [69870]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Article 12 has yet to be invoked by any member state.

Novel Foods

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the requests submitted to him and to other Member States in connection with the placing on the market of genetically modified novel foods or novel food ingredients, pursuant to Article 4(1) of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97, by (a) company, (b) product, (c) modified trait, (d) the Member State to which the submission was made and (e) its date. [69877]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Details of applications under the EC Novel Foods Regulation (258/97) are as follows:

Applications under Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 of the European Parliament and of the Council

Applicant	Description of food or ingredient	Initial assessment carried out by	Application date	Initial assessment
1. Katholieke Universiteit Leuven Laboratory of Plant Physiology B-3001 Heverlee	Stevia rebaudiana (plant and dried leaves)	Hoge Gezonheidsraad RAC—Esplanadegebouw 7e verdieping Pachecolaan 19 bus 5 B-1010 Brussels	7 November 1997	6 February 1998; answers to additional questions on 23 January 1998 24 April 1998; Initial assessment report 13 July 1998 Translation into English Forwarded to Member States on 18 August 1998 Additional assessment SCF plenary 9 December 1998
2. Belovo scrl Zone industrielle, 1 B-6600 Bastogne	Phospholipids from egg yolk	Hoge Gezonheidsraad RAC—Esplanadegebouw 7e verdieping Pachecolaan 19 bus 5 B-1010 Brussels	9 February 1998	9 June 1998 Initial assessment report forwarded to Member States on 29 September 1998 Further information by Belgium on 29 October 1998 at the CPDA Deadline for comments/reasons objections 28 December
3. Zeneca Jealott's Hill Research Station Jealott's Hill, Bracknell, UK. Berkshire RG42 6ET	Genetically Modified Processing Tomatoes	UK Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes	3 March 1998	2 June 1998 Initial assessment report arrived 8 June 1998. Transmission to Member States. June 1998. Comments and reasoned objections made by Member States forwarded to Member States on 22 October 1998. Additional assessment SCF plenary 9 December 1998.
4. Bejo-Zaden PO Box 50, NL-1749 Warmenhuizen	Transgenic Radicchio rosso with male sterility	The Provisional Committee for the safety evaluation of novel foods (VeVnv)	—	Initial assessment forwarded to Member States on 27 October 1998
5. Bejo-Zaden PO Box 50, NL-1749, Warmenhuizen	Transgenic green hearted Chicory with male sterility	The Provisional Committee for the safety evaluation of novel foods (VeVnv)	8 April 1998	7 July 1998 Initial assessment forwarded to Member States on 27 October 1998
6. Unilever Research & Engineering Division, Unilever UK, Central Resources Ltd., Unilever House, Blackfriars, UK, London EC4P 4BQ	Yellow fat spreads with added phytosterol-esters	The Provisional Committee for the safety evaluation of novel foods (VeVnv)	28 May 1998	15 September 1998 Initial assessment forwarded to Member States on 8 January 1999
7. E. I. DuPont Nemours & Co. Agricultural Enterprise Optimum Quality Grains L. L. C. Registration and Regulatory Affairs Europe, Ebertstr. 4, D-07743 Jena	High Oleic Soybean Sublines derived from transformation event 260-05	The Provisional Committee for the safety evaluation of novel foods (VeVnv)	25 July 1998	15 November 1998
8. Biomin Pharma GmbH Provinostr. 15, D-86153 Augsburg	Vit-Enzym	Bundesinstitut fur gesundheitlichen Verbraucherschutz und Veterin&#228;rmedizin	23 June 1998	23 September 1998 suspended
9. Monsanto Services International S. A. Ave. de Tervuren 270-272, B-1150 Bruxelles	Roundup Ready Maize line GA21	The Provisional Committee for the safety evaluation of novel foods (VeVnv)	24 July 1998	5 November 1998

Applications under Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 of the European Parliament and of the Council

Applicant	Description of food or ingredient	Initial assessment carried out by	Application date	Initial assessment
10. Groupe Danone 7, rue de Téhéran, F-75381 Paris, cedex 08	Use as human food of fruit preparations pasteurised using a high pressure treatment process	1) Conseil supérieur d'hygiène publique de France 2) Commission de technologie alimentaire	3 December 1998	3 March 1999
11. M Yvan Jobert La Meillade n 65, F-34150, Montpeyroux	Noix de nangailles	Conseil supérieur d'hygiène publique de France	9 December 1998	9 March 1999

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names, interests and positions of the members of the Standing Committee on Foodstuffs which has functions under Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 concerning novel foods and novel food ingredients. [69868]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The Standing Committee on Foodstuffs is composed of officials from member states. Its composition varies from meeting to meeting.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of the initial assessments in connection with the placing on the market of genetically modified novel foods or novel food ingredients, pursuant to Article 4 of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97, required an additional assessment, pursuant to Article 6.3. [69873]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The application under the Novel Foods Regulation for GM tomato products, for which the UK's Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes provided the initial assessment in June 1998, required an additional assessment. In addition, the application for Stevia rebaudiana, for which the Belgium competent authority (Hoge Gezonheidsraad RAC) provided the initial assessment, required a further assessment, but was ultimately rejected by all member states. All other applications are still under consideration.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what rules have been adopted for the protection of the information referred to in Article 10 of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97; and if he will place a copy of those rules in the Library. [69885]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The European Commission have yet to act on this matter. The Government will continue to pursue this with the European Commission.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the measures adopted by the European Commission under Article 13 of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97 concerning novel foods and novel food ingredients; and if he will place a copy of those measures in the Library. [69869]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The European Commission has yet to adopt measures under Article 13.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each of the additional assessments in connection with the placing on the market of genetically modified novel foods or novel food ingredients, pursuant to Article 7 of Regulation (EC) No. 258/97, the authorisation decision, by (i) company, (ii) product, (iii) modified trait, (iv) the relevant member state, (v) date and (vi) the scope of the authorisation. [69872]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 8 February 1999]: An additional assessment will be required for Zeneca GM tomato products which have been modified to delay ripening. The original assessment was carried out by the UK.

BSE

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he expects the BSE Inquiry to be completed by 30 June. [[illegible]2143]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Committee of Inquiry has indicated that it needs an extension of time beyond 30 June 1999 in order to enable it to complete its work. Discussions are under way on the additional period that will be required to allow the Inquiry to do this. A further announcement will be made as soon as possible.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nurses (Work Permits)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many applications from hospital trusts for work permits for nurses have been (a) refused and (b) reduced in duration by his Department in each of the last five years. [68581]

Ms Hodge: The specific information requested is not available as work permit records do not identify the type of employer. The numbers of work permit applications for nurses which were refused in each of the last five years are as follows:

Year	Number
1994	171
1995	151
1996	182
1997	93
1998	144

These figures show each application refused, not each person. They therefore include a number of nurses for whom several applications were made, including applications for renewals and transfers to another employer.

Work permit records show the period approved, not the period requested. It is therefore not possible to give the numbers of permit applications which were approved for a shorter period than requested. The period requested would only be reduced where the business reasons given in the application did not justify the longer period.

Astra Pension Scheme

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to compensate future pensioners of the Astra pension scheme for their loss of benefits. [70757]

Mr. Mudie: The Department continues to press the Astra liquidators and the pension fund trustees to ensure that future pensioners suffer no loss of benefits. Current pensioners are already receiving their full entitlements.

Childline

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he last met the Chief Executive or Chairman of Childline to discuss funding. [70708]

Mr. Blunkett: I last met the Chief Executive in February 1998 to launch the Childline in Partnership with Schools (CHIPS) project but have not had a meeting specifically to discuss funding.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much his Department spent on promotional literature between (a) 1 May 1997 and 1 January 1999 and (b) 1 May 1995 and 1 January 1997. [70443]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Within the Department's Advertising and Publicity Budget the total spend on publications was:

(a) £1.96 million between 1 May 1997 and 1 January 1999

(b) £3.02 million between 1 May 1995 and 1 January 1997.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70974]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The costs of setting up and operating the Department's website since it began in 1995 have not been held centrally and figures could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The website provides information and advice to parents, teachers, schools, employers and jobseekers about the Department's policies and responsibilities. It receives approximately 950,000 hits per month.

The cost of developing and running the website for the next three years is estimated to be in the region of £100,000 per year plus staff costs, which are not possible to separate out for work associated with the website.

The Employment Service has a separate website which provides more detailed information for employers and jobseekers and about ES services. It receives approximately 7,500 hits per month. In 1998–99 it cost approximately £15,000 to run the website. This will rise to £23,600 next year to enable important enhancements and thereafter costs will fall to about £10,000 per year.

The New Deal website is again separate from the Department's and gives information for employers and potential participants of the New Deal. The site has an average of 12,000 hits per month. The cost to date of the New Deal website is £167,000. Decisions on the future costs and development of the website have not yet been made.

The Teacher Training Agency had two websites until the end of last year. The first aimed at those involved in Teaching and the second aimed at potential teachers. The average number of hits per month for the two sites is 223,340. The cost to date of setting up and operating the websites is £205,000. The cost for ongoing development and maintenance is estimated at £32,000.00.

Skin Cancers

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures have been taken to offer school children and staff guidance on, and protection from, the dangers of excessive exposure to sunlight and its linkage with skin cancers. [70365]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department recommends that schools include sun awareness as part of their health and safety policy, and that information is provided to pupils and parents.

The Department has publicised the Health Education Authority's Sun Awareness Campaign in "Spectrum," a publication that is sent to all schools. This includes "Sun Known-How" safety guidelines for schools, which include advice on putting policies in place, practical information and ideas for activities involving pupils.

Didbrook School

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the increased gross cost of upgrading Didbrook School following the proposed closure of Toddington School; if Gloucestershire County Council has indicated that it is to reconsider its decision to amalgamate the two schools on the basis of cost; and if he will make a statement. [70893]

Ms Estelle Morris: It is for Gloucestershire County Council to estimate the gross cost of these proposals and to submit the relevant financial information to the Department as part of the statement of case. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received no indication from Gloucestershire County Council that it intends to reconsider its decision to amalgamate the schools. I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 229.

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since

1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70030]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The information requested is available only at disproportionate cost.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the Government in their important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom Departments are expected to use for the rest of the Government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not on one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the Government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example, where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

"Public Relations Toolkit for Employers"

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many copies of the New Deal "Public Relations Toolkit for Employers" have been produced; and at what cost. [71366]

Mr. Andrew Smith: 30,000 copies of the New Deal "Public Relations Toolkit for Employers" were printed, at a total cost of £41,856.

Carers (Students)

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what support is available for carers who wish to enter further or higher education; and if he will make a statement; [70794]

(2) what is the maximum educational award available to (a) a carer in receipt of invalid care allowance, (b) a disabled student and (c) students released from employment; [70795]

(3) how the fact that invalid care allowance is a taxable benefit affects the assessment of a carer's entitlement to an educational award and its value; [70796]

(4) if carers in receipt of invalid care allowance have to pay tuition fees; [70797]

(5) if carers in receipt of invalid care allowance are entitled to receive a maintenance grant when entering higher education. [70799]

Mr. Mudie: Someone with caring responsibilities who is in full-time higher education is, subject to personal eligibility, entitled to support towards tuition fees and living costs on the same basis as other students. For students entering before 1998–99, 50 per cent. of that support was available as grant and 50 per cent. as student loan, and students were not required to contribute to their tuition fees. From 1998–99 most new entrants are liable for a contribution to their tuition costs, according to their ability to pay. From 1999–2000, the support available to new entrants will be in the form of 100 per cent. loans.

Currently, the first £3,030 of any Invalid Care Allowance is disregarded in assessing the support available. If the person being cared for is financially dependent on the student, the student may also be eligible for a Dependants Allowance of up to £2,025. Additional support may be available through the Access Funds and the Hardship Loans.

The maximum maintenance support available to full-time students in higher education will depend upon the student's personal circumstances. For most students living away from the parental home, the maximum support available through grant and loan is currently £3,545. Disabled students are eligible for additional grants as follows:

(a) in respect of a non-medical personal helper, up to £10,000 annually

(b) in respect of major items of specialist equipment as the authority consider appropriate, up to £3,955 for the duration of the course

(c) in respect of any other expenditure, up to £1,315 annually.

Someone who is a carer wishing to enter further education will be eligible for the range of support available to all students in that sector. This support has been transformed from September 1999 so that it is more evenly distributed across the country and better targeted on those most in need. Provision will be mostly through an expanded access fund administered by colleges, which will provide assistance for such expenditure items as travel, fees, books and equipment. There will be additional support available for child care and for those need to study away from home. Colleges when considering individual applications for access funds will take account of other sources of support, including benefits and allowances. It is up to each college to determine the level of payment appropriate to the individual circumstances of the student concerned. Most students over age 18 will be liable to pay tuition fees, but students no in employment are generally exempt and there is further discretion to assist other groups.

Filipina Nurses

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultation the Overseas Labour Service had with the Department of Health over obtaining work permits for Filipina nurses to come to work in the United Kingdom and what efforts he took to satisfy himself that they could not recruit suitable persons within either the United Kingdom or the EEA; what evidence was provided by the Department of Health that the jobs could not be done equally well by someone resident in the EEA; how many work permits have been issued and under which category; and if he will publish the current register of occupations which he considers to be in short supply nationally and likely to be so within the EEA. [70372]

Ms Hodge: The Department's Overseas Labour Service and the Department of Health discuss skill shortages and agree work permit policy on nursing on a regular basis. There has been no specific consultation about work permits for Philippine nurses. The views of the Department of Health are not sought on each work permit application for a nurse. The work permit arrangements require the employer who applies for a work permit to show that they have been unable to employ a suitably qualified applicant from the resident labour market. This requirement is set aside for those occupations where there is a recognised acute shortage.

Recognised shortage occupations for work permits are currently: Actuaries, Chartered Clinical Psychologists, Occupational Therapists, Pharmacists, Veterinary Surgeons and nursing posts in the following specialisms—Intensive Care, Theatre, Paediatric Intensive Care, Mental Health, Neo-natal and Learning Disabilities.

The number of work permits issued for nurses from the Philippines in 1998 was 202. This figure includes initial permits, extensions and transfers to another employer.

Teacher Training

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each of the years (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 the total number of applications to (i) primary and (ii) secondary teacher training courses, including PGCE by (1) gender, (2) age and (3) subject. [69901]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the total number of applications to primary and secondary initial teacher training courses by phase, gender and subject for entry years 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99. Age of applicant is not available.

Applications[1] to initial teacher training courses, by level, gender, phase and subject, in England and Wales, academic year of entry 1996–97 to 1998–99

	Academic year of entry
	1996–97				1997–98				1998–99
	Postgraduate		Undergraduate[3]		Postgraduate		Undergraduate[3]		Postgraduate[2]		Undergraduate[3]
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
Primary	2,383	10,200	14,221	78,072	2,491	10,726	11,597	66,520	2,303	10,431	9,203	56,212
Secondary
Mathematics	1,140	733	350	400	921	658	314	275	737	551	227	162
English	937	2,260	247	518	863	2,241	148	288	868	2,273	168	495
Science	1,877	1,821	349	291	1,661	1,604	278	239	1,331	1,547	213	192
Languages	540	2,140	33	151	539	2,022	25	84	520	1,922	19	67
Technology	840	709	982	695	870	735	908	584	811	784	653	540
History	1,114	903	23	52	1,044	857	0	0	949	844	0	0
Geography	662	635	21	20	572	616	13	16	532	532	12	25
Physical Education	711	434	5,037	4,095	828	544	4,374	3,469	819	587	3,858	3,442
Art	227	712	20	50	395	1,108	16	47	381	1,025	21	55
Music	250	344	117	234	251	298	40	38	221	323	52	23
Religious education	375	470	41	101	347	479	17	60	322	515	12	45
Other	384	436	1,339	1,094	297	324	1,226	1,003	199	311	695	739
Total secondary	9,057	11,597	8,559	7,701	8,588	11,486	7,359	6,103	7,690	11,214	5,930	5,785
Overall total	11,440	21,797	22,780	85,773	11,079	22,212	18,956	72,623	9,993	21,645	15,133	61,997

[1] UCAS count up to six applications per applicant, whilst GTTR count one application per applicant

[2] Postgraduate figures exclude applications made directly to the ITT provider

[3] Undergraduate figures exclude applications made at the clearing stage

Source:

Undergraduate applications—Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS)

Postgraduate applications—Graduate Teacher Training Registry (GTTR)

Local Government Finance (Westminster and Kensington)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the (a) grants and (b) other financial support given by his Department to (i) Westminster City Council and (ii) the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea, other than through the RSG settlements, in (1) 1997–98, (2) 1998–99 and (3) planned for 1999–2000; and for what purposes the funds were allocated. [70159]

Mr. Mudie: Details of the grants and other financial support paid by my Department to Westminster City Council and the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea in 1997–98 and 1998–99, and planned for 1999–2000, are set out in the following tables.

Grants to Westminster and Kensington & Chelsea

£000

	1997–98 (actual)		1998–99 (estimated)		1999–2000 (planned)
Grant	Westminster	Kensington and Chelsea	Westminster	Kensington and Chelsea	Westminster	Kensington and Chelsea
VA Capital Grant[1]	729	92	595	152	375	139
New Deal for Schools Capital	313	244	988	527	[2]—	[2]—
Nursery Education (4 year olds)[3]	1,209	806	486	356	[2]—	[2]—
Standards Fund[4]	796	610	1,698	978	4,290	2,551
Travellers Grant[5]	—	34	—	35	—	48

Grants to Westminster and Kensington & Chelsea

£000

Grant	1997–98 (actual) Westminster	1997–98 (actual) Kensington and Chelsea	1998–99 (estimated) Westminster	1998–99 (estimated) Kensington and Chelsea	1999–2000 (planned) Westminster	1999–2000 (planned) Kensington and Chelsea
TVEI[6]	43	—	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a
Supported Employment	33	23	33	23	[2]—	[2]—
Child care	n/a	n/a	55	51	[7]172	[7]145

[1] Grant paid to the governors of VA schools maintained by the authority.

[2] To be decided.

[3] Figures for 1997–98 and 1998–99 are not comparable due principally to changes in the handling of funding for private and voluntary providers.

[4] Total programme expenditure; includes LEA contributions. 1998–99 figure also includes two capital grants for Energy Efficiency Initiative and Removal of Outside Toilets. Expenditure for these grants amounted to £45k for Westminster and £27k for Kensington and Chelsea.

[5] Figures relate to total expenditure; grant is paid at the rate of 65 per cent. 1999–2000 figure includes £12.7k for development work.

[6] Funding for TVEI ended in 1997–98.

[7] Amounts allocated but not yet agreed.

Other financial support to Westminster and Kensington & Chelsea

£000

	Other Annual capital guideline	Credit approvals Formula minor works allocation[1]	Credit approvals Schools access initiative	PFI credits
1997–98 (actual)
Westminster	608	46	51	—
Kensington and Chelsea	84	18	7	—
1998–99 (estimated)
Westminster	70	—	35	up to 25,000
Kensington and Chelsea	123	—	35	—
1999–2000 (planned)
Westminster	183	—	[2]—	—
Kensington and Chelsea	101	—	[2]—	—

[1] Issued as Supplementary Credit Approvals in 1997–98 only.

[2] To be confirmed.

Linux Computer Operating System

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the Linux computer operating system and its potential for reducing the costs of school computer systems. [70178]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 11 February 1999]: The Government are aware of this system which, with other relevant products available for educational use, is being kept under review by the British Educational Communications and Technology Agency. Their recent publication, "Connecting Schools, Networking People", offered guidance to schools on good practice in the purchasing and deployment of advanced technologies. It will be updated in future to ensure that it remains relevant to schools.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what opportunities are available for objectors to plans to sell school playing fields to make known to him their opposition to a sale prior to a decision being taken. [70360]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 11 February 1999]: The Department has recently consulted widely on the criteria against which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider applications for his consent to sell, or change the use, of school playing fields. Although it is for applicants to decide the details of any local consultation, they should bear in mind that it was local concerns that prompted legislation to protect school playing fields. Draft procedures published on 1 October 1998 set out my right hon. Friend's expectation that applicants should consult locally and inform him of the responses they receive. The Department expects that local consultation should include the direct views of parents of pupils attending the school, as well as any other school which uses the field for school purposes. A minimum consultation period of 8 term-time weeks is recommended to allow sufficient opportunity for objections to be made known.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the procedures that schools have to pursue before selling school playing fields under the regulations governing such sales. [70361]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 11 February 1999]: I assume in the light of the hon. Member's previous questions that this question concerns the sale of playing fields by school governing bodies that own their playing fields, as is generally the case for grant-maintained schools, rather than the sale of school playing fields by local authorities.

The governing body of a grant-maintained school must obtain the written consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State before selling any land, including buildings and playing fields. Section 77 of the School Standards and Framework Act, which came into force on 1 October 1998, requires the governing bodies of other maintained schools of obtain the consent of my right hon. Friend before selling, or changing the use of, any school playing field that they own. The procedures to be followed are set out in the Department's consultation document. These include completion of an application form and local consultation.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State examines any application to dispose of school playing fields carefully, bearing in mind the provision of playing field space at the school and any shortage of playing fields at other local schools. It is necessary to ensure that following a disposal, there would be sufficient playing field area to meet the requirements of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1999, and also that there is sufficient land retained to accommodate the possibility of reasonable future expansion of the school.

Where land has transferred to a grant-maintained school from a local authority, my right hon. Friend has power under section 298(2) of the Education Act 1996 to direct that all or part of such land should be returned to the local education authority, or its successor. The return of such land is subject to the payment to the grant-maintained school of whatever consideration, if any, is considered appropriate. Alternatively, my right hon. Friend may direct that some or all of the proceeds of sale should be paid to the local education authority. Each application is considered on its merits.

Engineering Students

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the percentage of female engineering graduates with (a) first degrees and (b) second degrees who gain employment related to their field of study. [70701]

Mr. Mudie: In 1996–97, the total number of women graduating from UK higher education institutions with first degrees in engineering was 2,206. Of those who stayed in the UK after graduation, 34 per cent. went into employment in occupations related to their field of study.

In the same year, 650 women completed post-graduate degrees in engineering. Of those who stayed in the UK after graduation, 39 per cent. went into employment in occupations related to their field of study.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what resources for access funds will be made available for engineering students in further and higher education in England in 1998–99. [70702]

Mr. Mudie: In the current academic year (1998–99) £9 million was allocated to general Further Education Access Funds and £44 million to general Higher Education Access Funds. We have allocated a further £2.8 million this year for fee remission for further and higher education students on part-time courses who have lost their job since beginning their course. The criteria for issue of funds are general and take no account of course subject.

Literacy

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact on standards of literacy in infant, junior and primary schools of the literacy hour. [71067]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Literacy Hour began in infant, junior and primary schools in September 1998. The vast majority of teachers are teaching the daily hour, which has had a considerable impact on teaching methods and organisation of lessons. Evaluations of the pilot National Literacy Project, published in December 1998 by OFSTED and the NFER, confirm that the Literacy Hour is based on teaching methods that will raise standards. Children who started some way below the national average in their reading scores made 8 to 12 months progress above what would normally be expected, in less than two years.

New Deal (Wansdyke)

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young unemployed people aged 18 to 25 years within each local enterprise company area in Wansdyke have entered the New Deal Gateway. [71071]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Dan Norris, dated 12 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply direct to your question about New Deal for 18–24 year old participants in Wansdyke. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

I should say straightaway that it is not possible to give data broken down by local Training and Enterprise Council areas as data is collected by Employment Service Unit of Delivery areas.

The latest Government Statistical Service figures to the end of November 1998 and Provisional Management Information to the end of December 1998 shows that, 634 young people have entered the New Deal for 18–24 year olds in the North Somerset, Bath and North East Somerset Unit of Delivery which covers Wansdyke falls under.

I hope this is helpful.

New Deal (Schools)

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many pupils aged five to 16 years are being educated in schools in the (a) Bath and North East Somerset and (b) South Gloucestershire Council area which have benefited directly from capital building projects under the Government's New Deal for Schools programme; [71074]

(2) how many schools in the (a) Bath and North East Somerset and (b) South Gloucestershire Council area have benefited directly from capital building projects under the Government's New Deal for Schools programme. [71073]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is shown in the following table:

	Number of Schools which have benefited under New Deal for Schools	Estimated number of pupils aged 5–16 years[1] attending schools which have benefited under the New Deal for Schools
Bath and North East Somerset	85	21,357
South Gloucestershire	12	4,019

[1] The number of compulsory school age children as at January 1998 aged 4 to 15 as at 31 August 1997

New Deal (Translation Services)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the cost of providing information and advisory services on the New Deal in (i) Vietnamese, (ii) Chinese and (iii) all languages other than English and Welsh. [71093]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is impossible to give the cost for providing information in each individual language as most publications produced in languages other than English and Welsh are a compilation of English and seven languages. These are Bengali, Cantonese (Chinese), Gujerati, Hindi, Punjabi, Urdu, and Vietnamese. The cost of producing the publications was £73,395.

The cost of providing advisory services to New Deal clients is not broken down by detailed ethnic group.

New Deal (Advertising Costs)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total cost of advertising and marketing of the New Deal programme to date. [71188]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The cost of advertising and marketing New Deal up to 12 February is £12,872,815.

New Deal

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what money was spent on advertising and publicity (a) in total and (b) on television for the New Deal by 31 December 1998. [70548]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 11 February 1999]: Out of a total of £12,501,848 spent and allocated on New Deal marketing and publicity up to 31 December 1998, a sum of £7,897,713 has been spent on television advertising.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what money he plans to spend on advertising and publicity for the New Deal in 1999. [70549]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 11 February 1999]: Plans have still to be finalised for 1999. £1.75 million is provisionally allocated for marketing, advertising and publicity.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many New Deal participants who had moved into employment were no longer in employment on 31 January; [70551]

(2) how many New Deal participants who moved into subsidised employment have left that employment within nine months; [70556]

(3) how many New Deal participants who moved into subsidised employment have left that employment within six months. [70557]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 11 February 1999]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Damian Green, dated 16 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply to your questions on the employment of participants on New Deal for 18–24 year olds. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

Unless an individual returns to the Jobseeker's Allowance, the Employment Service does not have a record of destinations after they have left New Deal from the subsidised employment option or gone into unsubsidised employment. They may, for example, have stayed with the company which provided their placement or moved to another job.

In response to your specific questions we do not therefore hold information on those New Deal participants who have left unsubsidised employment within nine months nor those who were no longer in employment on 31 January. I am, however, able to confirm that of the 12,492 who started on the Employment option between January 1998 and end November 1998, 2041 (16%) left that option within six months of starting it. As you will be aware, the reported statistics are revised to exclude those who do not stay in a New Deal job for 13 weeks—that is they are subsequently not counted as moving into employment.

As part of the overall evaluation of the New Deal we will however be looking at the numbers of young people who have left New Deal and have not returned to Jobseeker's Allowance, using the Evaluation Database. The number of young people who are in jobs 6, 12 and 18 months after they leave the New Deal will be one of the core measures of each area's success.

I hope this is helpful.

Art Foundation Students

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many art foundation course students are undertaking a course in 1998–99 who will subsequently undertake a degree course commencing in 1999 and will be liable to pay tuition fees. [71802]

Mr. Mudie: The data requested are not currently available. Information on the number of students who are undertaking an arts foundation course in 1998–99 will be available in April this year from the Higher Education Statistics Agency.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students have benefited from the exemption from tuition fees for Gap year students. [71801]

Mr. Mudie: The latest available figures from UCAS show that 18,960 UK domiciled students deferred entry to full-time and sandwich undergraduates courses from 1997 to 1998. However, not all of these students will necessarily have their fees paid as part of their mandatory award without reference to their income. The gap year concession applies only to those students who, by 1 August 1997, had received a firm offer of a place on a course deferred until 1998–99, or a conditional offer which was then confirmed when the student met the terms of that offer.

Youth Workers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures the Government will take to ensure an adequate supply of youth workers. [70298]

Mr. Mudie: The supply of trained youth workers is a matter for the relevant training institutions and employing local authorities.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps the Government will take to reduce the geographical disparity in the ratio of youth workers to young people. [70296]

Mr. Mudie: It is for each local authority to decide its priorities and the level of funding for each of the services for which it is responsible, including the youth service, in the light of local needs.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set up a Youth Work Ethics Committee to regulate the youth worker profession. [70297]

Mr. Mudie: The Government have no plans to set up a Youth Work Ethics Committee.

Further Education

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria will be used to allocate money to further education colleges in 1999–2000 from funds designed to replace discretionary grants previously paid to students by local education authorities. [70987]

Mr. Mudie: The criteria for allocating student support funding to colleges in 1999–2000 are still being developed. These will be made clear when allocations are made to colleges in April.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many discretionary awards were made by each local education authority for students in further education in each of the last five years; [70984]

(2) how much was the total allocation of discretionary awards to students in further education by each local education authority in each of the last five years; and what is the budgeted figure for 1998–99 for each authority. [70986]

Mr. Mudie: The numbers of, and expenditure on, discretionary awards made to students in further education by local education authorities in England and Wales in academic years 1992–93 to 1996–97 (latest available) are published in the annual "Statistics of Education, Student Support Volume, England and Wales"—copies of which are in the Library. The publications for 1992–93 and 1993–94 give data on numbers of further education awards in table 10 and data on expenditure in table 11; the equivalent tables for 1994–95 to 1996–97 are 9(a) and 9(b). Information on the budgeted figure for 1998–99 for each authority is not held centrally.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the money allocated to further education colleges in 1999–2000 from funds designed to replace discretionary grants previously paid to students by local education authorities will be ring-fenced for that purpose. [70985]

Mr. Mudie: I can confirm that funding will be allocated to colleges in 1999–2000 specifically for student support and must be used for that purpose.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if all further education colleges will receive an allocation of money from funds designed to replace discretionary grants previously paid to students by local education authorities; [70981]

(2) how much further education colleges in each local authority area will receive in 1999–2000 from funds designed to replace discretionary grants previously paid to students by local education authorities; [70982]

(3) if he will estimate how many colleges will receive money in 1999–2000 to replace discretionary awards previously made by local education authorities, the local authority for which has discontinued discretionary awards; [70983]

(4) how much money will be allocated to further education colleges in Portsmouth from funds designed to replace the money previously paid as discretionary grants. [70988]

Mr. Mudie: Information on the allocation of funding to colleges for student support in 1999–2000 will not be available until April.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current average hourly rate for part-time teaching staff working in further education colleges (a) employed by agencies and (b) employed by further education colleges. [69583]

Mr. Mudie: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current range of (a) starting salaries and (b) salaries at the highest point of the scale for teachers in further education colleges. [69581]

Mr. Mudie: At March 1997, the latest year for which information is available, 80 per cent. of new full-time further education staff in England were paid between £14,000 to £22,200.

Information for the highest paid full-time lecturers in further education cannot be identified because the data available to my department do not distinguish between lecturers and senior staff in further education colleges.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the average salary of teachers in further education colleges for each of the last three years. [69580]

Mr. Mudie: The median salary of full-time lecturers and senior staff in further education colleges in England for each of the last three years for which figures are available were:

March 1995: £21,300

March 1996: £22,400

March 1997: £22,900.

Information on the salaries of part-time lecturers is not available centrally.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of all teaching staff in further education colleges have been employed on part-time or pro-rata contracts in each of the last five years. [69725]

Mr. Mudie: The proportion of part-time teaching staff in further education colleges in England is as follows:

	Percentage
	Part-time
1994–95	59
1995–96	61
1996–97	62

It is not possible to provide data for the last five years as prior to 1994–95 the data were not collected in the format requested.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the proportion of all teaching staff in further education colleges employed on the senior lecturer grade in each of the last five years. [69724]

Mr. Mudie: The information requested is not collected centrally.

School Performance

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to commission research on the impact of socio-economic factors on school performance tables. [66603]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 20 January 1999]: We are currently considering our programme for future research. The impact of socio-economic factors upon school performance is one of the subjects under consideration in this programme.

Secondary School Teachers

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, following implementation of the School Teachers' Review Body's recommendations on salaries for secondary school teachers, what will be the pay differential between the salaries of secondary school teachers and further education college lecturers at the lowest, mid-point and highest points of the salary scale. [69582]

Mr. Mudie: Comparable information on scales in the school and FE sectors is not current available.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70481]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 15 February 1999]: A regional distribution of DfEE staff, including staff in the Employment Service, can be found in Table 3 of "Civil Service Statistics 1998". A copy of this publication is in the Library.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70467]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 15 February 1999]: About half of DfEE staff are located outside London in Sheffield, Darlington, Runcorn and Regional Government Offices. Employment Service staff are located throughout England, Scotland and Wales serving the needs of the unemployed. The appropriate location of DfEE work across the department sites is kept under regular review. The Employment Service is by its nature already decentralised.

Schools (Surplus Places)

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the numbers and percentages of surplus places are in each local education authority in England; and if he will make a statement on his policy on surplus places in schools. [69657]

Mr. Charles Clarke [pursuant to his reply 4 February 1999, c. 709]: There was an error in the primary figures for Lambeth local education authority. Lambeth has 3,442 surplus primary school places, representing 17 per cent. of total capacity, and 10 primary schools with a surplus of 25 per cent. or more, representing 14 per cent. of all schools. This means there were 762,329 surplus school places in January 1998 and 2,530 schools with a surplus of 25 per cent. or more.

Building Works (VAT)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many local authority-partnership schools have basic needs capital building projects starting after 1 April; and what arrangements are in place for local authority-partnership schools to reclaim VAT paid on these projects. [71358]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department does not hold information on how many such schools have basic need projects starting after 1 April 1999. The Department provides additional funding where a local education authority (LEA) can demonstrate that there will be a shortfall of places in an area in the medium term. It is, however, for each LEA to decide how to meet that shortfall, including how many of its existing schools to extend or adapt and what new schools to build. The Department itself provides grant directly to governors of voluntary aided and special agreement schools. We expect to fund 28 projects to meet Basic Need starting after 1 April 1999.

The VAT treatment of capital building projects at schools maintained by LEAs depends upon the precise contractual arrangements in place.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each of the years 1990 to 1998 the number of press releases issued by his Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies. [71485]

Mr. Mudie: The number of press releases issued between 1990 and 1998 for this Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies are as follows:

	Number
Qualifications & Curriculum Authority (QCA)	269
Further Education Funding Council (FEFCE)	194
Higher Education Funding Council (HEFCE)	171
Funding Agency for Schools (FAS)	36
Teacher Training Agency (TTA)	79
Employment Service (ES)	31

[1] Includes figures for the previous bodies (SCAA, SEAC, NCC, NCVQ)

[2] Figures since June 1997. Prior to that date press releases were included in Departmental releases and does not include releases put out regionally by the Employment Service.

These are overall figures. A breakdown of figures year by year between 1990 and 1998 could not be supplied by the agencies concerned as no records were kept.

PRIME MINISTER

Elections

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Prime Minister what advice has been given to civil servants on the conduct of Government business during the forthcoming elections to the Scottish Parliament, the National Assembly for Wales and local councils on 6 May and to the European Parliament on 10 June. [72140]

The Prime Minister: The Government have issued guidance to civil servants on the principles which they should observe in relation to the conduct of Government business in the period before the forthcoming elections.

The guidance stresses that civil servants should conduct themselves in accordance with the Civil Service code and is based on the need to maintain political impartiality of the Civil Service and the need to ensure that public resources are not used for party political purposes.

The guidance will come into force on 13 April for the 6 May elections and on 20 May for the 10 June elections.

Copies of the guidance have been placed in the Libraries of the House, and are also available from the Vote Office.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judge Willis

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the reason for Judge Willis being removed from hearing the case of R. v. Sparkes at the Bristol Crown Court in 1996–97; what advice was afterwards given by the Lord Chancellor to those responsible for the removal; if an apology was given to Judge Willis; and if he will make a statement. [71666]

Mr. Hoon: The circumstances of this matter have so far as possible been fully investigated by the Lord Chancellor. Following a series of related cases being heard by Judge Willis in late 1996, an allegation of bias was made by the prosecution, who proposed to make application to the senior Presiding Judge of the Western Circuit in open court for the appointment of another judge to hear the case of R. v. Sparkes which Judge Willis was due to try. The Presiding Judge was then engaged in a highly publicised trial attracting much press interest. He was of the opinion that no matter how fanciful the substance of the allegation it was undesirable that the application should be made. With (as he understood) the concurrence of the Recorder of Bristol and Judge Willis, he accordingly arranged for another judge to conduct the trial in R. v. Sparkes. He did so knowing that, if the Defence objected, they could apply to have Judge Willis reassigned to the original case. This is what, in the event, happened.

The Lord Chancellor has informed the then Presiding Judge that he does not believe the matter was dealt with as it should have been. An allegation of bias should in his judgment be addressed in open court, or at least with all the parties present in chambers. In some circumstances, such an application might be made to the judge against whom bias is alleged.

Unfortunately, Judge Willis died before the Lord Chancellor had completed his investigations and before any question of any apology could be considered. The Lord Chancellor would however wish to make plain that there was never any ground to question the integrity of the late Judge Willis, which remains wholly untarnished, and the Presiding Judge never for a moment thought otherwise.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Berry: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact on his Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71265]

Mr. Hoon: Consideration has been given to the impact of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and the changes that would be necessary to its practices, policies and procedures. Plans are in place to meet the requirements under the Act both in October 1999 and those parts of the Act due to come into force in 2004. Access to information and the training and awareness of staff have been identified as the key areas where changes will need to be made before October 1999.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71279]

Mr. Hoon: Since the Department does not keep a separate record of all expenditure which can be attributed to spending on disabled people, the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mediation UK

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if his Department intends to support Mediation UK with core funding for 1999–2000. [71543]

Mr. Hoon: This Department does not intend to provide core funding for Mediation UK for the next financial year. It would be inappropriate to fund any particular mediation organisation until the Department's policy towards alternative dispute resolution in non-family civil disputes is settled.

Public Awareness

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to increase public awareness of the work of his Department. [70756]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department has recently published a free booklet called "Working for Justice: A Guide to the Lord Chancellor's Department." Written in clear English and attractively designed and illustrated, it explains the role and functions of the Department, as well as tracing the history of the office of Lord Chancellor. We have printed 70,000 copies and made them available to the public through all courts in England and Wales.

Another recent publication intended to explain succinctly to the public how the department plans to take forward reform of the civil law is "Modernising Justice: A Summary of the Government's Proposals". We have printed 70,000 copies of this publication also, and made it available free of charge through the courts, public libraries and law firms. The White Paper itself is of course also available to the public.

The Lord Chancellor's Department produces an annual report, setting out its policy objectives and expenditure plans. It is available to the public through HMSO bookshops.

The Lord Chancellor's Department Internet website was upgraded last year and covers speeches, civil matters, criminal matters, legal aid, judges, magistrates, the courts, press notices and the department as a whole. There are websites for the Court Service and the Public Trust Office too.

I undertake a regular programme of speeches and talk formally and less formally to a very wide range of people, as does the Lord Chancellor. We take every opportunity to explain the role of the department and to raise awareness of its policies.

Both the Lord Chancellor and I also use the media to put across the importance of the work of the department to as wide an audience as possible. The press office of the Lord Chancellor's Department issues press notices to the local, national and specialist media to keep them informed of all key developments.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70777]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply he received to this question from the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 569.

Census Returns

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many of the post-1920 census returns have been transferred to the Public Record Office; and what would be the impact on staffing and accommodation at the Public Record Office of the transfer of all decennial census returns to the Office 30 years after their creation. [70993]

Mr. Hoon: None of the post-1920 census returns has been transferred to the Public Record Office.

The post-1920 decennial census returns which were created more than 30 years ago occupy about 50 linear kilometres of storage space. If they were transferred to the Public Record Office they would fill up all storage space available now and require the provision of substantial additional accommodation. They would also require an estimated three additional members of staff for maintenance and security.

Substantial additional storage space would also be required for the statutory transfers of records over the next decade or so which they would displace.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about the failure of Registrars General, during the period 1969 to 1985 to transfer census returns to the Public Record Office not later than 30 years after their creation; and (a) when and (b) by whom this failure was first brought to the attention of a Lord Chancellor. [70995]

Mr. Hoon: The census returns in question were not transferred during the period 1969 to 1985 because at that time the advice was that the existence of a statutory bar to disclosure, established by the Census Act 1920, overcame the obligation on departments to transfer their records by the time they were 30 years old. However, the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys wished its retention of the returns to be covered by the Lord Chancellor's approval and this was given in 1985.

This matter was not brought to the attention of a Lord Chancellor since the fact that the records had not been transferred was not then considered to be non-compliance with the provisions of the Public Record Acts.

HEALTH

Residential Care (Appointments)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the qualifications which will apply to applicants for employment as inspectors of residential care homes by Commissions for Care Standards; [70866]

(2) what criteria will be used in the appointment of inspectors of residential care homes by Commissions for Care Standards. [70865]

Mr. Hutton: It will be for Commissions for Care Standards to set out the precise criteria for appointing inspectors, but they will have to recruit suitably fit people with the appropriate qualifications, experience and backgrounds in order to fulfil their regulatory function.

The Department is working with interested parties to identify the occupational standards, qualifications and precise training needs of regulatory staff, and will consider as part of this work how to promote improved training arrangements in advance of the establishment of the Commissions.

Attention Deficit Disorder

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the use of the drug methylphenidate hydrochloride in the treatment of children with attention deficit disorder; what research his Department is funding into side effects of methylphenidate hydrochloride; and if he will make a statement. [70909]

Ms Jowell: Methylphenidate hydrochloride (Ritalin) has been assessed by the normal procedures for authorisation of a medicinal product in the United Kingdom to ensure its quality, safety and efficacy in the indication for use; in this case, the treatment of children over 6 years with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, where remedial measures alone have failed. The marketing authorisation states that it should be part of a comprehensive treatment programme including psychological, educational and social measures, under the supervision of a specialist in childhood behavioural disorders.

As for all medicines, the safety of methylphenidate continues to be monitored by the Medicines Control Agency after it has been marketed. If new safety issues are identified, regulatory action is taken to update the authorised product information or take other appropriate action.

Women (Engineering)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have been held by the Women's Unit with the Engineering Council to discuss ways of increasing the number of women entering the profession. [70705]

Ms Jowell: The women's unit has not held any discussions with the Engineering Council. Work on promoting science and engineering and technology (SET) as rewarding and fulfilling careers for women is taken forward by a specialist unit within the Office of Science and Technology (OST), the Promoting SET for Women Unit. They have an ongoing dialogue with the Engineering Council through the WISE campaign (Women into Science and Engineering). A careers guidance handbook has been published, sponsored by the Department of Trade and Industry and WISE in addition to other key organisations, to help women consider how they might enter the field and plan a career within it. My noble Friend Lord Sainsbury recently hosted a reception in the House of Lords to promote the WISE campaign to a wider audience and seek further support, in particular from industry. OST will shortly be meeting with the chief executive of the Engineering Council and the WISE Campaign manager, the Women's Engineering Society and the Association of Women in Science and Engineering to look at the work of their organisations and of the Promoting SET for the women unit and to consider possible future collaboration.

Allergy Services

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of allergy services. [71690]

Mr. Hutton: The Department recognises the concerns expressed over the services available for the assessment and treatment of allergies in the National Health Service. Officials will soon be meeting representatives of the British Society for Allergy and Clinical Immunology and other relevant professional and patient support bodies to discuss the future of allergy services. The Society will be proposing an agenda for this meeting based on their preliminary discussions with the other interested parties.

The Advisory Group on Medical Education and Training, chaired by the Chief Medical Officer, is currently considering an application from the Royal College of Physicians' Joint Committee on Higher Medical Training for the recognition of allergy as a clinical specialty in its own right.

Doctors

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of (1) the number of doctors practising in the NHS who are overseas trained and (ii) the percentage they constitute of the medical workforce; what estimate he has made of the number who will retire in the next 10 years; and what assessment he has made of the impact this will have on the need for (a) overseas recruitment and (b) increased training places in the United Kingdom; [71803]

(2) what estimate he has made of the (i) number and (ii) percentage of general practitioners in the NHS who are overseas trained; and what estimate he has made of the number who will retire in the next 10 years. [71804]

Mr. Denham: The autumn 1997 headcount of doctors in the National Health Service in England showed that there were 86,960 general practitioners (unrestricted principals) and hospital doctors, of whom 19,070 (22 per cent.) qualified outside the European Economic Area (EEA). Within these figures, there were 27,100 GPs (unrestricted principals), of whom 4,530 (17 per cent.) qualified outside the EEA.

It seems reasonable to assume that most of the doctors who will retire in the next decade will be drawn from the current stock of doctors who are aged 50 or over. The numbers in this category were as follows:

	Total	Qualified outside the EEA
GPs (unrestricted principals)	8,070	3,130
Hospital doctors	11,310	3,570
Totals	19,380	6,700

Notes:

1. Figures quoted are rounded to the nearest 10
2. Totals may not equal sum of components due to rounding

Source:

Department of Health Medical and Dental Workforce Census, 30 September 1997

Department of Health General Medical Statistics, 1 October 1997

Intake to undergraduate medical schools in the United Kingdom has risen steadily in the past decade. The Government have accepted the recommendation of the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee, that the intake should increase further, by nearly 20 per cent. over the next few years. This should mean a steady growth in the supply of UK-trained doctors, well into the next century. None the less, it seems likely that supply will be supplemented by a range of recruitment and retention initiatives, for example, the salaried GPs scheme and further overseas recruitment, where required.

NHS Staff (Pay)

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans [illegible] to introduce parity in pay rises between NHS sta[illegible]ed by the Pay Review Body and those outside the [illegible] Review Body, and if he will make a statement. [71807]

Mr. Denham: We have signalled clearly that the award for nurses and the Professions Allied to Medicine is a special case and should not be seen as a yardstick for other National Health Service staff. We will open negotiations soon with non-review body staff groups and will seek a fair settlement which reflects labour market conditions.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average current starting salary for (a) a graduate nurse and (b) a graduate entrant Medical Laboratory Scientific Officer with a BSc degree. [71809]

Mr. Denham: The current minimum starting salary for newly qualified nurses, including graduate nurses, is £12,855. This is the minimum point on the Grade D salary scale, the maximum point on the scale being £14,705.

The current minimum starting salary for a graduate entrant Medical Laboratory Scientific Officer with a Bachelor of Science degree is £7,476. This is the minimum point on the trainee MLSO salary scale, the maximum point being £9,796.

The current minimum starting salary for a qualified MLSO, with BSc degree plus post-registration training, is £11,812. This is the minimum point on MLSO1 salary scale, the maximum point being £15,546.

Employers have the freedom to place a nurse or a MLSO on any point of their appropriate salary scale.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to change the national Framework Agreement of 1995 for NHS staff; and if he will make a statement. [71808]

Mr. Denham: We published "Agenda for Change", our proposals for modernising the NHS pay system, on Monday 15 February. We are opening talks with NHS professional and staff organisations on the basis of this agenda.

Prescriptions

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of branded drugs prescribed by GPs in 1997–98 was prescribed by dispensing practices and what proportion by non-dispensing practices; [71568]

(2) what proportion of (a) all drugs and (b) branded drugs prescribed by GPs were prescribed by dispensing practices in 1997–98. [71570]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

Percentage of items prescribed in general practice[1] in England and dispensed in the community by prescriber, 1997–98[2]

	Prescriber
	Prescribing practices[3] (%)	Dispensing practices[4] (%)
Branded, ie non-generic items[5]	82	18
All items	91	9

[1] Information for items prescribed and dispensed in National Health Service hospitals is not available.

[2] The prescription information was obtained from the Prescribing Analyses and Cost (PACT) system and is based on a full analysis of all prescriptions written by general practitioners and practice nurses in England which are dispensed in England, Wales, Scotland, Northern Ireland and the Isle of Man. All figures exclude dressings and appliances.

[3] Drugs prescribed by prescribing practices which are dispensed by community pharmacists.

[4] Includes drugs prescribed by dispensing practices which are dispensed by community pharmacists.

[5] In PACT, prescription items can be prescribed generically, and recorded as a generic, but dispensed and reimbursed as a proprietary because a generic does not exist. The percentage of non generic drugs prescribed in the reply does not include these items.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the average consultation rates of (a) a prescribing GP and (b) a dispensing GP. [71572]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of drugs expenditure in 1997–98 was on branded drugs; [71591]

(2) what proportion of drugs prescribed in 1997–98 was branded. [71575]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

Items prescribed in general practice[1] in England and dispensed in the community, 1997–98

	Per cent.
Percentage of net ingredients cost[2] of prescription items which were branded, i.e. non generic drugs	49
Percentage of prescription items which were branded, i.e. non generic	37

[1] Information for items prescribed and dispensed in National Health Service hospitals is not available.

[2] The net ingredient cost is the basic cost of a drug. This cost does not take account of discounts, dispensing costs, fees or prescription charge income.

Source:

PPA, Prescribing Analyses and Cost (PACT) system

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of drugs were prescribed in 1997–98 in hospitals and by GPs. [71569]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available. Data for items prescribed in National Health Service hospitals are not held centrally.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total overspend in 1997–98 of health authority-administered Family Health Service drugs budgets. [71573]

Mr. Denham: In 1997–98, health authorities overspent their Family Health Service drugs budget by a net total of £69 million.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average list size of (a) a prescribing GP and (b) a dispensing GP. [71571]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

Average list sizes for dispensing and non-dispensing unrestricted principals in England as at 1 October 1997

Unrestricted principals[1]	Average list size
Dispensing[2]	1,734
Non-dispensing	1,905

[1] An Unrestricted Principal is a practitioner who is in contract with a health authority to provide the full range of general medical services and whose list is not limited to any particular group of persons. Most people have an Unrestricted Principal as their general practitioner.

[2] A dispensing doctor is one who is authorised to prescribe and dispense prescriptions for patients who either have difficulty reaching a chemist due to inadequate means of transportation or who live in a rural area. The average list size for dispensing doctors includes all patients on the doctors' lists, not just those to whom the doctor is authorised to dispense.

Source:

Department of Health General Medical Services Statistics 1 October 1997

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) dispensing and (b) non-dispensing GPs there were at the latest available date. [71567]

Mr. Denham: There were 4,263 dispensing and 22,836 non-dispensing general practitioners at 1 October 1997.

Source:

Department of Health General Medical Statistics 1 October 1997.

NHS Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all appointments as (a) chairman and (b) non-executive director of (i) health authorities and (ii) trusts, made since 1 May 1997 where an elected member of a local authority has been appointed; and if he will give the party affiliation in each case. [71667]

Mr. Denham: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list elected members of local authorities who have been appointed to serve on primary care groups stating (a) the party affiliation and (b) the (i) fee and (ii) allowances payable in each case. [71668]

Mr. Denham: Information on primary care group board members who are also elected members of local authorities is not available centrally. Information on the fees and allowances payable to primary care group board members is contained in Health Service Circular 1998/190, copies of which are available in the Library.

Detailed information on the composition of primary care group board members is currently being collected and will be made public as soon as possible.

Carers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each local authority (a) the amount of grant that will be payable in each year to support the National Carers Strategy, (b) the estimated number of carers and (c) the product of dividing (a) by (b). [71104]

Mr. Hutton: As one part of the carers strategy, we have announced a new special grant to local authorities of £140 million over three years to improve the range and diversity of provision aimed at giving carers a break. Under community care legislation, this provision can be made only for carers who are caring for someone assessed as needing community care services. A special grant report, listing the allocations for each local authority for the carers' grant, will be laid before Parliament shortly. Information is not currently available to allow an estimate to be made of the number of such carers in each local authority area.

Diet

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action the Government have taken to promote healthier diets; [70130]

(2) what action the Government have taken to provide information in deprived areas on the recommended daily intake of fruit and vegetables. [70131]

Ms Jowell: Diet is a matter of personal choice. However, we recognise that it is important that people have the information they need to decide what they want to eat. Our aim, therefore, is to provide clear, consistent and understandable advice to help them make healthy eating choices. For these reasons we fund the Health Education Authority to produce information and advice to increase the knowledge and skills of key professional groups to promote the principles of healthy eating and also to improve consumers' understanding of a healthy diet. "The Balance of Good Health" has been instrumental in improving awareness of a healthy and balanced diet as it illustrates in a simple way, by using a picture of a plate, the proportions of the balance of foods recommended by independent experts.

As part of the work which the Health Education Authority undertakes on promoting healthy eating, it has established, in partnership with the National Food Alliance, a food and low income database. This provides information about projects which have been established in response to difficulties which some communities have experienced in accessing fruit and vegetables. On my recent visit to Coventry, I saw one good example of such an initiative. Also using funding provided by the Department of Health, the National Food Alliance and the Health Education Authority together ran a series of regional seminars to bring together those working in the food and low income field to exchange best practice in planning, developing and carrying out community food initiatives and help others new to the field.

More generally, I am the lead Minister for the policy action team which is charged with developing a strategy for improving shopping access for people living in deprived neighbourhoods. This is one of eighteen policy action teams which have been established following the publication of the Social Exclusion Unit's report on neighbourhood renewal last September. The policy action team aims to develop integrated and sustainable approaches on improving shopping access for those living in deprived neighbourhoods.

Food (Salt)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to require manufacturers of pre-packed and pre-cooked meals to reduce the levels of salt in their food. [70132]

Ms Jowell: There is a large body of authoritative opinion that the amount of salt in the national diet is unnecessarily high, and we have therefore asked officials in the Department to explore with the food industry the scope for reducing the levels of salt in processed foods. Pending these discussions, we have no plans to require this from manufacturers.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71463]

Ms Jowell: The Department adheres to the Access of Information Code of Practice. The Department continually reviews the most cost effective methods for issuing press releases, however, no separate costing is available, as the cost is absorbed within the expenditure for running the Department's Communications Directorate.

The following figures are the press releases issued since May 1997:

May-December 1997: 320

1998: 556

January-12 February 1999: 71.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many press releases have been issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71448]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is in the table.

The table indicates all press releases issued for the requested period 1990 to 1998. The Department's press office issues press releases on behalf of the Medical Devices Agency, Medicines Control Agency, National Health Service Pensions Agency, National Health Service Estates and some non-departmental public bodies.

Year	Total
1990	484
1991	529
1992	454
1993	683
1994	610
1995	588
1996	366
1997	406
1998	556

Viagra

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will seek to recover the cost of prescribing Viagra from those doctors who do so ahead of the Government's recommendations at the end of the consultation period; and if he will make a statement. [71193]

Mr. Denham: No. Viagra (sildenafil) is not included on either Schedule 10 or 11 of the National Health Service (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992 and it would not be expected that such action would be taken unless, as in any other case, recovery of an amount were to be due by virtue of other provisions relating to general practitioners and their terms of service.

Beta-interferon

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with health authorities regarding the prescribing of beta-interferon; what medical advice he has received regarding the benefits of that drug; what percentage of health authorities prescribe this drug; and if he will make a statement. [71192]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no discussions with health authorities regarding the prescribing of beta-interferon.

Clinical advice from the Standing Medical Advisory Committee on the use of beta-interferon-1b in relapsing-remitting multiple sclerosis in adults was included in guidance issued to health authorities in November 1995 to help the National Health Service prepare for the introduction of beta-interferon for the treatment of multiple sclerosis (Executive Letter (95) 97). This included advice that general practitioners should be encouraged not to prescribe beta-interferon themselves, and instead refer patients who apparently fulfil the indications for this form of treatment to a hospital neurologist.

The majority of beta-interferon prescribing should therefore take place in hospitals. Hospital prescribing and dispensing data are not held centrally.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

East Timor

16. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had about the future of East Timor. [69437]

Mr. Fatchett: We remain committed to the UN process of searching for a solution to the East Timor problem. We are in regular touch with the Indonesian and Portuguese foreign ministers and the UN Secretary-General's Special Representative on East Timor, Jamsheed Marker. We welcome the recent Indonesian government announcement that East Timor might reach independence and hope it will prove to be a turning point.

24. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indonesian Government about military activity in East Timor since their offer of independence for the territory. [69445]

Mr. Fatchett: We are concerned at reports of growing tension in East Timor. We have been in regular touch with the Indonesian government about the situation there since their announcement that East Timor might reach independence.

Windward Islands

17. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the policy of the Government towards the Windward Islands. [69438]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We continue to have very good relations with the Windward Islands, and to maintain permanent representation in three of them. We continue to encourage increased efficiency in the banana industry and promote diversification. We are working through the WTO to try to resolve the dispute with the US over the revised EU banana regime.

Cyprus

18. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in reaching a settlement in Cyprus. [69439]

Ms Quin: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier in the House today to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) and the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson), Official Report, column 723.

25. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress on the Cypriot application for membership of the European Union. [69446]

Ms Quin: The enlargement process is on track. For Cyprus (and the five Central European states considered ready) substantive negotiations on the first seven chapters of the Union acquis began on 10 November. We support the German Presidency's aim of opening negotiations on half of the 31 chapters with these countries by the Cologne Council in June.

UN Committee 661

19. Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the remit of United Nations Committee 661 in relation to sanctions on Iraq. [69440]

Mr. Fatchett: The Government fully support the crucial role of the United Nations Committee established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 661 in monitoring and implementing sanctions against Iraq, including humanitarian exemptions and relief under the Oil for Food programme.

We took the lead last year in proposing improvements to the procedures of the Sanctions Committee to increase the effectiveness of the Oil for Food programme. According to the latest reports, this programme is having ever greater success in ensuring that humanitarian supplies reach those who need them.

Middle East Peace Process

20. Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to support the middle east peace process; and if he will make a statement. [69441]

28. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to assist the middle east peace process. [R] [69449]

36. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had concerning the middle eastern peace process with middle eastern Governments; and if he will make a statement. [69457]

Mr. Robin Cook: Together with our EU partners we have deplored the failure to complete the implementation of the Wye River Memorandum within the declared deadline, and we continue to urge both sides to implement their obligations in full and without new conditions.

The peace process lost one of its leading advocates with the death of His Majesty King Hussein bin Talal of Jordan on 7 February. The finest tribute to his memory would be to get the peace process back on track.

Last week's visit to the region by German Foreign Minister Fischer as European Council Presidency was a welcome opportunity for us to explore ways that Europe can support the peace process.

International Criminal Court

21. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the development of the International Criminal Court. [69442]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Seventy-five States, including the UK, have signed the Statute of the International Criminal Court, and one—Senegal—has ratified it. We intend that the UK should be among the first sixty States to ratify. The first meeting of the Preparatory Commission for the Court begins today in New York. The Government will continue to lobby for international support for the Court, and will play a full part in the work of the Preparatory Commission.

Iran

22. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet representatives of the Iranian Government to discuss restoration of full diplomatic relations. [69443]

29. Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his last meeting with the Government of Iran. [69450]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's last meeting with a representative of the Iranian government was with Foreign Minister Kharrazi at the United Nations in New York in September. He and Dr. Kharrazi have subsequently spoken on the telephone. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans to meet representatives of the Iranian government in the immediate future.

Yemen

23. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he will take to ensure that British citizens arrested in Yemen receive a fair trial. [69444]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary left Prime Minister Iryani in no doubt about our serious concern that the British nationals arrested in Yemen be subject to the due process of law in open court, with our consular staff in attendance. We have discussed our concerns with Prime Minister Iryani on three separate occasions. The trial began on 27 January. We are monitoring the proceedings.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from other countries concerning the situation in Yemen. [70398]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has received no representations from other countries about the situation in Yemen, but has stayed in close touch with the Yemenis.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are currently in detention in Yemen. [70397]

Mr. Fatchett: On 16 February 1999 there were eight British nationals in trial in Yemen.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate how many British citizens are currently in Yemen. [70396]

Mr. Fatchett: There are 373 British nationals currently registered with the British Embassy in Sana'a. Allowing for others not registered it is estimated that the total number of British nationals based in Yemen may be around 400.

World Bank

26. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next meet the President of the World bank to discuss its new programme of public-private partnerships. [69447]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary have current plans to meet with the President of the World Bank.

The UK is a key source of funding for the World Bank's Public Private Infrastructure Advisory Facility and the Business Partners for Development scheme.

Mongolia

27. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with Mongolia. [69448]

Mr. Fatchett: Britain enjoys a very warm relationship with Mongolia. We have supported fully Mongolia's transition to democracy, and commend the Mongolian Government's commitment to achieving a market economy. Our educational and cultural links are strong and bilateral trade has increased. We hope that the relationship will continue to develop in all areas.

Kosovo

30. Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about progress towards a political settlement in Kosovo. [69451]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Contact Group Foreign Ministers met in Paris at the weekend to assess progress in the Kosovo peace talks. Although progress has been slower than we had hoped, the two parties remain engaged and we agreed to allow them a further week in which to conclude negotiations. It is now crucial that they reach agreement on the difficult issues outstanding.

Provided that the parties live up to their responsibilities to reach an interim settlement, the international community is willing to devote significant civilian and military resources to helping the people of Kosovo rebuild their lives in conditions of security. But we will hold both sides accountable if they fail to take this opportunity.

St. Malo Agreement

31. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with European partners about the St. Malo agreement on security and foreign policy. [69452]

Ms Quin: At St. Malo, we agreed with the French Government the principles which any new European defence arrangements should observe. Other European partners welcomed those ideas at the European Council in Vienna. Since then, there have been numerous contact at official level with both EU partners and NATO Allies to pursue detailed work.

Somaliland

32. Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Somaliland. [69453]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We do not recognise the region of Somalia known as "Somaliland" as an independent sovereign state.

Although we do recognise the Republic of Somalia, we do not maintain diplomatic relations there in the absence of a Government.

However, our Ambassador and his staff in Addis Ababa do maintain an unofficial dialogue with the self-proclaimed Government of Somaliland.

Agenda 2000

33. Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the proposals for EU enlargement under Agenda 2000; and if he will make a statement. [69454]

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about progress on EU enlargement under Agenda 2000. [69579]

Ms Quin: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave in the House earlier today on this subject, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Watts), Official Report, column 715.

Iraq (Kurds)

34. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what political support Her Majesty's Government are giving to the Kurds of northern Iraq; and if he will make a statement on his Department's contacts with the Kurdish political parties. [69455]

Mr. Fatchett: As one of the co-sponsors of the Ankara Peace Process, we support the building of peace and stability for the Kurds in Iraq. RAF aircraft continue to participate in Operation Northern Watch, which plays a major role in protecting the people of northern Iraq from repression. Our bilateral aid programme for northern Iraq amounts to some £3 million a year.

We have kept in close contact with the Kurdish Diplomatic Party and Patriotic Union of Kurdistan as their leaders have worked towards reconciliation. We remain ready to assist that process in any way we can. We welcomed the agreement reached in Washington in September 1998 and have discussed with the parties' leaders here in London how we can help make the agreement work in practice. In addition to regular meetings with representatives of these and other Iraqi Kurdish groups in London, officials from our Embassy in Ankara also make periodic visits to northern Iraq to meet Kurdish leaders.

European Institutions (Reform)

35. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about reform of the European institutions; and if he will make a statement. [69456]

Ms Quin: The Government have received representations on institutional reform both in contacts with partners and from non-governmental organisations. The Cologne European Council will take the next step by deciding how and when to tackle the institutional issues not resolved at Amsterdam.

Nuclear Disarmament

37. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to promote global nuclear disarmament; and if he will make a statement. [69458]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government set out their approach to nuclear disarmament in the Strategic Defence Review in July 1998. We intend to be a constructive actor in the nuclear disarmament process, using our influence to move it forward where we can. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence set out in his Parliamentary answer of 2 November 1998, Official Report, columns 414–15, the steps this Government have already taken in this area.

The highest priorities now are promoting the ratification of START II by the Russian Duma; securing entry into force of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty; and the negotiation of a Fissile Material Cut-Off Treaty.

Environmental Issues

38. Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the steps taken by his Department to support international work on environmental issues. [69459]

Mr. Fatchett: They are many and varied: we are working in international fora, including G8 and CHOGM, with colleagues from other Departments to achieve better protection of the international environment and sustainable use of natural resources. Under our Presidency of the EU, we achieved our objective at the European Council in June 1998 of agreement to integrate the environment into all areas of EU policy-making. We co-funded, with DfID, a successful Caribbean marine biodiversity workshop co-chaired with Jamaica in October 1998. We have contributed to the leading role the British Government have been able to take in international environmental negotiations, for example the climate change conference in Buenos Aires in November 1998. We are now building a closer relationship with business and NGO's on the environment, through our FCO/Business Energy Challenge, and our programme to support small environmental projects.

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cumulative cost incurred by his Department for ministerial use of RAF and chartered aircraft in the year to 1 May 1997. [69074]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The total cumulative cost of ministerial use of RAF and chartered aircraft in the year to 1 May 1997 was just over £1.006 million.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the name of the 16 year-old Iraqi youth, imprisoned since the age of five years for throwing a stone at a picture of Saddam Hussein, to whom he has referred in public statements. [69786]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 8 February 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary never purported to know the boy by name. He received an account, in good faith, of this episode. On the basis of what he already knew of Saddam Hussein's regime he found it convincing and in character. I refer my hon. Friend to the report of September 1998 of the UN Special Rapporteur on Iraq, Mr. Max Van Der Stoel, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what reports he has received of an incident on 3 February in Idi Cut, East Aceh in which Indonesian soldiers opened fire on civilians; and what representations he has made to the Indonesian Government on this incident; [70600]

(2) if he will express to the Indonesian Government the British Government's concern about armed violence in Aceh; and if he will request the Indonesian authorities to reduce the number of military personnel in Aceh. [70599]

Mr. Fatchett: We have received reports of a serious incident on 3 February in the village of Idi Cut, East Aceh, in which soldiers opened fire on a crowd. A number of deaths have been confirmed. Where there is evidence of serious human rights violations in Indonesia, we continue to raise our concerns in robust terms with the Indonesian Government.

Pakistan

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent of persecution of minority (a) political parties and (b) religions in Pakistan. [70376]

Mr. Fatchett: We are monitoring the situation closely. I made clear during my visit last week our concern at reports of abuses against minorities.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will raise in bilateral talks with the Government of Pakistan the extent to which the fundamental rights guaranteed by the country's constitution are being honoured; and what steps he is taking to seek to ensure these rights are honoured. [70375]

Mr. Fatchett: I raised this issue with Pakistan's Minister of Law on 8 February. He told me that he was concerned that all Pakistanis received the rights granted to them under the constitution. We will continue to follow this issue closely.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from officials in Pakistan about the growth of Muslim extremism in Pakistan; and what assessment he has made of its possible effects on Anglo-Pakistan relations. [70371]

Mr. Fatchett: Our Missions report on all aspects of Pakistan. Our relations with Pakistan are deep-rooted and friendly. An objective of our regular bilateral dialogue is to ensure this remains the case.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department made to the Pakistan Government during the visit to Pakistan by the Minister of State between 8 and 10 February, concerning the suppression of the Daily Jang newspaper; and if he will make a statement. [71184]

Mr. Fatchett: On 8 February I expressed concern to the Minister of Law that the Pakistan Government's dispute with the Jang Group threatened to undermine press freedom and democracy. The Minister replied that freedom of speech and an independent press were separately guaranteed under Pakistan's Constitution. We will continue to monitor the situation closely.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to call for the expulsion of Zimbabwe from the Commonwealth. [70577]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have no plans to call for Zimbabwe's expulsion from the Commonwealth. Such action is a matter for the Commonwealth as a whole.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the state of governance in Zimbabwe. [70582]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We receive regular reports on developments in Zimbabwe. There is clearly cause for concern in a number of areas, chiefly the economy, Zimbabwe's involvement in the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and recent human rights abuses.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a British minister last met President Mugabe; and what was discussed. [70581]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I met President Mugabe on 4 December 1998. We discussed the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo, land redistribution in Zimbabwe and human rights. I also briefed him on the UK's position on Libya/Lockerbie.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to President Mugabe following his recent broadcast on state television on possible action against the judiciary and others. [70583]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We had already made representations, here and in Harare, about recent human rights abuses in Zimbabwe, including the detention of Mr. Chavunduka and Mr. Choto, and the disturbing allegations that they were tortured while in army detention.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to President Mugabe about the detention of the journalists Mark Chavunduka and Ray Choto. [70584]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government are shocked by the detention and apparent torture of Mr. Chavunduka and Mr. Choto by the military authorities in Zimbabwe, and applauds the prompt action by the judiciary in ordering Mr. Chavunduka's release. I have already sought assurances from the Zimbabwe Government that it will take swift action to investigate these serious allegations; and to bring the perpetrators to justice. We have also made representations on these lines with our European Union partners in Harare.

We await a formal response from the Government of Zimbabwe.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contingency plans his Department has to protect British citizens in Zimbabwe. [70585]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: All diplomatic missions overseas prepare contingency plans where there is a potential threat to the safety of the British community from civil unrest or a deterioration in the security situation. We currently hold such a plan for Zimbabwe.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Commonwealth Secretariat about civil rights abuses in Zimbabwe. [70586]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: None. I have made representations direct to the Government of Zimbabwe.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last called in the Zimbabwean Ambassador to protest about civil rights abuses in Zimbabwe. [70587]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On 22 January we summoned the Acting High Commissioner for Zimbabwe, to protest about the detention and apparent torture of Mark Chavunduka and Ray Choto. We made it clear that we expect the Zimbabwe Government to uphold international human rights standards, and quickly to investigate allegations of abuse.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Zimbabwe about allegations of torture and harassment of journalists in Zimbabwe. [69726]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government are shocked by the detention and apparent torture of Mr. Chavunduka and Mr. Choto by the military authorities in Zimbabwe, and applaud the prompt action by the judiciary in ordering Mr. Chavunduka's release. I have already sought assurances from the Zimbabwe Government that they will take swift action to investigate these serious allegations; and to bring perpetrators to justice. We have also made representations on these lines with our European Union partners in Harare.

We await a formal response from the Government of Zimbabwe.

King Leka

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government about the arrest and detention of former King Leka of Albania. [70576]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have made no such representations to the South African Government. This is a matter for the South African judicial system.

Party Political Conferences

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the treaty base which permits the Commission representation in the United Kingdom to participate at party political conferences. [70603]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Commission representation in the United Kingdom attends party political conferences as an international visitor, on the same basis as other international organisations and representatives of other countries. Invitations to attend these conferences are a matter for the political party concerned. No specific Treaty base is required.

Gibraltar (Border Delays)

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) of 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 703, if he will make a statement on the border delays which have occurred at Gibraltar since the agreement between the Government of Gibraltar and Spanish fishermen. [70665]

Ms Quin: Since 3 February there have been delays at the border between Gibraltar and Spain which have, on occasion, reached up to five hours. Such delays are unjustifiable and unacceptable. The Embassy in Madrid has raised this issue on several occasions recently with the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs. We have made it clear to the Spanish authorities that we look to them to allow movement across the border in conformity with EU obligations.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the current waiting times in each queue for entry to the United Kingdom in (a) Bombay, (b) New Delhi, (c) Islamabad and (d) Dhaka. [70395]

Mr. Fatchett: The latest available figures show that in Bombay, New Delhi, Islamabad and Dhaka an average of 97 per cent. of applicants for non-settlement visas, whose applications are straightforward, receive their visas within 24 hours of applying.

The current (10 February) waiting times for an interview in connection with an application for settlement in the United Kingdom, in Bombay, New Delhi, Islamabad and Dhaka are as follows (figures are in weeks):

	Dependent relatives over 65; compassionate cases	Spouses children under 18	Fiance(e)s other settlement categories	Re-applied
Bombay	nil	8	8	8
New Delhi	nil	14	23	29
Islamabad	7	27	28	32
Dhaka	16	28	32	36

The current waiting times for an interview (Tier 3) in connection with a non-settlement application is as follows (in days):

	Days
Bombay	nil
New Delhi	nil
Islamabad	[1]15
Dhaka	nil

[1] Wherever possible urgent compassionate cases are interviewed on day of application

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average length of time a person applying for entry clearance for settlement at each post in the Indian subcontinent and in (1) Manila, (2) Bangkok, (3) Lagos, (4) Abuja, (5) Accra, (6) St. Petersburg and (7) Moscow who was interviewed in (i) December 1997, (ii) June 1998 and (iii) December 1998 waited before interview, in each queue; and how long a person who applied in (A) June 1998, (B) September 1998, (C) December 1998 and (D) January 1999 can be expected to wait, at the same posts and in each queue. [70743]

Mr. Fatchett: The statistics that are collected centrally could not provide accurate figures to reply to the first part of my hon. Friend's question. A comprehensive reply could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The statistics requested in the second part of my hon. Friend's question are as follows.

Post average waiting time for settlement interview at the end of each month (in weeks)

	June 1998	September 1998	December 1998	January 1999
Islamabad
Q1	10	6	7	7
Q2	17	17	26	27
Q3	26	24	28	28
Q4	30	28	32	32
Karachi	17	16	11	6
Dhaka
Q1	14	15	16	16
Q2	16	18	22	28
Q3	14	14	14	n/a
Q4	20	22	32	36
Calcutta	5	1	0	n/a
New Delhi
Q1	0	0	0	0
Q2	15	17	12	12
Q3	23	25	25	24
Q4	30	32	32	20
Bombay
Q1	0	0	0	0
Q2	10	12	12	8
Q3	10	12	12	8
Q4	10	12	12	8
Madras	4	3	5	5
Colombo	4	7	4	2
Manila	8	6	6	n/a
Bangkok	8	7	3	7
Lagos	6	11	5	3
Abuja	3	12	7	5.5
Accra	20	17	3	7.2
St. Petersburg	5	1	2	n/a
Moscow	1.5	2	4	0

Notes:

Q1 = Dependent relatives over 65; special compassionate cases

Q2 = Spouses, children under 18

Q3 = Fiancé(e)s; other settlement categories

Q4 = Reapplicants

n/a = Not applicable

Bangladesh (British High Commissioner)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to announce the name of the new British High Commissioner in Bangladesh. [70400]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We aim to announce Ambassadorial, Governor and High Commissioner appointments three months before the appointment is taken up. In the case of Dhaka, the present High Commissioner, Mr. David Walker, is due to leave post towards the end of 1999.

Migration and Visa Correspondence Unit

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last visited the Migration and Visa Correspondence Unit. [70399]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not visited the Migration and Visa Correspondence Unit (MVCU). However, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons, who has responsibility for entry clearance matters, last visited MVCU in May 1997. My noble Friend also has regular contact with MVCU about specific visa cases, and addresses Entry Clearance training courses.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70410]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 11 February 1999]: The National Assets Register published in November 1997 gave details of asset holdings as at 1 April 1997. Since that date the FCO has sold 58 overseas estate assets and 181 vehicles. Details are as listed. Total proceeds amounted to £12.65m. Property sales in the pipeline are expected to realise a further £40m.

The FCO sale of assets—Property from 1 April 1997 to date

Country		Description	Number of sales	Proceeds (£000)
New Zealand	Wellington	Dwelling	1	58
Namibia	Windhoek	Dwelling	1	61
Lesotho	Maseru	Land	2	54
France	Paris	Dwelling	11	1,011
		Residence	1	1,661
	Marseilles	Residence	1	691
South Africa	Johannesburg	Dwelling	3	100
	Cape Town	Dwelling	1	296
	Pretoria	Dwelling	1	135
Holland	The Hague	Dwelling	3	226
Zambia	Lusaka	Dwelling	4	272
Spain	Madrid	Dwelling	1	91
Mozambique	Maputo	Dwelling	1	82
Switzerland	Zurich	Residence	1	1,086
	Geneva	Dwelling	4	983
Argentina	Buenos Aires	Dwelling	1	65
Zimbabwe	Harare	Dwelling	1	32
Finland	Helsinki	Dwelling	3	541
Guyana	Georgetown	Dwelling	1	145
Solomon Isles	Honiara	Dwelling	1	53
Germany	Berlin	Land	1	127

The FCO sale of assets—Property from 1 April 1997 to date

Country		Description	Number of sales	Proceeds (£000)
Portugal	Oporto	Land	1	781
Trinidad	Port of Spain	Dwelling	1	162
Columbia	Bogota	Offices	1	539
		Dwelling	1	46
Morocco	Casablanca	Offices	1	863
Swaziland	Mbabane	Dwelling	1	29
Norway	Oslo	Dwelling	1	201
Canada	Ottawa	Dwelling	2	672
Ecuador	Quito	Residence	1	188
		Land	1	135
Australia	Canberra	Dwelling	1	141
Iceland	Reykjavik	Dwelling	1	42
Albania	Tirana	Dwelling	1	65
			Proceeds	£11.63m

Vehicles

(From 1 April 1997 to 30 September 1998. The latest date for which information is available)

Heavy Commercial	5
Light Commercial	34
Motor Cars	142
		Proceeds	£1.02m
		Total Proceeds	£12.65m

Russia (Anti-semitism)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on anti-semitism in Russia. [70949]

Ms Quin: Her Majesty's Government share the wide public and parliamentary concern about recent anti-semitic statements in Russia. We have told the Russian authorities that racial intolerance and extremist political activities are wholly unacceptable and most recently last week I raised this with the Chairman of President Yeltsin's Commission on Human Rights. We look to the Russian government and the regional administrations to take firm action to deal with anti-semitism, and we welcome the strong condemnation of racial intolerance by President Yeltsin in November last year.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made to the Russian Government consequent upon anti-semitic attacks on Marina Roshcha synagogue and Vostryakovskoye cemetery last year. [70950]

Ms Quin: The British Ambassador in Moscow and, at our instigation, the EU Presidency, have made strong representations about the anti-semitism in Russia, but have not specifically referred to these attacks. We and our EU partners made clear to the Presidential Administration, the Communist leadership and the Duma that anti-semitism is wholly unacceptable. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary will reinforce these messages personally when he visits Russia. We welcome President Yeltsin's condemnation of the attack on the Marina synagogue.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Russian Government concerning statements on Zionism made in December 1998 by the leader of the Communist Party. [70951]

Ms Quin: The British Ambassador in Moscow raised our concerns about anti-semitism in Russia with both the Presidential Administration and Mr. Zyuganov himself before the Communist leader's statement of 23 December. At our instigation, the EU Presidency in Moscow expressed EU concerns to Deputy Foreign Minister Gussarov on 28 January, and will follow up shortly with Mr. Zyuganov.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Russian Government on anti-semitism in Russia. [70948]

Ms Quin: The British Ambassador made representations to the Presidential Administration on 3 December; the leader of the Communist Party, Gennady Zyuganov on 4 December; and Deputy Foreign Minister Avdeev on 15 January. At our instigation, the EU Presidency formally raised it with Deputy Prime Minister Gussarov on 28 January. I also expressed our concerns to President Yeltsin's Human Rights adviser, Professor Kartashkin, on 11 February. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary will raise this issue during his forthcoming visit to Russia.

Burmese Military Offensive

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to encourage the Thai Government to increase the security of refugee camps along the Burmese border during the current dry season Burmese military offensive. [70748]

Mr. Fatchett: Following rumours of a possible Burmese attack on the Thai-Burma border, the British Embassy in Bangkok last week raised with the Thai authorities our concern for the security of refugees in the area. The Thais assured us that they were alive to the risk of dry season attacks and were taking measures to ensure the protection of refugees.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to put pressure on the Burmese military regime to cease ethnic cleansing actions against ethnic minorities in Burma. [70749]

Mr. Fatchett: We have repeatedly made clear to the Burmese regime our deep concern at their human rights violations, particularly those of ethnic minorities. In December 1998, we co-sponsored a UN General Assembly resolution which strongly urges the SPDC to ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. We, and our EU Partners, are also working towards a tough resolution at the forthcoming session of the UN Commission on Human Rights. We will continue to take every opportunity to raise our concerns with the regime.

Conventional Arms Working Group

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the dates of future meetings of Conventional Arms Working Group. [71066]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The next meeting of COARM will take place on 18 March. The final COARM of the German Presidency is scheduled for 26 May but this date may be changed in order to avoid clashing with a meeting of the Wassenaar Arrangement.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the conclusions of the Conventional Arms Working Group meetings for December and January. [71048]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Applications for access to Council documents can be made to the General Secretariat of the Council, which suggests to the Council what action should be taken on individual applications.

There are no formal conclusions of CFSP Working Group meetings. The outcome of proceedings of the COARM meeting on 28 January 1999 can be applied for from the Council Secretariat, under Council Decision 93/731/EC on access to Council documents. There was no COARM meeting in December 1998.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the agendas of the Council of Ministers' Conventional Arms Working Group working group meetings for December and January. [71047]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There was no COARM meeting in December 1998. The COARM meeting on 28 January discussed the implementation of the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports; prevention of illicit arms trafficking to and within the Great Lakes region; and controls exercised by Member States on the trafficking and brokering of arms.

Arms Brokers

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate his Department has made of the numbers of arms brokers operating in the UK. [71045]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has made no estimate of the numbers of arms brokers operating in the UK.

Gibraltar

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to respond to the Matutes proposals regarding the future of Gibraltar. [71771]

Ms Quin: We have always said that we will respond to the proposals made by Sr Matutes at the next Brussels Process meeting. No date has yet been fixed.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to alter the constitutional status of Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement on the likely date of implementation. [71693]

Ms Quin: We have had preliminary technical discussions with the Government of Gibraltar about their ideas for constitutional change. No formal proposals have yet been made.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Spanish nationals normally domiciled in Spain are regularly employed in Gibraltar. [71695]

Ms Quin: On 12 February this year, the Government of Gibraltar's records listed 1,741 Spanish nationals as working in Gibraltar but residing in Spain. All employers in Gibraltar are required to register their personnel with the Employment and Training Board, irrespective of nationality.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Spanish Foreign Minister's statement that he has breached an agreement made between them on Gibraltar in October 1998. [71585]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not breached the understanding agreed with the Spanish Foreign Minister in October 1998. There were difficulties in making the understanding work at the local level. We now hope that the local agreement reached between the Chief Minister of Gibraltar and the fishermen, building on the October understanding, will continue to work satisfactorily.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what understanding was arrived at between himself and the Spanish Foreign Minister over Gibraltar at their meeting in October 1998. [71587]

Ms Quin: On 5 October 1998, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary reached an understanding with the Spanish Foreign Minister on the situation that prevailed in British waters around Gibraltar from 1991–97, when fishing took place in moderation and the fishermen respected the authority of the Gibraltar law enforcement agencies. They agreed that we should revert to that situation.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the European Commission since 1 February on the issue of Spain's treatment of Gibraltar; when they were made; and to whom. [71713]

Ms Quin: The UK Permanent Representative to the European Union in Brussels wrote both to the President of the European Commission and to his Chef de Cabinet on 11 February about recent developments concerning Gibraltar. His staff had briefed the cabinet of the Commissioner Gradin and other relevant cabinets in early February concerning the closure of the border by Spanish fishermen.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take to ensure that Gibraltar driving-licence holders can enter Spain. [71722]

Ms Quin: We are monitoring the Spanish approach to Gibraltar-issued driving licences. Driving licences issued in Gibraltar are EU licences. EU driving licences must be mutually recognised by member states under the requirements of the EU Second Driving Licence Directive. We look to the Spanish authorities to recognise these documents in conformity with EU obligations.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if representations made to the Spanish Government on 10 February were made by (a) minister and (b) officials. [71716]

Ms Quin: HM Ambassador in Madrid raised the Spanish Foreign Minister's comments to the Spanish Congress with the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 10 February and called on the Ministry in person on 11 February to pursue the matter. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary spoke to the Spanish Foreign Minister on 11 February.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the recently agreed Fisheries Agreement between Gibraltar and the Spanish Fishermen's Union. [71725]

Ms Quin: We welcome the agreement reached on 3 February between the Chief Minister of Gibraltar and representatives of local Spanish fishermen, which builds on the understanding agreed by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary with the Spanish Foreign Minister in October 1998. These new arrangements have since been working well in practice.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he intends in the event that the Spanish Foreign Minister refuses Gibraltar-bound civil airlines the right to overfly Spanish airspace. [71723]

Ms Quin: The Spanish Foreign Minister has not informed us of any present intention to refuse Gibraltar-bound civil aircraft the right to overfly Spanish airspace. It would be extraordinary and unprecedented for an EU Member State to impose an overflight ban on civil aircraft of a European partner.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the dates of all his attempts to converse with the Spanish Foreign Minister to discuss Gibraltar in the past two weeks, indicating the means employed and the outcome of those attempts; [71715]

(2) on what occasions the Spanish Foreign Minister has contacted (a) him and (b) his office about Gibraltar in the past two weeks. [71720]

Ms Quin: The two Ministers' offices spoke on the telephone several times but were unable to set up a telephone conversation between the Ministers until 11 February.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the dates of all the conversations he had with the Spanish Foreign Minister to discuss Gibraltar in the past two weeks; and if he will make a statement on these conversations. [71714]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary most recently discussed Gibraltar with the Spanish Foreign Minister on 25 January and in a telephone conversation on 11 February. The first conversation was about problems over fishing in British waters around Gibraltar. The second also covered Spanish restrictions on movement across the Gibraltar border, the implementation of EU Directives in Gibraltar and reports of other planned Spanish restrictions. The two Ministers agreed to work to improve the situation, and to meet again on 21 February.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed border restrictions and delays at the La Linea Frontier with the Spanish Government; and if he will make a statement. [71717]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last discussed this issue with the Spanish Foreign Minister in a telephone conversation on 11 February.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to respond to the Spanish proposals for joint sovereignty of Gibraltar, tabled on 10 December 1997. [71718]

Ms Quin: We have always said that we will respond to the Spanish proposals at the next Brussels Process meeting. No date has yet been fixed.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government have taken to end restrictions on the rights of Gibraltarians to pass across their border freely. [71721]

Ms Quin: In our discussion of Gibraltar with the Spanish government, we have always emphasised that border restrictions going beyond those compatible with EU norms for a light passport check and customs control (Gibraltar is outside the Community customs territory) are unjustified and counter-productive. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary spoke on the telephone to the Spanish Foreign Minister on this subject on 11 February. The Embassy in Madrid has also raised it on several occasions with the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs and I have raised it with my counterpart, Senor de Miguel. We again made it clear to the Spanish authorities that we look to them to allow movement across the border in conformity with EU obligations. We have also drawn the current situation at the Gibraltar/Spain border to the attention of the President of the European Commission.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he proposes to discuss the recently agreed Fisheries Agreement between Gibraltar and the Spanish Fishermen's Union with the Spanish Foreign Minister. [71724]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed this issue with the Spanish Foreign Minister when they spoke on the telephone on 11 February.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the residents of Gibraltar over Spanish proposals for joint sovereignty of Gibraltar, tabled on 10 December 1997; and if he will make a statement. [71719]

Ms Quin: We have received numerous individual representations from residents of Gibraltar, as well as a petition organised by the Self Determination for Gibraltar Group. All have called on HMG to reject the proposals.

Spain (Tourism)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the estimated value of British tourism to mainland Spain in the last year for which figures are available. [71699]

Ms Quin: The latest official figures available from the Office for National Statistics Tourism Trends show that in 1997 the total number of British visitors to Spain (both tourist and business), was 8.25 million. British visitors spent a total of £2.825 billion during the year. The figure for 1998 will be higher as the number of British tourists to Spain last year rose significantly over preceding years.

Prime Minister (Articles)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those articles, written by the Prime Minister, which his Department has placed through overseas posts in foreign newspapers and journals; and if he will deposit the English version in the Library. [71145]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to his question by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 642.

Biosafety

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what input his Department has made in determining the Government's objectives in the forthcoming negotiations on the Biosafety Protocol to the UN Convention on Biological Diversity. [70936]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The UK has reached a common position with EU partners on the objectives for the Biosafety Protocol: to secure an instrument that provides necessary environmental safeguards without hampering trade. FCO Posts have recently conducted a major lobbying exercise in non-EU countries to present the EU and UK position on the Protocol. The results of this exercise have helped to inform the preparations for the final negotiations of the Protocol.

Al-Shifa Factory, Khartoum

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Al-Shifa pharmaceutical factory in Khartoum was engaged in commercial production of medicines and drugs. [71761]

Mr. Fatchett: We understand that the Al-Shifa plant was involved in commercial pharmaceutical production.

Sierra Leone

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who was the first person in his Department to have sight of a copy of the Foreign Affairs Committee report on Sierra Leone (HC 116 of Session 1998–99); and at what time and on what day it was seen. [71829]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Copies of the report were collected from the Foreign Affairs Committee office at 0800 on 9 February by the Head of Parliamentary Relations Department and the Parliamentary Clerk.

EU Membership

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what percentages the entry of the six current applicant countries for EU membership into the EU will increase (a) the EU's population and (b) the EU's GDP. [71085]

Ms Quin: We cannot of course predict the population or GDP of the candidates or the 15 current EU member states at the time of the first accessions. However recent figures indicate that enlargement to include the six candidates currently in accession negotiations would increase the EU's population by some 17 per cent. (based on figures in Agenda 2000 published by the European Commission in July 1997) and GDP (Purchasing Power Parity) by about 8 per cent. (based on figures released by Eurostat on 11 September 1998).

Weapons Seizure (Antwerp)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Belgium Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning the seizure at Antwerp on 7 February of consignments of weapons destined for Eritrea, being transported by a British company. [71384]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We received no representations from the Belgium Ministry of Foreign Affairs about seizures at Antwerp on 7 February.

We did, however, receive a letter from the Belgian Embassy in London on 6 November 1998 informing us that Belgian Customs had stopped, in August, a shipment of goods originating in Germany destined for Eritrea. They informed us that a British company was involved in organising the shipment. The matter is before the Belgian courts. We will continue to monitor developments.

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the numbers of Serbs displaced from their homes in Krajina; how many have since been permitted to return; what representations he has made to the Croatian authorities about the problem; and if he will make a statement. [71321]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We receive regular reports on the refugee situation in the former Yugoslavia from organisations such as United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE), and the European Community Monitoring Mission (ECMM).

According to UNHCR figures, there remain 220,000 Croatian Serb refugees outside Croatia. There are also some 8,000 Serb refugees in the Creation region of Eastern Slavonia who were displaced from their homes. Up until 4 February 1999, 28,000 Croatian Serb refugees are reported to have returned to Croatia.

We take every opportunity to impress on the states of the former Yugoslavia the importance we place on refugee return. I most recently raised this issue with the Croatian Assistant Foreign Minister when he called on me in London on 8 February.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received in respect of the massacre at Bosanski Brod in 1992; if any persons have been indicted and brought before The Hague International War Crimes Tribunal for their involvement; and if he will make a statement. [71322]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have received no recent reports in respect of a massacre at Bosanski Brod in 1992 and are not aware of any indictments released by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia relating to such a massacre. However, the destruction of property in Bosanski Brod in 1992 is mentioned briefly in an indictment against Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic. It is open to ICTY to issue further indictments if it has sufficient evidence to prosecute individuals suspected of war crimes anywhere in the territory of the Former Yugoslavia.

EU Institutional Charges

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the institutional changes within the EU, with particular reference to relations between national parliaments, following the coming into effect of the Amsterdam Treaty. [69432]

Ms Quin: The Protocol on national parliaments attached to the Treaty of Amsterdam provides for a consultative role for COSAC—the representatives of European Affairs Committees from national parliaments in the European Union. We welcome this development. The Protocol also provides for greater involvement of national parliaments in EU business through the six-week minimum scrutiny period. This will reinforce the changes to our national scrutiny system introduced last November.

Sudan

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attempts have been made to improve Anglo-Sudanese diplomatic relations in the last year; and if he will list the formal contacts to this end between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Sudan, and the results of these contacts. [71758]

Mr. Fatchett: We have had regular contact with the Sudanese authorities since the withdrawal of British staff from Khartoum in August last year. Through these contacts we continue to work towards the normalisation of Anglo-Sudanese relations. Contacts are ongoing.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer on 30 November 1998, Official Report, column 96, if Her Majesty's Government have supported resolutions or draft resolutions calling for an independent United Nations investigation of the Al-Shifa factory site in Khartoum. [71759]

Mr. Fatchett: A draft resolution on this issue is still on the table at the UN Security Council but has not been put to the vote.

Bilateral US/Sudan dialogue on the issue continues. Meanwhile we encourage Sudan to become a party to the Chemical Weapons Convention, which prohibits the acquisition, development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons. It is supported by a verification regime consisting of data declarations and on-site inspections.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Her Majesty's Ambassador to Sudan on whether the Al-Shifa pharmaceutical factory in Khartoum was a heavily guarded military installation. [71760]

Mr. Fatchett: Her Majesty's Ambassador to Khartoum visited the Al-Shifa factory only once; for the official opening ceremony in July 1997. He did not report that it was a heavily guarded military installation.